Report claims study unit used to pacify protesters

By NANCY PARSONS
State News Staff Writer

The Committee on University and East Lansing Policies related to the Indochina War was formulated merely to appease the demonstrators who took over Grand River Avenue spring term, the minority report of three of the University subcommittee members charges.

The 16-page minority report, prepared by Mitchell Stengel, asst. professor of economics, Lois Gertz, Gladwin sophomore, and Charles Massoglia, East Lansing junior, was presented to President Wharton late Friday afternoon.

Wharton said Sunday he will consider the minority report, which contains 35 recommendations that were either rejected by the whole University subcommittee or not considered at all, along with the majority report which was presented to him July 7.

The report indicates that the three demonstrators' representatives on the subcommittee were dissatisfied with the majority report of the subcommittee and the July 7 deadline imposed on the body July 3 by Wharton.

"Meeting the deadline precluded any solicitation of information from other sources; any analysis of the information gathered; any joint deliberations with the city subcommittee; any public hearing; and community dissemination of the information gathered and any careful, thorough consideration of the recommendations," the report states.

Referring to the 7½-hour meeting of the subcommittee July 6 at which the members approved 23 recommendations, the report states:

"The fatigue and hostility which had conspicuously beset all the subcommittee members by that late hour proscribed the thorough discussion, give and take, rewording, amending and substituting which were essential to conscientious consideration of the recommendations.

"To continue on meant to give hasty, incomplete, rushed consideration to the remaining recommendations and to do gross injustice to the gravity of the issues under consideration.

"Many actions on the part of the University administration and the majority of the subcommittee lend credence to the charge that the committee was established as a palliative in order to clear Grand River in May and avoid further antiwar disturbances.

"The faith of many of those who did not initially believe this charge has now been severely damaged," the report states.

The minority report asks that the University sponsor a public forum early in the fall quarter to inform the community of what became of the subcommittee's report, which recommendations are being implemented and their progress and which recommendations are not being implemented and why.

"It both violates the committee's charge and seriously diminishes the legitimacy and credibility of the subcommittee's findings," the report states.

Some of the major differences between the recommendations of the minority and the majority reports include:

- The minority report calls for the elimination of ROTC on campus while the majority report calls for MSU exercising final authority over the content of all ROTC courses.

- The minority report calls for the termination of all purchases from war contractors while the majority report calls for the active solicitation of bids from nonwar contractors.

- The minority report recommends that the University exclude armed forces recruiters from the Placement Bureau while the majority report suggests that a service to assist conscientious objectors to the war be established.

Shootings, mine kill 5 persons in Ulster

BELFAST (AP) — The bloodiest year in Northern Ireland's history produced five more dead Sunday as the British army prepared for possible battle with Irish Republican Army (IRA) guerrillas.

Two British soldiers were killed and one was seriously injured by a land mine at Crossmaglen near the border with Ireland. An 18-year-old civilian died in a riot at Strabane, another border town. A young policeman was shot dead in Belfast and a 43-year-old civilian died of a bullet through the head.

Their deaths took the known total since August 1969 to 443.

The total for this year is 236, and in less than seven months has surpassed the 232 who died in all 1972, the province's worst previous year of sectarian strife.

The army moved heavy concentrations of armored cars into the Suffolk area of Belfast's western outskirts where repeated nights of shooting have produced a confrontation crisis which threatens to erupt into a full-scale pitched battle.

Student drivers to get warning for violations

By LINDA WERFELMAN
State News Staff Writer

Students found driving improperly registered cars on campus on weekends and after 6 p.m. on weekdays will receive warnings instead of fines for the first offense, Robert Perrin, vice president for University relations, said in a statement Friday.

A regulation prohibiting students from possessing improperly registered cars on campus at any time was ruled in conflict with the Academic Freedom Report in a May 16 decision of the Student-Faculty Judiciary.

Despite the ruling, the regulation has not been removed from the Student Motor Vehicle Regulations and is still being enforced.

Changes in the regulations probably will not be made until a campus transportation study is completed early next year.

"Making piecemeal changes in the rules without knowing how these would affect other campus traffic problems would defeat the purpose of the study," Eldon Nonnamaker, vice president for student affairs, said. "Therefore, I have notified President Wharton that it is my decision to delay recommending implementation of the judiciary finding until it can be assessed in relation to overall traffic considerations."

The campus traffic study, approved in June by the board of trustees, will be conducted with the cooperation of the Michigan Dept. of Commerce, Perrin said.

The regulation, which must be changed officially by the board of trustees, stated that "a student shall not possess or operate a vehicle on MSU property without having first registered it and properly affixing the permit."

The Student-Faculty Judiciary ruled that "it is unreasonable to cite a student for a violation of the Student Motor Vehicle Regulation when he is driving after 6 p.m. on weekdays and during weekends."

Suits challenging five other regulations, including the use of graduated parking fines, were filed with Student-Faculty Judiciary earlier this month.

Under the graduated parking system, students parking in restricted faculty-staff parking area are charged higher fines each time they are ticketed. Nonstudents parking in the same areas receive $2 fines for each offense.

Other suits will question a regulation which requires that fines be paid within five days and claim that regulations which give the All-University Traffic Committee the right to suspend parking and driving privileges are vague.

A final suit will challenge the right of the Student Traffic Appeal Court to judge student violations of regulations prohibiting use of false information in vehicle registration or in cases before the Student Traffic Appeals Court.

GOVERNOR, REP CALLED IN

Rioting erupts in Md. prison

JESSUP, Md. (AP) — Gov. Marvin Mandel and a black congressman met with rebellious inmates at the Maryland House of Correction early Sunday after a night-long riot that brought 150 state troopers sweeping through the prison.

"We were not going to have a repeat of what happened in New York," Mandel said following the meeting with some 20 inmates inside the prison. He referred to last September's outbreak at Attica prison in which 43 persons died.

The disturbance among 1,500 inmates, 75 per cent of whom are black, lasted 10 hours. It ended early Sunday morning when some 200 inmates who were surrounded by state police in the recreation yard of the maximum security prison went back to their cells after Mandel agreed to the meeting.

"There were no demands," the governor said. "The men had some grievances in the areas of medical service and the classification board."

"We are going to look into some of these," he said. State troopers patrolled the smoke-stained, water-soaked halls of the sprawling facilities, guarding an

Rep terms efforts in Vietnam positive

By RAY ANDERSON
State News Staff Writer

"I resent being called a hawk," Congressman Charles E. Chamberlain stated. "We all want peace terribly."

In an interview Friday, the 6th District representative noted: "I tried to devote my total energies to constructive pursuits in Vietnam."

Defending those Vietnam-oriented pursuits, Chamberlain maintained he is solely responsible for providing the Vietnamese with television.

"When I first went there in 1964 there was not a single transmitter in the entire country," he reflected. With the aid of a MSU and Purdue University development, the airborne classroom, television has been spread over 90 per cent of South Vietnam, he asserted.

"This is a struggle for the minds of men and we should use every asset available to us," he added. "Television has effectively countered Communist endeavors in Vietnam."

Through his efforts 5,000 televisions were given to the South Vietnamese government and placed in schools, hospitals and villages where they have been used in the presidential campaigns and elections to

New Dem official urges public input

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — The new chairman of the Democratic National Committee says she supports party reforms, but feels they haven't gone far enough in getting the public to participate.

"I'm for restructuring of the party," Jean Miles Westwood said, who was chosen committee head at last week's Democratic National Convention. "The reforms so far have been good, but they have not had enough public input and study. We need more hearings, for example."

Westwood, a campaign aide to party nominee Sen. George McGovern and the first woman to head a major political party, touched on a wide range of subjects during an interview in the living room of her suburban home here after her return from the convention.

Among her comments: •On her predecessor Lawrence F. O'Brien. "I admire and respect Larry O'Brien. I'm one of the liberal coalition who got him to come back some time ago. He's done a good job on the reforms, although at times I thought he was dragging his feet."

•On organized labor: "The trouble with labor was that its leaders didn't understand the significance of the reform. They do now. They'll begin working hard to regain their voice in the party just like everyone who had a voice at the convention worked for their place... They're not going to go to Richard Nixon. What can he give labor?"

•On Mr. Westwood's view of her job: "My husband calls me the new Democratic National Committee chairwoman."

•On McGovern's criteria for a running mate: "He had to share his views rather than oppose or balance them in the traditional sense. He had to be a man with at least the potential to be president."

One of Westwood's major concerns is party unity.

"There are two kinds of unity," she added. "One is imposed from the top and that rarely works. The other comes from listening to all factions and letting the people decide. The convention showed that if time is given for people to hash out their differences, they will be able to resolve them."

Westwood said she and other party officials already have begun to make overtures to all factions of the party, including labor, which have shown dissatisfaction or disillusionment.

She predicted labor would participate in future discussions of charter revisions, although she noted: "All through the discussions by the party structure commissions, labor was asked to participate. They didn't."

Westwood also discussed McGovern's selection of Sen. Thomas Eagleton of Missouri as a running mate.

"Each of us on the staff — there were about 30 — put in four names which we thought were the best choices," she said. "We had 55 names. We went through the pros and cons of each one, and by noon Thursday we had narrowed it down to seven."

"We consulted the black, Chicano, youth and women's caucuses and compared their preferences. The similarities were amazing."

"We later narrowed the list to three," she said, Kevin White, the mayor of Boston; Sen. Abraham Ribicoff, D-Conn., and Eagleton.

She said the fact that Eagleton was a Roman Catholic did not enter the consideration, because staff members thought he was a Protestant.

Turning to the campaign, Westwood said the key to the party's success will be in its efforts to register newly eligible young voters and older voters who have remained unregistered.

She said special efforts will be made to reach young voters who are not in college — a segment which she believes has largely been ignored in national politics. Those efforts will take party workers to where the voters are, such as factory gates, she said.

Gangland killings continue

NEW YORK (AP) — Shot five times in the face, Thomas "Tommy Ryan" Eboli, top Mafia figure and underboss for the late Vito Genovese, was found dead early Sunday in what police indicated was a gangland slaying.

Police said Eboli, 61, apparently had been taken "for a ride" by other mobsters and was cut down in a burst of gunfire as he struggled to get out of the car.

His body, clad in a blue jumpsuit, was found sprawled on a sidewalk in the quiet Crown Heights section of Brooklyn, surrounded by broken, bloodstained glass from a car window. Police said he had more than $2,000, mostly in $100 bills on him.

They theorized that when Eboli realized what was about to happen, he tried to force his way from the car. They said at least two shots from a small caliber gun hit him while he still was in the vehicle.

They said the shooting occurred at about 1 a.m.

A witness told authorities that at about that time, he saw flashes near a truck in the area and heard a man say, "let's get out of here."

The truck, apparently stolen, was found abandoned with its engine running about a block from Eboli's body.

Police said they also found a .45-caliber M-3 machine gun with a silencer in a car registered to a Newark, N.J., owner and parked near the murder scene. They said the weapon was of a type used by paratroopers during World War II.

They were unable to determine immediately whether either the truck or machine gun was connected to the shooting.

Police said Eboli might have been shot while riding in his own car, a blue, late-model Cadillac with New Jersey licence plates.

They said they did not know what Eboli, who lived in Fort Lee, N.J., was doing in Crown Heights. They called it an "alien neighborhood" for Eboli who usually frequented social clubs in Manhattan's Little Italy section.

The murder of Eboli was the latest in a series of shootings involving reputed underworld figures which began over a year ago with the wounding of Joseph A. Colombo Sr., identified by authorities as head of the Profaci Cosa Nostra family in Brooklyn.

Federal authorities have identified Eboli as an underboss in the Genovese family while the late Genovese himself, known as the "Boss of Bosses," was in prison for bankrolling a narcotics smuggling operation.

State Investigation Commission sources said Eboli's poor health prevented him from gaining the top spot in the mob after Genovese's death in prison in 1969.

Kidney transplant done by area, MSU doctors

A kidney transplant by a team of community and MSU doctors was successfully completed Thursday at Edward W. Sparrow Hospital in Lansing.

The recipient was a 35-year-old Lansing teacher, married and the father of two. He was reported to be in satisfactory condition.

The donor was a 21-year-old man who died late Wednesday at an Ann Arbor hospital.

Transfer of the kidney from Ann Arbor to Lansing came about through a recently organized statewide organ sharing program which aids in collection of donor kidneys and their distribution to hospitals where patients with matching tissue are awaiting transplants.

Carrying out the transplant was a team composed primarily of Lansing surgeons, nurses, medical technicians and other health personnel working in collaboration with experienced transplant surgeons from the faculty of the Dept. of Surgery at MSU.

Forrest K. Neumann, Sparrow president, said he hopes the operation will be the first in a continuing series.

"We want to make it possible," Neumann said, "for residents of the Lansing area who need kidney transplants to obtain them and to do so without having to leave the community in which most of their family and friends reside."

He was supported by Dr. David

Siegel, chief of urology at Sparrow and a participant in the surgery. Siegel, a private practitioner, is also an associate clinical professor of surgery on the MSU's voluntary medical faculty.

"The Sparrow Hospital dialysis program," Siegel said, "has long been one of the most outstanding services of its kind in the state."

"We now have demonstrated our ability, in conjunction with the MSU College of Human Medicine, to make available in the community the full spectrum of treatment in the management of serious kidney disease."

"We expect now to demonstrate that the community and MSU working together can also provide the necessary long-term care that is required to keep the patient healthy and to prevent his body from rejecting the new kidney."

Sparrow Hospital supplied the operating room, the dialysis equipment and the laboratory facilities as well as the basic medical and surgical skills for the operation.

MSU supplied the specialized surgical skills and the typing analyses and will now provide expertise in the continuing medical management of the patient.

Dr. Andrew D. Hunt, dean of the College of Human Medicine, regards the operation as a first step not only in Lansing but as part of a developing program for the state.

"We envision similar operations in other cities through cooperation with local facilities and physicians.

"This approach is part of our community involvement philosophy. We are already sending out medical students to several Michigan communities to train in local hospitals from local doctors. We feel we have an obligation to do what we can to help the community doctors and other health professionals in their efforts to provide high quality health care."

Dr. Edward D. Coppola, chairman of the Dept. of Surgery, and a participant in the operation, estimates that each year, about 40 out of every million people — more than 300 Michigan residents — would benefit from kidney transplants. At present only about 10 out of every million people actually receive transplants.

The reason is lack of facilities, trained surgical and follow up care teams, and donated kidneys.

"By involving community hospitals, doctors and other health professionals in transplantation programs we hope to increase the capacity of the state to meet this health care need," Coppola said.

"We have discussed the possibility of a regional cooperative program with health care leaders in several Michigan communities and hope to involve other places with us as well as Lansing. Coppola envisions a future in which the MSU surgeons will work with transplant teams in several communities."

LINKED TO U.S. BUILDUP

Russian paper attacks Chou

MOSCOW (AP) — The Soviet Union accused Premier Chou En-lai on Sunday of promoting a United States arms buildup and advocating the continued presence of American military forces in Asia.

The charge, published by the Communist party organ, Pravda, centered around a report made by two U.S. congressmen following their trip to Peking two weeks ago.

U.S. Reps. Hale Boggs of Louisiana, majority leader of the House of Representatives, and Gerald R. Ford, the Republican leader, reported June 8 that China's leadership is concerned about "the possibility of continued Soviet armament and American disarmament."

The two, who spent nine days in Peking and met with the Chinese premier for five hours, said the Chinese were worried specifically about the Soviet Union replacing the United States in Asia if U.S. forces were withdrawn from the region.

The Pravda article, signed by commentator I. Alexandrov, said such statements are "a real Godsend" for the "Pentagon propaganda machine."

OPINION

TWO CENTS WORTH

Gays want censorship

To the Editor:

An open reply to Mr. Christianson and other members of MSU Gay Liberation Movement:

Thank you for your recent letter regarding the Theater Dept. productions.

In my reading of the current production "Houses by the Green," it seems to me that it does not contain an element of criticism of the gay community. There is one line uttered by the character of a bigotted old man. That hardly constitutes an element. And it certainly is not a theme in this play or any of Cregan's other work. You will also notice that in his age and bigotry the Commander insults Jews and minority races. The point to be taken is that the bigotry of the old man fails, the scheming of Oliver is defeated, and Susan — the least offensive member of the quartet — has her true love rewarded. It is, in fact, a very positive and highly moral play.

I don't think you can assure me that members of the gay community will not be laughed at anymore. You can't legislate laughter and what humans in all their madness will find humorous from one day to the next. I don't know of any condition of man or any occupation that has not been laughed at by someone somewhere — old age, impotence, excessive potency, broken limbs, misshapen heads, excessive patriotism, every occupation, every religion. The list is endless. You are asking for censorship, it seems to me.

I like to think as a director I do know how to recognize the parts of a play and how to orchestrate them. I think this production gives the brief moment for the one line it deserves and that Cregan intended.

I certainly agree that the play deals in stereotypes — cartoons almost in Cregan's exaggerated the men for (hopefully) comic effect. The blatant sexist element is, to the mind of the actress, somewhat antifemale since she is used so much as an object throughout the play for the men to gain their financial — security objectives. The fact that she wins in the end only barely removes this sting.

Joe makes it clear

To the Editor:

Let me make a few things perfectly clear. Judy Yates' article which appeared July 14 was close, but it will not win the pace-maker award. There are a few mistakes I would like to clear up before Larry O'Brien takes me to court for slander. I believe, for instance, that I said I left the Lindsay campaign when they decided to go to Wisconsin instead of Michigan. I know I said that it was the people who held the power in the Humphrey campaign who were the "fat, greasy, cigar smoking..." not "the Democrats." I was referring to my experience in New Jersey where people like Sal Bontempo, Jim Delaney, Dominic Maribelli, and Ken Barry ran the show. It was the fact that they used young people as lackeys more than as helpers that upset me.

My deepest concern, however, is the last paragraph of the article. I did not say that a "young person will really have a chance to get a position." I indicated that the Nixon campaign is the only campaign outside of George McGovern's which, in my experience, includes young people in a structure which lets them have their own funding, make their own decisions, and clean their own house. To paraphrase the President, "We cannot simply ask young people their problems and then handle them; we must place young people in those positions which will speak most closely to their needs."

Screens

To the Editor:

Is the University really environmental - quality conscious? Not when it removes the sun screens for the Natural Resources Building, as it has done this week. The building will be harder to cool. The air conditioning load will increase. And good old Power Plant 65 will be called on for more electricity, which calls for more coal (from strip mines) or natural gas, which when burned results in air pollution. Why turn off half the lights, then take off the sun screens?

McGovern reaffirms honesty; Eagleton a trusted lieutenant

In spite of the dire predictions of political pundits, in spite of the seemingly insurmountable problem of general nonrecognition, in spite of last-minute coalitions of the "old pros" of the Democratic party to block his nomination, George McGovern is halfway to becoming the next president of the United States.

Halfway may be as far as he ever gets. It is general political knowledge that an incumbent president is almost impossible to defeat. But in the last 20 years, incumbent presidents have been defeated just as often as they have been re-elected: Harry Truman in 1952 and Lyndon Johnson in 1968 were pressured out of office from within their own party; Dwight Eisenhower in 1956 and Johnson in 1964 were re-elected.

One thing is certain, however. If elected, McGovern will be an excellent president. He gave ample evidence of statesmanship even during the convention week. Two illustrations:

First — Wednesday afternoon, some 300 young demonstrators crowded into the lobby of the Doral, McGovern's campaign headquarters hotel. They were bitterly angry about McGovern efforts to prevent inclusion in the party platform the planks favoring abortion, homosexuality and Oklahoma Sen. Fred Harris's tax reform plan and about a McGovern statement which they interpreted as a retreat on his commitment to end the war.

They wanted McGovern to come down and talk to them, and they would not submit to a security check. Security was a real problem — only hours before, two armed men had been taken into custody — but despite that, and despite the possibility of scaring off some delegates only hours before the nomination balloting by presenting an image of "bargaining with the SDS," McGovern did come down and talk.

He did not yield in his positions, but he did talk and, just as importantly, listen, and in doing so he reaffirmed his own integrity and his commitment to openly meeting his critics.

Second — McGovern made sure that the vice-presidential nomination went to a well-qualified individual. We may quarrel with the method — it would have been more in keeping with McGovern's own reforms if he had thrown the vice-presidential nomination open to the convention — but not with the result; Sen. Thomas Eagleton provides a fine complement to George McGovern.

The McGovern - Eagleton ticket is quite possibly the best in recent American politics. Eagleton is Catholic and big-city, while McGovern is Protestant and rural, but both are liberal and agree on such basic issues as the war, tax reform and openness in government. Eagleton will be a trusted lieutenant, not a cheap political hatchetman, in the McGovern administration, and, if need be, he could step into the top job without any major shifts in policy.

The ticket will have problems in the coming campaign. The convention decisively rejected the influence of labor bosses like George Meany and political bosses like Richard Daley, and their continued sulking will hurt, though probably not kill or even cripple, Democratic chances this fall.

But there is nothing preordained about Richard Nixon's return to the White House, and if McGovern continued the momentum he has built up in years of campaigning, if he continued to take his case to all the people, if his party will unite behind him, we will once again, after far too long a wait, have a president we can trust.

Silence speaks

Some East Lansing citizens initiated a peace vigil of silence from 11 a.m. to noon on Saturday and plan to continue the weekly vigin until the war in Indochina ends.

Friends hold vigil for peace

An hour of complete silence followed by friendly handshakes was the form of a Saturday peace vigil sponsored by members of the East Lansing Religious Society of Friends.

From 11 a.m. to noon, nine participants stood silently on MAC Avenue holding posters that explained the vigil was for peace.

Margery Wetmore, East Lansing resident and member of the East Lansing Friends, explained that the peace vigil, which is scheduled for every Saturday until the war in Indochina ends, "is not so much against something as it is for something — peace."

The weekly ritual will be styled after the Quaker religious service — where there is silence unless someone is moved to speak — except the vigil will be performed with no one speaking.

The peace testimony of the Religious Society of Friends states in part:

"We utterly deny all outward wars and strife . . . (Quakers to Charles II, 1660).

Area and campus peace groups were invited by the Friends to participate in the vigil.

Sam Wetmore, East Lansing doctoral student, said he was satisfied with the turnout for the vigil because the plan had originated with just he and his wife, Margery.

He believes that standing along the street will be beneficial to the peace cause because passersby will take notice and possibly join the vigil in the future.

In May, the Wetmores attended the Quaker Witness Against the War in Washington, D.C. Along with approximately 2,000 other participants, the Wetmores stood silently for five and one-half hours urging peace in Indochina. So, the Wetmores and some other Friends decided, if the silent peace vigil can be done on a large scale in Washington, it can be done in East Lansing.

AT MIAMI CONVENTION

Youth center had small role

By RICK WILBINS
State News Staff Writer

The Youth Convention Center in the Miami Beach Auditorium was closed Friday for the first time in six days. The orange juice dispenser was empty, tables once full of literature were cleared off and folded up, and Glen Stover was able to relax, at last.

"We (the youth center) weren't able to play as big a role in the convention as I had planned," Stover, a Florida Democratic party member and first-year law student, said. "We had set this place up to handle several hundred kids at a time, but people barely trickled in."

Stover explained that the center was initially planned in January and was funded jointly by the Democratic National Committee and the Florida Host Committee. He said he had dropped out of law school in the spring to help organize the center.

"Part of the reason we didn't do as much," Stover said, "was because the city and some candidate groups were offering the same services at Flamingo Park (where the demonstrators were staying.)

"When we first organized the center, these people had no place to stay yet and no group had indicated they would be offering any services to help them out.

"Then when the demonstrators were given Flamingo Park and all sorts of organization began offering medical aid and free food, we lost some of our usefulness."

Stover refused to concede that the center had been a lost cause, however.

"Sure, it wasn't packed in here all the time, but we had a staff of 24 volunteers constantly working," he explained.

"It was important that we had this place available, regardless of how many people used it," he added. "If a lot of young people had come to Miami Beach and needed a place like this and we didn't have it, people would have been yelling and asking us why we weren't doing something."

Stover said the young people used the center primarily as a resting place and information center.

"They came in to use the bathrooms, get some orange juice, or a cheap chicken dinner (85 cents), rap with the groups who had literature here, or just to get information on where to go and how to get there."

Stover said that the center had sent 240 cartons of orange juice to SDS and Yippie protesters Wednesday night when they staged a sit-in at the Doral Hotel, where Sen. George McGovern was staying.

Stover, who by now was tending to "bureaucratic stuff," like finding out who left his extension cord here and when they're going to disconnect the phones," said the experience had been an interesting one for him, even though he was disappointed that the center hadn't been used more often.

Common Mart officials meet; international money plan seen

LONDON (AP) — The danger of a worsening dollar crisis takes center stage today at a meeting of finance ministers from the 10 countries of the new Common Market, called to help frame a long-term international money system.

The ministers are meeting for two days at Lancaster House, near Buckingham Palace. Anthony Barber, the chancellor of the exchequer, has been pushing a plan to lessen the importance of the dollar as a world reserve currency.

He wants to replace it gradually with "paper gold," the Special Drawing Rights, or SDRs, on the International Monetary Fund (IMF) which are controlled by international record.

Barber also wants to make it easier to have small changes from time to time in the agreed value of any currency. They could help make the big international monetary crisis a thing of the past. He has won considerable support for his ideas in the United States as well as Europe. But ministers cannot even start on the way to practical adoption until the annual IMF meeting in September.

The kind of crisis his plan seeks to prevent could come this week, however. Last Thursday and Friday, West European governments spent the equivalent of $2½ billion buying up unwanted U.S. currency. They were keeping the promise they made at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington last December to support the market for dollars whenever their value threatened to drop below an agreed floor.

Britain opted out of the arrangement last month, letting its pound sterling float so that the value of the dollar in terms of pounds is determined by the open market. There are persistent reports that other European countries are planning similar moves, despite a denial from President Karl Klausen of the West German Bundesbank.

Much may depend on how many dollars the Bundesbank has to buy today to keep above the price of 3.15 marks to a dollar.

help the people, Chamberlain proudly maintained.

Other achievements, however, overshadow this in the incumbent's eyes. Singlehandedly, Chamberlain said, he convinced the army to change its lubricant for the M-16 rifle. He said the original lubricant's sole merit was its ability to lubricate at 60 degrees below zero, which is not much of an asset in Vietnam. The new lubricant has proven effective in many years of combat, Chamberlain said.

"That saved lives!" he exclaimed. "The average guy didn't want to go over there, and then the Army says 'here,' and hands him a rusted gun."

But his proudest achievement is putting the clamps on free world shipping to North Vietnamese ports. Pulling a small card from his pocket, he showed how free world shipping has dropped from 401 ships a year in 1964 to 63 in 1971. He frankly admitted he didn't know all the goods free world countries were shipping, but he was convinced it saved numerous American lives despite the fact that overall shipping dropped negligibly during that period.

"I make no apologies," he reflected. "I've done my part. I don't want war, I have an 18-year-old son."

Chamberlain is presently opposed to amnesty, but he said he will accept it at the right time. He didn't specify when that would be but hinted that at the war's end

"amnesty will no doubt be granted to those who pursued other courses of action."

Chamberlain described himself ideologically as "middle of the road," whose thinking on issues is frequently similar to the President.

"I'm not a flaming liberal, but I would resent anyone characterizing me as ultra-right-wing," he commented.

He denies charges that he maintains an alliance with big business though he has supported much big business legislation. Most notable of these are his pro automobile, oil and defense industry stands.

He has for years advocated the removal of the 10 per cent federal excise tax on new cars.

His vote for the SST has been criticized by his opponents, but Chamberlain said that any environmental questions were answered to his satisfaction.

Defending his oil depletion allowance support, Chamberlain said the 22 1/2 per cent tax rebate oil companies are getting is necessary in view of the energy crisis.

"This is no time to discourage exploration for oil, which costs a lot of money," he said.

Chamberlain said he supports research into other forms of energy but quickly added: "There is no sense cutting off your arm until you have something better."

He charged that the Democrats are responsible for the failure of congressional reform, but blamed bipartisan apathy for failure of a bill he introduced which would require congressmen to step down from committee chairmanships after they turned 65.

"Chairmanships are not jobs for 80-year-old men," he says.

Chamberlain will be facing his first primary opposition in August since he was first elected in 1966. GOP candidates opposing him are state Rep. Jim Brown of Okemos, and Glen Miller of Brighton.

Shootings, mine kill 5 persons in Ulster

Roman Catholics of the area prepared to evacuate their houses after the British army refused to withdraw all its troops from points occupied Thursday.

The evacuation will affect about 5,000 persons and will present authorities a crisis situation. At the same time it would clear the area for battle.

The area affected is a modern housing development where the IRA's 13-day cease-fire broke down a week ago in a row over housing allocations.

In the British view, the IRA has pushed ahead with the walkout plan in an attempt to force out the British and achieve total domination of an area which contains thousands of Protestants.

Throughout the day all except essential traffic was sealed out of downtown Belfast in a bid to beat the car bombers who in the past week alone have caused damage estimated at nearly $5 million. Targets during the night included a railway station at Portadown, 20 miles from Belfast, a hotel at Cookstown on the shores of Lough Neagh, and the town center of Kirea, county Londonderry.

Sunday morning guerrillas launched a bazooka rocket at a police post in West Belfast but it failed to explode. The rocketeers fired from a nearby cafe and escaped under covering fire from a park.

Fischer holds edge in 3rd game

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — The third game of the world chess championship adjourned Sunday night after 5 hours and 18 minutes of play with challenger Bobby Fischer apparently holding the edge.

The Rev. William Lombardy, Fischer's second and an American grandmaster, said Soviet titleholder Boris Spassky was "in a bad position. He's a pawn down."

Spassky had five pawns at adjournment, Fischer six.

Each retained a queen and a bishop in addition to his king. The game will be resumed Monday.

The American challenger never has beaten Spassky. Before this match he had lost three games to the Russian playing black and drawn two when he played white and had the first move. He lost the opening game of the championship playing black, as he is in the third game.

Fischer forfeited the second game by failing to appear, and Spassky leads the match 2-0.

Chief Referee Lothar Schmid of West Germany stopped play after Spassky had made his 41st move and Fischer had handed in his reply move in a sealed envelope.

The game was played in the small private room backstage, because of Fischer's objections to the presence of TV and movie cameras and their crews in the main auditorium.

Fischer had also demanding removal of the forfeit awarded to Spassky on Thursday, when the American did not show up because of the camera issue.

Spassky began the game with a queen's pawn opening, his favorite.

Fischer replied with knight to king's bishop three.

Spassky continued by advancing his queen's bishop's pawn to the fourth rank and Fischer made pawn to king's three.

After Spassky's third move — knight to king's bishop three — Fischer made pawn to queen's bishop four.

The game was beginning along the lines of an opening called the Nimzo-Indian, the line of play in their first game, when Spassky was also playing white. Spassky won that game.

As at a silent movie, the several hundred spectators in the 2,500-seat sports palace watched Fischer gesticulate to the referee, apparently complaining about something. There was no sound from the back room.

The referee disappeared from the screen. Fischer fidgeted. He pivoted on his swivel chair, covered his face with his hands then one by one straightened the 16 black chess men before him, starting with his king's rook. The audience laughed out loud.

After a few minutes, Schmid came onto the empty stage and said he felt obliged to "explain a strange situation."

"There is a match for the world championship but there are no chess players here," Schmid said — meaning in the outer room.

"Bobby Fischer protested against certain conditions. He feels disturbed for several reasons."

The referee said that according to Rule 21 the organizers guarantee players against disturbance. If one complains, he can demand that the game be moved to a closed room.

"I took the responsibility to move the game just for today," Schmid said. "I made the decision just to save the match."

In the back room the game went on and by the fifth move the line of play had switched into what chess experts called the Modern Benoni defense.

IN CINCINNATI HEARING

Court to hear busing appeal

DETROIT (UPI) — The latest court action in the Detroit school desegregation case prevents the Detroit Board of Education from ordering any buses for use in a cross-district racial busing program until at least today.

The U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati, Ohio, Thursday issued a temporary stay of an order by U.S. District Judge Stephen Roth that 295 buses be purchased this week for use in September.

The buses would be used in an integration program involving Detroit's largely black schools with those of 52 nearly all-white suburban school districts.

The temporary stay remains in effect until at least today when a three-judge panel of the appellate court will hear arguments by the state of Michigan.

In Lansing, both Gov. Milliken and Atty. Gen. Frank J. Kelley lauded the court for recognizing "the urgency and importance of the matter."

"I am hopeful that after consideration today, the appeals court will grant a permanent stay while the basic issues in the case are being reviewed," Milliken said.

In Detroit, the school board met but did not take any action on purchasing buses. A spokesman said the board would continue the process of preparing the purchase of the buses, but would wait until the outcome of today's 1:30 p.m. hearing.

In another development, 33 of the 52 suburban school districts that would be involved in the metropolitan busing program filed concurrent appeals in Cincinnati. They also filed separate appeals in Detroit based on a congressional moratorium on busing that was enacted as part of the recently passed Higher Education Act.
