By BERNARD GAUZER AP Newsfeature Writer

NEW YORK (AP) - They never meet: money never passes between them; they are strangers. But they are the beginning and the end of the heroin trade: the poor peasant on the plains of Asian Turkey and the addict furtively seeking the drug that has come so "The public has an image of what the addict is," says William Durkin, head of the New York office of the Bureau of Narcotics and Dangerous Drugs. "What is difficult to visualize is the complicated structure each step of the way from the poppy fields to the street addict."

Uncertain beginning

Because it is illegal, no one knows with any certainty how much illicit opium is grown, how much is processed into crude morphine base, how much is then processed into heroin.

"But there are ways to make reasonable and intelligent estimates of the extent of the trafficking as well as describe various operations," says I. F. Brown, now retired as chief investigator for the U.S. Customs Service. "If you work backward from the number of known addicts and the calculated amount of heroin they use, you can develop a fairly reliable yardstick."

addicts it is figured that no less than one ton and most likely about one and a half tons of pure heroin supplies the market

Nearly 80 per cent of it comes from opium grown in Turkey. It then is processed into heroin in France, and then smuggled into the American market.

Mexico provides about 15 per cent of imported heroin; five per cent comes from Bangkok, via Singapore and Hong Kong, to San Francisco and Vancouver. But the product of the Turkish poppy is the most highly prized by addicts.

A kilo of illicit opium gum sells in Turkey for $14 to $18.

The man who buys the illicit harvest from any of the estimated 150,000 opium farmers on the central plains of Asian Turkey, must see to it that this raw gum gets to where it can be processed into more manageable form.

Into Syria

"Most of the Turkish opium crosses the border into Syria," says George Gaffney, a U.S. government narcotics expert.

There, the kilo fetches possibly as much as $40. The raw opium is then boiled and treated to render it into a morphine base.

These shipments into Syria -- to be efficient and economical -- are in cargo lots. Perhaps 500 kilos may move in a camel train caravan, or secreted in hidden cargo of a convoy of produce trucks, or concealed in traps of a vehicle.

Ten kilos of opium gum, after boiling, chemical treatment and drying, provide one kilo of morphine base.

"There is general agreement that the morphine base moves almost entirely from Beirut," says Brown. "This is one of the great shipping centers."

In the morphine base form, it is more practical to make the shipment by sea rather than air or overland. A cargo ship is a miracle of hiding places. The only way inspectors could be sure there was no contraband, such as morphine base, aboard would be to strip the ship down to the

Marseilles is usually the port of call. "There's no question anywhere that the finest clandestine laboratories in the world are located in the Marseilles area," says Durkin. "The morphine base can be turned into heroin by some very crude kitchen means, but the prime product that ends up at our doorstep here is French produced."

New prices

The price begins to take on totally new dimensions. Highly qualified chemists or technicians working in such labs may receive pay of $500 to $700 for each kilo of heroin.

When this process begins, it is the reverse of what happens when opium gum is turned into morphine base. In that first step, 10 kilos becomes 1 kilo. But 10 kilos of morphine base can become 12 to 20 kilos of heroin, depending upon quality and purity. The highest grade heroir reportedly produced in Marseilles may be 95 per cent pure and be the product of a 10-12 ratio.

Turned into heroin, the game now was to get it to the place where the prices are highest, North America.

"There are so many techniques tried, and so many schemes and plots, it would be almost impossible to catalogue them," says Brown.

"In the days before popular jet flight, it came across the sea.

Improved communication needed at MSU -- Wharton

By JOHN BORGER State News Staff Writer

MSU President Wharton stressed a need for improved communication between students and the administration in an informal discussion with nearly 100 students in Wonders Kiva Friday night. Wharton said that the All-Events Building issue had pointed out a failure in administration-student communication.

"Something more could be done to provide complete, accurate information in this megaversity," he said, adding that his offer to provide registration facilities for a referendum on the building uestion was an attempt to improve ommunication.

The president said the proposed structure would not be built if student opinion were against it, but also pointed out that the entire question of construction on the university is more complex than it appears. The three major sources of funds for construction are federal, state and private, he said, and each of them must pay for certain types of buildings. He said that one danger of a student foundation to pay for buildings students want is that the state legislature may decide that if students can pay for one building, they can pay for another, and will not appropriate state funds. A student asked Wharton his reaction to a recent State News editorial which criticized him for failing to propose innovations in a speech to the Faculty

"They had every right to print what they wanted to print," he replied, launching into a defense of freedom of the press. "I try to do that which I consider to be right," he continued. "I may not in all cases do that which is most pleasing, but I try to be right."

"dissects every word" he says, adding that it was hard for him to talk informally when he had to watch his every word. Wharton said that any real evaluation of his role as president must be on a long-term

"It's going to take a long time before you can say whether a certain action can be traced to me in the institution," he said. "Part of the evaluation is going to be what

He said that the press records and happens, through time, during the time I am president."

He told his listeners that he had been meeting informally with students and faculty for several weeks, and said he hopes to continue the practice. The president said that he uses such meetings to sound out University opinion, as well as to introduce himself.

"I've picked up many wonderful ideas (please turn to page 9)

Celler sets hearing on Nixon crime war.

WASHINGTON (AP) -- President Nixon's persistent prodding of the House Judiciary Committee to act on crime legislation is about to get results--but not the kind he had in mind.

Chairman Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., is preparing for extensive hearings on the administration's performance to date in combatting crime in the streets-a major Nixon campaign theme in 1968.

Celler plans to invite the mayors of New York, Los Angeles, Cleveland, Philadelphia, Indianapolis, Atlanta, Birmingham and Other cities to give Congress first hand reports on what they think of the job being done by the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration (LEAA), the main federal agency dealing with local crime. Former Atty. Gen. Ramsey Clark, who helped launch the LEAA, also is being sought as a witness, as are local police chiefs and other officials who are on the firing line in the war against street crime. Nixon has been hoping for swift committee action on the bill to curb organized-crime operations which was passed by the Senate last week. Celler hasn't said when he'll take that up.

Celler's concern, as expressed in an interview is that a basic change made in the LEAA approach under Republican leadership may be blunting its effectiveness as a weapon against street crime.

Teach-in results in injury

State News Staff Writer

One person was injured Saturday in a brief fight during the Vietnam Teach-in at Wells Hall.

The fight developed from an argument over whether he was to be allowed to address the audience following a speech by Reese Erlich, member of the Oakland Conspiracy Seven and contributor to Ramparts magazine.

Campus police took the injured man to Sparrow Hospital, where he was treated for a minor neck injury.

Cpl. John Peterson, of the campus police, said the injured man identified himself as Leo Schickel, of 7121/2 Elm St., East Lansing, but that the group he was with gave Peterson's men papers identifying Schickel as someone else.

MEMBER-AT-LARGE

atts named to board

By JOHN BORGER State News Staff Writer

Rodney Watts, newly appointed ASMSU senior member-at-large, said that his two major areas of concern during office will be institutional racism and miseducation of students.

The board appointed Watts last Thursday night.

"I'm opposed to a system which penalizes a student because he's disadvantaged," the Lansing senior said.

He explained that it is unfair for the University to recruit students from ghetto areas who have not had a solid background in high school and then, without giving them adequate preparation, put them into classes in which they must compete with National Merit Scholars.

Watts suggested having each department maintain a tutorial service in conjunction with the Center for Urban Affairs as a possible correctional measure.

This is part of an over-riding concern with recruiting more black students and keeping them in school, he explained. Watts criticized the present educational system as being totally irrelevant to current needs, although it might have been satisfactory a hundred years ago.

To make the system more equitable, Watts suggested greater concern for students by individual professors, and experimentation with different educational systems. The new member-at-large believes that students should take only those courses in which they are interested, or which are relevant to their area of study. "The thrust of education has to be truly to make the student think for himself," he

Watts said he wants to see more students, both black and white on departmental curriculum committees.

Murray later called the Ingham County Prosecuting Attorney for an opinion and was told that nothing could be done since no crime had been committed. The operation was also reported to the Consumer Protection Division of the Attorney General's office, but no action was taken.

Six-time recipient of the Pacemaker award for outstanding journalism.

David McCrea once owned an American flag. One day he decided to make a belt out of part of it because he felt that the belt would be a very beautiful thing.

Many people agreed with David and complimented him on his new belt. One person, however, did not think that David's belt was so magnificent. He was a policeman.

On the morning of May 16, 1969, the campus police received a report that three youths were tampering with cars near the football stadium. McCrea was in the group. Stopped for questioning, it was soon determined that no cars were being tampered with. The officer noticed then that McCrea's belt seemed to be made out of an American flag, which could be illegal. A call to the station confirmed this and McCrea was Trial was finally held last Monday in East Lansing, Judge William K. Harmon presiding. Both sides presented their cases and the judge rendered his verdict. The defendant was guilty as charged and was sentenced to the maximum sentence for a misdemeanor -- $100 fine and 30 days in jail. Case dismissed.

The judge felt that both sides presented sound arguments in the case and agreed with the defense that the law was stated in a fairly ambivalent manner. He felt, though, that the line has to be drawn somewhere and proceeded to proclaim the defendant guilty.

One can certainly agree that the line has to be drawn somewhere. One can only wonder since when matters of personal taste have fallen into the hands of the courts of this land.

The purpose of the law under which McCrea was sentenced was to prevent people from burning or defecating upon the flag as a means of protest, the law being drafted in the days of the McCarthy witchhunts.

The law itself is ridiculous. The American flag is, in essence, a piece of cloth. It is not federal property. It is not God's gift to man. It is simply a symbol.

Laws are made to protect this country and its citizens from those elements that would do them harm; they are not made to insure that every thing symbolic of this country is sacred also. Are we to send people to jail every time that a national symbol is "defiled" in some manner. What happens when you sing the national anthem off-key?

Symbols are irrelevant; It is the reality that counts. Laws are to keep us from doing harm to others, but what harm is done by wearing a belt made out of an American flag?

Even under the law, McCrea's guilt is dubious. The flag can legally be made into an fornament and what else is a belt but an ornament. As far as McCrea was concerned, the flag was aesthetically pleasing to him; it was not a means of protest.

Many people often wonder why the youth of this country have little respect for our law enforcement agencies. The McCrea affair serves as an excellent example of why they have lost that respect.

Subordination of good to bad?

To The Editor:

May I be among the first to endorse your disapproval of President Wharton's Faculty Club address. But I must disagree with your evaluation on at least one point. Referring to Wharton's first point -- the "centrality of the individual" -- you state:
"While he makes his philosophical point quite clear, the president does not at any time allow his feet to touch the ground -his rhetoric is soothing, but is purely irrelevant to any realistic and pragmatic application."

Allow me to substitute my claim that President Wharton's philosophical position on this issue is intentionally contradictory and ambiguous, and designed for the precise purpose of smuggling in a "pragmatic application" that, without the smoke screen, would be obviously repugnant. The viewpoint I will delineate is not a popular one on campus, but I trust that this publication is dedicated to the free expression of ideas.

Those who contend that President Wharton holds a rather optimistic view of man's ability is sadly mistaken. He writes: "The impoverished condition of man is no longer seen as the result of his own failure but of circumstances largely beyond his control . . ." Who, then, is this puppet, man, to depend on for life, comfort and happiness? Wharton is explicit on this point. His answer is: society. Note that he speaks of "the failure of society to acknowledge (man's) right to more than mere existence," and thus regards man as existing not by right, but by permission of society; that is, by permission of the ruling

These views are incompatible with his own assertion that ne "believes" in the individual. If he did, why would he regard man as mindless robot dangling from the puppet strings of society, as a marionette who has no choice but to submit to anonymous social forces that "determine" his future achievements and to blindly depend on the helping hand of society to lift him out of the cesspool of existence while all he need do, or can do, is wag his head in a fit of happy anticipation?

It is the individual that President Wharton esteems, you say? "The random distribution of inherent skills and abilities among men is no longer accepted as the sole basis for the determination of ultimate rewards." No longer accepted? By whom? "Every man is entitled to an equal opportunity to accomplish his fullest inherent potential." At whose expense? And how does one measure "inherent potential"? "Today, that right is to a life of adequacy, if not abundance." Adequate? According to what standard? And who is to provide the abundance, and what rights does he have?

If you are the business major who is someday going to provide the food that everyone else has a "right" to eat, or if you are the honor student that must go without ghetto child that didn't earn it and can't opportunity" to an education, or if you are the student who achieved the grades necessary to enter medical school but were the good he subordinates to the bad? rejected in favor of an impoverished student, whose grades were not so good, to take your place in order that he might enjoy "equal access" to a basic education, ask yourself: who is it that is being cheated, and who is it that President Wharton claims to be concerned about?

Events building to benefit all

To the Editor:

The University's proposal for an $11 million All-Events Bldg. unfortunately has received some negative reaction from part of the student body and several faculty members over reasons that have been tritely restricted to the basketball team.

Too much emphasis concerning the new building's need has been placed in the area of basketball recruiting and it was even Coach Gus Ganakas himself who said last week, "If the sole purpose of the building was for increased recruiting help, then the building obviously wouldn't be worth it."

But as the new structure's name implies, this facility can benefit all of us, students, faculty and general public alike. We can all use it for the particular purpose which we enjoy the most. As Ganakas also said: "It's true that we need other buildings, but it would be a shame that if we can't immediately have all the other buildings, then we couldn't have the events building.'

At the University of Utah recently, a similar controversy developed over what to build-a new all-events arena or a library. In Utah's case, the students said "Let's have both" and they thereby proceeded to raise the funds for both.

Why can't MSU do the same? Let's raise whatever funds be necessary and provide for a fine arts center and other structures we would like. It can be done with some University patriotism and pride by all of

It is silly to make an issue of providing this building solely for the needs of the basketball team and those who point out various luxuries gained in the building for the basketball team, such as cushioned seats, etc., should also remember that people will also sit in those same seats for concerts, commencement, speeches and the like. Again, we can all and all will benefit.

MSU students have rallied together in the past to meet the needs of functions from blood drives to other worthwhile goals. I have every hope and confidence that all 40,000 of us will realize the need and value of this truly worthwhile and beautiful building and that we will take the steps necessary that our school officials have devised for its construction this fall. It will be a facility we can all be proud of for many years to come.

Timothy Staudt East Lansing junior undermine them in that area. The Americans, in turn, fear that Soviet policy is to drive their influence out of an area enormously important to U.S. interests. In Vietnam, the search for peace impeded by fear on each side that the other will gain an advantage. For years, Soviet leaders assailed a U.S. policy of isolating Red China. Now American gestures toward Red China prompt Moscow to see a hidden attempt to exploit Soviet - Chinese differences. Chin in turn fears Soviet - American contacts aimed at cordoning off the Chinese.

Internally, Soviet leaders seem obsesse by fear. To a Western reader a Pravd article a few days ago indicated a atmosphere reminiscent of the America state of mind in the era two decades ago, when there was menace discovered behind almost every bush.

The Pravda article bordered on the absurd, picturing the "imperialists" as even using extreme leftist and pro-Chinese ides as weapons of "anti - Sovietism." Western penetration of Communist countries was portrayed as a sinister attempt to "disam the workers ideologically" and weaken their "political vigilance."

In the United States two campaigners for something new to break down the barrier of fear are urging Americans to id themselves of their terrors and take a bold lead toward getting out of the deadend.

"After each war," say Howard and Harriet Kurtz, of Chappaqua, N.Y., "the two dominant powers which are within range of each other . . . begin reacting out of fear of each other.

"This reciprocal dynamic fear generates with increasing intensity through the years until at last the climax is reached and another war erupts. This time there is a difference. Because of modern technology, the radius of potential threat of both Soviet and American national military power has become global and the magnitude of destructive power is becoming total for mankind." Kurtz is a former U.S. Air Force officer and she is a minister in the United Church of Christ. They are gradually winning attention in high places, even to the point of getting respectful attention for their campaign in the Military Review, journal of the U.S. Army Command and the General Staff College.

How would they, with their "war control plan," attack the problem of fear?

They contend that technology now makes it feasible to expand management of armed forces to global dimensions. They would have the United States boldly take the lead in developing a system, after long experimentation, leading to a world public safety authority which would inventory all dangerous weapons and military activity and would act like a global fire department in preventive discipline.

The arms control system would be under the United Nations and open to all countries, which would be asked to cooperate in the development of methods for orbital surveillance. The aim would be public inventory of dangerous military buildup, to be assessed by a U.N. staff committee.

No nation would be asked, meanwhile, to surrender its sovereignty or abandon its defense posture while the experimentation, which might continue for years, was in

This is only a brief sketch of what the two campaigners have been reaching for a long time in their drive for what they call a "war prevention decade." They sum up their case this way:

"For the first time in history, human beings hold the power to destroy mankind. The mythology had always claimed that God alone could command such power. There are no precedents in political science or in history to guide men who command modern power. Scholars who look backwards into history for their reassurance have become irrelevant for the generations in college and high school, who must create new history if there is to be history at all."

Some Michigan legislators have proposed a bill package which includes amending the Michigan constitution so that persons 18-years-old and over can vote. A similar bill was put to a referendum vote about three years ago and was defeated by a 2 to 1 margin. One of the reasons could have been that most of the persons voting on this issue were over 30 years old.

Hopefully, most students on this campus support such an amendment. Even if they, themselves, don't care to vote, the opportunity should be offered to as many responsible people as possible. And 18-year-olds are responsible.

Freshmen on college campuses probably

Perhaps the best manner in which to answer the question "What happened to Mitch Ryder?" would be to say that he collapsed during our interview with another one - hour set remaining. Except for brief respites, Ryder has been on the road almost constantly for the past two years, changing musicians, watching trends, pleasing crowds, working.

Mitch hasn't changed much from the time when he ruled grease - rock from east coast to west; a bit more refined, perhaps, but he still wrings his face dry after each gig. The hips still shake, the face still contorts and the chicks still scream.

While Mitch Ryder is still his same perpetually - moving self, Detroit Wheels are a different story, both musically and personnel - wise. The brass, organ and guitars are still there, but now they are audible.

A gutty, crowd - inspired rally by the MSU frosh cagers spelled defeat for the Michigan freshmen Saturday night at Jenison Fieldhouse by a 79-73

Trailing in the first half by as much as sixteen points, the Spartan frosh never quit in their relentless pursuit of the Michigan scoring machine. The Spartans finally took over the lead with 8:30 remaining in the contest, a lead they never lost.

"Michigan had a lot of power," MSU frosh coach Matt Aitch said after the game. "We felt we would have to play together as a team in order to beat them."

With a nine point deficit at halftime, the Spartans returned in the second half to outscore the Wolverines 40-25, as things started falling into place. Brad VanPelt was not to be denied under the boards, as he gobbled

State News Sports Writer Michigan's highly polished gymnastics team simply had too much depth for MSUs young squad as they dealt the Spartans a 161.9 to 150.35 loss in their home opener at the Sports Arena in the IM Saturday.

A crowd of 1,350 watched as the Wolverines swept all six events to come within a percentage point of averaging 9.0 per man. MSU did have individual winners in two events. Rich Murahata in the vault and Charlie Morse on the side horse, but the over all strength of Michigan left the Spartans on the short end of the score.

Coach George Szypula used only eight men for the meet while Wolverine coach Newt Loken was able to use two specialists in every event but floor exercise, along with his two all - around men Sid Jensen and Rick McCurdy.

"We knew that they would be strong in every event," Szypula said. "We thought that if we were going to beat them we would have to be almost perfect and they would have to have more misses than usual. John Thuerer, Rhinelander, Wis., sophomore, set a new pool and varsity record in the 1000 yard freestyle. His time of 10:09.45 broke the old record of 10:14.06 by George Gonzalez in 1968 and Thuerer's own varsity record of 10:10

Thuerer showed outstanding ability by swimming the first 500 yards in 5:09 and then bringing it back in 5:02.

"It wasn't really that good," Thuerer said after have been about 5 minutes at the 500."

Sophomore Jeff Lanini recorded a double win taking the 200 yard individiaul medley and the 200 yard bereastroke. Larry O'Neill was second in the breastroke and Bruce Treadway followed in the indivividual medley.

The closest race of the meet was the 100 yard freestyle. All four swimmers were even at the 50 mark but Senior Mark Holdridge pulled away with 10 yards left to win in a time of 50.07. Stan Solodky was second in 50.13 followed by Purdue's Tom Hincz.

Dick Crittenden turned in a good time of 21.97 in the 50 freestyle and Mike Kalmback easily took the 200 freestyle.

Bob Burke and Alan Dilley went 1-2 in the 200 yard backstroke and Paul Vurtue and Mike Bigane duplicated the feat in the 500 yard freestyle.

Purdue's lone winner was captain Joe Ladoucer who took the 200 yard butterfly in 2:02.89. Pat Burke was second for the Spartans with teammate Bob Jones running third.

Spartan divers continued their winning ways by sweeping both the 1-and 3-meter boards. Jim Henderson won the 1 meter with 290.30 points. Bill Scott was second, 268.60 points, Tom Cramer won the 3-meter and Dave Coward was second.

At some point the pure kee is mixed with milk sugar and quinine powder. The milk sugar is of the same fine powdery texture as heroin, which has been processed so that it is soluble in water. The quinine is added to restore the natural bitter taste of heroin which might have been overcome by the milk sugar. Then this product is put into the hands of pushers -- the frontline peddlers of heroin. A pusher may have a meager

"stash" -- as a supply is called -amounting to 10 or so "bags" or "decks." These are the glassine envelopes supposedly each containing no less than one grain of heroin.

On the street level, quantities are generally described as "nickel bags," "deuces" and "treys." A nickel bag, which may have originally fetched $5 may cost $7.50 to an addict, depending upon quality. There are also $1 bags for youngsters, such as high school students.

It is in New York that most c? the nation's known addicts congregate. And it is New York that the traffic chain completes a link and becomes a circle.

Discovering nature

Children from the Lansing area explore some of the natural landscape of Woldumar, an outdoor classroom where children can learn about environment. The area includes a rural life center, a bee colony, a water fowl sanctuary, and nature trails.

Natural wildlife preserved at 180-acre Lansing farm

By LINDA KNIBBS State News Staff Writer

Beyond the smoky stacks of Lansing's automobile factories lies Woldumar, a bit of uncivilized land where children can learn about their natural environment.

Life at Woldumar, 5539 Lansing Rd., remains untouched by human progress. Soil, trees, plants, flowers, animals, birds and waterlife have been left to their natural cycles.

Nature Way Assn., a group of Greater Lansing area citizens, maintains the 180 acre preserve. The land, donated to the association by Mrs. Gladys Olds Anderson, was once part of the Olds farm on the Grand River.

hours observing the plants, animals, birds and natural processes they have read about in textbooks. School districts in Ingham, Eaton and Clinton Counties use the facilities at Woldumar. Grades kindergarten through sixth may visit the center. Guidance from a staff naturalist is available.

"The program is designed to help the teacher and is educationally sound," Robert Hinkle, East Lansing graduate student, said. Hinkle is an interpretive naturalist on the Woldumar staff and is completing a degree in conservation education.

The second major program for children offered by Woldumar is Camp Discovery. The fields, forest and river become a classroom during each six - week session. Sixty children meet on areas of ecology.

A different program is offered every season so children have the opportunity to study the natural world in its changing stages. The children spend their time studying outdoors along the trails and also have lessons inside the Nature Center under the supervision of the Woldumar staff. The large classroom has walls covered with nature collections from snakeskins to butterflies.

Crossfeld said he would also like to see the board and Cabinet become more independent of each other.

"Overlapping has caused a lot of good programs to fall apart in the past," he said.

Grossfeld replaced Paul Graf, Muskegon senior, who resigned at the beginning of the term for personal reasons.

Other petitioners for the cabinet presidency were Edward Wendover, Detroit senior Douglas Callahan, Fenton junior Stuart R. Cohen, Detroit senior; and Patrick Durkin, Escanaba

Asked whether he is active in the anti - war movement, the Kentucky - born ex - sergeant said "Not yet, but I will be shortly."

Sanders said, "There are a few young Democratic organizations I am going to look into." And he added he probably would campaign for Sen. Eugene McCarthy if the Minnesota Democrat should try again for the presidency. Does he intend to make any antiwar speeches?

"I don't think so," Sanders replied, indicating he will devote spare time to such projects as teaching music to young blacks.
Last May, when Sanders was fighting Army orders sending him to Vietnam, he asserted the action was "punishment for my
