Russian Moon Shot 'Historic'

MOSCOW (P)—The Soviet Union launched an apparently unmanned space station toward the Moon Monday and said its course was "close to the prescribed one."

The Russians said all systems aboard the satellite were functioning normally.

No specific mission was announced for the satellite, Luna 7, but it was believed to be the third Soviet attempt this year to make history's first soft landing on the lunar surface.

Such a landing would put the Russians an estimated six months ahead of the United States in the race to land a man on the Moon. Luna 5, the first Soviet attempt at a soft landing, crashed on the Moon May 12. The second, Luna 6, missed the Moon June 11.

Although there was no mention of a possible soft landing, the Russians announced this purpose before Luna 5 crashed on the Moon. Apparently they decided not to make such announcements in advance again.

The last stage went into orbit and launched an "automatic space station," Tass said. The term automatic space station normally means an unmanned satellite.

Luna 7 weighed 3,313 pounds, Tass said, or slightly more than Lunas 5 and 6.

Luna 7 was sent aloft eight years to the day after the Russians launched the space age with the launching of their first Sputnik.

If all goes well, Luna 7 would be expected to land on the Moon Thursday night. The Tass announcement said it was launched "toward the Moon," an indication its mission was a landing rather than an attempt to circle the Moon.

A soft landing would permit Luna 7 to radio closeup pictures of the lunar surface back to Earth which could be studied in picking a spot for manned landing. A soft landing would also test whether a manned moon shot would be safe with present equipment.

Dr. R. L. Smith-Rose, secretary of an International Committee on Space Research, said in London that information released about Luna 7 indicates the spacecraft was more closely controlled from the Earth than its predecessors giving it a better chance of making a soft landing.

HISTORIAN IN RESIDENCE

Dulles Joins MSU

Foster Rhea Dulles, first cousin of the late Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, will become MSU's first "historian-in-residence" winter term.

Dulles, 65, will be here to write a history of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, of which MSU President John A. Hannah is the chairman, and will teach two courses in American diplomatic history.

He will hold the titles of historian-in-residence and visiting professor of history. A teacher since 1939, he retired last spring after 24 years with the Ohio State University.

Dulles' addition to the MSU faculty is being made possible through the Alumni Development Fund, said Provost Howard R. Neville.

Although this is the first time MSU has had an historian-in-residence, Neville said there have previously been artists and musicians with similar positions. Neville called Dulles "one of the nation's finest historians, a man who combines the best qualities of a student of history and a teacher."

Dulles has been working on the history of the Civil Rights Commission since last spring, when he agreed to write a history of the group.

The commission was begun in 1957 under President Dwight D. Eisenhower. Hannah was appointed chairman at that time and has served in that post through three national administrations.

Last spring Hannah got together all the records compiled in the commission's first eight years and asked that "the best historian possible" be found to write a history.

write a history. Dulles was chosen and agreed to write the book.

He has visited MSU and the commission offices in Washington to do research, Neville said, and he will continue to divide his time between MSU, Washington and his home in Jamaica, Vt., during fall and spring terms. The book is scheduled for completion next year.

Dulles will be teaching at least two courses next term, said Neville. One will be a graduate seminar and the nature of the other has not been determined.

"He has something to say," Neville added, "and I'm sure students will be interested in hearing him."

Closed Telecast OK'd For MSU--U-M Game

By DAVE HANSON
State News Staff Writer

It's official. The Michigan-Michigan State game will be telecast in the Auditorium Saturday at 1:15 p.m.

Final approval was won Monday and tickets go on sale this afternoon at the Union ticket office and the Paramount Newsshop. The price is $2.

MSU Union Board and the Athletic Department worked out the details of the project late Monday, getting a green-light from the groups involved.

WKBD (Channel 50), Detroit's Sports network, will allow their facilities to be used for the closed-circuit hookup.

"We had to wait and see whether the game was going to be televised nationally," said Bill Zillmer, Union Board member-at-large and chairman of the TV project. "Saturday was one of the network's open dates and we wouldn't have gone ahead if they were going to broadcast the game."

Asa Bushnell, chairman of the NCAA TV Committee, also gave his approval to the project. The NCAA rules stipulate that the game must be a sell-out before it can be broadcast on closed-circuit and there was some question about using the facilities of WKBD, a commercial station.

Fritz Crisler, U-M athletic director, also had to approve the project. That came early Monday morning.

Biggie Munn, athletic director, also had to approve the project. That came early Monday morning.

Game TV Seats On Sale

Tickets for the televised coverage of the Michigan-Michigan State game Saturday will go on sale at 1 p.m. today at the Union ticket office and Paramount Newsshop.

All Auditorium seat tickets will be $2 and will be sold on a first-come basis. The ticket office will be open until 5 p.m. today and all day Wednesday and the rest of the week.

at MSU, helped work out the details and is "solidly behind the project," said Zillmer.

The equipment used for the coverage of the game is the same as is used to televise professional fights. It is being flown in from Detroit for the showing Saturday. A capacity crowd of 4,000 is expected to fill the Auditorium to watch the game on big screen.

The signal will be micro-waved from Ann Arbor and fed to the screen in the Auditorium by telephone wire.

Zillmer said the Union Board considered presenting the TV coverage of the game as a free service to students, but the costs involved made the $2 fee necessary.

"We will have to spend more than $5,000 to get the game televised here. Whatever profits are made will go into the Union Board budget," he said.

"We'd especially like to thank Biggie Munn for helping us to get things arranged," said Zillmer.

Zillmer pointed out that the equipment being used will provide the same quality picture as closed-circuit coverage of professional fights.

U.N. Hears Pontiff Speak On Peace

Holds Mass, Tours City,
Confers With The President

NEW YORK (UPI)--Pope Paul VI came to the United States Monday on a historic pilgrimage to warn the United Nations that peace is an indispensable condition of human survival. He was cheered by more than a million New Yorkers.

Delegates to the 117-nation body listened with rapt attention as the 68-year-old Pilgrim Pope asked them in the name of humanity to heed the words of the late President John F. Kennedy: "Mankind must put an end to war, or war will put an end to mankind."

The white-clad pontiff received a standing ovation when he began his 32-minute speech and when he finished. There had been undivided attention when he declared:

"No more war! War never again! Peace, it is peace which must guide the destinies of people!"

The Pontiff, first Pope to visit the United States and first to appear before the United Nations, went to the U.N. building after a conference with President Johnson, in a skyscraper hotel suite, itself another historic first. Both expressed their talk would further the cause of peace.

Pope Paul, a man of dark, haunting eyes who stands five feet eight inches tall, was cheered 24-mile cavalcade in a bubble top limousine. The pontiff, clad in a white cassock with a red cape and wearing the red brimmed hat of a simple priest, smiled and lifted his arms in benediction.

150 Killed In S.A. Train Derailment

DURBAN, South Africa (P)—A crowded commuter train was derailed Monday night on the outskirts of Durban and first reports said 150 nonwhite persons were killed.

Several hundred others were believed trapped in the wreckage, the South African Press Association said.

Broadcast appeals were made for doctors and first aid workers to go to the scene.

The accident occurred when three coaches of a train taking laborers home from work left the rails shortly after 6 p.m.

Seconds after the smash an incensed mob of Africans attacked two white railwaymen who arrived on the scene, battering one of them to death.

This was one of the worst train disasters in this country in many years, SAPA reported.

Dismembered and badly mutilated bodies lay strung along nearly a quarter mile of track, starting from the point where the coaches went off the rails outside a small suburban station.

The cries of the injured and dying filled the air as doctors, nurses and first aid workers searched the tangled mass of wood and metal under the glare of emergency searchlights.

An informal "open-house" will be held 7 to 8:30 p.m. Wednesday for students interested in working on the "1966 Wolverine", the award winning MSU yearbook.

Former staffers and other students who have never worked on the book, especially freshmen, are invited to attend the informal session at 344 Student Services Building.

ID Cards: Some Joke!

The funniest picture in town isn't playing at your favorite theater—but it may be in your pocket. Administrators call it an ID. Students call it a joke.

"I wasn't ready for the shock of seeing how I look," Wayne Haupt, sophomore, from Wayne said.

"I might as well go to the graveyard if I look like that," Ralph Karil, Wayne sophomore, said.

"It's horrible," said Toni Eubanks, Detroit freshman. "I'm not even going to show it to get into football games. My fee card looks better."

"I wouldn't get any dates by showing this thing around," Jim Tuinstra, Grand Rapids senior, said.

Even Gov. George Romney's son wasn't satisfied with his ID. "I'd rather stick with last year's picture," George Scott Romney said.

More Pregnancies On Campus Noted

Illegitimate pregnancies are increasing significantly at MSU, according to Dr. James S. Feurig, director of Olin Health Center.

Dr. Feurig noted that this serious problem is not peculiar to MSU, but is shared by most colleges and universities in the United States.

"With present attitudes toward free love and the changing of moral attitudes," Dr. Feurig said, "the incidence of illegitimate pregnancies has been on the ascendancy here and elsewhere."

Dr. Feurig said he was unable to give a specific number for pregnancies, since this would involve case identification. He did say that the problem was of "significant proportions."

He added that it was impossible to know how many MSU coeds dropped out of school due to pregnancy, or how many student marriages were the result of this.

What happens to the coed whose pregnancy is discovered or confirmed at Olin?

Dr. Feurig stated that the Health Center did not inform either parents or university administration.

"It is understood, though," he said, "that when a girl reaches the third or fourth month of her pregnancy, she must withdraw from the University. However this usually takes place at the end of a term."

When asked how he thought the new, more liberal regulations governing women's hours would affect the problem, Dr. Feurig said the new rules could have one of two possible effects:

"Release from restraint gives independence which could serve either to strengthen will-power or increase carefree attitudes."

Dr. Feurig said he hoped the increase in freedom would bring about a corresponding increase in maturity and judgment.

"It has been noted in the Army and elsewhere," he said, "that a curfew hour tends to foster a feeling of desperation. The attitude sometimes is that one must get the maximum amount of pleasure into the allotted time period."

Dr. Feurig said Olin Health Center provided no birth control prescriptions or information to students.

U-M Grad Council Backs Paul Schiff

The Graduate Student Council of the U of M has passed a resolution condemning MSU officials for their "apparent violations of the civil and academic liberties of Paul Schiff."

Schiff, a former graduate student, has filed suit in a Grand Rapids Federal Court to be readmitted to MSU.

Schiff was allegedly expelled by MSU officials because of his activities with the Committee on Student Rights last year.

Federal Judge Noel P. Fox will hear testimony on the suit Oct. 14.

How To Avoid A Budget Scandal

THE STUDENT BOARD of Associated Students of MSU could not be more emphatic in its determination to avoid any mishandling of funds such as the one which marred the record of the old All-University Student Government. Board members have wisely subjected themselves to a bookkeeping system full of financial checks and balances.

"We now have a bookkeeping system," said Jim Graham, Detroit junior and member-at-large of the board. "Before they didn't."

UNDER AUGS, the report of an ASMSU audit committee, shows no accurate records were kept of expenditures of the funds provided by the 25-cent-a-term student government tax. Sometimes, Graham said, records were not kept at all.

The audit committee found many records kept on scraps of paper, without clear documentation of expenditures. The only signature required on vouchers was that of the treasurer. Graham said last year's treasurer was a close friend of former AUGS president Bob Harris, who had virtually complete control on all expenditures.

A DISCREPANCY of more than $500 was reported by the audit committee between total expenditures of AUGS and expenditures accounted for in AUGS files. Graham said the actual figure was considerably higher, but that specific errors cannot be found to account for the difference.

"There are several hundred dollars we have no account of," he said. "We have no idea where this money went."

Reasons for the mismanagement of funds "ran all the way from mishandling to incapability all the way down to petty theft," Graham said.

BOOKKEEPING AND WATCHDOG-GING will protect the students' investment in ASMSU. Every expenditure must be approved by two of three persons--the comptroller, the vice president for finance and operations, or the cabinet president. No transactions will be carried on except by check or University voucher. Last year, Graham said, expenses were frequently paid by cash, with scribbled records made of the transactions.

THE MAIN DIFFERENCE now, Graham said, is "a change in feeling." Budgets are more detailed under ASMSU and are honored more faithfully. And, most important, each member of the board is watched over by the other members. There can be no more one-man governments under ASMSU, as Graham and many others felt there was with last year's AUGS.

ASMSU has demonstrated its sincerity in wishing to avoid a financial scandal. Its method for keeping watch on funds can go a long way toward proving the effectiveness of the new student government.

'Pop' Goes ASMSU

ASMSU's trial run popular entertainment series this fall will help considerably to brighten the entertainment picture in the campus area. It deserves the support of the student body.

In the past, student government has lacked the funds to support programs by some of the nation's top entertainers, and private entrepreneurs were reluctant to sponsor programs on the campus.

AS A RESULT, students had either to go without seeing the big names or to travel to Lansing to see them at the Civic Center or to Detroit for concerts there. Only occasional top name popular performers have made it to campus.

This fall's three programs--the Serendipity Singers Oct. 16, Dave Brubeck Oct. 29 and the Kingsmen Nov. 13--are experimental, paid for out of other funds and designed to build up a reserve fund from which other performances can be scheduled. If a profit is made on these three programs, the series can continue. If a profit does not materialize, there will again be a lack of the kind of entertainment most students seem to go for.

THE ENTERTAINMENT series is considered by ASMSU one way in which it can demonstrate to the student body that it can provide services student governments here have failed to provide in the past. It hopes to show that by efficient handling of programs it can become an active force in campus life, starting by offering performances by entertainers who have not frequented the Lansing area.

The goal of providing popular entertainment is a good one in itself. The goal of proving the worth of the ASMSU structure is an additional reason to support the series.

Three years later--last Friday to be exact--I attended another rally. Here again, I thought, the passionate spirit, synonymous with MSU, would be in evidence. A sound truck and stage blocked off the end of Dorpitory Road between Abbott and Snyder. Several hundred students, attracted by curiosity and trapped by the barricade milled around the area. "Who's gonna win tomorrow?" a girl on the stage shouted. Silence. "State's going to win. RIGHT?" A few people nodded their heads. "That's the spirit!" she screamed, never ceasing to smile.

"Are we going to the Rose Bowl this year? Are we? Huh?" The crowd broke into small groups and appeared to be discussing the possibility.

Let it not be said that I am against school spirit. I look back with nostalgia to the pre-game rallies that took place years ago when I was a freshman.

I can still see the Mason Hall housemother--it was the night before the Michigan game--she stood in front of the dorm like Horatio guarding the bridge. She stared directly into the crowd.

She was trampled right where she stood as 5,000 men poured over her body through the doorway.

"Yeah! ROSE BOWL! ROSE BOWL! ROSE BOWL!" she cried, almost hysterical by now.

I began to see some enthusiasm in the crowd. I saw a group of guys shouting excitedly and edged towards them.

"That's the spirit! How about Ohio State?"

"That's telling them, Purdue? Will we beat Purdue?"

"NO!" shouted the crowd after consideration.

"That's the spirit!" she said with oblivious fervor. "Northwestern?"

"YES!"

"Iowa?"

"MAYBE!" the crowd roared, by this time at a fever pitch.

Saturdays At The Center

Everyone from my neighborhood was there. And so was Johnny Mack Brown. There was always a line, and no matter how early we got downtown, some "punks" from another neighborhood would beat us to the ticket window.

Our crowd was always right in the middle of the pack, about halfway between the doors of the Montgomery Ward store.

They were pre-teen adventures' paradises, those Saturday afternoon movies at the Center Theater.

Admission was 12 cents. For another nickel you could get food and ammunition. If the popcorn came in cardboard boxes, you also had a primitively fashioned airplane that usually took no longer than three seconds to soar from the balcony to the main floor.

Prize seats lined the balcony edge. From there you could observe not only the screen, but older couples necking in dark corners. Here was also the only place where popcorn, candy, gum, and other assorted projectiles could be successfully launched.

You could also hang over the edge of the balcony and be cheered by the mob below.

We never saw any Academy Award movies at the Center. We saw Tarzan, the Bowery Boys, Johnny Mack Brown, Randolph Scott, Whip Wilson, the Black Rider and an occasional Roy Rogers. Superman serials and cartoons were, of course, a must.

We would usually remain rowdy during the newsreels and junk features about whooping cranes, but when the serial, cartoon or main attraction came on, we cooled it.

Then two-fisted Roy beat-up his first bad guy, or Satch stumbled into an "indubiously regurgitating" circusmaster, or jungle hunters scoured over Tarzan's domain in search of ivory. We really cooled it.

Later, Tarzan got trampled by elephants, shot or tied up. Or someone stole Johnny Mack Brown's horse or robbed the local bank. Or Randolph Scott and the cavalry rode into a Comanche-infested pass, got captured by Geronimo, ran out of ammo or waited without water for the Indians to attack at sun-up.

During these tense moments, we were dead silent. But every once in awhile some wise guy "with no manners" would shout, "Hey, who stole my popcorn?" "Freddie eats it," or, "Is there a doctor in the house?" He was shushed immediately by us and thrown out by the usher.

Near the movie's end, everyone rode with Roy Rogers or packed a gun with Johnny Mack. We chomped and gulped any remaining popcorn.

It was not that the hero did some fantastic good. It was always that the idiot crook flubbed. A knife always appeared about two feet away from Johnny Mack Brown. Or a horse was casually left outside the shack outside of town where Johnny or Roy was bound to a chair. Or a regiment out on routine patrol stumbled into Randolph Scott's dwindling group as he fired his last bullet.

Whatever the "out" was, it didn't matter to us. As the bugle sounded, as Tarzan gave his mighty yell, as the cops saved the Bowery Boys from death, the Center was a cheer-filled madhouse.

We yelled, threw anything available, and punched guys next to us. What a spectacle to see the good guys ride into the western sunset. Our heroes were safe for another week.

Turnabout Is . . . 'Sensible'

IT IS THE "SENSE" of the U.S. House of Representatives that any nation in the Western Hemisphere ought to interfere unilaterally in the internal affairs of any other nation if a Communist takeover seems imminent.

And it's a good thing, too. We were just wondering who was going to come in and protect us against the International Communist Conspiracy.

AS EVERYONE KNOWS, there are 98 Communists highly placed in the Democratic party (according to offi-

CAMPUS AMERICA

Population Boom On Campus

Back-to-school time made news all over the country recently, as campus after campus reported the highest enrollment figures ever.

The University of Illinois reached a high of 27,429 on its Champaign-Urbana campus. University president David D. Henry predicted continued growth on the main campus as well as on the medical campus in Chicago and the Chicago Circle campus. At the State University of Iowa, an enrollment of 24,000 is expected by 1974, an increase of 10,000 over the university's current size.

The University of California continues to grow on all its nine campuses. The Santa Barbara campus is the fastest-growing, now comprising nearly 9,000 of the total 80,000 students enrolled.

Wayne State's predicted enrollment of 29,000 was expected to surpass the capacity of the university's classrooms, according to the Daily Collegian. With a predicted 1970 enrollment of 40,000, the university is scheduling groundbreaking for seven new major buildings in 1966. Several other projects are under way now, and more are in planning stages.

As enrollment grows at the University of Oregon, dormitories are being crowded with new freshmen. Since the university requires all single freshmen under 21 to live in dorms or co-ops, several hundred upper-classmen have been forced to give up their dorm rooms to new students.

Viet Nam -- The Draft

New Draft Calls Harder To Evade

Draft-ROTC

Training Beneficial To Students

In the present tense world situation many male students faced with the looming probability of the draft tend to regard the ROTC program as an unnecessary evil.

According to many air and military science professors and cadets, however, the prospect of ROTC training can be invaluable for future military duty and civilian life.

Leadership is one of the most valuable assets acquired through the ROTC program according to military science chairman Col. Robert Platt, a 1939 ROTC graduate of MSU.

"ROTC offers one of the few programs on campus designed to make a leader of a man," said Platt, "and in order to be successful, a man must be a leader."

Students who fear being left behind other college graduates entering private industry have little to worry about, according to Platt.

"You'd be amazed at how much poise and responsibility these men have gained through military service after ROTC and how successfully they compete with their contemporaries in private industry," he said. "Men in the armed services must face more responsibility much earlier than in any private concern and they gain valuable experience that isn't available to a beginning worker in private industry."

"It is a waste of the college graduate's talent to enter the service as an enlisted man," explained Lt. Col. Gerald Heyboer, chairman of the air science program.

"If the individual has the capability to pass academic hurdles he owes it to himself," he said.

Many advanced ROTC students feel the program to be a valuable way of gaining a degree and a commission.

According to John Godfrey, Battle Creek senior and ROTC deputy brigade commander, "Almost every man in the U.S. will face a two-year obligation. While you're in college and have the opportunity to get your diploma and commission you can kill two birds with one stone."

"Nothing is more subservient than being an enlisted man," he added.

Lansing senior and ROTC Brigade Commander Jim Harris regards the training as "good for character improvement and a much better way to go into the armed services."

"You have an obligation and don't have to worry about being drafted," Harris continued. "I do have a commitment and think two years are well worth it after the benefits I've received from this country."

The choice is up to the individual student but ROTC antagonists face considerable opposition in the apt reasoning of the ROTC department.

Objectors Plan Days Of Protest

The MSU Committee to End the War in Viet Nam is planning a workshop for conscientious objectors in conjunction with plans for two "International Days of Protest," Oct. 15-16.

Howard Harrison said the committee will provide information for anyone interested in applying for deferment as a conscientious objector either for religious reasons or because of political objections to the Viet Nam war.

Draft Boards Do Well To Draft The Broads

Last week in Washington, congressmen were trying to work out the wording of a bill that would prohibit discrimination against women in war-time and in jobs.

Women have been fighting for equality since Eve, but equality also involves responsibility. If it is equality they crave, women must also be ready to do the things that, until now, have been left to men.

Everyone knows that most girls come to college to find husbands and most men come to study. This should suggest an ideal solution to the problem now confronting local draft boards.

Let's draft all part-time single women students between the ages of 18 and 26 and stop taking the serious students, the guys, out of school. Instead of draft boards--"draft broads."

After getting a note from their local draft broads, the girls would form fighting units for overseas and find themselves in the company of more eligible bachelors than they could find on any campus.

On The...

...Lighter Side

At long last Uncle Sam has initiated a program designed to help college students improve their study habits. It's called the "Draft."

In being an ROTC cadet you never have to worry if Uncle Sam is going to draft you and place you in the army and send you off to Viet Nam. You never have to worry. You already know it.

Problems would evolve, but the Great Society demands new and bold thinking. Financial concerns are unimportant and no worthwhile project should be overlooked just because it is big. And teaching women to fight would solve the problems of urban living. Who's going to mug an ex-Marine?

Picture a unit of these toughened up soldiers going into battle, lipstick at the ready, mascara fixed, a couple perfume-gas grenades attached to their svelt chateaux uniforms.

Everyone knows you can't hurt a woman and the VC, being gentlemen, would have to surrender before the onrushing horde.

Yes, Draft them. Take the burden off the colleges. Make room for all the young nervous freshmen who would rather twitch than fight.

LBJ's Popularity With Youth Drops

By MICHAEL KINDMAN
State News Staff Writer

The war in Viet Nam has put increased pressures on American men either to demonstrate why they should not be fighting or to get on the front line in Viet Nam.

As the war has escalated over the past eight months, the number of men drafted into the military has increased, culminating in President Lyndon B. Johnson's call for a doubled draft starting in October and November and in the withdrawal of President Kennedy's automatic draft deferments for all married men.

Johnson's orders on the draft have not made him more popular with the young men of America. "Nobody likes it very much, but then nobody likes the situation in Viet Nam anyway," said Col. Arthur A. Holmes, Michigan director of Selective Service.

Holmes, like Selective Service officials around the country, is supervising the reclassification of all men registered for the draft, according to the strictest set of regulations used since the Korean War.

Students could suffer most once the reclassification is completed. They have been granted almost automatic 2-S classification--student deferment--since Korea, but the requirements are being made more strict.

"If they want to be given consideration for a student deferment," Holmes said, "they'd better meet the requirements."

Holmes last week defined the requirements as taking "the maximum number of courses that a student has the ability to take." He said students must be working on a program that will lead to a degree "in the normal period of time."

So far, the University has announced no change in its procedure for keeping watch on the draft status of students. Each male student fills out a card at registration giving his draft classification as determined by his local board. The University then sends this information and an account of the student's progress to the student's local board.

Holmes said, "The students and University both are cooperating in furnishing the information required."

Holmes suggested that in addition to having the University notify the local board, each student contact his local board to insure his student deferment.

The draft quotas announced by President Johnson for the next two months--the highest since Korea--require 1,768 men in October and 2,425 in November to be inducted from Michigan.

They will be drawn from a pool of 7,000 men who have been classified 1-A (available for induction) and who have had physical examinations.

In addition, Holmes said, there are an additional 16,000 men classified 1-A who have not been physically examined and 21,850 men classified 1-A who were married before the expiration of President Kennedy's order on Aug. 26. These men will only be drafted in times of national emergency.

Come In Out Of The Draft!

Draftee's Odds On Viet Trip Even

By BRUCE SMITH
State News Staff Writer

Army draftees and volunteers probably stand equal chances of being sent to Viet Nam.

No one, however, will be sent to Viet Nam until he has completed at least 16 weeks of military training.

In separate interviews Col. Robert G. Platt, professor and chairman of military science, and Lt. Col. Gerald T. Heyboer, professor and chairman of air science, agreed that draftees should not be kept out of Viet Nam if they were adequately trained.

The Air Force has not resorted to the draft, Heyboer said, because enlistments have been sufficient to fill its needs.

On the other hand, the Army has always depended somewhat on the draft, he said.

Both officers said they had no firsthand military knowledge of Viet Nam. Their major sources of information were the same news media available to the general public.

U.S. commitment of troops in Viet Nam is about 130,000 of which Heyboer said about 10 per cent were Air Force. He said the Naval Air Wing and B52's based on Guam furnish much of the air cover for ground troops.

Comparing the chance to become a battle casualty in Viet Nam with the danger of highway driving between San Francisco and New York, Platt said, "I'll take my chances in Viet Nam."

Casualties in a guerrilla war are less than those in conventional war, he said. The majority of weapons being used in Viet Nam: rifles, machine guns, mortars and grenades, are rather primitive compared with recently developed weapons.

The number of American casualties in Viet Nam compared with highway casualties may be small, but it represents a toll we would rather not pay, Platt said.

"The U.S. has steadily paid in lives and materials since the 1948 Berlin Air Lift, but we have been unable to secure a peace. Prior to WW II we attempted to avoid foreign commitments through an isolation policy."

Platt said the U.S. may face a long series of "little Koreas" in the next few years. Small wars fought on foreign lands seem to be becoming a way of life.

Guam-based B52's, Heyboer said, have a psychological value as well as a destruction force.

A guerrilla force knows it can be destroyed if forced to concentrate in a small area, he said. Ground forces hunting guerrillas know they can call in air support to decide a battle once the guerrillas are forced to stand and fight.

Both officers said they had utmost confidence in the American fighting man whether he was a draftee or a volunteer. Even though war is more complicated today than ever before, they agreed that today's soldier is proficient in his craft.

When the chips are down, today's soldier is equal in every way to the soldier of 1776, they said.

President Johnson has said he is willing to negotiate an honorable peace. In the meantime, they said, we will continue fighting.

CO's Refusal Involves More Than A Simple Objection

One of the few ways a young man can avoid haggling with the draft board over why he should or should not fight is to declare himself a conscientious objector.

But this is not so simple that one could do it now and easily avoid the increased pressures of the Viet Nam draft.

"Handbook for Conscientious Objectors" published by the Central Committee for Conscientious Objectors, a national coordinating body for "CO's", lists three types of conscientious objectors:

- Those opposed to all military service, combatant or non-combatant, who, if they are granted CO deferral, are assigned by the military to civilian service.
- The "absolutists" who are opposed to all military or alternative service and are frequently imprisoned in times of war for refusing to serve or cooperate.

The first step for a young man seeking CO deferral is to fill out forms applying for such deferral when he first registers for the draft or at any time after he has registered.

He is then subject to hearings by his local board--with which the first application should be made--and state board and to possible investigation by the Justice Department and the FBI into his background to assure that his plea for deferral is legitimate.

A Supreme Court decision early this year established that a man need not be a member of a pacifist religious group to qualify for CO deferral. He may base his plea on personal, ethical or philosophical grounds which cause him to reject the possibility of fighting in a war.

Col. Arthur A. Holmes, director of Selective Service in Michigan, said there has been no increase in the number of pleas of conscientious objection in Michigan since the Viet Nam war escalation and none is expected.

"We believe that the youth of this country are just as patriotic as their fathers and are not trying to escape service," he said.

But at least one CO in East Lansing denies that conscientious objection is a question of patriotism.

Wesley Power said his decision to apply for CO deferral after several years in a college ROTC program was based on his own thinking about religion and social questions. He said his choice was "essentially a simple case of overcoming an ethnocentric view of life which, once accomplished, forced a search into the real roots of conflict."

He realized, he said, "that there was nothing inherent in the ethnic differences between other people and my own which could spark such bitter conflict as was witnessed during World War II" and that "the answers must lie in the socio-political spheres."

ROMNEY, GRIFFITH BACK IT

Dunes Park Gets Lift

TRAVERSE CITY (UPI)--Gov. George Romney and Rep. Robert P. Griffin, R-Mich., threw their support behind the controversial Sleeping Bear Dunes National Park proposal today--both with reservations.

Both the governor and Griffin urged amendments in a bill sponsored by Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., which has U.S. Senate approval.

Gov. Romney's message was read at a meeting of the House subcommittee holding a hearing on the proposed project today. The hearing was at Traverse City high school's auditorium with a crowd of nearly 600 attending.

Romney's message was read by an administrative assistant. The governor urged establishment of the park but also urged amendments to protect property owners against the threat of condemnation and to provide payments to school districts which would lose property from tax roles. Hart's bill would create a 41,000-acre national park on the Lake Michigan shore and part of South Manitou Island. The House subcommittee is comprised of Rep. Ralph Rivers, D-Alaska, the chairman, and Reps. John R. D-Wis., and Charlotte Reid, R-Ill.

Griffin, Ninth District representative, included the Romney recommendations in his suggestions for amendments. Besides protection for school district losses and protection for others who would be hurt by condemnation, Griffin proposed amendments to establish a buffer zone against adverse commercial development--and to include the undeveloped part of North Manitou Island in the project.

Hart was at the meeting and stated that he hoped congressional action would be favorable on the bill.

Ralph A. McMullen, director of the Michigan Conservation Department, repeated statements made previously to the U.S. Senate in support of the project. Rep. Robert Slingerland, D-Lake Orion, cited the Michigan Legislature's resolution calling for establishment of the park. The House passed it June 16 and the Senate July 29.

Rivers said the subcommittee would hold more hearings on the bill early next year with the National Park Service in Washington.

Pressure Groups Can Be Beneficial

Pressure groups are not only necessary but many times beneficial in America today, said Everett M. Rogers, associate professor of communication.

Speaking at the recent Third Traffic Safety Conference for Michigan Women's Organizations, Rogers reported pressure groups are a means of improving communication between citizens and their public leaders.

He defined a pressure group as a formal organization consisting of members with similar interests, desiring more control over public leaders and public issues. He gave examples such as the AFL-CIO, the American Farm Bureau Federation, and the League of Women Voters.

plained that a farm pressure group in Ohio holds 1,600 individual monthly discussion groups and includes 32,000 members.

Each month the groups discuss a different legislative issue. Then a written summary of the members' wishes is sent to the state office.

Rogers said, "This is a good pressure group because it has good internal communication, and in turn the lobbyists possess an accurate knowledge of what the members want."

"The need for pressure groups has become more imperative as society has become more complex," Rogers continued.

CIC OFFERS TRAVEL

Grads 'Visit' For Credit

Graduate students at 11 universities, including MSU, are eligible to apply to admission to the "Traveling Scholar" program of the Committee on Institutional Cooperation (CIC).

The CIC was established in 1958 to provide for voluntary cooperative arrangements among the following institutions: University of Chicago, University of Illinois, Indiana University, University of Iowa, University of Michigan, MSU, University of Minnesota, Northwestern University, Ohio State University, Purdue University and University of Wisconsin.

The CIC program enables selected graduate students to take advantage of unique facilities on the campus of another participating university. Such facilities include special course offerings, research opportunities, laboratories and library collections.

Students participating in this program, known as "CIC Traveling Scholars," are normally limited to one semester or two quarters on another campus.

A traveling scholar must be recommended by his own graduate advisor, who approaches an appropriate faculty member at the proposed host institution in regard to a visiting arrangement.

After agreement by the student's advisor and the faculty member who will be his advisor at the host institution, graduate deans at both universities have the power to approve or disapprove the arrangement. Each university retains, through its graduate office, the full right to accept or reject any student who wishes to study under its auspices.

The CIC Traveling Scholar registers and pays his fees at his home university. Credit for the work recorded by the host university is given by the home institution.

Faculty members desiring additional information or students with faculty approval of a proposed visiting arrangement should confer with the traveling scholar liaison officer at MSU, Milton E. Mueller, vice president for research development and dean of the School for Advanced Graduate Studies.

Graduate students in more than 40 different disciplines used the program during its initial two-year trial period (academic years 1963-64 and 1964-65).

Presidents of CIC universities, reviewing the program in April, unanimously accepted the recommendation of CIC to continue the traveling scholar program indefinitely.

The program is only one of the cooperative activities of the CIC. Other programs include an annual summer Far Eastern Language Institute, a joint Graduate Training Program in Biometeorology and a number of course content improvement studies being undertaken by faculty members in various academic disciplines.

For further information on any of these programs, faculty members should get in touch with MSU's CIC member, Provost Howard R. Neville.

Indonesian Loyalists Battle Rebels

SINGAPORE (UPI)--Loyalist troops were reported battling Communist guerrilla and rebel soldiers in the Indonesian countryside Monday as President Sukarno sought to consolidate his shaky government.

Radio Malaysia reported that units of the Indonesian

Loyalist Communist Party (PKI) were fighting a delaying action against the loyal troops to support a rebel withdrawal toward central Java.

A broadcast from the provincial capital of Jogjakarta said loyal troops had retaken the province from the rebels in fierce fighting.

Dirksen Begins Filibuster on 14B

WASHINGTON --Sen. Everett M. Dirksen, R-Ill., began his promised filibuster against initial efforts to call up an administration-backed bill to repeal section 14b of the Taft-Hartley Law.

Dirksen described his verbal blockage against the measure, which would revoke the states' authority to ban union shops, as "extended discussion" and as part of the democratic process.

FIRST CONCERT OCT. 29

Statesmen True Spartans

By FAYE UNGER
State News Staff Writer

A student can bring blood to his palms working for the Singing Statesmen.

A "Singing Statesman" starts practicing for the men's glee club four days before registration begins. With 52 other singers at the Gull Lake workshop, he plods through 12 works, phrase by phrase, five hours each day. Occasionally the director shouts at him.

After the five-hour musical workout, he grapples with his singing teammates, some of them all-stars, in a game of football in the icy mud.

The Singing Statesmen are training for the big glee club season ahead. Before spring is through they will have traveled 3,000 miles and sung before 55 audiences. The first on-campus concert is an exchange sing with Northwestern Oct. 29 in the Kiva.

At concerts and contests they will have to stand for over an hour. In spite of aching feet they must hit each note precisely with the other singers, precisely on pitch, and at the same time empathize with the cowboy and his old horse, Dan, in "Cool Water."

Whether a singing statesman is a packaging major, a business major, or an all-state athlete, he takes seriously his job as a good-will ambassador for the University. J. Loren Jones, assistant professor of music, said,

"I have seen a fellow bring blood to his palms clenching his hands and straining to stay on pitch when he had laryngitis," Jones said.

Jones has directed the Singing Statesmen, the men's glee club, for three years.

When the singers have tired out their voices with hootenannies during a tour and he is boarded in a third rate hotel without any magazines, Jones said he questions whether the rewards of a director are worth the frustrations.

But he remembers a blind student who could not face people and whose studies were slackening when he joined the glee club. With the Statesmen he regained his confidence. This year he is a major soloist with the group.

Another singing student who asked time off spring term to train his horses later took national championships with his jumpers.

The singers invest both their time and their money in the group. They each paid $100 for new suits and tuxedos, and they are now earning money for an overseas tour, Jones said.

"We want to show people in other countries what kind of people Americans are," Jones said. "We would be staying in homes on our overseas tour just like we do in the United States."

People need more than bread, meat and potatoes, he added. The Singing Statesmen believe it is their responsibility to give their audiences the plus of an enjoyable aesthetic experience.

The Statesmen now have an album of Big Ten school songs and selections from their spring term concert on sale for $5 in the MSU bookstore and local music stores.

Emergent Nations Suffer Food Deficit

Food shortages in developing nations may not only continue for several years, but may also hinder their economic and political growth and stability, an MSU farm economist says.

"In many developing countries, the rate of population growth alone will increase food requirements as much as 3 per cent or more annually," Robert D. Stevens, associate professor of agricultural economics, said.

"Food production must grow at least this fast," he said, "to keep feeding these populations at present levels of food consumption." Speaking to the American Farm Economics Assn. last summer in Oklahoma, Stevens said that a nation undergoes a series of major structural changes during economic growth.

"The mass movement of population from rural to urban areas is the most important structural change influencing food requirements at different points in the marketing channels," Stevens defined a change in market structure as a change in the proportion of food flowing through a marketing channel.

"Increasing income per person and the migration of workers into the cities forces food requirements to increase to a peak rate of four per cent per year or more."

Most low-income nations have long histories of slow population growth and little change in per capita income. Until recently, therefore, rates of growth in food requirements have been low.

With today's rapid population growth and reasonable increases in per capita income, Stevens said, low income nations can expect rates of growth in food requirements much greater than in more developed countries.

After decades of rapid economic growth and increased personal income, food production requirements will slowly decline, Stevens said.

"However, this means for many developing nations that the rate of food production requirements will not drop below 2.5 per cent per year until the middle of the 21st century."

Stevens came to MSU from the economic development branch of Economic Research Services of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Pianist To Open Symphony

A Detroit pianist who won first place in the Magda Tagliaferro International Piano Competition opens the Lansing Symphony Assn's 1965-66 season Oct. 18.

Concert artist and movie star Jose Iturbi will end the season and in between is the opera "Carmen."

Tickets for $9 and $13 seats for the five-concert season are available from the Lansing Symphony Assn, 482-0753.

James Tocco, 20, who will appear with the orchestra in its first concert Oct. 18, won the Grinnell Piano Competition Award in 1962. After a year's study in France in 1964, he took the Magda Tagliaferro International Competition.

He will return to France for further study this year. The Lansing Symphony Orchestra will be performing for the first time this season under Hugo Vinello, who left his post as assistant conductor of the Kansas City Philharmonic to become conductor of the Lansing Symphony. He is also head of the Orchestral Department at Northwestern University.

Being conductor of a fledgling orchestra that can only go up is a greater challenge than being assistant conductor of the established Kansas City Philharmonic, Vinello said.

He will direct the orchestra through a season that includes a concert Nov. 6 with violinist Nadia Koutzen who has appeared with the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam.

Four New York opera soloists will join the Lansing Symphony Orchestra for the production of Bizet's opera "Carmen" Jan. 24. Jose Iturbi, the concert pianist who graduated at the top of his class from the Paris Conservatory of Music, will play at the final concert April 18.

East, West Like Ghanian Speaker

Alexander Quaison-Sackey, the Ghanian international leader who will speak here Wednesday, is a statesman both East and West rarely attack.

"He is regarded as a genuine non-involved neutral," James Hooker, associate professor of history, said. "The United States sees him as a positive kind of African, even when we don't agree."

President of the UN General Assembly in 1964, Quaison-Sackey will speak at 8:15 p.m. Wednesday in the Auditorium before returning to his native Ghana.

Students with ID cards will be admitted free to the lecture. Public admission is $1.

Quaison-Sackey stresses that Africa must unite into a larger political unity, Hooker said. The African leader fears that as long as Africa remains divided she will be prey to the big powers and economically dependent on the western world.

Quaison-Sackey urges Africa to avoid being caught in the Cold War at all costs. In his eyes it is Africa's responsibility to solve her own problems, Hooker said.

The United States sees Quaison-Sackey's neutrality as our kind of neutrality, Hooker continued, even though Eastern countries rarely attack the African leader in their press.

Although the United States tends to see issues the way Quaison-Sackey sees them, Hooker said, the Ghanian leader has criticized U.S. policy, particularly our relations with South Africa.

The press in Ghana is critical of the U.S., although it rarely lashes out at eastern policy. Upon returning to Ghana, Quaison-Sackey will become foreign minister. He made a rapid rise to the top of the international world, Hooker said.

Quaison-Sackey was one of the first foreign service officers appointed before his country's independence. Since 1959 he has represented Ghana in the United Nations.

He served as president of the security council in 1962 and 1963 and as chairman of the African and the Asian-African groups for several terms.

In line with his advocacy of African unity and neutrality, Quaison-Sackey attended the Second Regular Conference of Independent African States in June, the Belgrade Conference of Non-Aligned Countries in 1961 and the Cairo Conference of Non-Aligned Countries in 1964.

The African statesman was educated at Exeter College, Oxford, and the London School of Economics. He is the author of "Africa Unbound," published in 1964.

Pacific Island Dancers Accompany New Zealand Brass Band To MSU

The National Band of New Zealand, appearing at 8:15 p.m. Thursday in the Auditorium, claims to be the best brass band in the world.

It may also be the only brass band in the world that brings with it native dancers of the South Seas. A troupe of Maori dancers, the native people of New Zealand, performs with the band.

The band took the world championship in Holland in competition with 214 other bands. As a result of the international recognition the band has received, the band will be premier band for the 1965 Canadian National Exhibition in Toronto.

The intermingling of Maori and Western culture which the dancers and the band illustrate is characteristic of New Zealand. The Maoris have never been a subject people, but through a treaty signed in 1840 they became citizens under British sovereignty.

Despite their participation in a modern western economy, the Maoris retain traditional Polynesian arts. Feather cloaks, carved houses, war dances and ancient love chants are not buried by the western culture.

Students must sign up at the Placement Bureau at least two days prior to date of interview.

POOR CHARLIE

Inside The 'Rat Room'

By BRAD SMITH
State News Staff Writer

Charlie the Stud looked longingly through the wire mesh at Little Anny Fanny, the cute albino in the next cage. It was spring term last year, and in spring a young rat's fancy turns to thoughts of...well, you know.

Charlie and Anny were rats in the "rat room" of Olds Hall. They had been provided for students in psychology 303 and physiological psychology, free of charge. They were named and cared for by the students. Along with many of their brother and sister rats, they helped teach MSU students the principles of animal behavior and avoidance learning.

Whatever happened to Charlie and Little Anny no one knows except, perhaps the students who used them. At the end of the course the students were required to leave a note on the cage telling if they wanted to keep their rats as pets or not.

"Many students become quite attached to their rats," said Bill Ross, head rat-keeper at the Psychology Research Center, where the rats for psychology 303 and various graduate studies are raised.

Ross is also in charge of disposing of the rats who have completed their term of experimentation.

"After the rats have been experimented on," he said, "they can't be used again, because they are no longer ignorant." Ross said he kills those rats which the students do not elect to keep with chloroform. Their bodies are then disposed of at the crematorium in the Veterinary Medicine Building.

Rats are replenished from a stock of about 1,000 Ross raises. He breeds them to keep the population up.

"Right now I'm breeding two females a month," he said. "The gestation period is 21 days and litters average around nine. This means 18 or so new rats a month."

Ross said he once had some fun with an escapee. "This rat slipped out of an oversize water-bottle hole and ran around for two weeks before I finally caught him. He just wanted to be free."

Ross thinks you can learn a lot by watching rats. "They're really just like people," he says.

"There are several reasons why rats are preferred experimental animals," according to Lou Gardner, Cincinnati graduate student and resident assistant. "They are easy to maintain, not normally troubled with diseases and are a tested experimental animal." Over 50 per cent of the psychological research done in the United States is done on rats.

The research clinic has never received any complaints from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

"The rats used for experimentation are as clean as house-cats," Gardner said. They all are fed a diet of Wayne Lab-Blox and water, and live in cages with 'wall to wall' wood shavings.

Rats used for study are housed alone in cages. Those in experimentation live with between five and nine others in a cage. Constant weight cages are used to maintain experimental rats at a specific weight.

Although students are initially hesitant at handling rats, Gardner revealed that most biting is the fault of the handler.

Cost of Kissing Up at Iowa

AMES, Iowa, (UPI)—Some Iowa State University students are paying $1 or more for a good night kiss.

School authorities recently banned parking on one side of a street through the women's dormitory area. They restricted parking on the other side of the street to faculty members. Many students scoffed at the new parking ordinance and parked their cars in front of the dormitories for that last intimate farewell before walking their dates to the door. When the amorous students returned to their cars, they found parking tickets attached to their windshield wipers.

Students were outraged at the cost of a kiss. Fines ranged from $1 for the first ticket, to $3 for the second, $5 for the third, $10 for the fourth, and $5 more for each additional offense.

The no-parking signs were placed in front of the dorms when physical plant director Ben Schaeffer decided that the date-night traffic jams created a hazardous condition.

Some students resigned themselves to several solutions to the problem:

--Double-dating with faculty members so they can park in the restricted zones across the street from the dormitories.

--Parking two blocks away and waving good night to their dates.

--Throwing discretion to the cold night wind and exchanging farewells on the already crowded sidewalks in front of the dormitories.

--Or, parking in the "no parking" zones and contributing to the "cost of loving" index.

KENNEY RAIDS ST. LOUIS

State Bootlegs Soccer Quartet

By BOB HORNING

State News Sports Writer

If you can't beat 'em... steal their players.

That seems to be the motto of State soccer Coach Gene Kenney as he has turned his talent hunt to St. Louis. The University of St. Louis has been the Spartan's toughest competition during State's nine years of play. Of eight games, the Billikens have won six and tied one.

But this year, four St. Louis sophomores dot the Spartan roster and their contributions have been anything but puny.

The NEWS In

SPORTS

Guy Busch, center forward, has scored seven goals in the first two games, with outside right Gary McBrady adding two more.

Tom Belloli has been strong on defense at his fullback position, and Rich Nelke is a fine fill-in for All-America Payton Fuller at outside left when Fuller moved inside. And all are St. Louis boys.

Four more St. Louis boys are on the State freshman team, plus the Billikens' starting goalie last year, Kevin O'Connell. He is a junior this year, but is ineligible under Big Ten transfer rules.

"The University of St. Louis offers little economic aid to players from the St. Louis area because they figure the boys will naturally attend the local school," McBrady said. But the perennial powerhouse is beginning to lose its players to schools who offer the players a better set-up.

"We have been treated like royalty here at MSU," Belloli added.

Busch said the Billikens will continue to get top players from the St. Louis area and will still have great teams, but things will even out a little.

"Greater educational opportunities and a Big Ten degree are further reasons for picking State," Busch said. "We all considered other schools but were impressed most by State's variety of courses."

"The tremendous facilities here and the high tuition at St. Louis are more reasons for coming here," Nelke said.

Kenny goes to St. Louis twice a year to scout and recruit. He always tries to attend the national junior championships where he sees the St. Louis boys and talks to them about attending MSU.

All four sophomores played with the Kuttis juniors when they were national champions two straight years. Busch was the team's top scorer.

MSU's Sharkey Ship-Shape Following Surgical Setback

By LARRY WERNER
State News Sports Writer

Injuries are something nearly every athlete comes face-to-face with sometime during his career. Many come out second best to surgery or broken bones, which force them from the playing field to a seat on the bench.

Distance man Dick Sharkey faced such an ordeal early in 1964, shortly after concluding a sensational sophomore season on the cross-country team. The 5-7, 139-pound runner paced the harriers to the Big Ten title in '63, and topped the season off with a 10th place finish in the NCAA championship meet, which earned him All-American honors.

During the Christmas holidays of '63, Sharkey decided to get in some workouts on the Florida beaches in preparation for the indoor track season. Running on the sand didn't agree with his knee however, and Sharkey came back to campus lame. He tried to work the stiffness out of the knee by running on the hard indoor track, but his knee got worse.

When team physician James Feuring looked Sharkey's knee over, he prescribed surgery.

But the operation failed to completely remedy the situation. The Redford prep product was still unable to support his body weight on the weakened knee.

Doc Feuring then set up a rigid program of "progressive resistance" exercises, along with gradually increased running.

Dr. Feuring said, "He (Sharkey) exercised day in and day out. You couldn't ask for more co-operation." He added, "Of course, his big trial will come in Saturday's meet."

And Sharkey was back in his old pace-setting groove Saturday, as he whipped around the Forest Akers course in first place time.

While loosening up before the "big trial," Sharkey was asked how he felt after the long layoff. "Older, maybe a little stronger than in my sophomore year—but that comes with maturity." Questioned as to whether his knee bothered him this year, the Detroitier answered, "Nope! I'm conscious of it. But who wouldn't be?"

He then paused in his callisthenics and stretched to his full height. "I don't feel I'm quite as keyed as I was my sophomore year, but I think my experience will make me as strong."

He then excused himself from the interviewer by saying, "Can I talk to you a little later? I have too warm up, and that's very important."

Sharkey then began trotting back and forth across the grass. Coach Fran Dittich commented, "He seems to have come back pretty well. He has an excellent attitude. He knows what he's doing."

Assistant Coach Jim Gibbard then fired the starting gun. Sharkey moved into a quick lead, held it through an initial 4:54 mile and finished all alone at the four-mile mark.

"How does your knee feel, Dicky?" he asked.

"Good. It aches, but that doesn't stop me," he replied.

Appearing a bit uncomfortable when talking about himself, the slightly built junior would only say, "It's always a mystery as to how I'm going to perform." But Sharkey was quick to mention the good showings of teammates Art Link and George Balthrop and the rest of the victorious Spartan squad.

Everyone else, however, was talking about Sharkey, who kept plugging where others would have thrown in the towel. Gibbard called the performance a "beautiful comeback."

Dittich stated, "I think if he had to run faster, he could have. This was a very hard running day. The recent rains created a soggy running surface."

Sharkey

Reds Fire Dick Sisler

(UPI)—The Cincinnati Reds fired Dick Sisler as manager Monday, and the outspoken son of Hall of Famer, George Sisler, was quick to register his disappointment.

"I think in my own mind I should have been given one more year to get this ballclub going," Sisler said. "I don't know why these things happen, but they happen. And I'm very, very, very disappointed."

CLINTON TOPS IN RUSHING

Can't Stop That Jones Boy

By RICK PIANIN
State News Sports Writer

Regardless of how hard people try, no one has yet succeeded in keeping up with the Joneses, especially if they're contending with one particular Jones boy--Clinton.

Clint Jones plays right halfback for the Spartan football team, for the information of those who sleep in Saturday afternoons.

Jones displayed his wares last Saturday against Illinois and racked up 89 yards in rushing, scored a touchdown on a determined 11-yard effort and again proved his versatility as a fine blocker and pass receiver.

For his effort, he was awarded the game ball and received the praises of the team coaches and players. Jones now looms as State's leading ground gainer with 221 yards in three games.

Jones earned a starting varsity assignment last year while only a sophomore.

"We felt that he would be a fine football player, even as a sophomore," explained Dan Boisture, assistant coach to Head Coach Duffy Daugherty. "He made some dazzling runs then, and also improved on his pass receiving this summer."

Jones was intent on developing his pass-catching game, and met with quarterback Steve Juday three times a week here this summer to practice running pass patterns. His time investment paid off; he and end Gene Washington are now Juday's prime and most productive pass receivers.

Jones also undertook another project this summer, one which was to add more solid weight to his six-foot frame.

"Jones put on about 15 pounds this summer, working a lot with weights and isometric exercises," added Boisture. "He got a lot stronger from the waist up and his blocking has improved. He also ran track last year, both indoors and out, to maintain his speed."

Jones, himself, agrees that his added weight (he now weighs 218 pounds) has been a great asset.

"It helps me all around," he said. "The bigger you are, the more it helps your running and blocking. It also makes me a little less prone to injury."

In looking forward to the MSU-U-M game this Saturday, Jones said that the team's main goal is to work out all the "mental errors" during practice. Jones committed one such error last Saturday when he dropped an extra-point conversion pass from Juday.

"It looked so easy that I thought I had it with no trouble at all. You're supposed to keep your eyes on the ball until you've got it in your hands. I didn't," he said.

Jones has no special play or pattern he likes to run best. "I think I run just as strong, regardless of whether I run inside or out. I mean, you find a hole anywhere in the line and you go!"

Spartans 4th Best In Nation

Editor's Note: Michigan State, fresh from its third straight conquest this season, jumped from seventh to fourth place in the latest United Press International major football rankings released Monday.

NEW YORK (UPI)--Nebraska's high scoring Cornhuskers attracted enough secondary support from the United Press International major college football board of coaches Monday to become the No. 1 team in the nation this week.

Coach Bob Devaney's Huskers, who have rolled past three opponents, amassed 317 total points and 12 first place votes to outscramble Texas, who was named on more first place ballots 19, but received only 298 total points.

Purdue, No. 1 a week ago, fell to seventh place after being held to a 14-14 tie by Southern Methodist.

Arkansas, Michigan State and Georgia, all sporting spotless 3-0 slates, were third, fourth and fifth, respectively, with the Razorbacks gaining one first place vote and Michigan State, picking up a pair.

Notre Dame's Fighting Irish moved up to sixth on the strength of a 38-7 thumping of Northwestern and garnered the 35th and final first place vote.

Southern California and Alabama advanced to the eighth and ninth spots, while Mississippi State and Oregon wound up tied for 10th.

Next in line were Wyoming,

Michigan, Missouri, Louisiana State, Duke, West Virginia, and Florida, Auburn, Ohio State and Kentucky were deadlocked for 19th place to complete the top 20.

Nebraska, which has lost only two games in the past two seasons, drew 16 second place votes to six for Texas, to vault past the Longhorns from their third place rating last week.

Arkansas edged forward one position to third and Michigan State jumped from seventh to fourth after rallying to trip Illinois 22-12.

Georgia, which could be the Cinderella squad of 1965, came up with its second upset of the season, beating Michigan 15-7 and dropping the Wolverines from the top 10. The Bulldogs opened the campaign with an 18-17 stunner over defending national champion Alabama.

Notre Dame's well-oiled machine poured it on Northwestern to move from ninth to sixth place. USC improved two positions to eighth.

Mississippi State swamped Tampa 48-7 and went from 12th to a 10th place tie and Oregon hopped from number 14 to a share of 10th.

POLITICS OR POKER?

MAC Student Council Born In 1908

By HUGH J. LEACH

Students, faculty and administrators who wonder how their problems began need only look back to the 1908 for a partial answer.

That was the year MSU, or MAC as it was known at the time, established its first all-college student government, the Student Council.

The council's purpose was to "define and enforce a revised code of rules regulating class rivalry," says University Historian Madison Kuhn in his book, "The First Hundred Years." But in solving one problem, the creation of the council led to the emergence of others.

There are those even today who wonder if student government creates more problems than it solves.

Although 1908 is usually considered the year in which student government began at the University, John N. Winburne, assistant dean of the University College, says its roots go back farther than that.

It was first organized as a discipline-keeping body in the 1800's, Winburne said. Its purpose was to help enforce the rules of the school.

The faculty minutes of March 24, 1875, refer to a vote by the MAC students in which they agreed to "undertake self-government similar to that practiced at the State Agricultural College of Iowa."

The constitution, however, was drawn up by a faculty member. In fact, it seems that the idea of establishing student government was that of a Professor Fairchild, not the students.

Another entry in the faculty minutes, dated July 19, 1876, shows that the governing system was functioning, but its actions had to undergo faculty approval.

The entry says "action of the Student Council in giving three marks to Mr. Savage and three to Mr. Curtis for improper language at the dining table was approved."

If student government still had this function, it would probably be so busy handing out marks that it would have to neglect all its other duties.

Other rules the governing body was expected to help enforce included compulsory attendance at all chapel exercises, recitations, lectures and field operations, bans on gambling, liquor and firearms and a ban on smoking on campus.

At a faculty meeting on Jan. 4, 1915, another rule was passed that the students were expected to help enforce. This rule stated that "a student who has a venereal disease may not enroll or register."

A second part of the rule stipulated that "students known to have visited houses of ill fame are guilty of an act of immorality and are subject to expulsion."

The Student Council did secure some privileges for the students. In January, 1915, the students were granted extra hours in which to use the campus bath house.

Second Of Five Parts

There had apparently been some ill feeling between the student body and the athletic department over the hours in which non-athletes were expected to use the facility.

The Holcad, predecessor of the State News, said on Jan. 11, that "It was only by a strenuous protest by members of the Council that the time has been extended."

One of the first indications of student apathy toward the council appeared in the Nov. 1, 1915, Holcad -- when an editorial appeared urging student support of the Student Council.

At that time the Holcad defined the main duty of the council as that of managing interclass affairs and acting as spokesman for the student body in its relations with the faculty.

By May 28, 1929, however, the student newspaper had changed its tune.

In the midst of a controversy over whether the faculty should control student election, the State

News said, "The principal and most important function that the Council has is the supervision of student elections. Shorn of this responsibility the Council may as well fold up and be laid among the relics."

When the basis of student government was changed from representation by classes to representation by interest areas in 1939, the new constitution listed a broader purpose: That of directing student affairs and student organizations.

This could be one of the clues to why the Student Council failed to survive.

When you speak of student government many students conceive of a completely autonomous organization, says John A. Fuzak, vice president of student affairs. This is not the case.

Student government is just one part of the total picture, Fuzak said. The problem is that students expect the student government to determine student regulations.

"If this is expected," he added, "any student government is doomed to failure."

FACULTY FACTS

The MSU Department of Sociology has an unusual boast. Three faculty members are presidents or presidents-elect of sociological societies.

Charles P. Loomis, on leave in India, is the president-elect of the American Sociological Assn., an 8,000-member organization. J. A. Beegle is president of the Rural Sociological Society, an international group of 800. James B. McKee is president of the Ohio Valley Sociological Society and also a member of the American Sociological Assn.

Robert E. Hotelling, associate professor of urban planning and continuing education, reports on urban renewal in the September issue of the Michigan Economic Record, published by the MSU Bureau of Business and Economic Research in the Graduate School of Business.

Hotelling traces the history of urban renewal from 1945 and outlines technical modernization procedures for municipalities. He notes that although federal aid is not mandatory, every major Michigan city is using it.

Student Board To Vote On Affiliation With NSA

By CHAR JOLLES
State News Staff Writer

The annual controversy of MSU affiliation with the National Student Association (NSA) will be renewed tonight at a meeting of the Student Board.

Jim Graham, Detroit Junior member-at-large, is scheduled to move that the Associated Students of MSU (ASMSU) pay their dues to NSA for the third consecutive year.

Also on the agenda is a report by Daryl Peterson, Ludington senior and chairman of the committee on external relations. Peterson will report on his study of MSU's affiliation with NSA, the Michigan Association of Student Governments (MASG) and the Association of Student Governments of the USA (ASGUSA).

MSU has been in and out of NSA for the last seven years, said Webb Martin, vice chairman of the Student Board and Flint senior.

NSA is a liberal-dominated organization of student governments with a national office located in Washington, D.C., he said.

Martin said objections to affiliation with NSA have centered in the past around three issues: --Cost. "Affiliation with NSA can cost up to $1,500 a year, depending on how extensively we participate," he said.

The argument has been that the majority of MSU students benefit enough from NSA to match the funds spent on dues and conventions for delegates from student government.

--Political philosophy. NSA's liberal inclinations have not appealed to past student governments here, which have tended to be conservative, Martin said.

In 1961 NSA passed a resolution supporting sit-ins, and about 60 of the southern schools withdrew from the organization, he said.

"The conservative element is weak," Graham said, "but NSA is trying to broaden its representation by bringing back the more conservative schools."

The Big 10 schools still affiliated with NSA are: University of Michigan, University of Illinois, Iowa State, University of Minnesota, University of Wisconsin and MSU.

Ohio State, the University of Indiana, Purdue and Northwestern have left the association.

--Field of action. The NSA constitution states that the association will concern itself with issues involving the student and his role as a student, Martin said.

"Rarely has NSA confined itself to those issues," he added. At the 18th Annual National Student Congress this August delegates debated and voted on issues of national and international import, such as civil rights and the war in Viet Nam.

According to Graham, other issues concerning the student di-

DEPRIVED YOUTH STUDIED

12 May Be Critical 'I.Q.' Age

The critical age for improving IQ may be between 12 and 14, Robert L. Green has concluded from a recent study.

Green, assistant professor of education at MSU, is currently on a one-year leave to work with Martin Luther King in setting up literacy programs in rural southern areas.

Negro youngsters in Virginia's Prince Edward County who received no schooling for four years made significant gains in measured intelligence during the first one and a half years in which the schools were reopened, Green said.

Increases among the educationally deprived children still left them in a range classified as "mentally defective," Green said.

The schools, closed in 1959 to avoid desegregation, were reopened in fall 1963 by order of the United States Supreme Court. During this time white children attended private schools while most of Prince Edward's 1,700 Negro children had no schooling. In a paper delivered to the annual convention of the American Psychological Assn., Green found that youngsters with the greatest deprivation made the largest IQ gains.

In July, 1963, before the free schools opened, Green tested 288 children, including those who had some education during the school closing and those who had none. In April, 1965, he re-tested 66 children drawn at random from the original group.

In the "no education" group, Green found, 12- to 14-year-olds recorded an 18-point IQ increase (from 57 to 75), 9- to 11-year-olds increased five points (62.5 to 67.5), and 15- to 17-year-olds recorded a negligible change (68.5 to 68).

Further testing showed children in the "no education" group still had IQs in the mentally defective range.

Of the children who had some education most were well above the defective range.

Both age and degree of educational deprivation affected the children's measured improvement of intelligence, Green said, but the latter factor was most important.

Green will return to MSU in September, 1966.

Free Grad Study In Japan Offered To MSU Students

MSU students who will receive degrees by next year are eligible to receive scholarships for graduate research study in Japan under the 1966 Mombusho Scholarship Program just announced by Yasuhiro Naru, Japanese consul general in Chicago.

The scholarships are for study in a broad range of fields in the humanities, social sciences and natural sciences. One group of student grantees will arrive in Japan in April, 1966 and remain for two years; another is scheduled for 1-1/2 years of study beginning in October, 1966.

The scholarships include air transportation to Japan, tuition and fees, a stipend of about $80 per month and a small allowance for field study.

Most scholarship winners will first enroll for a year's language training in the Special Course for Foreign Students at the Osaka University of Foreign Studies. At the completion of the language course, students may enroll in a master's degree program, requiring a minimum of two years, or on a non-degree basis as a research student or auditor. Extensions of stay are possible to complete unfinished study programs.

Further information about the Mombusho 1966 program may be obtained from the Consulate General of Japan, 520 N. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill. 60611.

President, Pope Discuss Strife, Renew Faith In UN

NEW YORK (UPI)—President Johnson and Pope Paul VI conferred in a skyscraper hotel suite Monday in a face-to-face meeting of temporal and spiritual leaders dedicated to peace on earth.

The two men discussed Viet Nam and other world trouble spots for 46 minutes in a small 35th floor sitting room in the towering Waldorf-Astoria Hotel and afterwards emphasized the role of the United Nations in trying to achieve global peace.

Of the Pope's unprecedented journey to the United States to address the United Nations, the President said "this may be just what the world needs to get us thinking on how to achieve peace and getting us to make progress in that area."

The two leaders, one the chief executive of the world's mightiest nation and the other the head of the world's largest religion, discussed the India-Pakistan dispute, the Dominican Republic, Viet Nam and other areas of strife.

The President and the pontiff themselves summarized their private chat and Presidential Press Secretary Bill D. Moyers later disclosed further details.

Alone except for two interpreters and Moyers, the President and Pope devoted most of their discussion to efforts for world peace, Moyers said.

--They reviewed various "trouble spots" and the United Nations' role in working to end war.

--They discussed "specific means for achieving peace through programs of health and education on a worldwide basis." In this connection, the Pope praised President Johnson for steps taken by the American people to combat human misery.

--The Pope expressed gratitude as an individual and as head of Roman Catholicism for the United States' "progress in the field of civil rights."

--The President told the Pope "all strong supporters of justice in this country were quite heartened by his holiness' recent appointment of a Negro bishop in this country."

--Moyers said President Johnson recalled his 1962 visit to the Vatican while vice president with the late Pope John XXIII. Moyers said the visit made the President realize that "in this very difficult and distressed period, peace is possible."

"They discussed the United Nations at some length," Moyers said. "The President said it was his opinion that the Pope's visit constituted a very strong expression of support for what the United Nations can accomplish."

The President himself told newsmen that the entire world is indebted to the Pope for "the sacrifices he has made in coming on this long trip across the waters and to provide leadership in the world's quest for peace."

"His holiness and I discussed means of advancing that cause," Johnson said.

He said they also exchanged detailed views about what could be done "to help provide education for the 800 million people of the world who cannot read or write, and to help increase the life expectancy of the millions."

Incinerator Burns Woman

A fiery blast from an incinerator at the rear of the Brody group food center sent a woman employee to Olin Health Center Monday.

Mrs. Minnie M. Theodorsky, a custodian at the food center, was admitted to Olin shortly after the accident suffering from second and third degree burns on her face, neck, both arms, upper chest and upper back, according to Dr. James S. Feurig, director of the health center.

Campus police reported that Mrs. Theodorsky apparently opened the door to the incinerator and was burned by the rushing blast of flames. The force of the blow knocked her away from the door and off of a four-foot ledge and onto a cement floor.

Mrs. Theodorsky's condition is reported as fair.
