Rumor cited in unrest at Jackson State

JACKSON, Miss. (AP) — The violence that shattered Jackson State College last May, when a barrage by law enforcement officers killed two young Negroes, was caused, in part, by a rumor that civil rights leader Charles Evers had been killed, the president of the school said Tuesday.

But John Peoples Jr., in testimony before the President's commission on Campus Unrest, said he had never been able to pinpoint the cause of the two nights of disturbance on the campus that were climaxed by the shootings.

"I really wish I knew why it happened," he said. "I just didn't know."

Peoples said there was general tension on campus about the war in Vietnam. He said there were, also, some nonstudents known as "corner boys" on campus, and the rumor that Evers had been killed didn't help ease the tension. Evers, whose brother Medgar was slain in 1963, is mayor of Fayette, Miss.

Mayor Russell Davis of Jackson, another witness, said such incidents might be avoided if there were better communications between the city and officials of the predominantly black school.

"You can make all kinds of conjecture," said Davis, "but I know this: If anything like this ever comes up at Jackson State again, the most important thing is that the college and the city each know what the other intends and what each other is doing."

The President's commission began the three-day schedule of hearings in Jackson Tuesday in an effort to determine the cause of the unrest that led to officers' firing about 150 rifle and shotgun rounds toward a women's dormitory May 15. Officers have claimed they were fired on by snipers.

The barrage killed two young blacks and wounded nine others.

A recent county grand jury said law officers were justified in firing their weapons. At the same time the jury criticized Davis for reportedly delaying the use of tear gas to disperse the crowd of blacks that had gathered in front of the dormitory.

Commission Chairman William Scranton of Pennsylvania stated at the outset that the commission only desired to determine what brought about unrest on the campus.

NSA debt payment vowed

By JOHN BORGER

ST. PAUL, Minn. — National Student Assn. (NSA) President Charles Palmer Monday reaffirmed his determination to pay NSA's $32,000 debt to the National Assn. of Black Students (NABS) but the central question, "How?" remains unanswered as delegates began to tire of the entire issue.

In a brief plenary session following a speech by Charles Garry, attorney for the Black Panther party, Palmer said the debt to NABS had to be paid, partly because the commitment had been made and partly because "At this point in time it is right."

"We're gonna raise that money somehow," he said.

Palmer said he and members of the Congress Steering Committee (CSC) would be systematically approaching the delegations throughout the congress. In the meantime, however, he said the congress should continue with its second major

Milliken to seek court action to prevent planned rock fest

By JEFF SHELTER
State News Staff Writer

The furor among public officials over last weekend's Goose Lake Rock Festival continued Tuesday as Michigan Atty. Gen. Frank Kelley said he would seek an injunction to prevent another rock festival that is being planned for Labor Day at Goose Lake.

At a morning news conference Kelley said unless festival promoters can keep attendance at the Labor Day event at a "manageable level" of from 10,000 to 15,000, there would be no festival at all.

Attendance at the three-day festival last weekend was estimated at about 200,000.

Kelley said he thought the festival was the "first and last" of that size in Michigan. Richard Songer of Farmington, promoter of the Goose Lake festival, said he hoped to go ahead with the Labor Day program but in the form of a one-day show.

Gov. Milliken, state legislators and local officials in Jackson have denounced the open sale and use of drugs by persons attending the three-day festival.

Milliken, in a statement released Sunday, called the festival a "public outrage" and pledged his support in preventing a Labor Day repeat performance.

His legal advisers were working Tuesday to find a state law that could be used to prevent future rock fests.

Milliken also said the State Police were evaluating information gathered during the festival in an effort to apprehend persons who openly sold drugs.

Songer said that plainclothes policemen mingled with the crowd during the festival and gathered information on drug sellers who were nabbed when they attempted to leave the park.

Local police in Jackson estimated Tuesday that 163 persons have been arrested on drug charges since the festival ended Sunday, and predicted more arrests were forthcoming. Most of the arrests, they said, were made outside the fenced-in festival area.

Two state lawmakers added their criticisms to the growing outrage and one

SENTENCED IN APRIL

'Fugitive priest' held after 4 months hiding

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI announced Tuesday its agents have arrested the Rev. Daniel Berrigan, a Jesuit priest who had evaded authorities since April 9, when he was sentenced to three years in prison for destroying draft files in Cantonville, Md.

FBI director J. Edgar Hoover said Berrigan, 49, was arrested at a summer home on Block Island, R.I.

The charges against him arose from the destruction May 17, 1969, of files of the Cantonville draft board. Eight other persons, including his brother, the Rev. Philip Berrigan, were charged in the incident.

Philip Berrigan is currently serving a prison sentence.

Daniel Berrigan, while eluding federal authorities for four months, surfaced occasionally at antiwar rallies and had become somewhat of a folk hero in the U.S. peace movement.

Berrigan was taken to Providence, R.I., for arraignment.

On Aug. 2, Berrigan spoke briefly before a Methodist congregation in Philadelphia and was quoted then as commenting on "the pain of being a fugitive," and lamenting the lack of normal "social contacts."

Berrigan, former Catholic chaplain at Cornell University in Ithaca, N.Y., was dubbed the "fugitive priest" for his refusal to turn himself in. During his four months of eluding authorities, he appeared at several antiwar rallies.

At a rally at Cornell, a week after he was sentenced, Berrigan addressed a crowd estimated at 10,000.

Berrigan was interviewed in secrecy by newspaper and television reporters. He once described his life as a fugitive as an attempt to show authorities "they can no longer lock people up on their order."

Vote switch alters outlook on ABM tally

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senate forces for and against development of additional Safeguard ABM sites were thrown into disarray Tuesday by two unexpected vote changes.

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson, D-N.M., said he will vote for the Cooper-Hart amendment to restrict Safeguard deployment to the two sites approved last year.

A little earlier, Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre, D-N.H., had announced he is switching support from the Cooper-Hart amendment to a measure backed by Sen. Edward Brooke, R-Mass., which would stop geographical expansion of the system but use the extra money to improve the first two sites.

Both these developments came within hours of word that Senate Republican leaders had nullified a vote for Cooper-Hart through a parliamentary maneuver.

McIntyre said adopting the Brooke proposal would continue the value of the ABM system as a bargaining chip in the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks with the Soviet Union.

Increased enrollment may mean restrictions

In the early 1960s the Sputnik era created an influx of students in the science areas. Now, a decade later, the emphasis is on the social sciences.

Registrar figures on degrees conferred, though not complete for the decade, indicate that degrees in the natural sciences increased 57 per cent, while the increase in degrees in the social sciences has been 117 per cent.

All University totals from 1960-68 group the colleges of agriculture and natural resources, engineering, human medicine, natural science and veterinary medicine in the total natural science category.

Grouped in the social sciences and humanities are the colleges of arts and letters, social science, Justin Morrill, business, communication arts, education and human ecology (home economics). Deans from three of the largest colleges were asked by the State News what this shift meant for their programs.

"It appears to us that the growth of this college (social science) is more rapid in terms of undergraduates than the University at large," C. Leland Winder, dean of the College of Social Science, said.

From 1966-69 the College of Social Science increased in the number of undergraduate majors by 30 per cent, while the total enrollment of the University increased by only seven per cent, Winder said.

The total number of degrees conferred over the 1960-68 period shows a 198.5 per cent increase.

Julius Hoffman, asst. dean of the College of Natural Science, noted the tremendous Underground Railroad: all worked together

By JEANNE SADDLER
Associate Campus Editor

The Underground Railroad, which, before the Civil War, provided the only safe way for black men to gain their freedom, represents the most radical enterprise ever attempted within America. In Michigan history, the people and events connected with the railroad led to the establishment of MSU.

Blanche Coggan, an East Lansing resident, has studied the history of the Underground Railroad in Michigan for 12 years. By reading, talking to elderly people and visiting unlikely places she considered historical sites, Mrs. Coggan reconstructed the railroad's intricate network through every county in Michigan and into Canada.

First in a series

After about 10 years of lecturing and talking to people all over the country, Mrs. Coggan's constant research led her right back to her home. In the last two years, she discovered that she had traveled the Underground Railroad to MSU.

Mrs. Coggan began her work with a theory that is still a very deep part of her life and her commitment to the history of the Underground Railroad.

"I am convinced," she explained, "that between 1820 and the Civil War, when dark and light people worked mightily together, we overthrew slavery. If we could just accomplish that kind of cooperation again, I am sure that we could erase the color line," she said.

The fact that man does have a concrete example of inter-racial cooperation that successfully achieved its goal has inspired Mrs. Coggan to carry her carefully documented work on the railroad to hundreds of state and national audiences.

"The wonderful thing is," she explained, "that you cannot credit either the dark or the light people for more of an effort on the railroad; everyone worked together."

"Slavery had been in the world since the time of Abraham," Mrs. Coggan said. "We've all been enslaved at one time or another. Something had to happen to break slavery, and the Underground Railroad did that."

While most Americans have just become accustomed to the term black, instead of Negro or colored, Mrs. Coggan's terminology for the races implies an even more revolutionary philosophy.

"I always say 'dark and light' people," she explained. "I don't know what a Negro is — the word doesn't mean anything. We're all just part of the human race."

People who traveled the Underground Railroad into Michigan included a slave woman who escaped across the Ohio River with her child when she learned that her baby, the daughter of her master, was to be sold.

That child eventually came to work at the Shaw farms in East Lansing where she cared for Sarah Shaw, better known today as Mrs. John Hannah.

The story of these two young escaped slaves eventually became linked, according to legend, with a proud African prince who won his freedom in this country after being tricked by slave dealers in Africa.

Although the word Woodstock is associated today with the psychedelic generation of acid and hard rock music, Michigan's Woodstock was more likely host to old black spirituals. A school emphasizing the education of "hand and head," it is today linked with MSU.

Woodstock Manual Labor Institute was founded at Addison, by Prior Foster, first a passenger, then a conductor on the Underground Railroad.

Tomorrow, his story.

Northern Ireland's Prime Minister James Chichester-Clark won unanimous support from his cabinet Tuesday for civil rights reforms aiding Roman Catholics after a confrontation by angry Protestants.

"We have a continuing mandate for those policies from the Unionist parliamentary party and from the country as a whole," the cabinet announced.

But dissent continues in the party. Members of the Unionist party pelted Chichester-Clark with pennies after a political meeting and tried to overturn his car.

For the second time since the Middle East ceasefire went into effect, Israeli warplanes Tuesday blasted Arab guerrilla strongholds in Lebanon. But there was no action in the Suez region, and the ceasefire remained in force.

Toyo Kogyo Co. of Osaka, Japan, maker of rotary engine automobiles, says it has succeeded in developing test cars free from poisonous exhaust gases.

The announcement said the test cars used were its small-sized Familia models with improved reciprocating engine and fitted with devices to remove noxious exhaust fumes.

Such devices included a catalyser to resolve nitrogen oxide and other poisonous substances, a reactor, an after burner and electronically-controlled fuel jetting and exhaust gas recirculation equipment, the company explained.

It said it plans to complete reconstruction of automobiles free from poisonous exhaust gas in three years for mass production in 1975.

President Nixon Tuesday vetoed two big money bills, one for education and one for 23 government agencies. He said that together they would have added nearly $21 billion to his budget recommendation.

"If I were to sign these bills that spend more than we can now afford I would be saying 'yes' to a higher cost of living, 'yes' to higher interest rates, 'yes' to higher taxes," he said in his veto message.

The price of a letter stamp, likely to raise from six to eight cents early next year, will probably go even higher despite passage of reform legislation designed to cut post office costs, says Postmaster General Winston M. Blount.

"We've got the tools to hold down costs," Blount said in an interview, "but there's no question that over the long haul we're going to have rate increases."

A senator from Michigan and an oceanographer from California agreed Tuesday protection of the environment might outweigh the value of some rich offshore oil resources.

Sen. Philip A. Hart, D-Mich., questioned what he said was a 40-year-old assumption that "the more oil we produce the better off we were as a nation."

"If there is a risk to the ecology, increasing production to lower oil prices by 30 cents a barrel may not be worth it," Hart said.

Also warning against the tapping of offshore oil without heed to environmental dangers was Dr. Melvin N.A. Peterson, an oceanographer with the Scripps Institution of Oceanography at La Jolla, Calif.

Born in Texas, Greene attended Duke University for nearly two years until he left in 1939 and went to Mexico where he became successively a professional actor, casino dice man, novice bull fighter and an interpreter for a Mexico City radio station.

State Rep. George F. Montgomery, unsuccessful in an attempt to win the democratic gubernatorial nomination, has begun a campaign to win another spot on the party ticket.

"Although my showing in the Aug. 4 gubernatorial primary was not spectacular, I think that I have demonstrated an ability to conduct an effective, person-to-person campaign and have obtained valuable statewide exposure," Montgomery said in a letter to party leaders.

Montgomery asked the party leaders to support him for lieutenant governor "or some other position on the statewide ticket."

Defense evidence again disputed

ANN ARBOR (UPI) — A fiber identification expert testifying for the defense Tuesday became the third scientist to rebut key prosecution testimony at the John Norman Collins coed murder trial.

Like two nuclear scientists who testified earlier for the defense, Dr. Samuel J. Golub told the jury of seven men and seven women that hair found on Karen Sue Beineman's clothing did not come from the basement where the prosecution says she was slain.

Washtenaw County Prosecutor William Delhey has constructed a key part of his case against Collins around the hair testimony.

His witnesses had testified that Collins' uncle and his three nephews had their hair cut in the basement of their Ypsilanti home. Delhey contends the girl was slain there while the family was on vacation and some of their hair was found on her panties when her brutalized body was discovered July 26, 1969.

Collins, 23, a former senior at Eastern Michigan University in neighboring Ypsilanti, is charged with first-degree murder in the Grand Rapids coed's sex-torture slaying. She was the last of seven young women slain under similar circumstances in the area within two years. No one has been charged in the six other deaths.

Golub, asst. director of Fabric Research Laboratories in Dedham, Mass., said during his second day on the stand and the 16th day of testimony that it was absolutely impossible to determine whether two samples of brown Caucasian hair came from the same source.

"Do you have an opinion whether short hair segments on the panties had a common origin with those in the basement?" chief defense attorney Joseph Louisell asked.

"My opinion is they did not," Golub answered.

He said the hair on the panties was shorter and more evenly cut than the hair on the basement and that slides of hair samples from the panties contained no textile fibers while slides of hair from the basement contained many such fibers.

Under cross-examination, asst. Washtenaw County Prosecutor Booker T. Williams brought out that Golub found some textile fibers when he examined the panties themselves but there were fewer of them than on the slides.

Conducting a point-by-point cross-examination almost as exhaustive as Louisell's original questioning, Williams attacked Golub's methods and brought out a few apparent inconsistencies between his statements to Louisell and his statements under cross-examination.

Louisell tried to show the hair on the panties could have been the girl's own and said it may have gotten there by Miss Beineman clipping her bangs in a dormitory room, then washing the panties there.

But Washtenaw County Circuit Judge John Conlin blocked that attempt by ruling it was speculative.

After Golub finished testifying, Conlin said, "There are a number of legal matters to be discussed," and recessed the case for the day. He then called attorneys for both sides into his chambers. The legal matters under discussion apparently were defense moves to limit the scope of the prosecution's cross-examination in case the defense decides to put Collins on the stand.

Conlin was expected to make a ruling today.

TRIP UNEVENTFUL

Gas route crowds thin

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Two trains crept lazily on a winding course through North and South Carolina Tuesday carrying deadly nerve gas toward the Atlantic Ocean where the Army plans to sink it.

Passing mostly small towns and through rainy countryside, the controversial trains attracted relatively little attention, but in one town protesters carrying signs awaited their arrival.

"Nerve Gas Makes Me Nervous," read the sign of one of about six pickets in Waxhaw, N.C., 15 miles south of Charlotte, as one of the trains passed.

Another picket, however, waved a sign saying, "Good Luck!"

Soldiers aboard one of the trains smiled and waved at the pickets.

The trains, from Army depots at Anniston, Ala., and Richmond, Ky., were headed for the Military Ocean Terminal at Sunny Point, N.C. near Cape Fear.

There a rusty old Liberty ship from the Navy's mothball fleet in the Hudson River at New York, the LeBrannon Russell

Briggs, waited to take the deadly cargo aboard. The Army then planned to tow the Briggs to a point 282 miles east of Cape Kennedy, Fla., open her valves and scuttle her in water three miles deep, taking the nerve gas rockets, encased in coffins of steel and concrete, to the final resting place.

In Florida, however, Nathaniel P. Reed, chairman of the state Air and Water Pollution Control Board, said the state would sue to force the Army to abandon this plan. Florida officials and witnesses before congressional hearings have expressed fear the gas would pollute the waters. The Army said, however, the salt water would neutralize it before extensive ecological damage was done.

Engineer Grover Nanny, 51, of Erwin, Tenn., who piloted the train from Erwin to Spartanburg, said it's "just like any other run" — except for the heavy Army security.

Ahead of each train carrying the gas a pilot train moved to scout the tracks.

Three military policemen rode with Nanny in the engine. Military police, federal agents and state and local police guarded the main crossings.

At Sunny Point, strict security measures were implemented. Extra military policemen were brought in from Ft. Bragg, 100 miles away. Regular loading of ammunition bound for Vietnam was stopped. Longshoremen who would assist with the loading of the gas, and others who would be near it, were given physical examinations. One section of the gate to the terminal was closed and those using the lane left open were checked by security patrols.

A spokesman at the terminal said two Navy tugs would tow the Briggs to sea. They are to be accompanied by a destroyer, the USS Hartley, and by a Coast Guard cutter.

Col. Robert Reid, Sunny Point commander, said the offloading of the cans would begin as soon as the trains arrived, but he did not know when the towing would start.

ed GOP group vows to withhold votes

GRAND BEACH (UPI) — George Behrends, chairman of the United Republicans of Michigan, said Tuesday unless the Republican party makes conservative concessions to his organization, its 50,000 plus GOP members will not support Gov. Milliken or Mrs. Lenore Romney for U.S. Senator in the November election.

The United Republicans supported State Sen. Robert Huber, who polled slightly more than 49 per cent of the primary vote in the close race against Mrs. Romney.

Behrends contends the state central committee illegally used funds and its headquarters in Lansing to promote the candidacy of Mrs. Romney in the primary, and that Gov. Milliken supported her as a "consensus candidate who was shoved down our throats."

The state central committee and the governor should have stayed out of the primary in favoring a candidate as is customary, Behrends said.

"This unwarranted support forces us to defeat the entire Republican ticket unless reasonable concessions are made to us from the Republican party," he said, and declared the United Republicans would vote for local candidates but not for Mrs. Romney and the governor.

Here are the concessions the United Republicans want: a reasonable number of conservative resolutions in the Republican platform; a meaningful voice in the operations of the state central committee, but conservatives and liberals should make mutual and reasonable concessions.

"If we should fail in reaching a fair and honorable agreement, we will support all local Republican candidates but we will not support Gov. Milliken or Lenore Romney," he said.

Behrends is 66 years old and is semi-retired. He operates a consulting firm in East Chicago, Ind. and has been active in Republican politics for many years.

Soapy cites urban-African links

By JEANNE SADDLER

The problems of inadequate education, jobs and housing are a bond of common interest between Africa and urban America, former Governor G. Mennen (Soapy) Williams told a group of faculty, students and administrators at a luncheon Tuesday afternoon.

Williams, who is seeking election to the Michigan Supreme Court, was invited to address the group by the Center for Urban Affairs (CUA). "I am deeply concerned about the problems of equal opportunity for blacks and other minorities," Williams said. "But I also feel that our brothers in Africa have had a history of discrimination against them, too."

I feel very strongly that black Americans and black Africans have a community of feeling and that black Africans can make a contribution in Africa."

Williams was careful to note, however, that being black or white would not automatically make a person a "smash hit" in Africa or anywhere in the world. He cited examples of progress made by several black Americans in Africa such as Mercer Cook, ambassador to Niger and Senegal, and Franklin Williams, ambassador to Ghana. He concluded that black Americans and black Africans do indeed harmonize.

Criticizing the Africa policies of this and the previous administration, Williams said that the United States is moving away from utilizing successful programs such as American International Development (AID).

"The essence of good relationships between the United States and Africa was the U.S. acceptance of the ideas of self-determination and national development," he said.

Williams was introduced by President Wharton, whom he complimented on a speech given before the Detroit Economic Club recently.

"That speech showed more vision than I've seen in a long time concerning the problems of a changing world," Williams said. "The University is fortunate to have him... and he is also fortunate to be here because the University provides an apt instrument in which he can carry out his progressive ideas."

Wharton characterized Williams as "one who has always shown a major concern for people and their welfare, wherever they may be."

MAJOR RETAILERS INVOLVED

Interest violations cited

LANSING (UPI) — Several for Michigan retailers have agreed up to $10 million more consumer service charges over past 12 months than the law allows.

Michigan law permits a maximum service charge of 1.7 per cent per month or 18 per cent per year on the balance owed by consumers on time payment purchases.

Kelley said some retailers have tripled the legal maximum by charging interest on previous balances rather than on up-to-date unpaid balances. For example, a consumer who has a balance of $100 at the beginning of the month, then makes a partial payment of $60 later, should legally be charged interest on only the unpaid $40 balance, he said.

However, Kelley said, some retailers have computed the service charge on the $100 previous balance, which, in that example, would triple the legal service charge.

Kelley said the state will seek injunctive relief against offending businesses and urged consumers to refuse to pay the illegal service charges.

Kelley said he expects the businesses involved will voluntarily comply with his ruling.

Guerrillas report kidnaped men safe

MONTEVIDEO, Uruguay (AP) — Leftist guerrillas who murdered one U.S. hostage sent word Tuesday that two other captives — a Brazilian diplomat and a U.S. agricultural adviser — were in good health, a Uruguayan broadcast said.

The message from the Tupamaros guerrillas also contained handwritten notes from the prisoners, Brazilian Consul Aloysio Mares Dias Gomide, 41, and Claude L. Fly, 65, of Fort Collins, Colo., employed in agricultural research by the Uruguayan government, Radio Montecarlo reported.

The message made no threat against the two men, although earlier communiques warned that they, too, would be killed if the government does not free 150 political prisoners.

The guerrillas carried out an earlier threat, killing Dan A. Mitrione of Richmond, Ind., an adviser to Uruguayan police. His body was found in an abandoned car early Monday.

Mitrione and Dias Gomide were kidnaped July 31. Fly was seized Friday.

The guerrillas warned that the three hostages would be slain unless the government released all political prisoners. The government refused to bargain.

In Washington, a State

Department spokesman said the United States had urged Uruguayan authorities to do everything possible to secure the safe return of Mitrione. But, he said, Washington did not press Montevideo to meet the ransom demands of the guerrillas because that would encourage more kidnappings.

ELF bus tours to assist reform

ST. PAUL, Minn. — Two former MSU students are among 11 young people touring the country with the Earth Liberation Front (ELF) under the sponsorship of the Center for Education Reform of the National Student Assn. (NSA).

Doug Morten, who joined ELF last January, and Jeffrey Alderson, who has been touring since June, said they will not return to school fall term and plan to continue with ELF indefinitely.

The 11 constitute one of two ELF units which travel from college to college and from conference to conference in converted school buses.

The bus now in St. Paul is painted red and ecked out with slogans and signs.

The purpose of ELF, Alderson said, is to make students interested in reforming their universities, aware of similar projects at other schools.

ELF also serves as a resource center through which student organizers can obtain information to help them establish their projects.

ELF has just come from the State of Washington and plans to move on to San Francisco at the end of the 23rd annual NSA congress currently being held at McAlister College.

While at MSU, Moreton and Alderson helped establish the Man and Nature Bookstore.

Vaughn gets the credit and Kuhn gets the boot

The recent Senate passage of the 18-year-old vote amendment represents a victory not only for the disenfranchised youth of this state but also for Rep. Jackie Vaughn III, D-Detroit, and for clean politics. This might not have been the case had Senate Municipalities and Elections Committee Chairman George W. Kuhn, R-Birmingham, had his way.

The scenario is this: some time after Rep. Vaughn introduced his bill into the House, Sen. Anthony Stamm, R-Kalamazoo, introduced an almost identical proposal into the upper chamber. Vaughn stumped long and hard both at the Capitol and around the state for the 18-year-old vote. Stamm did practically nothing.

The House passed Vaughn's bill and sent it to the Senate. Kuhn's committee got the legislation and the chairman proceeded to sit on it. Stamm's bill was passed instead and sent to the House. The implication became clear: if Vaughn would support Senate Bill Nine (a law and order measure), then Kuhn would support Vaughn's 18-year-old vote bill.

There were two alternatives. The legislature would be deadlocked with two different bills stalled in committee — the result being no action at all. Or, the House might pass Stamm's bill and thereby rob Vaughn of his hard-earned and rightly-deserved credit for the voting amendment.

Vaughn made himself conspicuously absent during the vote on Senate Bill Number Nine. Finally, Kuhn reported the Vaughn bill out onto the Senate floor but only because, it is reported, members of the Senate were worried that they would be "crucified" by the press if they did not.

Perhaps significantly, perhaps coincidentally, the Vaughn measure came up for a vote when many of its liberal supporters were off the Senate floor. Fortunately, a mad scramble back into the Senate chambers managed to provide the necessary two-thirds majority for passage. It will appear on the ballot in November.

It is to the credit of the members of the Michigan Senate that they opted to legislate in favor of the interests of the people rather than in the interests of political advantage.

From the morass of the past two weeks, Michigan citizens have benefited twice: Rep. Vaughn has put a much-needed amendment on the November ballot and Sen. Kuhn was defeated for renomination last week.

Drug hassles mar fest

No matter how you slice it, the great Goose Lake Rock Festival was a spectacular success. That notwithstanding, almost everyone involved — and not involved — is busy blaming someone else for souring the happening.

The basic hassle revolves around drugs. Gov. Milliken is appalled because they were present — as if he thought they would not be. State Police and the local sheriff are uptight because they could not safely enter the festival grounds and carry off all those "Awful Dope Smokers."

The fans are sore because there were narks in the park — as if they thought there would not be. And the rock fans are enraged because the state and local Guardians of Law and Order are picking off drug users outside the sanctuary of the festival grounds.

The post-festival row was caused by excesses and a certain lack of common sense on both sides of the law — and — order curtain.

The decrying of drug use has much of the timber of nitpicking. It seems as if the leaders of the "straight" world must find something with which to put down the rock/love movement. There was almost no violence, at Goose Lake — a most impressive record considering the more than 200,000 people present.

But the fans are not innocent of bad judgment and shortsightedness either. Every fan should have known that there would be narks aplenty at the festival and that a little discretion should have been the order of the day.

This is not to say that you should live your life the way "the Man" tells you to. If they had to smoke, most of the fans could have gotten away with bringing a small stash for private consumption. On the other hand, nobody has ever said that putting out signs and getting rich on drug sales is a necessary axiom of having a good rock concert. The fact is that such actions represent nothing more than personal avarice linked with a complete disrespect for the festival movement as a whole.

Another gig is scheduled for Labor Day at Goose Lake. There is no reason why it should not be held. But this time the people must police their events — they must keep the unscrupulous entrepreneurs out — or else the Silent Majority will.

OUR READERS' MIND

Non-ed Con disturbing

To The Editor:

If accurate, the item in the State News on the Orthodox Conference to be held in Kellogg Center is most disturbing. From my reading of the piece, the Conference is almost exclusively devoted to purely religious functions and the educational in-part appears to be minimal. I was under the impression that conferences held in Kellogg Center were to be of a primary educational character. When a conference is run for and by a religious, business or any other type of interest, it should be held off campus. I have felt that there is at least a limited and indirect University subsidy of conferences held at Kellogg Center; e.g., the rates are lower than at commercial hotels. If this is the case, a largely non-educational conference should not be held on campus. After all, the University is not in the hotel business and should not subsidize or sponsor non-educational functions.

When Farmer John bowed out

The Gary, Ind., school board, desperate after repeated failures to educate its students, has decided to hire a private corporation to run one of its elementary schools.

If it works in Gary, who's to say it won't be tried at MSU? And although no doubt it would make an interesting educational experiment, the changeover itself might be the most fascinating experience of all.

"Consarn it, Gordon, this golderned college ain't what she used to be."

"Shore ain't, John. All them kids runnin' 'round trompin' down the grounds."

"Gettin' so's the only soil a man c'n run through his fingers anymore's way to heck an' gone out to the south forty."

"Yep. An' 'fore we know it they'll be a'wantin' to run one o' them ding-busted high-speed turnpikes through that pasture."

"Makes a feller hanker t' git his boots down off'n this here stove an' move on, don't it, Gordon?"

"Deed it does, John. 'deed it does."

"Makes a feller want t' git right up, bresh off the cracker crumbs, spit out his Red Man, an' move on, don't it, Gordon?"

"That it does."

"Only thing is, 'tain't right for a man t' just up an' leave a place he's been at fer more'n 25 years, Gordon."

"Don't know why not. You already got a watch, John."

"Aw, tarnation, Gordon, it ain't that. I just hate t' leave 'em in a lurch, is all. If'n I move on, I reckon I oughta git myself a re-placement."

"Dunno, John, good man's hard t' come by these days. Don't reckon's how there ain't nobody these parts could hold down your job."

"How 'bout you, Gordon. You feelin' ambitious?"

"Not me, John. You lightin' out, I'm a 'doggin' your tracks."

"Anybody else here 'bouts?"

"Naw. They're all too danged chicken-livered."

"Mind your tongue about chickens, Gordon."

"No offense, John, no offense."

"Reckon's how you're right though, Gordon, if'n I moved on out, ain't no tellin' who they'd git from 'round here. Like as not, some seegar - chompin' Democrat."

"Like as not."

"Reckon I might's well call m'ol' sidekick out in New-York, see 'f he c'n come up with somebody."

"All the way out to New-York, John? Ain't none o' them city slickers wants to come out 'n' run this here one - horse college."

"We got 31 horses, Gordon; 'sides, never you mind 'bout my city slicker friends. Do I tell you who t' re-cruit?"

"No offense, John, No offense."

"Central."

"Mornin', Effie. Ring me up the Rockefeller Foundation out in New-York."

"Oh, John, such a life you lead. Callin' all over the countryside, talkin' t' all them city bigwigs an' all."

"Consarn it all, Effie, quit your infernal gabbin' an' hook this contraption up to New-York. Time's a'wastin', girl."

"Rockefeller Foundation."

"Lemme parlay with John."

"May I ask who's calling, please?"

"Tell 'im ol' John from MAC's on the line."

AP NEWS ANALYSIS

Egypt, Iraq vie for Arab bloc

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following news analysis is by Elias Antar, Associated Press writer.

BEIRUT, Lebanon — President Gamal Abdel Nasser of Egypt calls the leaders of Iraq cowards and liars. The Iraqis label Nasser a political blunderer and a defeatist.

Nasser has pushed the Arab people into the abyss by taking American advice, the Iraqis charge.

Iraqi President Ahmed Hassan El Bakr and his associates are a bloodthirsty clique, Nasser retorts.

Arabs are fascinated by the quarrel between Egypt and Iraq.

"This is the most virulent fight since the bad old days of the inter-Arab propaganda wars," a Beirut grocer said as he tuned in to Baghdad radio.

The current dispute ostensibly is over Nasser's acceptance of the American peace initiative in the Middle East, which the Iraqis have rejected vehemently.

But the issue has brought to the surface old difference between Nasser and the ruling Baath Socialist party in Iraq. The differences have been papered over for two years because of the conflict with Israel.

Counterweights

Even before Nasser came to power in 1954, Egypt and Iraq were the traditional counterweights of the Arab world. Their rivalry continued as the Arab nationalist revolutionary wave swept over the area.

The first serious bout between the two countries in the post revolutionary era came in 1959 when Iraqi dictator Abdel Karim Kassem presented a serious challenge to Nasser's leadership of the Arab world.

Kassem tried to keep Iraq out of Nasser's orbit and form his own bloc in the Arab camp. Relentless propaganda attacks from Nasser and Kassem's own excesses finally led to his downfall and death in 1963, when the Baath party came to power in Iraq.

Bakr was prime minister in the Baathist regime of 1963. Together with Baathist leaders from neighboring Syria, he journeyed to Cairo to propose a federation of Egypt, Iraq and Syria.

After lengthy negotiations, the three countries came to an agreement. But the Baath, after 20 years underground, apparently could not bring itself to share power with anyone. Nasser and Baathists soon were exchanging epithets over the airwaves.

In November, 1963, the Baathists were ousted from power in Iraq.

Baath comeback

Bakr and his colleagues made a comeback in mid-1968, much to Nasser's chagrin. The six-day war of 1967 had forced a moratorium on inter-Arab disputes, however, and Nasser painstakingly cultivated this new-found Arab unity. The war of words of the past 10 days has shown how illusory were the apparent good relations between Egypt and Iraq.

On the face of it, Iraq should have been one of the last Arab countries to denounce Nasser's acceptance of the U.S. plan.

Iraqi forces fought only briefly in the 1967 war, and Iraq — unlike Jordan, Egypt and Syria — lost no territory to Israel.

Since the war, the estimated 12,000 Iraqi troops stationed in Jordan have fought only intermittently with the Israelis.

But the Iraqi government's chronically shaky position at home made it difficult for the regime to appear to bow to U.S. proposals. Seeking to outflank Nasser on the revolutionary front, the Iraqis rejected the U.S. plan and criticized Nasser for

"Yes, Mr. Rockefeller."

"Pack your things. You're being transferred."

"Transferred, Mr. Rockefeller?"

"That's right. To Michigan State University in East Lansing."

"Holy cow, Mr. Rockefeller, this is sort of sudden, isn't it?"

"Sudden is right. Cow is right, too, but you'll find that out soon enough. I'll have Miller call you with the details."

"I don't know, honey. Miller said we'd be living in a cow's house."

"A COW'S house?"

"All right, John, you might want to fix things up at your end, in order to ease us in. Set up a committee or something, you know? Legitimacy and all that."

"Shucks, don't you pay no nevermind to that, Johnny-boy. I'll smooth it around out here."

"Well, then, John, we've got a deal. Good talking to you. Goodbye, now."

"S'long, pardner."

"Huh? John? John? Wait a minute. Don't hang up, there."

"Huh? Who's there; Who is that?"

"It's me, John, I inadvertently picked up the 'phone and, well, I couldn't help overhearing. And I'd just like to say that, although I do not actively seek the position, I feel I could not ignore a sincere draft on the part of . . ."

"Dadburn it, Soapy, how many times I do they have art in . . . in where is it again?"

"Michigan. And yes, I'm quite certain they have art there. In fact, remember the painting of the man with his wife and pitchfork in front of the barn?"

"But, Clifton, No more galleries?"

"And I'll bet we'll just love their quaint architecture. Why, they probably have since over a hundred years old."

"But, Clifton. No more Philharmonics?"

"And maybe a nice museum."

"But, Clifton. No more Met?"

"And really down - to - earth people. That's what's best of all — folks out there are just plain folks."

"But, Clifton. No more automats?"

'Beyond... Dolls': sleazy affront to good taste

By ROBERT KIPPER
State News Reviewer

"Beyond the Valley of the Dolls" is the pace-setter of tastelessness for the seventies.

Russ Meyer's wide-screen, technicolor porn epic has the humor of a pervert, the brains of a moron, the restraint of a sadist, the dignity of a two-bit whore and the finesse of a bridge builder.

Meyer, long famous with the drive-in crowd as king of the low-budget skin flicks ("Vixen," "Finders Keepers . . .

Lovers Weepers!," "Cherry, Harry and Raquel"), must have been determined to make this, his first big studio film, a splashy one. After all, Michael Sarne was busy at work with "Myra Breckinridge" for the same studio and word was leaking out that it, not Meyer's film, would be the most raunchy and perverted film of the season.

Not to be outdone in the genre for which he is known, Meyer crammed his film with a glittering array of queens, lesbians, transvestites, murderers and lechers and spent Twentieth Century Fox's millions on acres of plush, pop art sets.

He helped Roger Ebert write a mindless but functional script and had four songwriters compose a score of exclusively lollipop numbers. Then, to guarantee that no excellence would spoil the fun, he hired bodies instead of actors and editors and cameramen with nervous conditions.

With all the ingredients of the definitive exploitation film on hand, his own native flair for the graphic and the grotesque and the built-in insurance that probably someone else would take the rap for the mess (most think authoress Jacqueline Susann inspired the screenplay), Meyer completed his film.

He must have been ecstatic viewing the finished product. Here is a film to make the voyeurs and the perverts smack their lips and the drive-in revelers sit up and take notice.

It is the story of a three-woman rock group and their manager, how they find fame and corruption in Los Angeles among the local jet set and how violence allows them to regain their values after a mad whirl of parties, liaisons and indiscretions.

Kelly, the lead singer, forsakes her manager for a verbose L.A. partythrower (whose real identity is one of Meyer's lurid little surprises later on in the film), an unscrupulous lawyer and a well-oiled, bedroom-eyed love machine.

Pet, a black drummer, loves an aspiring lawyer but has a thing with a muscle-bound fighter while he is studying for his bar exam.

Casey, the third performer forsakes the parties for an affair with another woman after an abortion emancipates her from existing heterosexual ties.

Harris, the neglected manager, takes on an insatiable sex-starved actress. They share sexplay standing up in a canoe, crowded in a phone booth and dangled from a chandelier (all of which occurs, thankfully, off-screen).

The sex is, however, just the warm up. Violence replaces it by the end of the film in a sickening mass murder scene that was possibly inspired by the Sharon Tate murders. It is an appalling scene and hideously inappropriate.

"Beyond the Valley of the Dolls" epitomizes the type of entertainment one used to call trash before the term seemed so prudish. It is a sleazy catalog of just about all that could possibly go wrong when an undisciplined moviemaker is allowed to work in times of relaxed censorship. Meyer's film bastardizes the term maturity and uses it as justification for its lack of taste or restraint. Meyer can't impress us so he tries to shock us; he can't inspire us, so he tries to sicken us.

Where will films go beyond this one? "Myra Breckinridge" perhaps?

Dolls

Marcia McBroom, Dolly Read and Cynthia Meyers play three members of a rock group in Russ Meyer's "Beyond the Valley of the Dolls." The film currently is playing at the Spartan Twin East and on the red screen of the M-78 Drive-In.

Highway safety practices claimed in need of revision

Many highway safety policies and practices are not supported by scientific evidence, according to an MSU social scientist.

"Our review of more than 200 recent scientific studies on highway safety," David Klein said, "has concluded that many of the current policies and practices aimed at reducing violations and crashes are without firm scientific basis."

"Furthermore, some of the policies and practices run counter to what is known about the causes of traffic violations and automobile crashes."

Klein has recently written a book with his colleague, Julian A. Waller of the University of Vermont Medical School, which was published last month by the U.S. Dept. of Transportation. In the published review, the authors described the highway safety practices of this country as largely unprofessional and in serious need of revision.

For example, they challenge the merits of driver education courses.

"There is virtually no evidence," Klein said, "that driver education, as it is currently taught, helps to reduce the number of automobile crashes or traffic violations."

In fact, he points out, such programs in some states may contribute to the total number of vehicle crashes since they make it possible for youngsters to legally drive at an earlier age. The authors also challenge the logic behind ticketing drivers for certain kinds of violations.

"There is no proof," Klein said, "that many kinds of illegal driving causes crashes."

After many automobile crashes, enormous amounts of time, money and public resources are expended in attempt to pinpoint blame or negligence.

"Most crashes have a multiplicity of causes," Klein said. "Therefore, blame is extremely difficult if not impossible to determine. Negligence is even harder to identify."

If the blame or negligence is ever determined, should the driver be punished?

"In most cases," he said, "there is no evidence that punitive measures, such as traffic fines and license suspensions or revocations, improve the offender's driving."

"Both the quality and quantity of crash and violation reporting by police and vehicle administrators," Klein said, "are so poor or inadequate as to make it next to impossible to:

"Determine whether safety measures really work as they are supposed to.

"Clearly identify trends in the frequency or severity of crashes."

"Effectively use the 'point' system to detect high-risk drivers."

These and other findings are contained in the new report called "Causation, Culpability and Deterrence in Highway Crashes," published by the U.S. Dept. of Transportation.

Governors get welfare bid

LAKE OF THE OZARKS, Mo. (AP) — The nation's governors heard an appeal Tuesday for the Nixon administration's welfare reform program. It came after the governors renewed their support of a far broader proposal that would provide a complete federal takeover of welfare costs.

The appeal was delivered by Elliott L. Richardson, the new secretary of health, education and welfare. He called the administration's family assistance program "a cornerstone of the new federalism." That program is under consideration by the Senate Finance Committee.

A committee of governors headed by New York Republican Nelson A. Rockefeller cited the administration's plan as "an excellent first step toward the assumption by the federal government for full federal responsibility for the financing of public assistance costs," the position backed the past two years by the conference.

Noting the committee's "first step" reference, Richardson commented, "Some would say it is a pretty big step."

Richardson's abbreviated appearance, in which he summarized a prepared speech and answered questions, came after the second business session of the 62nd National Governors Conference endorsed without dissent a series of Rockefeller committee recommendations that could add massive amounts to the federal budget.

They included, besides the welfare proposal, universal health insurance, expanded federal education spending and new efforts in the manpower and narcotics fields. The latter included a declaration that a national crisis exists which should be met with new efforts in the treatment, prevention and law enforcement fields.

Earlier, the conference returned to committee the federal-state revenue sharing plan it has supported for several years. There was disagreement over rival proposals for ways to get around obvious congressional reluctance to give federal revenues back to the states on a "no strings" basis.

The House Ways and Means Committee has yet to schedule hearings on the proposal. Gov. Buford Ellington of Tennessee, presenting the recommendation, said: "The national administration must prove they are serious about getting revenue sharing and give it a higher priority."

A proposal by Gov. Richard Ogilvie of Illinois, that states seek convening of a constitutional convention to push an amendment requiring revenue sharing, ran into criticism.

Fall class set on role of women

Women's role in today's society will be the topic of a class which will be offered this fall in the Great Issues Series.

Among topics to be considered are the anthropological aspects of the woman's role; sexual identity; the dual role of wife and mother; family planning and abortion; women as students, citizens and workers; the woman's image in literature and the mass media; women as authors, and the women's liberation movement.

The course will be taught by a team of 15 faculty members, 11 of which are women.

The series is sponsored by MSU's University College and open to students in all majors at the senior level.

Scheduled family films postponed

Two family films scheduled for August screenings have been postponed by the Exploring Cinema Society.

"Do You Keep a Lion at Home?" has been moved from Aug. 19 to Nov. 20 and "The Music Man" has been changed from Aug. 26 to Nov. 13.

"Gulliver's Travels" will be shown today at Peoples Church as announced. The next scheduled show is now "Stagecoach Buckaroos" starting Johnny Mack Brown at Edgewood United Church on Friday, Sept. 4.

All-Stars to battle Wyoming at home

Winners of their first three games this season, the Lansing All-Stars will attempt to keep their record unblemished this Saturday when they host Wyoming (Grand Rapids) at Centennial Field. Game time is 7:30 p.m.

The All-Stars won their regular season opener last week, posting a 28-0 win over Detroit, but head coach Turf Kauffman wasn't pleased with certain aspects of the team's attack, especially on offense.

"Our lack of timing and coordination among members of the backfield has to improve," Kauffman said. "Our backs aren't getting off their mark fast enough. They'll have to improve here and start blocking more when they're not running the ball if we're going to be a contender this season."

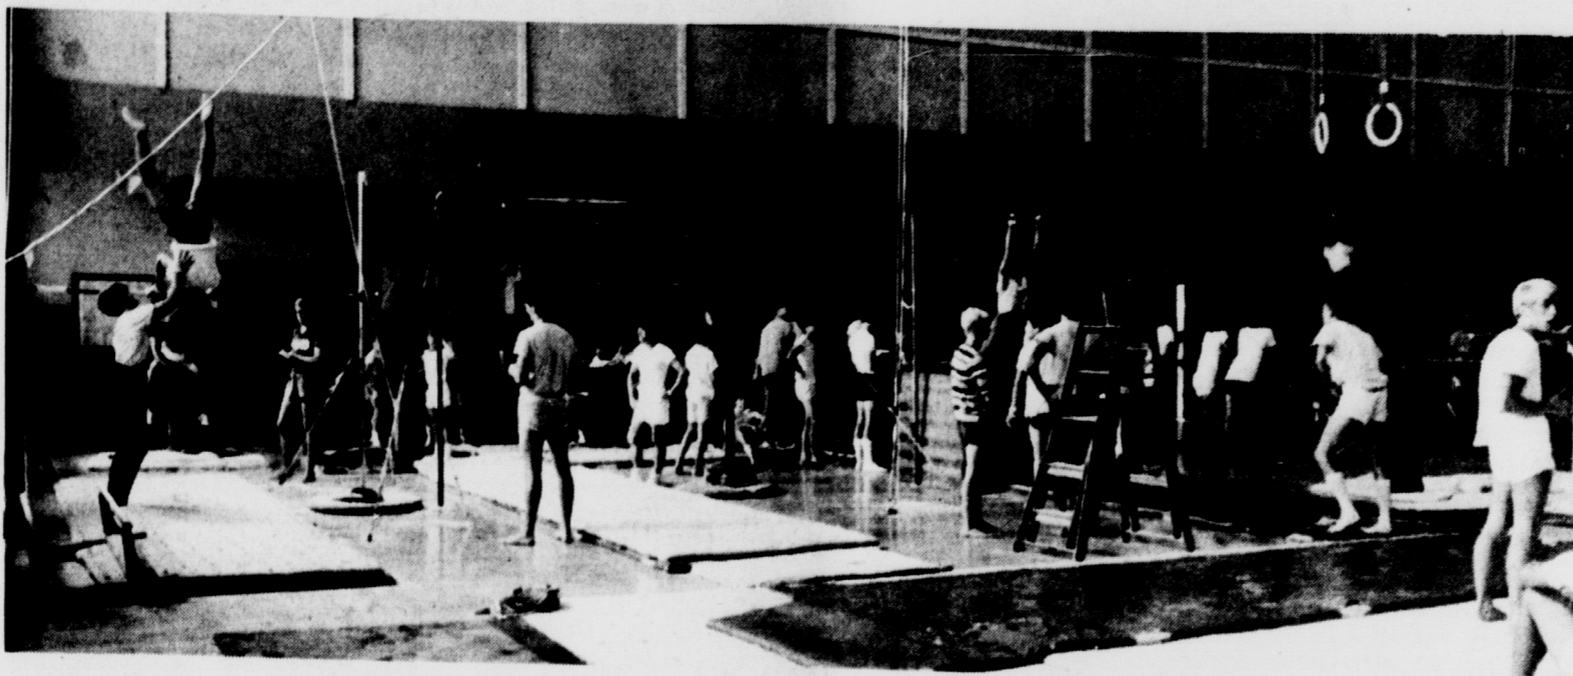

The Lansing squad was at a tight handicap in last Saturday's game with the loss of several backfield men. Ernie Pasteur was unable to make the trip because of a commitment in North Carolina. Jim Garrett, the team's leading rusher, came up sick the day before the game and didn't make the trip to Detroit, and another former MSU player, Ken Hines, was injured early in the game and saw limited action. One player who drew praise from Kauffman was Tom Jakovac. The former Alma college quarterback was dropped to second string for Saturday's game in favor of Charley Wedemeyer. But with the sudden shortage of halfbacks, Kauffman inserted Jakovac at a running back spot and the move paid off pretty well.

Jakovac caught a pass from Wedemeyer for one touchdown, ran eight yards for another, booted two extra points and passed to Bob Lange for a two-point conversion. Not bad for a guy in a new position.

The All-Stars should be at full strength this week with the return of Pasteur, Garrett and Hines.

Gymnasts here for summer clinic

Gymnasts in summer clinic at MSU

Over 200 gymnasts are currently attending a National Summer Clinic on the MSU campus under the direction of MSU Gymnastic's coach George Szypula and several outstanding assistants. Above, junior boys work out in preparation of Thursday night's "Nite of the Stars" show to be held at the Sports Arena of the IM.

Approximately 200 gymnastics enthusiasts are currently assembled on the MSU campus for the 13th annual National Summer Gymnastics Clinic.

The clinic, conducted by Spartan varsity gymnastics coach George Szypula, provides theory and practice teaching for physical educators and administrators, coaching and judging sessions, and basic through advanced level instruction for boys and girls of all ages.

Performers have an opportunity to compete in three development meets scheduled for Monday, Tuesday and today at 2 p.m. in the Jenison Gymnasium. The first is for novice girls, the second for junior boys and junior girls, and the third for senior boys and senior girls.

The staff includes Rusty Mitchell, former Olympian and national champion at Southern Illinois, now coaching at the University of New Mexico; Jackie (Klein) Uphues, former Olympian and national champ from Illinois; and Fred Orlofsky, former Olympian and national champ at Southern Illinois, now coaching at Western Michigan.

Coach Szypula's wife, June, a physical education instructor and coach of the East Lansing High School state gymnastics champions in 1969, is also assisting in the instruction.

Thursday night a special presentation will be performed by the gymnasts called the "Nite of the Stars." The show will be held in the Sports Arena of the IM Bldg. beginning at 7:30 p.m.

Several members of the 1970 Spartan gymnastics team will perform in the show which will draw the clinic to a close. Among the performers will be Charlie Morse, a senior from Livonia, who won the National AAU sideway title, and promising Spartan sophomore, Randy Balhorn, of Oak Brook, Ill.

Weger ends holdout; Parson has surgery

BLOOMFIELD HILLS (UPI) — The Detroit Lions Tuesday announced the signing of their last contract holdout who had not reported to camp, fourth year defensive back Mike Weger. Several other Lions remain unsigned but they are in camp rather than pay $100 a day fines.

The Lions' no. 2 draft choice, offensive tackle Ray Parson, underwent knee surgery Tuesday to repair a torn ligament. Parson, from the University of Minnesota, re-injured the knee during the college All-Star game. Club officials expect he will be out of action 10 to 12 weeks.
