Animal, Vegetable or Mineral?

The microscope of Dr. C. J. Alexopoulos, professor of botany and plant pathology at Michigan State, has recently uncovered three previously unknown species of slime molds. Slime molds are peculiar organisms which border on two kingdoms—plant and animal. For the past five years, including a year's study at the Undwersity of Athens in Greece on a Fullbright Fellowship, Alexopoulos has been studying slime molds. He made the first systematic study of slime molds in Greece, where only 11 species have previously been reported and cellected 51, of which three to eight shiny trophics, and will hear the skin-sored at the Illinois-shill game. Families of slime moids are determined by the color of their spores and shape of the fruiting bodies.

Slime moid research by Alexopoulos is being directed toward a study of the eccurrence of various slime moids under different environments in nature and a study of the conditions under which they grow in the laboratory.

Another subject of research in the botany department is a fungus discovered by Alexopoulos on a frip to Matches,
