In Retrospect: Education

Spring always comes and colleges always graduate hosts of seniors, some seniors graduate scantily clad in the habiliments of shallow learning-some smartly dressed in the chiffon of college social achievement, many coated and booted for life's winter. It is a social part, this graduation, which marks a culmination of formal training in the schools. Yet its coming and going is taken too lightly by the principals involved, and it is this non-awareness that bears out the figurative first sentence of this paragraph. After all, you seniors, hasn't your 16 odd years of education been little more than a silent clothier who gave his wares in exchange for time and thinking? If you had a wealth of each you are undoubtedly ready for the outer spheres of life.

Glance backward. Recall, if you can your stubborn resistance to all learning that came from books; your hate of things scholastic, and all those indiscreet post scripts to childish prayers "-and I hope you burn down the schoolhouse tonight God". Observe your slow evolution into the hair-combed youngster as the seeds of ambition began to germinate within you, and how you started to notice the opposite sex with less of the 'tolerated' attitude and more of interest. And how you didn't even think of going to college until you reached the final year in high school. All that is

After a year of college you realized that was liberal of time and study and thought was the one who had the head start. Your reading told you that. So here you are at the brink-faster than you first surmised. Appraise now the formal education behind you and consider your ward be-your educational wardrobe-have ou stocked it wisely

Same Song. Second Verse

necessary straining to meet the adjust sionment. Then of what good is a college education? Why is there such variation between the two environments'

The answer to the latter question is obvious. It might be applied as a truism that life is real education is theory-in other words, all the books in the world can not solve the everyday problems that confront every man. There are multitudes of barriers that must be cleared by clear-think ing and initiative alone. It is an individual task. But education here takes a hand though all its buncomb theory may be discarded, and that is the knowledge gained through education on how to work out difficulties, how to try a little research into cause and effect, and where the common remedy lies. In essence, it is not so much the intrinsic value of the studies that is retained as it is the means of mastering those studies. Psychology knows this as

So let every young graduate realize that change within and without is inevitable, that when it comes it must be met. There will be disillusionment, especially in these days of alphabetic bureaus that smack of America's economic improvidence. Yet when all the dreams crumble and most hopes go frittering, there is the realization that there will be new dreams, and hopes that might now be constructed on the bed rock of reason and experience.

Write Your Commencement

Commencement and baccalaureate are

Noteworthy in both instances is the fact that each year's portrayal of these rites has a sameness about it that has clung for many a year and bids to cling for many to

The baccalaureate services invariably are given first, usually on a Sunday. It is at these the graduate is acquainted with his obligations to society—the church, the government, all other institutions. It is more of a solemn note that precludes a change. Inversely enough, the term baccalaureate means that time given over to arts and sciences. However, the duty is comes commencement, and you, Mr. and Miss Graduate, will by necessity, attend, if not listen to, an oration given times before to sundry other groups. It will deal in generalities, some good, some excessive and verbose. It will affect you personally very little and will strike only the general situation in which you find yourself. It is of be regretted that it is the only way.

During these final days it remains for you, privately and individually, to write your own commencement mentally. A commencement dealing with your entry into life's chaos-deal with your own vocational field, your own hopes, fears, elations morals-everything that is YOU. It will serve you better and longer. Resolve highly that your education is but begun, (you will be told that anyway), that in years to come you will be far richer in experience and knowledge.

Take stock of your other qualities and survey new means of using them. Convert now your deficiencies before it is too Then, go forth in the trailing capped and gowned line that leads to Commencement hall, knowing that your own commencement has been delivered and already

Swan Song

With the traditional "thirty" journalism protession, two editorial writers take their collective feet off the desk and call it a day on student publications. Both complete, with this term, three long and fruitful years with the Michigan State News; and both find in contemplation of those years a fund of highly enjoyable

Both recall the days of the old guard: Palmer, Quello, the Warners, et al. Each night was an Arctic night, seemingly, and saw no real work done before the lower chimed 12 or so

It was a start typically "cubby" these two made, and the music hall "cubby hole" made them right at home from the start For beats, one had Ag hall, the other sports-plus any dirt the editor could shove their way in his not too particular patol f a Breton longshoreman. The days root, hog, or die, those, when such co-ed lives. Quello's standing fend with the McClelland party was an office scandathe lack of steam that never did top sixt Dave Cleary, than whom there never was a better newspaperman, would raise mighty hell for the lack of copy, then sit down and write the stuff himself.

The big tug comes when we think of Guy, Switz, George, Roy, Ward, and all the rest of the Press boys-inky-faced minions -who introduced as first into the mysteries of hot lead and cold type. They were, and still are, a great shop crew for all their cynicisms. They, too, will be missed

This is the end. Our parting with the editors is done knowing that the News will move forward as usual, irregardless of who fills its columns. It is growing fast, too fast for sentiment, but growing as it must into a metropolitan-looking garb. That is progress.

Regret marks our ending in this editorial capacity. We can offer nothing more than good luck to those following, in dispatching this, a final editorial.-R. D. B., F. C. O.
