Kelley indicates fee plan OK; formal ruling to come today

By LEO ZAINEA
State News Staff Writer

Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley indicated Thursday that he sees nothing within the University's new graduated tuition structure that could be construed as unconstitutional.

His ruling on the controversial system will be announced at 10 a.m. today and is expected to affirm the plan's constitutionality.

He said privately that the plan appeared vague, in some respects, but he essentially agreed to a progressive-type fee structure.

Too many people do not fully understand the plan, he said, and their grounds for condemning it are, in most cases, unfounded.

Later Thursday, Republican trustees, after an hour-long conference with Gov. George Romney, reluctantly agreed that hopes for abandoning the fee plan would be lost if the attorney general ruled the plan to be constitutional.

They implied, however, that they had plans for attacking the fee system further, but declined to give specifics. They said there are no plans now for a special trustees' meeting.

Trustee Kenneth W. Thompson, Birmingham, an outspoken opponent of the fee plan, said he feared that concerned parents would formally protest the issue if Kelley issued a favorable opinion. He charged that the "sliding scale plan," based on a sliding, graduated scale according to gross parental income, would lead to "greater and greater and greater" fee hikes based on ability-to-pay.

Under the proposal, fees would remain at the present level of $354 for in-state students whose parents have yearly income below $11,800. Those from families earning more would pay higher tuition costs, on a sliding scale amounting to 3 per cent of the family income up to $16,666.

Trustees said they met with the governor to "familiarize" him with the tuition problem that faced the University and ask for any suggestions.

The trustees, Frank Merriman, Deckerville, Stephen Nisbet, Freemont and Thompson, told newsmen that they had not solicited support from Romney to renounce the plan, but asked only for some alternatives. They said Romney gave none, nor did he endorse a Republican or Democratic plan outright.

After the meeting, held behind closed doors in the governor's oak-paneled office, trustees defended the plan they originally proposed July 21 that deadlocked the board 4-4. Connor D. Smith, a sometime Democrat from Pinconning, voted with the three Republicans.

The GOP proposal, endorsed by high-level University officials including President Hannah, called for a straight, across-the-board fee hike of $75 per year for in-state undergraduates and $180 for out-of-state students. About $500,000 would be set aside to economically aid "disadvantaged" students, from incomes of $5,000 or less.

Student aid would be in the form of scholarships, loans and work programs. Thompson said that under this plan the University could accept a student "without a nickel in his pocket," and guarantee him an education.

The GOP trustees charged in statements to newsmen that the Democrats rejected the plan on purely political grounds. Merriman asserted that one Democratic trustee told him that he felt committed to support the party's platform which called for progressive type tuition systems.

Thompson said it would not be too late to abandon the fee system if the attorney general gave an "unfavorable" opinion. He asserted the plan's chief architect, Don Stevens, D-Okemos, formulated it quickly and an alternative could be handled just as fast.

The request for an opinion by Kelley was an outgrowth of a House resolution that denounced the fee system as "unsound and unworkable" and urged the trustees to renounce it or face possible appropriation cuts this year. The House Majority Floor Leader, William P. Hampton of Bloomfield Hills, asked Kelley:

--whether the plan violates state statute or state or federal constitutional provisions

--can parents of students legally refuse to disclose their income as a condition for reduced fees?

--can trustees require a parent to disclose his income?

--can the Legislature prohibit such a tuition plan should it be ruled legal in all respects?

Alumni fund chairman blasts trustees' fee plan

The new ability-to-pay tuition plan may seriously cut into the MSU Development Fund, according to the fund's chairman.

In an open letter to President Hannah, Arno W. Weiss of Saginaw called for a reversal of the tuition decision, noting that financial support from alumni and MSU backers may drop off as a result.

Weiss mailed 1,400 copies of the letter, an expression of his own views, to the governor, lieutenant governor, attorney general, all state legislators, members of the State Board of Education, MSU Alumni Club presidents, presidents of the Big 10 universities and Notre Dame and other individuals.

He said that his views were based to an extent on his personal position. Weiss has two sons enrolled at MSU and a daughter who has been accepted for fall, 1968.

"If you have to pay more tuition," he said, "there's just nothing left to give the University."

He added that, in the light of the tuition plan, he might have to resign from the President's Club. The group is composed of persons who agree to give the University at least $1,000 per year for 10 years or make arrangements for a similar gift through wills, trusts or insurance policies.

Since the new plan was announced, he said, two prospective members have changed their minds about joining.

During 1966, alumni and friends of MSU had contributed $5,837,957.

Weiss pointed to the Ralph Young Scholarship Fund as another possible casualty of the plan. He said that alumni support of MSU's athletic program may be affected.

The Distinguished Alumni Scholarship Program, according to Weiss, could cease for lack of funds because of the plan. He said that alumni have expressed their intent to stop giving to this program.

He pointed to the tampering with American privacy, regarding the necessity for parents to submit an income tax statement to MSU. He said that before an income tax form is surrendered for public inspection, parents will send their children elsewhere and MSU will feel the loss. Along with academic and scholastic losses will go potential donors to the University--parents, alumni and non-alumni.

"If one must pay more tuition," Weiss said, "there will be nothing left to give."

He added that some parents intend to present a fake income tax statement to the University, and that they cannot be prevented from doing so.

Weiss pointed to the price of higher education in terms of a student working his way through college. With tuition at $354 per year and a minimum pay rate on campus of $1.40 an hour, 253 hours of work are required to earn one's tuition, as compared to 300 hours a generation ago. He said the same applies for room and board.

In 1966, $43,625,999.61 was paid out for student employment. While 15,385 were employed, Weiss noted that job opportunities went unfilled by the hundreds for lack of student application. Those who will be included in the bracket paying lower tuition are those students who did not

Leary flowers while Detroit ghetto-ers broil

By ERIC PIANIN
State News Executive Editor

EDITOR'S NOTE: Executive Editor Eric Pianin is at the University of Maryland covering the National Student Assn. Summer Congress.

COLLEGE PARK, Md.--The door was pushed open. Several Negro high school students from Detroit sauntered into the conference room and sat down with about 15 NSA delegates and social workers. They were meeting to talk about what could be done to prevent all hell from breaking loose again.

(Four hours later, about 1,000 delegates flocked into a University of Maryland auditorium to listen to Timothy Leary, the poet and spokesman of a psychedelic cult, tell them that it's time to tune in and drop out.)

The group initially was interested in finding ways to reach Negroes in the ghettos through tutorials.

"Tutoring in itself is good, but it's no darn good if you come down and tutor the slum children and then go back home and let your father and uncle rob those people blind," said Mike Wilson, a Negro poverty worker in Harlem.

(Leary sat on the stage floor in his white gown holding a flower. Beatles albums were being played to provide mood music. "No one can do your spiritual and psychological homework for you," he said. "The temple of god is within your body; every cell in your body must pulsate.")

One of the NSA delegates turned to Jackie Tucker and asked her how she and her friends could best be reached in the ghettos. She and the other Detroit students were invited to the conference to give a better picture of conditions in the slums.

"Don't ask me how to get to the people in the slums," she said. "That's your own damn business."

"But what can we do?" the delegate asked.

"I don't know what to do. If I did I'd do it myself, not tell you."

(Leary smiled at his audience. "I propose that the government scientists develop a psychedelic drug with no harmful side effects.")

The delegates and high school students were generally of the opinion that if conditions were to be improved in the ghettos the necessary programs would have to originate within the community.

Federal programs were not the answer, for they have always failed when finally implemented at the local level.

An internal network of communications must be established to bring unity to the struggle of combatting the slum lords and unscrupulous merchants. The Negroes and whites must work together not only for the good of the Negroes but for the benefit of both groups, the delegates decided.

"While you're tutoring the slum children

LBJ DECLARES

Alaska 'disaster area'; flood slowly recedes

FAIRBANKS, Alaska (P)--Thousands of refugees lining the hills around this flood-covered city were cheered Thursday as President Johnson declared Fairbanks and other towns in central Alaska a disaster area.

But the dirty, brown waters of the Chena River, which bisects this city of 30,000, the second largest in Alaska, were receding at a tantalizingly slow pace.

It appeared there would be no chance for the refugees to return to their mud-filled homes and businesses before Saturday to start a massive cleanup and reconstruction job.

Designation of the region as a disaster area, the second in Alaska in three years, prompted this jubilant comment by Mayor H.A. "Red" Boucher:

"Now we'll get the job done in time. All we need is the tools and we're ready to go."

Anchorage and South Central Alaska were declared a disaster area following the 1964 earthquake and the federal government poured in nearly half a billion dollars for reconstruction.

Two more bodies were found in Fairbanks today in a small, log cabin near the center of town. This brought the known death toll to seven-five in Fairbanks and two in Tok, a border station about 200 miles southeast of Fairbanks where the Tok River also went on a rampage.

The Red Cross identified three of the dead here as Mrs. Josephine Newlan, 72, Fairbanks, and D.C. Kelly and Glenn Traxter, whose ages and hometowns were not known immediately.

Senate OK's foreign aid bill; cuts requests by $800 million

WASHINGTON (P)--The Senate approved Thursday night a foreign-aid authorization bill of $2.6 billion for 1967-68, more than $800 million below President Johnson's request.

The vote was 60 to 26.

Citing heavy war and other financial demands on the taxpayers, members rejected 11th-hour pleas from the administration to restore at least part of the cuts, most of which were made in the Foreign Relations Committee.

In addition to sharp cuts in authorizations, the Senate bill would strip the President of his power to add countries to the aid list without congressional approval.

Also eliminated from the bill were policy declarations the President had sought to bring a new look to the aid program.

In four days of action on the bill, the Senate repeatedly rebuffed the administration and stood with the Foreign Relations Committee, headed by Sen. J. W. Fulbright, D-Ark., a long-time critic of Johnson's policy in Vietnam.

The authorization bill will be taken up next week in the House, whose Foreign Affairs Committee has approved a measure much closer to administration goals.

In final amendments to the bill Thursday, the Senate whacked out another $100 million and adopted an amendment to deny aid to any country that broke off diplomatic ties with the United States.

Its sponsor, Sen. Ernest Gruening, D-Alaska, said it is aimed at Arab countries that ended ties with this country during the Middle East crisis in June.

In its final actions on the bill, cut $837 million from the $3.4 billion asked by Johnson, the Senate:

--Voted 48 to 43 to cut another $100 million from the development-loan fund, which the Foreign Relations Committee earlier reduced from $750 million to $650 million.

--Rejected an administration move, led by Sen. Robert F. Kennedy, D-N.Y., to add $72 million to the authorization for the Alliance for Progress, established in 1961 to help spur development in Latin America. This left the Alliance authorization at $578 million.

--Turned down another amendment, which also had been sought by the administration, to restore $33 million the committee cut from technical assistance funds, leaving that total at the $210 million proposed by the committee.

--Rejected a proposal to establish a joint congressional panel to reappraise the whole foreign-aid program.

Sen. John Sparkman, D-Ala., vice chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, sponsored the amendment to provide more money for technical assistance but lost, 56 to 32.

EDITORIAL

Just one more drop

"There have been people ending up with holes in their heads because they tried to exercise their civil rights," said a Congressman concerning the need for the civil rights bill passed Wednesday by the House.

This is true, but the bill is so limited in scope that nearly as many people will continue getting holes in their heads for exercising their rights.

Minor amendments chopped away at the breadth of the bill. At the request of the Justice Department, the bill was weakened to require that, in order to be convicted, a person must interfere with an individual both because of his race, religion, color or political affiliation and because he is or has been trying to engage in specified protected activities.

The measure, the fourth civil rights bill in four years, is nothing more than a token gesture of concern from the House. It is similar to part of last year's civil rights bill which included a controversial open housing section and died in the Senate. This bill is expected to meet the same fate, including another filibuster from Southern opposition.

Under the bill it is a federal crime to interfere with, intimidate, injure or threaten someone on a racial, religious, national origin, or political basis engaged in voting, attending public schools, serving on state and local juries, using public accommodations and participating in federally assisted programs.

Penalties go up to one year and $1,000, except that "serious bodily injury" could bring up to 10 years and $10,000 and death could cause life imprisonment.

Supposedly the bill will crack down on both the Black Power advocates and the white supremacists. Representatives were divided as to whether it would be difficult to get a conviction under the final House form. But Attorney General Ramsey Clark does not think so.

Still the action seems a few years late in coming. It might have helped a couple years ago when civil rights activities were numerous in the South. But today it accomplishes little.

It is regrettable that the bill is so narrow and exclusive and fails to hit any significant problems in the Negro's quest for equality, education, pathos of the ghetto, poverty both black and white, causes behind riots, housing or rats.

Another drop in a still nearly empty bucket.

CRITICAL OF VIETNAM

Scholars rap U.S. policy

By WILLIAM L. RYAN
AP Special Correspondent

ANN ARBOR, Mich. (AP)—In a gathering of 2,000 scholars of eastern affairs it is difficult to find any who support U.S. policy in Vietnam all the way. Even friends of the United States say that after dreaming up a monster in theory, the Americans made it into a reality in Southeast Asia.

The monster referred to in this case is the "domino theory" which contends that if one Southeast Asian nation should fall to communism, others would collapse like a row of dominoes.

"The domino theory has more meaning now in our area than it had before," said one expert who is a native of that area. "The United States since 1965 created a situation which makes the theory valid now. It is more likely now than before that the domino theory would prove out if the U.S. military presence should be withdrawn from Southeast Asia."

The scholars, gathered at the University of Michigan from all over the world for the 27th Congress of Orientalists, up to now have been speaking anonymously about the U.S. role in Southeast Asia. While on the campus they do not want to associate the congress itself with statements implying criticism of President Johnson's policies.

Off the campus, the criticism heard in private is sharp, even from friends who fear the prospect of rising Communist China in their area of the world. A sample of the kindest comment from Southeast Asians pictures the United States as caught in quicksand and sinking deeper all the time as it struggles to get out. They speak more in sorrow than in anger. Some, of course, do support Washington's policy—people from Vietnam itself or from Nationalist China.

The delegates seem to reflect a feeling among Southeast Asians of being torn two ways: wishing that the Americans were less deeply involved, and at the same time fearing what might happen if the Americans decided to clear out of Vietnam—or Southeast Asia. They do not, however, expect that to happen. What they do express hope for is a de-escalation of the war and the threat it poses to Asia as a whole.

"The Americans already have had a disaster in Vietnam," commented one expert. "It is that they have found out they cannot win a land war in Asia."

One who dreaded the prospect of an abrupt U.S. departure said, at the same time, that a half dozen years back or even less, he did not believe the "domino theory" held water. Now, he said, the escalation has demonstrated that the Vietnam war cannot be won militarily, thus lending validity to the "people's war" concept of China's Mao Tse-tung.

Experts tended to question that U.S. interests in Southeast Asia dictated so deep an involvement. Mostly at stake now, they argued, were freedom of the sea and airways. They claimed that China, even should its influence dominate the area, could not in this century dream of successfully challenging Western claims to those freedoms.

"If the Americans had taken the same stand in 1940—that their interests demanded a military presence—I would have agreed," commented one. "It was a question then of dependence on raw materials, too. But not now."

"The United States no longer depends on the Far East for rubber. The demand for its tin and other resources is greatly reduced. In fact, the United States is in economic competition with Southeast Asia."

Specialists say American mistakes were made all along the line, years ago and in the recent past, with regard to Vietnam, until a situation came about in which the Americans had a tiger by the tail and were unable to let go.

"We want the American presence in Southeast Asia as a protection," said one, "but we are anxious now about what U.S. aid can mean. The destruction of South Vietnam—as it is seen from the point of view entirely out of the hands of the Vietnamese themselves—all this frightens us."

"And the forthcoming elections in Vietnam also are a discouraging factor. It is difficult to ask Southeast Asia to take the elections seriously. It is as if the United States were playing a game to satisfy some of its own people at home, but I don't think anybody else will be deceived by the elections, which will be meaningless."

Said another: "We tried over the years to oppose some of the more radical steps of the U.S. government. Nothing stopped them and there gradually was nothing left to say. Vaguely we are sorry for the American government, caught in this position. But we, too, are caught in a dilemma. If you stay we are in trouble. If you go, we probably will be in trouble."

This feeling is more pronounced in some areas than in others. It is particularly noticeable among such people as Malaysians and Thais, whose countries are uncomfortably close to huge neighbor China.

They say they do not fear China militarily, but they do fear the Red Chinese instrument of "people's war" and subversion against which, to their minds, Vietnam demonstrated there was no adequate defense.

CONDEMNS NEW FEE PLAN

Alumni fund head blasts trustees

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following are excerpts of a letter sent to President Hannah regarding the new tuition schedule from Arno Weiss, chairman of MSU's Alumni Development Fund.

It is with deep regret and grave concern for the future of Michigan State that I learned of the recent decision of the board of trustees to establish a graduated tuition scale at the University based on parents' income.

At your testimonial dinner last winter, the world recognized the leadership of John Hannah—statesman and educator. The growth of a relatively small college into one of the great Universities of the world had been accomplished. Today, after the dedication of a lifetime to the University, it seems both strange and depressing that you should be handed a verdict such as a graduated tuition scale against your wishes and your better judgment. It also seems strange that such a verdict should be handed you by five men, only one of whom is an alumnus of the University.

American privacy has been invaded. An income tax statement is the private property of two parties—the individual and the Federal Government. The legality of forcing an individual to present this document for public inspection is highly questionable to say nothing of the invasion into the private lives of American citizens to question their integrity.

Friends and alumni by the thousands have given to the Ralph Young Scholarship Program to enable those who are athletically inclined to be recognized for their efforts. Alumni resentment is strong, and within these past weeks the staunchest supporters of athletics have indicated they will not give in view of an intrusion upon their rights.

We alumni have been proud of our giving to the Distinguished Alumni Scholarship Program which each year brought to the campus nearly 2,000 of the finest high school seniors from all of the states and various parts of the world. This program may well cease to exist for a lack of giving.

The only part of the equation we are lacking is the definition of a poor man who cries that he has been denied the right of higher education. If he is healthy, but spineless and lazy, and refuses to avail himself of the opportunity to work, then indeed he is a poor man. On the other hand, there are young men and women today, some without the help of a father, who not only work their way through school, but refuse financial aid, preferring to do it on their own. These are truly red-blooded Americans, poor in terms of dollars but rich in the kind of fiber that made this country great.

In 1966 Michigan State paid out a total of $3,625,999.61 for part-time student employment. W-2 forms were issued to 15,385 students. Job opportunities went unfilled by the hundreds for a lack of student application for employment. Among those who did not apply are some who shall now become the privileged by paying a lesser tuition fee. What is worse, 39,000 students will become embodied with the philosophy of not to excel, nor to work too hard or too long, else one will not only pay more taxes, but will also pay more tuition.

It would have been far better for the governing body to have devised some kind of a yardstick to measure all of the qualities of the student being admitted, rather than to devise a yardstick to measure the depth of dad and mother's pocketbook.

Based on percentage brackets of income, the most the University can hope to gain by a graduated tuition scale is far less than the amount given to the University. The governing body must gamble the possible gain of a small sum against the loss of the giving by free enterprise; namely, $5,837,957.00 in 1966. The odds are great and stacked against the University.

I am told that some parents fully intend to carry a fake income tax statement with them to the University and that there is nothing to prevent them from doing so. It is their concept that taxation, be it federal, state, or city, is a confidential trust, and any who violate this trust by exposing their income shall become liable to the courts for so doing.

Atlanta D.A. urges new riot legislation

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., (P) -- Atlanta District Attorney Lewis R. Slaton Thursday urged passage of new laws, at state and national levels, to deal with riot situations.

Slaton, whose city has witnessed racial disturbances in recent months, said Georgia law classifies inciting a riot only as a misdemeanor.

"But we're going to change that," said Slaton, who joined district attorneys from four other riot-struck cities in a panel discussion at the annual conference of the National District Attorneys Association.

"There is no over-all solution," said Brendan Byrne of New Jersey's Essex County where Newark was the scene of one of the summer's worst race riots.

Prosecutor William L. Cahalan of Detroit, where race riots left scores dead and damages in the hundreds of millions, suggested that all persons arrested during riots be jailed for two or three days before bond is set.

"It's an interesting experience to spend two or three days in jail," he added.

Other suggestions from the panel included:

--Downplay talks of civil rights leaders after a riot or disturbance has started because "nobody could blow a whistle and stop a riot."

--Elimination of grand jury investigations into the causes of riots because they "would come up with nothing and only add fuel to a smoldering fire."

--Impress on everyone that "law and order shall be maintained with effective, efficient and fair treatment."

Cahalan said about half of the 7,900 persons arrested during the Detroit riots had no previous records.

Waier's story, if true, is an appalling one, but happily it is one of those problems with a simple solution. Navy commanders should simply stop confusing sorties with combat effectiveness. That's just like judging a quarterback by the number of passes he throws rather than the number he completes.

Meanwhile, in Honolulu, Hawaii, the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet has denied charges by a former Navy lieutenant that Navy pilots were required to fly needless missions to beat the number of sorties by other carriers in the air war on Vietnam.

Adm. Roy L. Johnson said, "The story is not representative of the thinking of the people out there in Vietnam."

"The Vietnam air war is a well-conducted operation," Johnson said Wednesday.

"Sometimes it's a little difficult, however, for kids going up to realize the benefit to the war of one operation. It's not until you pull all the facts together and see the total picture that you realize this."

Flier's bomb dumping charge stirs call for federal check

WASHINGTON--Two Michigan Congressmen Thursday called for a congressional inquiry into charges by former Navy pilot Alex Waier, Midland, that flyers were ordered onto "useless missions" over North Vietnam.

House Republican leader Gerald R. Ford, Grand Rapids, and Rep. Elford A. Cederberg, R-Bay City, urged the House Armed Services Committee to investigate Waier's charges.

Ford said he has heard similar allegations from Air Force and Navy pilots returning from Vietnam duty tours.

"With so much information coming back, there must be some truth to what he alleges," Ford said.

Waier, 32, a systems analyst at Dow Chemical Co., resigned his commission last February after nine years of active duty.

In a copyrighted story in the Bay City Times Tuesday, Waier charged that lives and planes were lost on missions ordered by commanders trying to set combat sortie records.

Congressional record

Cederberg placed the Times interview in the Congressional Record. He said he would like to see the House Armed Services Committee call Waier to testify, but he said this would be up to the committee.

Sen. Philip D. Hart, D-Mich., said today he agrees with the Navy version of Waier's charges, but added:

"Waier's story, if true, is an appalling one, but happily it is one of those problems with a simple solution. Navy commanders should simply stop confusing sorties with combat effectiveness. That's just like judging a quarterback by the number of passes he throws rather than the number he completes."

Meanwhile, in Honolulu, Hawaii, the commander in chief of the Pacific Fleet has denied charges by a former Navy lieutenant that Navy pilots were required to fly needless missions to beat the number of sorties by other carriers in the air war on Vietnam.

Adm. Roy L. Johnson said, "The story is not representative of the thinking of the people out there in Vietnam."

"Sometimes it's a little difficult, however, for kids going up to realize the benefit to the war of one operation. It's not until you pull all the facts together and see the total picture that you realize this."

Johnson said many young men after a tour of Vietnam are offered attractive airline jobs at salaries the Navy finds it hard to compete with.

Johnson deplored the tendency of the press to accept charges such as those made by Waier as front page news. He said the few instances of complaints are far outweighed by positive stories.

The Pentagon Wednesday night revised another admiral's estimate of bomb tonnages jettisoned by Navy pilots returning to carriers after cancelled missions in North Vietnam.

AWAITS SENATE REWORKING

Social Security hike OK'd

WASHINGTON (P)--The House voted Thursday for a raise in benefits to 24.2 million Social Security recipients, increased payroll taxes and tougher administration of welfare programs.

The roll-call vote was 414 to 3.

The bill, based on a minimum 12.5 per cent raise, now goes to the Senate, which is expected to rework it considerably. Its final shape will not be determined for weeks and the additional benefits may not be flowing before the end of the year.

These typically would increase to $164 the benefit of an aged couple now receiving $145 a month. The minimum payment of $44 for a single person retired under the regular program would go up to $50, the maximum from $142 to $159.80.

The amount a Social Security recipient may earn in a month without having his benefit reduced would be increased from $125 to $140.

While the rate of payroll tax would not be changed immediately, the wage base on which it is applied would go up next year from $6,600 to $7,600. This would result in a $44 tax increase for anyone earning as much as $7,

14,000 bites cited to back rat bill

WASHINGTON (P)--A Republican congressman who asked President Johnson to cite figures to back up his claim that thousands of children are bitten and disfigured by rats each year, received an answer Wednesday from the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

An estimated 14,000 persons are bitten annually in nine of the nation's largest cities, said undersecretary Robert C. Wood in a letter to Rep. H.R. Gross, R-Iowa. Research indicates, Wood said, that "23 per cent of rat bites occur on the head--and that a very large percentage of those bitten are babies lying in their cribs. These statistics," Wood wrote, "seem to be substantial enough evidence to cause concern about disfigurement."

600, and for his employer. Further increases would come in future years, through 1987.

The bill contains income limitations on persons eligible for medical--not medicare--the health program for low-income persons. These would affect especially New York state, which has a wide-ranging program.

Other provisions would require states to institute policies designed to channel into jobs and job-training the adult members of families receiving aid to dependent children.

Additional incentive would be provided by a provision that some earnings could be retained without offsetting welfare payments. The states would be required also to offer family-planning services and take steps to reduce illegitimate births and establish paternity for support purposes.

Finally, states would have to stay within the proportion of children aided in January of this year. If, at that time, the number was, for example, three per cent of the child population of the state, the three per cent proportion could not be exceeded in future--although actual numbers might rise with rising population. "We're rough in this bill--make no mistake about that--but we don't mean to be inhuman," Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., said. As chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, he is the principal architect of the bill.

The provisions of the bill, he said, ultimately should result in 300,000 persons now on welfare rolls moving into employment.

Goldwater condemns Carmichael

NEWPORT BEACH, Calif. (P)--Barry Goldwater says Black Power advocate Stokely Carmichael should be arrested if he returns from Cuba to the United States, should be tried for treason and, if convicted, should be executed.

The former Arizona senator was interviewed while vacationing here last Monday.

"He's completely wrong," Goldwater replied. "If we have an attorney general who is worth his name, he should apprehend Carmichael as soon as he lands in the United States and try him for treason, and if he's convicted he should be put to death."

Clay files for marriage license

CHICAGO (UPI) -- Deposed heavyweight champion Cassius Clay and Belinda Boyd, a pert 17-year-old Black Muslim, Thursday took out a license to marry.

The bride-to-be's father said the couple would be married in Muslim rites "sometime this week" in Chicago. Clay's manager said the ceremony would be held Friday "if the bride can get her last minute things done today" or otherwise Sunday afternoon.

Clay, a one-time loser at marriage and facing a five-year prison sentence for refusing to be drafted, appeared with Miss Boyd, of suburban Blue Island, Ill., and her father at the Bureau of Vital Statistics.

They had to obtain a birth certificate, because of Miss Boyd's age, and her father had to give written permission before a license could be issued. Sidney Marcovitz, administrative assistant to the Cook County clerk, relaxed the rules and handed out the marriage license at the statistics bureau, saving the pair the bother of going to the marriage bureau.

Clay obtained the marriage license under the name he has adopted as a Muslim, Muhammad Ali. He gave his age as 25 and listed his home as 8500 S. Jeffrey Ave., in Chicago's intergrated south shore neighborhood. "He looked like a nervous groom, not like a fighter," Marcovitz said.

Miss Boyd wore the ankle-length white dress and long white veil used by members of the Black supremacy sect. Her father, Raymond, was decked out in the white garb of the fruit of Islam, the karate-trained elite guard of the Muslims.

Boyd said Clay had asked for his daughter's hand "about two weeks ago." He said he did not know how long they had known each other.

Herbert Muhammad, Clay's manager, said Clay and his bride-to-be met at the University of Islam, the sect's Chicago school, even before Clay married Model Sonji, Roi in August of 1964.

Muhammad said Clay became romantically interested in Miss Boyd "about a year ago."

Boyd, 40, said he had been a Muslim for 15 years and the entire family, which includes his wife and four children, are members of the sect. Belinda, the oldest of four children, received all her education at the University of Islam, the father said.

The other children are Rasheda, 12, Komawi, 11 and Shamera, 8. Boyd is a lithograph operator. His wife works for a clothing store.

Rasheda, questioned at the family's tidy, well-furnished brick ranch home, seemed confused by all the hubbub.

"I feel just like they aren't going to be married," she said.

Above it all

Most girls wouldn't even jump off the 10-meter board at MSU's outdoor pool, but Micki King, a member of the Air Force ROTC Staff at the University of Michigan, thinks nothing of diving off it. A silver medal winner at the Pan American Games, Miss King prepared to compete in the National Diving Championships in Philadelphia this weekend by driving from Ann Arbor and practicing at MSU's pool.

U.S. trackmen

win walk event, lead Germans

DUESSELDORF, Germany (UPI) -- Ron Laird of Pomona, Calif., got the United States track team off to a winning start Thursday on the second day of a dual track meet with West Germany by taking the 10,000 meters walk in a time of 44:36.8 minutes.

But the West Germans, who surprised the heavily-favored Yank squad by trailing by only seven points after the first 10 events Wednesday night, took second and third place in the 10 kilometer walk to give them five points to the Americans' six.

With 11 more events to go, including the decathlon, the U.S. led by a score of 62-54. The winner of each event gets five points, with three points for second place, two for third, and one for fourth.

Laird, a 29-year-old veteran long distance walker, took the lead early in the 24-lap race and finished a good 70 yards ahead of his closest pursuer.

p.m. Club President Mike Auer said the game came about after the recent league meeting in Chicago.

"We talked about it then," Auer said. "I wrote the Lions and they were pretty excited about it."

"I told them that I thought I could get Michigan to play and they agreed."

It will be the first preseason game for the rugby club before the regular season opens this fall.

The first game is with Windsor Blackrock, Sept. 24, at Windsor. The rugger's open their home season with the Windsor Rugby Club, Oct. 7.

"We're hoping that we can get a game at halftime during the regular season," Auer said. "We could get publicity for the school and help make the game grow here at MSU."

Auer said he will take 15 players to Detroit and will begin practicing next week.

"We only have about six to eight players on the team here at school in the summer," Auer said. "So we don't get a chance to practice much. We've done some running and handling the ball, but that's all."

Auer said he expects the team to have little difficulty setting up plays even though the team will have only one chance to practice together.

"Our scrum and line-out will always be the same," he said. "We won't have much trouble there."

"Where I expect to have some trouble is passing. Our timing will be off. That should hurt us a little bit."

The rugby club had a 6-3 record last year. It beat Michigan during an exhibition game last spring.

CITY COUNCIL SQUABBLE

Angry Flint Negroes plan protest for open housing

FLINT, Mich. P—Flint Negroes, angry over rejection of a proposed open housing ordinance by the city commission, planned Wednesday to underscore their discontent with a large demonstration in front of City Hall.

Tentative plans called for the demonstration to be staged Sunday, followed by mass attendance at next Monday's city commission meeting.

At the same time, five Flint area legislators asked Gov. George Romney to call a special session to enact a statewide open housing law.

Flint was the scene of relatively minor racial violence when riots, looting and burning swept Detroit last month. More than 100 persons were arrested in Flint but most of them were released on the promise that they would try to cool off the situation in the Negro neighborhoods. Meanwhile, Flint Negro Mayor Floyd McCree told a news conference Wednesday he still planned to resign and said if racial outbreaks occur it would be "because of apathy on the part of the total city government."

Two other Negroes resigned from the Flint Human Relations Commission, a third said he might resign and a Negro pastor said he planned to quit his post as a member of the Genesee County Board of Supervisors.

They were protesting the rejection of the city commissioners last Monday in turning down proposed open housing law by a 5-3 vote.

The ordinance would have banned discrimination in the selling of houses. McCree told newsmen the commissioners displayed a complacent attitude about racial problems and said he wondered about their sincerity.

The mayor added that it was possible the commissioners might change their minds and adopt the ordinance after all. But, he said, "as of now I have made my decision and it still stands."

In response to a question, McCree denied he was blackmailing anyone into reconsidering the ordinance.

'TOPS' CONVENTION

Experts rate youth projects

More than 130 education experts from across the nation are attending a two-day convention in Lansing to evaluate ways of "keeping teens off the streets during the summer."

Teen-age Opportunity Programs in Summer (TOPS) has attempted to rate the status of youth summer programs, especially from six specific states, and find where there is a void and what is needed for improvement, according to Louis Romano, program participant and also associate professor of education at MSU.

Financed by funds from the U.S. Office of Education, the project extended from July 1, 1966 to December 31, 1966. The 130-member conference has spent Thursday and today reviewing the report resulting from this six-month study. Focusing on youth living in urban communities, the report discusses the idleness resulting when youths out-of-school for the summer have no job or other duties.

"This has unfortunate effects resulting in regression in learning and a concomitant tendency on the part of youth to become involved in unwholesome or non-constructive activities," the report continues.

The study pinpointed more than one thousand summer youth programs, with emphasis on the states of Michigan, Ohio, Illinois, Florida, Pennsylvania, and New Jersey.

Michigan's Department of Education serves as the administering agency.

Ira Polley, superintendent of public instruction for Michigan, addressed the group Thursday morning and called for year-round programs for youth.

"We must also re-examine the length of the present school day," Polley added. "The school's responsibilities can't be fulfilled in a six or six-and-a-half hour day."

Termining the U.S.'s 34 million youth (12-20 age group) as "America's most precious resource," Polley also advocated additional trained personnel, adequate financial resources, and changes in organization of the educational system.

Relating to the two-day conference, Polley said, "TOPS has done something significant to meet the needs of youth by identifying the kind, nature, and quantity of existing summer youth programs."

"TOPS has also helped by pinpointing the most promising programs."

Polley said, however, that too many of the programs are geared only to young men, and that "the young ladies should be considered more."

Asking for more student participation in decision making, Polley said educational systems should adopt the slogan of "He who wears the shoe knows where it pinches."

A well-known educator, William C. Kvaraceus, sympathized with today's youth and said, "It's really tough to be a kid, but they're doing a good job of coping with the present terrible reality."

Kvaraceus is the director for Youth Studies in the Lincoln Filene Center for Citizenship and Public Affairs at Tufts University, Medford, Mass.

Kvaraceus said youths have no power, function, or vote, but are merely "scapegoats."

"We need to give kids power," he said, "not authority, though. Power is the ability to influence decisions, while authority is the ability to make decisions."

Baby hurt in car crash

An 8-month-old boy suffered cuts to the face and arms Wednesday when a car driven by his father collided with another at Wilson and Birch Roads, University police reported.

Police said an auto carrying the child, Graydon McNeil, Rt. 3, Marshall, and Maynard McNeil, 19, was northbound on Birch when it hit a westbound car on Wilson at the intersection. McNeil and the other driver, William S. Payne, East Lansing sophomore, were unhurt.

About $80 in coins was stolen from a Coca Cola vending machine in Snyder Hall, sometime within the past two weeks, police reported Thursday. They said there were no signs of forceable entry to the hall.

SEES POLITICAL PACT

Tito, Arabs talk peace

ALEXANDRIA, Egypt, P—President Tito of Yugoslavia said Thursday he had found understanding among all the Arab leaders he had talked with on the necessity of a political settlement of the Middle East crisis.

Tito had a brief meeting with newsmen after talking in private with President Gamal Abdel Nasser for more than two hours at the Ras el Tin Palace. He did not disclose details of any agreement reached during his visit but said: "I would not like to enter into details because in due course you will hear about them."

Tito said he was returning home with optimism. He is concluding a seven-day visit to Egypt, Syria and Iraq. He was reported to have brought with him a formula for Middle East peace that Nasser turned down.

Tito said that in coming to the Arab countries he knew the attitude of the big powers and he wanted to outline the Yugoslav attitude for "further action." He is said to have received a message from President Johnson before leaving for Cairo.

He added: "Not only the non-aligned but other countries as well were involved. We are returning to our country with optimism regarding the talks which we had here."

Tito's statement is regarded as an indication at least of a partial success for his mission aimed at influencing Arab leaders to adopt a realistic approach for settlement of the Middle East crisis.

FACULTY FACTS

Scientist commended for cancer research

Richard A. Tjalma, a U.S. Public Health Service (USPHS) scientist stationed in East Lansing and professor of veterinary surgery and medicine at MSU, has been awarded a commendation medal by the surgeon general of USPHS.

Tjalma, chief of the epizootology research section for the USPHS National Cancer Institute, was cited for "outstanding innovations which greatly extend the opportunities for research in veterinary medicine."

He was also commended for his development of a cancer epi-zootology program and for demonstrating "its worth in the study of human cancer."

Dr. James Feurig, director of the Michigan State University Health Center, will speak today at the annual post-graduate conference of the Rhode Island State Medical Society in Kingston.

Dr. Feurig will discuss neck injuries and their significance in relation to spinal cord and nerve damage.

SAIGON P—A second Dragon Lady terrorist is reported gunning for Americans in Saigon, seeking to add personally to a toll of more than 15,000 U.S. servicemen dead from all causes in the Vietnam war.

Officials noted Thursday a growing Communist emphasis on harassing incidents aimed at the forthcoming presidential and Senate elections even as the ground war lagged.

The weekly casualty report said 82 Americans were killed in action Aug. 6-12—the lowest figure in seven months. The day's accounts of field operations listed no significant contacts, although the air campaign continued unabated.

The U.S. Command, however, cited several terrorist incidents and emphasized the appearance in Saigon of a rifle-wielding woman agent evidently assigned to kill American soldiers.

A spokesman said more such activity is expected as the Sept. 3 presidential election nears. He said information has been received that more women have been recruited by the Viet Cong for terrorist and assassination assignments in the capital.

The latest appearance of a woman terrorist followed five attacks last month by a girl who fired a .45 pistol from the motor scooter on which she rode behind a male accomplice.

That girl killed two Vietnamese policemen, a Chinese businessman and a U.S. captain and wounded an American sergeant before she dropped out of sight. She was described as young and pretty and naturally acquired the nickname Dragon Lady.

The second woman agent—who quickly acquired the same nickname—has made two abortive appearances. Described as about 40, she sometimes rides in the back of a gray French sedan and carries what appears to be a carbine or an M16 rifle.

She fired at a security guard in front of an American billet last Tuesday. She missed and sped off.

Wednesday night she stopped an American lieutenant on the street and her accomplice drove up and poked the weapon out the window, but was evidently frightened when the American yelled, "Look out!" and ran.

The woman and her accomplice fled. Police have only slight clues to their identity.

Officials announced that, across the country, Viet Cong terrorists killed 64 civilians, wounded 148 and kidnaped 85 last week. These were above the weekly average in every category.

Among the dead were three pacification workers, three hamlet chiefs and two officials of the government's Chieu Hoi-Open Arms-program to attract Viet Cong defectors.

The toll since the first of the year is 1,866 civilians killed, 3,431 wounded and 2,357 kidnaped.

Terrorists touched off explosive charges Thursday at administrative offices of two villages near Nha Trang, 170 miles northeast of Saigon. A military spokesman said the blasts wounded 14 civilians who apparently were registering to vote.

In addition to the 82 Americans killed in action last week, 748 were wounded. The overall toll of 830 was the lowest since 548 casualties — 67 dead, 479 wounded and 2 missing — were suffered by the U.S. armed forces in the week ending Jan. 7.

By unofficial tabulation, American combat losses in war from 1961 through last Saturday total 12,497 dead, 76,630 wounded and 709 missing or captured.

Deaths among the U.S. armed forces from all causes, however, totaled 15,018.

200 KEPT MOVING

Profs cite research to exercise sleeping rats

STOCKHOLM, Sweden—Two MSU professors Tuesday reported results of delicate research in which more than 200 rats were made to exercise in their sleep.

Rex Carrow, assistant professor of anatomy reported the findings at the International Conference on Medical and Biological Engineering. His partner in the research was William Heuser, professor in the Human Energy Research Laboratory.

First they put a rat to sleep, then hook it to a device that delivers a steady succession of small electrical charges to electrodes implanted around the tibial nerve in each of the hind legs.

The legs, which have been weighted, can then be moved back and forth in response to the charges. This enables the researchers to study how various levels of exercise affect muscle tissue development.

Unlike conventional means of exercising rats, the technique allows researchers to closely regulate the amount of a rat's enforced exercise, Carrow noted.

Carrow said that other frequently used means of regulating exercise, such as putting a rat on a treadmill or forcing him to swim, have drawbacks because the animal soon learns how to loaf.

A rat on a treadmill, for example, will run fast to reach the end of the treadmill, then rest while it carries him back. Similarly, a rat in water becomes adept at holding his breath and sinking for a brief rest.

Carrow and Heuser can experiment with 20 to 30 rats at a time in a specially designed clear plastic chamber.

The rats are placed in holders inside the chamber. Weights are suspended from their legs, and lead-in wires from the electrodes are plugged into a stimulating circuit. The process can be repeated daily for several weeks, Carrow noted.

He said that he is convinced that the technique is feasible and can be put to good use in studies of the internal changes that occur in muscle fibers as a result of varying degrees of exercise.

He also sees the possibility of applying the technique to research in neuromuscular diseases such as muscular dystrophy.

NO MOTIVE FOUND

Teamster chief killed in waterfront shootout

PHILADELPHIA (AP) -- Teamsters Local 107, its recent history marked by murders, fraud, arsons and court hassles, was jolted again Thursday when a union steward was gunned down outside its waterfront headquarters.

Police, describing it as "a real shoot out," theorized a second man was wounded. Labor squad detectives identified the victim as Robert Anthony DeGeorge, 33, of Philadelphia, shop steward for Red Star Trucking Co.

Police said there was no apparent motive and trucking company officials said there had been no recent labor trouble at the firm.

Detectives said four men were seen fleeing the shooting scene--three on foot and another in a late model car. One of the men left a trail of blood, they said.

Police reported a man identified as Joseph Ciancaglini, 33, of Philadelphia, was admitted to Methodist Hospital suffering from a serious bullet wound in the back. They said he refused to say how he was wounded or who took him to the hospital.

A possible link to the shoot out was being checked out.

In an unrelated shooting, Frank Chavez, head of the Teamsters

Union in Puerto Rico, was gunned down Wednesday in his office in San Juan. Ivon Coll Figueroa, his former bodyguard, was charged with the slaying. Chavez was a supporter of James R. Hoffa, imprisoned Teamster Union president.

Thursday's slaying was the latest page in the troubled history of Local 107. A Philadelphia judge fined the local and two officers $20.50 Tuesday for violating a two-year-old injunction against work stoppage at a chain of supermarkets here.

Last Thursday, fire officials said three fires in the headquarters' second floor were the work of an arsonist.

On June 17, 1966, the building was the scene of a double slaying in which a local business agent and his blonde girlfriend were killed, John Sullivan, 39, of Ridley Park, Pa., was sentenced to life imprisonment two months ago for his part in the murder. Two other men await trial in the case.

No motive for the double slaying was ever established and police said Thursday they saw no connection between it and the newest death.

In July, 1963, Raymond Cohen, former secretary-treasurer of the union and five other officials were convicted of defrauding the local of an unspecified amount of money. The case was later taken to the U.S. Supreme Court which refused to hear the appeal. Most of the group received sentences of up to two years imprisonment.

ment is for a jury to decide," DeMascio said in ruling that August must be held for trial.

"It would not have been necessary for the court to consider the content of the statement for it to reach the decision it has reached," the judge added.

Three days of testimony in the examination focused on August's actions at the motel.

One witness, Theodore Thomas, a National Guard warrant officer, testified he saw August, armed with a shotgun, lead a Negro youth into a motel room.

A shot was fired, Thomas said, adding that he saw a flash of clothing and heard something fall "with a thud." August then came out alone, Thomas testified.

The body of Pollard was later found in that room, according to testimony of police officers.

The only witness who said he saw Paille at the motel annex was Michael Clark, 20, a Negro, who testified he saw Paille on the second floor of the building. All three bodies were found on the first floor.

Clark identified Paille at a police lineup but no witness placed Paille in the room where Temple was shot, the judge said. No witness ever said he saw Paille and August together, or saw Paille with a shotgun, he added.

Officer charged with motel murder

DETROIT (AP) -- A Detroit policeman accused of fatally shooting a Negro youth during last month's riot must stand trial on a first-degree murder charge, a judge ruled Thursday.

Recorder's criminal Court Judge Robert E. DeMascio Thursday ordered Patrolman Ronald August bound over for trial in the slaying of Aubrey Pollard, 19.

Charges against a second white policeman, Patrolman Robert Paille, were dismissed. Paille had been charged with the slaying of Fred Temple, 18, also a Negro.

Temple, Pollard and Carl Cooper, 17, were killed by shotgun blasts at the Algiers Motel Annex the morning of July 26, the fourth day of the most destructive racial violence in U.S. history.

The death of Cooper is still under investigation, the prosecutor's office said.

In a statement August is said to have made before his superior officer five days after the slayings, he admitted shooting Pollard but said he acted in self defense. The statement was read into the court record Wednesday by Lt. Elmer J. Reed, who testified he had heard August make the statement.

Group to probe lung cancer

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Asst. Surgeon General Kenneth M. Endicott announced Thursday the appointment of a task force on lung cancer, a disease he said has reached epidemic proportions among American men.

The 10-member task force of physicians and scientists held its first meeting in Chicago Wednesday, he disclosed at a news conference. Dr. Endicott, who also is director of the National Cancer Institute, heads the group. President Johnson called for creation of the group in a message to Congress earlier this year.

Endicott said the task force is embarking on a long range study, seeking more information about the connection between cigarettes and lung cancer and new, basic knowledge about the causes and possible cures of the disease. Development of a less hazardous cigarette is one of the aims, Endicott said.

Some scientists consider cigarette smoking a principal contributor to lung cancer, but the tobacco industry insists there is no direct proof that the ailment is caused by smoking.

Endicott said that among other things, air pollution clearly contributes to the hazard of lung cancer. He said the danger of lung cancer is much greater for city dwellers than for those who live in the country.

Endicott said that he has regularly smoked more than a pack of cigarettes a day, but quit the habit just Wednesday, he said, after the panel's first meeting.

He said that while an encouraging number of adults have quit smoking, the effectiveness of the government's anti-smoking campaign among American teenagers has been extremely discouraging.

Why don't more people stop?

"I guess it's part of human behavior," Dr. Endicott replied. Endicott, speaking in the absence of Surgeon General William H. Stewart, noted that even with early detection and surgery, only 5 per cent of all persons who contract lung cancer can survive for five years. "And that's a pretty poor salvage rate and we'd like to do something about it."

Endicott said "we refuse even to talk about a safe cigarette," but he said he hopes a non-cancerous cigarette can be developed and added that better filters are the most promising method.

He said the emergence of longer cigarettes means that many persons will be inhaling more potentially hazardous materials even though they are smoking no more cigarettes.

Free concert by Baez gets a Udall nod

WASHINGTON (AP) -- The controversial concert by folk singer Joan Baez may be just the thing the nation's capital needs, Secretary of the Interior Stewart L. Udall said Wednesday.

He said he heard that a large orderly crowd turned out and thoroughly enjoyed the free performance on the Washington Monument grounds Monday night.

"Maybe we need to encourage this type of thing in our long hot summers," Udall said at a news conference.

Asked if he likes Miss Baez, who opposes U.S. policy in Vietnam, the secretary replied: "I'm very fond of folk singing."

Udall turned down a request from the Daughters of the American Revolution to prohibit Miss Baez from performing on the public grounds. Scheduling of the free performance followed DAR refusal to let the singer appear in the DAR-owned Constitution Hall.

"Free speech, free concert--a good policy," Udall said. The secretary did not attend but said some of his children did.

BOTH SIDES CLAIM WINS

Midwest military leaders split in Nigerian civil war

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) -- A split in the military command of the Midwest Region, captured by secessionist Biafran and rebel Nigerian troops a week ago, was indicated today. Both Biafra and the Nigerian government claimed victories in their civil war.

Col. C. Odumegwu Ojukwu, Biafra's chief, implied in a broadcast from his capital at Enugu that Brig. Victor Banjo, who helped capture the Midwest, had been deposed.

Without mentioning Banjo, Ojukwu announced that Maj. George Okonkwo had been named military administrator of the Midwest Region. Banjo announced earlier this week the Midwest would have a military council independent of Biafra but its army would ally itself with the Biafrans.

Okonkwo, like Ojukwu, is a member of the Ibo tribe that is predominant in the Eastern Region that declared itself the independent state of Biafra last May. In July, federal troops invaded Biafra, but still are being held up short of Enugu.

There are about 500,000 Ibos among the Midwest population of 2.5 million. To avert tribal conflict, Banjo has banned tribal meetings and installed a night curfew throughout the area.

In the civil war, the two sides traded conflicting reports.

Biafra claimed victory for its forces in fighting in the Midwest about 10 miles from Ore on the road to Benin.

The federal government claimed to have wiped out Biafran opposition there.

Radio Kaduna in Northern Nigeria claimed federal planes bombed the Biafra electric installation at the Oji River, leaving it in flames. There was no official confirmation.

Another report from the North in the government-owned newspaper, New Nigerian, claimed two Chinese mercenaries were among Biafran forces killed in the battle near Ore.

The British government, embarrassed by Nigeria's civil war, announced it has authorized small shipments of arms to the federal government in Lagos and is considering requests for more.

British officials are in a difficult position. If they supply arms to Lagos and it loses, Britain will be out of favor and out of luck with any new government. If they refuse to supply arms to Lagos and it wins, the British position would be just as bad.

The Biafran regime, which is believed to be receiving Czech and Spanish weapons, holds more than $300 million worth of British oil installations, and this also figures in calculations in London.

MSU FORUM PREDICTS
Long fight ahead for school boards

Three MSU professors told a state and local government forum that teachers and school boards in Michigan are in for a long struggle over this year's teacher contracts.

Charles T. Schmidt, Jr., assistant professor of labor and industrial relations pointed to the recent impasses that have occurred throughout the state.

Up to this coming school year, Schmidt said, teachers and school boards in Michigan, which are almost novices to collective bargaining, were able to successfully negotiate 96 per cent of teacher contracts.

The participants of the forum also heard from Bryan Downes in political science concerning community decision makers in relations between school boards and teachers.

"In community after community," he said, "it appears to me that the local level remains as the only place where the voter can express his desire not to raise taxes. It will take a great deal of mobilization on the part of teachers to get the community to approve higher salaries or anything else which might raise their taxes."

Fred Vescolani, professor of administration and higher education and a former president of the Michigan Education Association, told the group that the teaching profession should be more concerned with raising teaching standards than just welfare issues in teaching.

Vescolani argued that as soon as teacher standards are raised, increased salaries and other benefits will follow. Teachers, he said, should also take a stronger voice in teacher-training programs in colleges and universities.

"I would like to see an organization set up whereby professional educators would make decisions for the teaching profession," Dr. Vescolani added. "Teachers have not assumed the type of leadership relative to their tasks in education."

The Forum, a five-credit education course for 35 teachers of Michigan government, is a revival of a program MSU started 20 years ago under James Miller, now president of Western Michigan University. When Miller left 10 years ago the Forum was discontinued.

You can supply them with information on actual costs of food, furniture and rents," Wilson said. "They don't know when they're being robbed by the store owners. Save them $40 on this then when they come back to learn they'll want to learn harder."

"The government ought to put me in charge of riot control next summer," Leary said. "First I'd block off the riot area. I'd fly in five psychedelic bands; I'd have General Electric supply the light effects. Then

I'd ship in 500 pounds of pot. "There wouldn't be any fighting or killing," he said. "Other countries would think they really had something going."

One girl among the NSA delegates sat back in her chair. "You keep saying we in the white middle-class have the real power to change the system," she said. "But I feel so helpless. I feel as helpless as you do."

Wilson turned to her. "Don't tell me you ain't got the power," he said. "These kids will walk right on out of here if you tell them you ain't got the power. "They'd be wasting their time talking with you. Together, we've got the power to get things changed."

"I urge everyone of you to drop out. You just don't realize how nutty it is," Leary said. "The menapausal, whiskey drinking congressmen don't know what they're doing. Nobody over the age of 50 should be allowed to vote or hold office."

Cheers from the crowd.)

"You got to go into your own neighborhood and convince your friends and family that there is a need for change in the structure," said one holding social worker.

"What the Negroes want is that you do whatever you can about slum lords and about the way store owners increase their prices as soon as the welfare checks arrive," he said.

"Forget Washington support," he said. "You've got to build programs within the community. I've been in two programs whose funds were cut by the government for the sake of the Big Bang. We're buying time. That's all."

"Go back to your colleges and drop out and persuade your friends to do the same," Leary said.

"I salute the god within you."

NEAR RED CHINA

Intensified bombing hinted

WASHINGTON (P)—Defense officials said Thursday the United States has found ways of lessening the risks of bombing North Vietnamese targets along the sensitive border with China, indicating possibly intensified air attacks in that controversial area.

Potential overflights of Red Chinese territory have been a governing factor in the past in limiting aerial strikes in a 15- to 25-mile-wide zone along the North Vietnam-China border which contains a number of vital targets. Lately some targets have been hit only 10 miles from the border.

Chances of accidental intrusions into Red China have been reduced, officials said, through changes in aircraft tactics and development of improved communications, navigational and radar equipment. These allow military leaders greater control over attacking planes.

BUT LAUDS INTER-FAITH RELATIONS

Pope Paul refuses to join Council of Churches meet

IRAKLION, Crete (P)—A report approved by Pope Paul VI, presented to the World Council of Churches Thursday, said the cause of Christian unity would not be furthered if Roman Catholics joined the council.

At the same time the report lauded what it called vast progress in relations between the Protestant, Anglican and Orthodox council and the Roman Catholic Church.

The 12-page report was released at the annual meeting of the council's 100-member Central Committee. It detailed the activities of a joint working group established two years ago by the Vatican and the council, which represents 233 Christian churches in 90 nations.

The report had been worked out beforehand by members of the joint group and was approved by the Pope.

He said the international character of the half-billion-member Catholic Church would be an obstacle to its membership as a single body on the council.

The two Roman Catholic observers sent by Pope Paul to the 11-day meeting here said that at present the Catholic Church could best help unity efforts from outside the council. But they did not rule out possible Catholic membership in the future.

The report, presented at the Central Committee's third session, also said the six Roman Catholics on the joint group and the eight council members agreed to continue:

--Discussions on a common date among all churches for Easter.

--Theological discussions in special mixed commissions meeting at regular intervals.

Katzenbach denies threat

He said the major concern in Peking undoubtedly is the question of U.S. intent, and the bombing pattern "doesn't indicate any threat to China."

chairman who proposed the measure.

But discussion of the constitutional balance of foreign-policy power quickly gave way to disagreement over the war in Vietnam.

Katzenbach testified in opposition to a resolution which would require that Congress, as well as the executive branch of government, act on any U.S. commitment abroad.

"I see no need for it, I find it confusing," he told Sen. J.W. Fulbright, D-Ark., the committee chairman.

"I agree that the Congress should participate in a decision of that kind," Katzenbach replied. "In the war to which you refer, it did participate."

He said Congress did so when it adopted on Aug. 7, 1964, a resolution supporting Johnson measures to repel attacks on U.S. forces and to prevent further aggression.

"What could a declaration of war have done that would have given the President clearer authority?" Katzenbach asked. "It would not, I think, reflect correctly the very limited objectives of the United States with respect to Vietnam to use an outmoded phraseology, to declare war."

Fulbright said the resolution was not a congressional decision to wage war in Vietnam. "I think that's one of the difficulties now," he said. "We're not quite sure which government you're waging war against."

"The language of that resolution is very broad language," Katzenbach retorted. "You explained that bill, you made it clear as it could be what the Congress was committing itself to."

"I didn't make it clear, and it obviously wasn't clear to me," Fulbright replied. "The general policy, as to waging a war there, was against it. We were responding to attack."

The attack was that of communist North Vietnamese gunboats on U.S. warships in the Gulf of Tonkin.

overcast later in the day as federal, state and city officials turned their attention to the monumental task not only of determining the amount of damage, estimated earlier at about $200-million, but of reconstruction.

The threat of winter with its heavy snow and 60-below zero temperatures was a frightening specter.

"This will be an expensive job," said Deputy Director Loren Strawn of the Office of Emergency Planning. "We will have to accomplish about one and one-half years of cleanup working within 60 days to beat the winter. It will be more expensive than most disaster work."

In designating Alaska a major disaster area, the President also made available $1-million in federal funds for emergency relief and recovery.

Gov. Walter J. Hickel, here for the third day, also expressed delight at the federal help.

"This is what we need; it was so vital and so necessary because of the approach of winter months," Hickel said.

"The money which will be made available for the reconstruction and repair of businesses and homes under low-interest, long-term loans is the single most important thing to bring about the recovery of Fairbanks."

Creath Tooley, western regional director for the OEP, said the exact boundaries of the disaster area will be determined by his office and Hickel's.

The Chena went on its rampage after unprecedented rains that dumped more than six inches of water on Fairbanks in a week. At the same time, heavy snow fell in the mountains to be followed by rain that washed down in torrents to build the flow of the Chena to a rate of 15 billion gallons of water per day on Tuesday.

The rapidly spreading waters that trapped people in their homes affected a far larger number of persons than did the earthquake of three years ago. And the task of caring for them was even greater.

David Galloway, executive editor of the Fairbanks Daily News-Miner, told of the problem in evacuating and caring for refugees.

He said at the University of Alaska, five miles from Fairbanks, "the chow line is 3 1/2 hours long into the university Commons, but there is plenty of food on the campus."

Packs of dogs also took to the hills and many of them were hungry. Some residents had to drive the dogs off with shotguns.

Blasts fees

apply for jobs, he said.

The most the University could hope to gain by the new plan, based on percentage brackets of income, is far less than the amount given the University. It is this latter amount that MSU is risking with the ability-to-pay plan.

"It would have been far better for the governing body to have devised some kind of a yardstick to measure all of the qualities of the student being admitted, rather than to devise a yardstick to measure the depth of dad and mother's pocketbook," Weiss said.

He pointed to the cost and complexity of administering the new scale, saying that alumni feel a flat rate increase would have produced as much revenue without the infringements on personal privacy, as well as other losses.
