Gov. Milliken will recommend that approximately $78.1 million be appropriated to MSU, including $500,000 for the University law school, in his 1973-74 budget address to the legislature this morning, the State News learned Thursday.

He will also recommend that $6.5 million be given to the Agricultural Experiment Station and $5.7 million to the Cooperative Extension Service.

The expected allocations represent a $7.3 million increase for the campus programs, a $400,000 increase for the Agricultural Experiment Station and a recommendations assume the $500,000 increase for the Cooperative Extension Service over the 1972-73 allocations.

The increases are less than half of the original requests for additional support made by the University last fall. Apparently, the administration requested financial increases totaling approximately $16 million.

Despite the increases over last year's allocations, several University officials have indicated that MSU will be unable to finance its basic campus activities without making changes and readjustments in the internal budgets.

University officials also expressed regret that the budget

University can again raise out-of-state students' tuition to make up the difference denied. The officials claim this is a foolish assumption in light of the nation wide tendency for the courts to order out-state tuition differences be eased.

The $500,000 allocation for the law school is over $300,000 less than what the University had requested. Provost John Cantlon said earlier this week that should the governor approve the law school funding, it can begin enrollment and operation in January 1974.

Milliken's proposals also include approximately $7.5 million for the medical programs, a $1.6 million increase over last year's appropriations of approximately $5.9

The separate increases for each medical school were not known, but it is believed that the College of Human Medicine will receive approximately $200,000 less than it requested and approximately $250,000 to 300,000 will be cut from the request made for the College of Osteopathic Medicine. Asked why the American prisoners are not being released immediately if an agreement has been concluded, one official replied: "What makes you think the other side had any intention of doing anything until the last minute?"

In Washington, the Defense Dept. announced that no charges will be cated the release will come filed against the returning prisoners for making propaganda statements over North Vietnamese radio. But Pentagon spokesman Jerry W.

Friedheim did not rule out disciplinary action against POWs for "ratting on comrades" or stealing food from fellow prisoners.

It is known that the returning POWs will be questioned extensively about what went on in the POW camp. The debriefing, designed in large part to shed light on the fate of more than 1,300 Americans still unaccounted for, could well produce information on which to base charges.

However, high - ranking Pentagon lawyers refused to answer any questions about possible legal moves against returning POWs who may be suspected of misdeeds while in captivity.

The only POW known to face an investigation upon his return is Marine Pvt. Frederick L. Elbert Jr., who was listed as a deserter prior to his turning up on Hanoi's list of prisoners to be released. The Marine Corps says he will be carried as a deserter until an investigation is held to determine circumstances under which he disappeared and fell into enemy hands.

Many of the patients at the Inghan County Extended Care Facility in Okemos will have to go somewhere else to get the long term care they need if the county commission follows the recommendations of a not yet released study. The study suggests the county abandon its care program there and develop a similar program at another facility.

Extended care facility will close if county adopts study proposal

By LINDA SANDEL State New Staff Writer

About 185 disabled and elderly patients at the Ingham County Extended Care Facility, may have to find other facilities to obtain the special care they need if the county commission approves recommendations made in a not - yet released study for the county Dept. of Social Services. The study by Danielson, Schultz and Co. of Lansing concludes that the home care facility as presently cannot meet operated federal standards for care of the elderly by the 1975 deadline.

The study, which was completed in June, 1972, urges the county to close down the present facility and encourages the county to seek other facilities to provide an extended care persons suffering from prolonged illness or disability.

"The county subsidization of the related stories and pictures on page 18. Ingham County Medical Care Facility prompted by the approach of the can be justified at the present time because of the absence of other facilities to provide this care," the study states. "On Jan. 1, 1975, the physical plant standards for Nursing Homes will be in effect, however."

"It is very unlikely that the Ingham County Medical Care Facility will be able to maintain certification and The home, located on Dobie Road licensure as an extended care facility in Okemos, provides long term medical and skilled nursing facility without care for the county's elderly and other making substantial investments in buildings and furnishings beyond this Certification depends on the facility's compliance with federal regulations set in 1960.

"Until 1975, facilities of this type run by state or municipal governments are exempt from such rules on the grounds that most of them were built years before legislation setting the requirements was passed," said Jud Werbelow, chairman of the Ingham County Board of Social Services charged with running the facility.

"A clause allowing the existing operations time to meet new standards was written into the updated regulations," Werbelow "Pressure is mounting as we get close to the deadline and we have to start thinking in terms of closing construction or relocation."

Recommendations that the facilities close have been forwarded to the commissioners and administrators in social services, David Hollister, chairman of the county board of commissioners, said. "We will be meeting in the near future to decide what direction Ingham County's Extended Care Facility will take," he added.

Upon reaching a decision the county plans to release the study to the public.

Hollister said that some alternative other than completely discontinuing extended care must be found.

The study suggests that if the facilities' operation is closed down, the •Make only those investments in buildings necessary for continuing patient safety;

•Make no equipment or furnishing acquisitions except to meet short range needs:

•Make every effort to reduce operating costs in keeping with the maximum two - and - one - half year future of the present programs;

Congress votes to end strike

Striking trainmen shut down the Penn Central railroad Thursday in an attempt to prevent the nation's third largest railroad from reducing train crews. But Congress moved swiftly, voting to halt the strike for 90 days.

A resolution to halt the strike was passed by the Senate and sent to the House, which accepted it in amended form. It was then returned to the Senate, which approved it and sent it to President Nixon.

The strike affected thousands of passengers in 16 states and threatened to curtail production in the auto and steel industries.

His ruling forbids the government prosecutor from presenting evidence which would show possible damage to national security from release of one volume of the Pentagon Papers in evidence.

PROPOSED CENSURE PLAN Policy held from prof

By BECKIE HANES DANIEL DEVER State News Staff Writers

Bob Repas, professor of and industrial relations, the one faculty member on campus who has had the most experience in the area of censure, has been denied the right to see a proposed censure policy that will come before Academic Council in March.

Repas has been the catalyst in developing a censure policy since he was censured by the Academic Council in November 1971, for his activity in the release of the faculty salary list.

In May, 1972, he introduced a request which was passed by the Academic Senate instructing the council to develop a censure

The council sent the request to the Academic Governance Committee developed and approved such a policy last week. The policy now rests in the Steering Committee until the next Academic Council meeting in March.

The catch is that both the chairmen of the Steering and Academic Governance Committees refused to release a copy of the proposed censure policy to Repas Thursday, yet a copy was readily obtained by the State News last week.

Repas said Thursday that it is impossible for faculty members to express their opinions on the policy or suggest changes to council members in the eight - day span between when the proposed policy is released the Steering from Committee and when it comes before the Academic Council for a final decision. "The Governance

Committee meeting was open and Repas could have attended and even spoken at the meeting," Melvin C. Buschman, chairman of the governance committee, said Thursday. Copies of the proposed policy available to people attending the open committee meeting Feb. 1. Buschman added that it was between Repas and James T. Bonnen, chairman of the Steering Committee, as to whether Repas would receive a copy of the proposed censure policy.

"Until it (the proposed policy) is acted upon, it is not a public document," Bonnen said

The proposed policy defines censure by the as "a stern statement of disapproval" and also includes a set of procedures by which the individual being censured would have the opportunity not circulating committees' documents before they come before the council, Bonnen said. "This is just another example of the secrecy at this University," Repas said.

Implied powers kill funds

(C) 1973 NEW YORK TIMES NEWS SERVICE

In the political and constitutional struggle now developing between Congress and President Nixon on the question of his right to refuse to spend appropriated funds, the danger is that the President is largely right on the issue and may therefore seem to be right on the principle.

The issue is not to be downgraded. Holding down prices and taxes is one of Nixon's aims in reducing the rise in Federal spending; there may be other ways to achieve that aim but few will dispute its importance.

Nixon is right, moreover, in contending that Congress has no functioning machinery, and has never displayed the willpower or political courage, to set and keep an economically sensible spending ceiling much less to balance spending priorities within such an over - all limit. Presidents have been doing the budgetary job mostly from necessity, not in an egregious usurpation of congressional power.

Congress, moreover, has often been the offender rather than the offended. If, for example, a president were impounding money appropriated to double the size of the Air Force to build a full - scale ABM system, some now criticizing Nixon would be backing him to the hilt. In fact, congressional excess on military spending in the past years was a major reason why presidential impoundments came to be more frequent. It is one thing, however, for a president to act essentially defensively against a specific congressional policy he thinks unwise, particularly in the case of an item appropriation he could not veto without vetoing an entire appropriations bill - and even in that limited case his constitutional authority seems never to have been fully tested. It is quite another thing for a president to use the impoundment of appropriated funds offensively or aggressively - as Nixon now is doing - to change the whole direction of government and to nullify legally legislated policies without resort to accepted constitutional practice.

Agriculture Secretary Butz, for example, has announced that all appropriated funds for the Rural Environmental Assistance Program have been impounded and the program terminated. He and Nixon no doubt have what they consider good reasons to kill this program; but accepted practice heretofore would have been for Nixon to ask Congress to repeal it, or to appropriate no more funds. Has he the right, not before claimed, to end by executive fiat a ligislative policy, either because it would be more efficient to do it that way or because Congress might refuse to do as he recommended? The administration seems to be arguing that the impoundment power is implied in the president's duty to "take care that the laws be faithfully executed" - a strange claim from a "strict constructionist" President. In political fact, however, Nixon is resting his case on public necessity, which is no doubt considerable, but which is also a dangerous doctrine to invoke in constitutional matters.

At a recent news conference, for example, Nixon said he had an "absolutely clear" constitutional right to impound appropriated funds when their expenditure would cause a rise in prices or taxes. Whether the right is all that clear; is questioned by many; but if it exists it can't be ascribed to a nonexistent constitutional duty falling on the president to hold down either prices or taxes. This is a momentary public necessity which is being adduced to justify an expansion of the President's constitutional limits.

Again, in the case of the Water Pollution Control Act, Nixon refused to allocate to the states $6 billion authorized by Congress. Ronald Ziegler and the Budget Bureau have pointed out that funds to meet the have authorization not been appropriated, technically been impounded. But w happened goes bey impoundment because, having veto the original bill and lost, Nixon had the chance to fight in Cone against the actual appropriation funds this year.

Fearing he would lose again, Ni refused even to allocate authorization among the sta although doing so would not he involved spending a dime, and would later have had the opportuni to reduce or refuse state requests any funds that might ultimately appropriated. That is how "implied" power to impound fu can become the "implied" power set aside legislative enactment. effect overriding Congress's overrid of the veto. It is the same inside process by which implied powers in work toward the President at home.

POINT OF VIEW

Greeks avoid coalition

By DAVE WESTOL President, Interfraternity Council

I felt it necessary to reply to the article on the proposed ASMSU "takeover" featured in the State News Jan. 29, not only in reference to some of the facts and quotes but to the philosophy of one Dana Braden as well. To begin with, the idea of a coalition of the Greeks and the Coalition for Responsible Action may look good on paper - but that's the only place. There are four Greek individuals on ASMSU, and if some in

- depth reporting would have been done it would have revealed that these times as they have been cast together. This may be attributed to a lack of business which directly affects the Greek system, but it also points out that we vote as representatives of colleges or major governing groups, and not as a bloc.

four votes have been split up as many

Two of my officers attended the Tuesday meeting. Unfortunately, I had a prior committment with ASMSU. Apparently I missed quite a dynamic gathering. After talking with one of the Interfraternity Council (IFC) exec members who attended, who was not impressed with the coalition, I wasn't particularily bummed that I couldn't make it. However, the "informed sources" have somehow made a decision for me and publicized it.

A coalition, regardless of makeup, would make ASMSU into a bigger rubber stamp. I would rather have the present makeup, and argue for two or three hours every week - I'm speaking of healthy debate and not petty bickering - than belong to a remote control body that doles out monies to the "right" people according to what the "coalition" says. ASMSU has much room for improvment, which will have to come from leadership and student interaction. Hopefully, the round 'n'round arguments that often characterize meetings are genuine differences of opinion by people who represent their individual colleges or groups.

I don't know who is talking coalition, but it ain't me, babe. IFC has one seat and one vote, and that's me, and I will continue to vote for the 1,100 Greek men I represent, and not the coalition or anybody else. If there is a "gentlemen's agreement," it exists in Braden's imagination. It takes two to coalition, and I wish to point out to Braden and John Lindstrom that my approval, and just as importantly my vote, are not represented.

IFC is pushing for more Greek representation on ASMSU. So is the coalition which is fine. If they can organize and work hard enough to gain a controlling vote, then they've earned that control, and will perhaps wake up some of the apathetic student vote in the process. If Greek and the coalition representatives vote the same way, that's fine too, but based on past experience this would be due to agreement of opinion rather than the continue to vote as they, and no result of a bloc vote. Several of the people whom Braden would like to believe, see replaced voted for hist to Washington — not out of politi sympathy but from a sense of fain following allocation of funds to Student Mobilization Committee.

I don't like to be typecast a moderate - conservative, and I do like reading that my vote has be confiscated by a "coalition especially when I told both part involved that I wasn't interested involved.

Anyway, Braden, can you imag what life would be like if we were moderate - conservative? Every kid the block would be wearing a les Maddox wristwatch, Spiro A would be arrested for defense of f speech and inciting to riot, and spend every Tuesday evening trying decide whether wing - tips or per loafers would go better with the flannel suit I wear to ASM meetings, and if a snap . on tie

While Lincoln was certainly not the infallible and totally noble figure that popular idolatry has made him, one still hesitates to rank Nixon with him. Nixon's consistent disregard of ethical principles, his preoccupation with appearance over substance, his contempt for constitutional principles, and his instinctive playing to the worst fears of the electorate hardly make him one of the great presidents.

If Lincoln exemplified what the Republican party could be in the 19th centtury, Nixon demonstrates what it has become today.

I do not think that we need to contemplate chiseling President Nixon's features into Mt. Rushmore because Lincoln's father was a farmer and Nixon's a gasoline pumper. When history does evaluate Nixon, I hope the job will be done more competently than Chris Danielson did in his article.

To the Editor:

As a staff member, I pay $18a for the privilege of parking on cam This money, I am told, is to pay the maintenance of the parking and roads. But Lot B sure does seem to receive any attention.

During the Christmas break aft major snow storm, this lot was cleared at all and turned to ice. M cars driving through to exit Grand River would get stuck in holes in the road and could not m thus jamming up traffic.

This lot is used as an entrance exit for cars that do not park in lot. Something (gates?) should be about this as it is a hazard for wanting to move into and out parking spaces.

This lot has not been resurface at least four years and no lines been painted to indicate par spaces for two years.

Where is my money going? I am supposed to have one hour lunch but I do not dare move my as no space will be available parking if I leave for just 30 minu The spaces are taken up with cars graduate stickers (which cost less faculty / staff stickers) or cars with stickers at all.

Animals

Speaking of 'Shield Laws'

This letter is in response to Ronald B. Beckwith, kennelman for the Ingham County Humane Society. He was quoted in last Friday's State News as saying, "Putting a germ, disease or virus in the animals is wrong. ... Why infect an animal just to test drugs and serums?" He disagrees with the whole concept of using animals for research, maintaining that animals are similar to people and should be treated with kindness.

Well, I personally disagree with Beckwith's whole concept! If animals are not used to test these new vaccines, serums, and drugs, what is going to be used — stuffed pillows?

It may surprise Beckwith to know that the majority of research animals are fed better, live in cleaner, more comfortable environments and are treated much kinder than many "much loved pets" in the average American household!

Beckwith is certainly entitled to his own personal opinion, but perhaps he should find out a few other opinions on the subject. Let him ask the mother who has just found out her child is dying of leukemia, the man who has to tell his family he is in the early stages of cancer, the person who has a rare bone disease - why not ask them if we should stop testing these new vaccines and drugs on animals? Doesn't he realize how many people would be crippled or dead today if the polio vaccine hadn't been researched and tested on these animals years ago?

Beckwith is to be commended for his compassionate interest in these animals, but perhaps he should extend this feeling to all animals - and include the human animal.

Antisocial

To the Editor:

I am writing in regard to an article published in the State News Feb. I concerning the so called "anti social" behavior exhibited by some of our fraternities on campus. I am prompted to write this letter, not because I wish to show any justification for these pranks, but only to crititicize the obvious one-sidedness of the article.

To illustrate this bias, one need only look as far as the nearest dorm. Since when, may I ask, have these pranks been confined only to the Greeks. It is foolish and absurd to criticize the fraternities when the exact same things occur daily in residence hall complexes. It might be an interesting experience for the author to take a Saturday morning stoll through a residence hall after a Friday night kegger; windows broken, walls permanently marred and wall paper torn, lounge furniture destroyed, ceilings in the elevator lobbies knocked out, the list is endless. And as for pulling fire alarms, I

Now, if my story was indeed nothing but lies and fabrications then they are lies and fabrications Braden dreamed up. The public should know, who supported his activities and I defy Braden to deny it, that he telephoned me after the story was Every fact I wrote in that story was exactly as I got it from Braden and my other confidential sources in the Coalition for Responsible Action.

Braden called the Coalition for Responsible Action - Interfraternity Council coalition a "gentleman's agreement," not I. Now what will happen in the spring election is anyone's guess, but it should be interesting to know that Braden told me that the Coalition for Responsible Action might want "Jim Adams" to run for the College of Communications representative.

Braden says in his point of view that sought to hind the Coalition for Responsible Actic aims. I do not. If the student boo wants to elect conservatives and Greeks into office, then let them. It doesn't matter to me who is elected by the people, but it does concern me that the people at least know who they are electing. To push a conservative - Greek machine, or any other political machine, into office with full knowledge of the people is one thing. To try to hide it from the people is quite another.

Just one more thing. Along with calling my story lies and fabrications Braden also called it a fantasy. I would suggest that the only fantasy involved in this issue is Braden's fantasy about there being a conservative - moderate majority of students on campus.

"Adams," or Lindstrom, further continued his fraud by stating he was a conservative - moderate who wanted to help out. At that point, I told this State News writer that he might help by working for the two Coalition for Responsible Action candidates in the Jan. 31 special election. I also told him two Greeks were running in this special election, and that many Greeks (excluding Ed Grafton) agree with the moderate platform of the coalition. Finally, I told Lindstrom that I expected the Greeks to continue to take an active interest in student such as blood drives. But Lindstrom's other allegations concerning the coalition are solely the products of his fertile imagination. Let me mention a few of the blatant lies that Lindstrom passed on to the students in a deliberate attempt to discredit the moderate coalition and the Greeks.

SN staffer accused of fraud

First, Lindstrom stated that there is "gentleman's agreement" between the Interfraternity Council and the coalition, that they will work together on the ASMSU elections and on board politics. No such agreement is or ever has been made. The coalition exists on campus in order to let the moderate majority of students have a voice in students affairs. The coalition represents moderate students of all majors, races and party affiliations who want: 1) a responsible fiscal policy for ASMSU, 2) allocation of ASMSU funds for activities that will benefit all students and not for partisan and special interest groups, 3) a registration check off policy for the ASMSU tax, 4) increased communication between the ASMSU board and the student body and 5) a moderate voice in student affairs that emphasizes fair and equal dealings with all students and student groups. These goals of the coalition would be jeopardized by an alliance or 'gentleman's agreement" with any student organization and would be inconsistent with our philosophy of representing the moderate majority of students.

In an effort to hinder our aims Lindstrom has attempted to scare MSU students into thinking that the extremes in his conspiracy allegations themselves.

by first implicating Dave Westol, Interfraternity Council president, in the fictitious conspiracy. Those students who have met Westol know that he is a fair and intelligent person who would not jeopardize the Greek system by involving the Greeks in any shady deals.

Also, Lindstrom implies that Wayne Rodgers was elected to represent the College of Agriculture by simply being written in by his fraternity brothers. This is so far from the truth that Lindstrom must have been really high when he dreamed this one up. There elections as they have in social causes are so many non - fraternity agriculture majors who voted that it would have been impossible for Rodgers to have won without these non - Greeks voting for him.

> Now we should ask the question why the State News editors allow such garbage to be printed and allow their reporters to fraudulently obtain news stories. First let us be clear on one thing: that the campus editor and editor in chief, John Borger, were both informed of the immoral, fraudulent action by their agent, Lindstrom. It would be wise for MSU students to remember when reading State News stories what John Borger told me, "There isn't any code of ethics." For the protection of innocent people there should be a code of ethics barring lying and fraud by the State News. Otherwise, how can student groups such as the Greeks, ASMSU and the coalition obtain a fair public

I have tried to point out in this letter the lies that were the basis for Lindstrom's "expose" as well as clarify the coalition platform. But finally, we as moderate students should recognize the dangerous monopoly of view that the State News represents. Lindstrom and the people responsible for printing his garbage are deliberately attempting to slur the Greeks and the coalition by trying to deceive MSU students into believing that subversive elements are at work trying to take over ASMSU. Their tactics, which included lying, subversion and fabrications, far exceed the bounds of responsible journalism. The State News had better wake up to coalition and the Greeks will take over the fact that the students at MSU wish the ASMSU board if students don't the State News would confine its vote against the moderate candidates. opinions to the editorial page and Lindstrom went to even further would keep their fantasizing to

Female drinking cited

By LAURA MILLER State News Staff Writer The problem of alcoholism among women is receiving increasing recognition in recent years, because the female drinker is becoming more socially visible, Anne Garrison, professor of business law, said Wednesday. In the past, it was socially unacceptable for a woman to admit being an alcoholic, Garrison said at the fifth discussion on "What Every Woman Needs to Know.' They were able to hide a drinking problem and were less likely to be sent for help because many drank during the day when their husbands were at work, she

Today, women can more easily admit a drinking problem and seek treatment, she said, because society does not regard female drinkers negatively.

Garrison noted wives of blue - collar workers are less likely to have problems than upper middle - class women. Blue - collar women are told they are not ladies if they

Attorney seeks closer ties

By MIKE GALATOLA

Citizens should know just what those empowered to enforce the law actually do, the U.S. attorney for western Michigan federal district said Wednesday night.

Addressing the MSU Pre-Law Club in Eppley Center, John Malinowski emphasized the lack of contact he senses between a U.S. attorney and the people he serves.

"I've been in this post for nearly four years yet, I've never been invited to speak Malinowski, who was appointed to the office of Federal District Attorney in 1969 by President Nixon, felt the public should keep a careful eye on those participating in the judicial process.

"The electorate should be looking over my shoulder and the shoulders of the judges," he said. "The citizens should have a rap session with a judge - ask form and space with two opposing yet complementary elements. The first of these creates a vertical, angular motive. The second, a horizontal, circular motive.

The first, consisting of straight, rectilinear forms, strives toward a rigidity and compactness. Offsetting this solidity is the horizontal element, made of crescent shapes that peel outward from one another.

The dialog between opposing elements in the series is complete in itself. Since they have no tactile sense and nothing we can readily identify, the viewer cannot involve himself in their self - sufficient interaction. Saving some of the works from their own isolation and detachment from the viewing audience is yet another dimension.

supershiny chrome steel as a backdrop in many of the table sculptures. In one such piece, "No. 3," each striving are and stabilizing vertical member is echoed on the chrome surface.

This surface adds much more visual interest through the play of light and reflection with the elements in the work. In addition, the viewer's reflection is intermingled with that of the sculpture itself from different viewing points. Thus, the viewer is invited into the dialogue between elements in the work.

As a whole, Leiserowitz' Suite XVI series represents a satisfying group of works. They prove that pure abstraction can involve the viewer, while evoking nothing beyond their own interplay of form and space.

PLAY LACKS VITALITY

'Lily' tries, and fails

By EDD RUDZATS State News Reviewer

"Tempted, Tried, and True" is the subtitle of "Lily, The Felon's Daughter,'' the old-fashioned melodrama which opened at the Okemos Barn Theater last week. "Tempted, Tried, and Found Wanting" would be a more appropriate title, for the Community Circle Players' production is never really true to the genre within which it is working. The actors underplay,, and are unable to capture the style of melodrama. The entire production moves along with the speed of a

Festival to show films on social ills

By BILL MECHANIC State News Reviewer

Films of social consciousness, attempting to inform as well as entertain, highlight the Movement Media Festival being held at 7 p.m. Friday and Saturday in 111 Olds

The films, ranging in scope from an animated look at expanded awareness to an in - depth analysis of the problems perpetuating Applachian poverty, kindle almost as wide a range of emotions.

The film on Appalachia, "Pike County - Rich Land, Poor People," contrasts the plight of the people with the bureaucratic "attempts" at alleviating the problems.

A family is shown digging coal out of a mountain side in order to heat their small shack, while a company executive claims that "poverty is a state of England. "Slayed?," the second album from Slade, came out on Polydor, and London records released another double fold of John

Mayall material entitled "Down the Line."

Those foolish enough to read "Billboard" have seen all the ads bought for the in the states. Those who are even more foolish and believe what they read in "Billboard," would think that Slade is the hottest thing to come out of England since the original "Fab Four." Their music is actually loud, pretentious, and bad. It is the latest in the wave of monotonous music with a heavy bass line and screaming vocals that have been steadily streaming across the ocean since Led Zeppelin made their first millions. The closest thing they can be compared to is Humble Pie. Actually they are a rather mediocre imitation of Humble Pie, and a band which is a mediocre imitation of a mediocre band is truly a sad affair. It is nearly impossible to the album since they are all so nondescript, each sounding like the others. Every one has the same overriding, boring bass line, dull drum work, the same guitarists trading off unimpressive "look at me" riffs, the irritating echo chambered vocals and lyrics which sound like they were their original music - a pretty smooth album. It is incredibly boring. The two unoriginal tunes are also sad. They rape one of Joplin's finest songs, "Move Over," in a manner which is too painful to speak of. They ruin a rock and roll classic "Let the Good Times Roll." - a song that it did not seem possible to record badly.

There is little doubt that Slade will become a super group, following in the footsteps of Black Sabbath, Humble Pie, and their American counterpart, Grand Funk. They have all it takes - a record company willing to spend much money on promotions and a "heavy" bass line. Those who do enough downers and have speakers with a good bass response might like this album.

John Mayall has had a describe individual tracks on tremendous effect on popular music. He was one of the founders of the "British Blues" movement of the 1960s that had a great effect on rock music being recorded both in Europe and in the states. In his bands he's had personnel that later moved on to be the backbone of many of England's top groups (Mick Taylor of the stones, Jack Bruce and Eric Clapton of Cream, Peter Green and John McVie of Fleetwood Mac, to name just a few). Mayall stopped recording for London Records in 1969, just before he formed the "Turning Point" band. Since then London has been releasing old tapes he recorded while under contract to them (material they did not feel was strong enough to go on an album) or re - releasing material in various "Greatest Hits" packages - all, obviously, in an attempt to make more money.

"Down the Line" is their latest effort in this capitalistic venture, so it is very easy to approach the whole thing scornfully.

a two record set, one record is interesting in a history being a collection of better songs released on albums from 1965 - 1968, the other being a re - mix of what was originally a 1964 mono recording of Mayall at one of England's infamous blues clubs of the 60s Klook's Kleek.

The re - released record has a very good selection of material. It is a good album for people with little exposure to early Mayall to get into. For those familiar with Mayall, it is guaranteed to send one digging back through the record collection trying to find those old Bluesbreaker albums. Every track is a Mayall classic in itself, with it.

The Klook's Kleek alb perspective, which alm makes up for its recording quality. It listenable fast moving sid The songs are all typical Mayall during the r 1960s, going fre "Crocodile Walk" and ot British blues standards, rocking version of L Richard's "Lucille."

The album has someth to offer for both the time Mayall fans and newer fans. Although not an extremely str album, and does not h the list of sugges purchases, those who into the old "British Blu won't get burnt if they

There will be only individual winners, with the relays being set up without a team point system.

With the fast Tartan surface, a lot of good times should be turned in.

Last year's relay's was the site of two world record performances. Former Spartan sprint ace Herb Washington set the tide when he electrified the amazed crowd with a 5.8 clocking in the 60 yard dash for sole possession of the world mark.

MSU'S Marshall Dill, then a freshman, brought the excitement to a peak when he sped 300 yards around the track in 29.5 seconds to gain himself a world record.

Although it is doubtful that Dill will seek to defend his 300 yard dash title on Saturday, he is scheduled for a leg on the Spartan's swift mile relay squad.

Dill, coming off a muscle injury, hasn't been doing any sprint work for the past couple of weeks and intends to take it slow for a while.

big first place finish at the Seattle Invitational last week and will be gunning for Eastern Michigan's Stan Vinson, which makes for an exciting event.

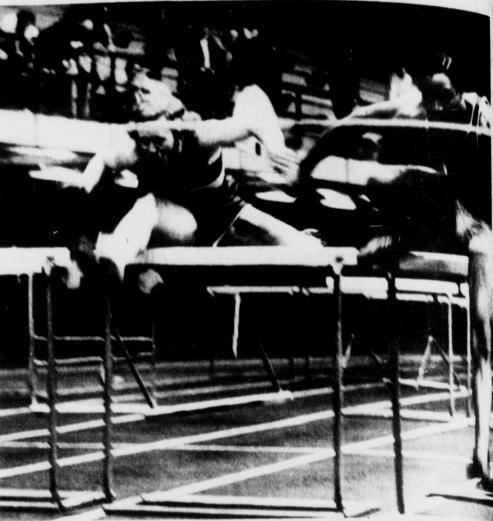

Popejoy was also impressive at the Seattle meet, turning in a 4:04.2 to capture third place.

"Many of the track stars you will see in this meet are the same runners who will be competing in the NCAA title meet in March," assistant track coach Jim Bibbs predicted.

"We have some of the country's top talent coming to our meet.

A large crowd is expected to be on hand since the basketball squad is playing away at Michigan.

MSU now stands 10 - 7 overall with just about no chance of making any post season tournament, and must now turn its thoughts to the second half of the conference season. "U - M has some excellent personnel," Ganakas said, " and they have lost some very tough games - we are not going to be able to make any mistakes against them."

Ganakas lamented the fact that his team turned the ball over so many times against Notre Dame and said his squad would have to do more, and better.

"This one pass and shoot business never works; even when we did pass we did it without thinking," he said. "We have been throwing the ball away all year and we have also been an impatient shooting team, but it seemed like we had it together against Iowa," Ganakas added.

Lack of experience plays a small factor, he said, and he offered no excuses for inconsistent play.

"We always seem to be woefully deficient in one area," he said, "it's frustrating to see it at this point in the season.'

IN TOUGH COMPETITION

Gymnasts meet Kent

By PAM WRIGHT State News Sports Writer

The women's gymnastics team has had a rough schedule of meets this season receiving little rest from one tough competitor to another. Last weekend the Spartans traveled to Pennsylvania for a meet with Clarion, a nationally ranked team. Saturday again they will face tough competition at Kent State University.

Last year in the Midwest Regional meet, consisting of teams from Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, West Virginia, Wisconsin and Ohio, Kent State took third place honors. Michigan State ended up in fourth place.

"Kent State will give us a rough time," Dana Vail, coach of the women's gymnastics team said. "We were only a few points behind them in the regionals last year, though, so we have a very good chance their competition," Vail continued. "I've been pleased with the team's performance so far this season and I'm sure we will make a good showing in this meet."

"We've been practicing hard all week for this season.

The MSU gymnasts are 5-2 for the Kent State, according to Vail, usually receives a team score in the high 80's. The Spartan record shows that they too have been scoring in the 80's.

"It will be a close and exciting meet." Vail commented. "The girls are ready for it, though and anxious to face the Kent

Vail said that she will be relying on all the gymnasts to have good performances. Due to injuries this season the Spartan team is short in many of the events and it's necessary for all the other members of the team to turn in good performances to get a high team score. MSU's gymnastics team gets its last shot at an out of conference foe this weekend when the Spartans host the Oklahoma Sooners in a dual meet at 7:30 tonight at Jenison Fieldhouse.

This will be the first meeting between the two schools. OU's record is currently 2 - 1 with its lone loss coming at the hands of defending Big Eight champ Iowa State University.

Oklahoma is led by NCAA floor exercise champ Odess Lovin, Lovin, a two time all - American, averages a score of 9.5 in his speciality. Lovin has not been beaten in his speciality since his sophomore year.

Another top performer for OU is Roger Letourneau on the parallel bars. Letourneau scored a 9.2 in compulsories last week against Kansas State.

OU coach Russ Porterfield had plenty to say about the meet with the

"MSU has an outstanding team and this meet will be our toughest to date." Porterfield said. "We've got to hit in every event to beat MSU and to try to discount the home crowd advantage.'

Despite having outstanding individual performers, the Sooners' lack of depth could be their downfall.

On paper OU's strength lies in the first four events. "Oklahoma can score 27 points in each of the first four events," MSU coach George Szypula offered. "If they have a weakness it's in the parallel bars and horizontal bar.

"OU doesn't have the depth we have in the last two events," Szypula explained. "If we stay close in score, the last two events will be the deciding factors for us."

The obvious matchup to watch will be OU's Lovin and MSU's Dave Ziegert. Ziegert has been working on his compulsories this week and hopes to spring a few surprises on OU. "I've never seen Lovin perform before, but I understand he's very good," Ziegert commented. "He must be. He's an NCAA champ."

Spartan chances have been bolstered this week with the return of vaulter Jim Tuerk. Tuerk has been out of the lineup recently with painful shin splints.

"I felt real good this week in practice," Tuerk said. "The pain is gone and my legs feel great."

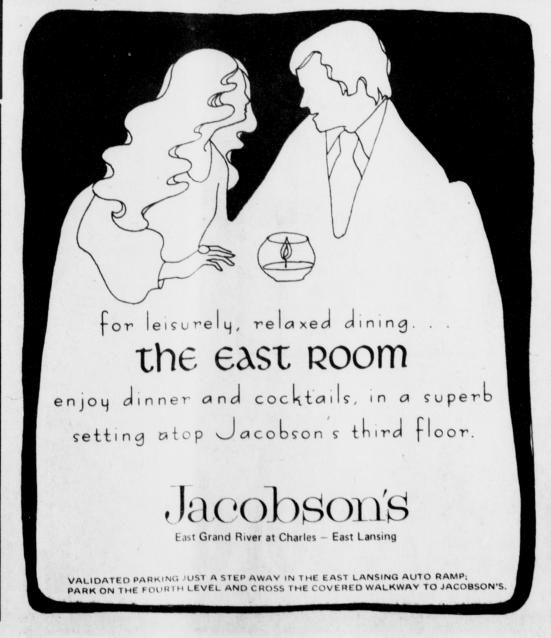

As has been the case in previous meets this year, an abundance of talent will be available for gymnastics enthusiasts.

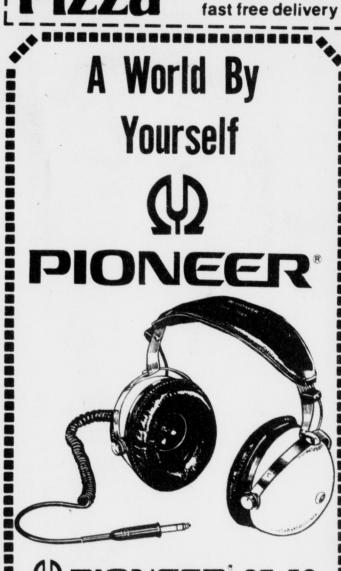

Gymnast Randy Balhorn has straightened himself out on the parallel bars, an event that kept Balhorn out of the magic 54 point circle.

"I've been working on mounting this week and I've got the problem worked out," Balhorn said.

The Wolverines strength lies in their strong individual talent. Jim Brown is at 118 and if a statistical analysis of his performances are a true indication of his talent, Spartan Randy Miller is going to have his hands, arms and legs full.

"Milt is a very unorthodox wrestler," Bay said. "That's one of his chief assets. He's a very frustrating man to wrestle. Just when you think you've got him, he comes on like an octopus and puts a stop to everything. He's all legs.'

Two - time Big Ten champion and NCAA runnerup Jerry Hubbard fills the 150 gap for the Wolverine contingent. Hubbard is 10-1 on the season and he too, tasted his lone defeat in the Midlands

"He's tough," Bay commented. "He has to be if he's only lost once. Hubbard is instrumental to our plans and in my estimation can wrestle with anyone in the country."

Those three divisions are Michigan's best and Bay comments that they'll have to take all three to keep stride with the Spartans.

And many of these corporations helping to drag Foreign exchange dealers the dollar down by their who run the world's money currency speculations are American owned. According to foreign exchange dealers here, the main problem of the past two weeks is that the speculators, including the treasures of the big international corporations, no longer trust the dollar. They believe the dollar is overvalued when compared to the German mark and the Japanses yen.

The reason for this is simple. The United States has a whopping balance of payments deficit. In 1972 it spent $81/2 billion more Part of the problem was abroad than it earned. Of this, $61/2 billion was a trade deficit. Ther Germans and the Japanese, however, both have trade surpluses. They earn more abroad than they spend. So their currencies, the speculators reason, are likely to rise every day for the past two ability to use a slide rule. speculators' view so money, often with more money than individual governments can raise.

> It may be debatable whether West Germany's mark is undervalued. What counts, however, is whether the speculators . think is. By their economic strength alone, they can put so much money into marks that they can force a revaluation upward, whether one is

There are now an estimated $70 billion on deposit in Europe by companies and individuals, the so-called Eurodollar justified or not.

This pool is the largest international money market in the European foreign exchange markets.

Government banks are pledged to support the dollar's current exchange rates by buying dollars to prop up the price. The trouble is that in many cases What makes the the speculators have more money than the state banks.

> Devaluation makes American goods cheaper abroad. American exporters, therefore, sell and earn more. Devaluation also makes imports into the United States more expensive. This, too, helps American firms by discouraging imports of foreign rivals. So devaluation actually can help American business federal funds are approved for the Lansing Police Dept.'s cadet program, e manpower will be available for public ice activities, Sgt. R. S. Foster said

Noting that statistics show criminal activ is increasing, Foster said: "public vice is of a lower priority (than criminal s), yet is very essential, so we would ne to involve the cadets in the service ented, noncriminal type of activities." Foster said that much of an officer's ne is tied up with activities like gerprinting, vehicle inspection and vice runs, which could be done by dets with training.

The first step in obtaining funds was ssed Tuesday night when the East nsing City Council authorized City Manager John Patriarche to apply for federal aid for the program. East Lansing would pay 25 per cent of the estimated $45,000 cost, Patriarche said.

The police department must also ask for authorization from Region Six of the Law Enforcement and Criminal Justice Council before it applies at the state level, Foster

The deadline for submitting the application is March 14, he said. If approval is given, Foster said, the program could begin July 1, when the department would recruit maximum of 10 men and women, between the ages of 17 and 22 to work 20 hours a week.

Foster said applications will not be accepted unless funds are approved.

Old 'Poor Farm'

Facility--bleak home for aged

By LINDA SANDEL State News Staff Writer

On an i olated 120 - acre farm on Dobie Road in Okemos stands an imposing fortress - like building known as the Ingham County Extended Care Facility.

The county is currently trying to decide what to do with that building, after a study completed in June 1972 but not yet released to the public, urged the county to shut down the extended care program there.

The study cited inadequate ventilation, insufficient space per patient, deficiences in the physical plant layout and structural damages, such as leaks in the roof as some of the major problems in the facility.

The study concluded that as a result the facility would not meet federal standards for care of the elderly by the Jan. 1, 1975 deadline.

The presence of old barns on the grounds, the aging building's facade and totally deserted fields create a bleak

To the county's elderly the care home still carries the image of the Poor Farm. From 1850 to 1921 the building was called the Poor Farm and housed the retarded, mentally ill, handicapped and totally indigent citizens.

Once inside pictures of forgotten relatives, blank walls and institutional loneliness come to mind. The atmosphere inside is equally as dismal as the outside.

A walk through the halls reveals many patients in chairs, not speaking, not sleeping, just sitting quietly or mumbling incomprehensibly.

Patients, about 80 per cent of them over 65, lie immobile in rooms barely large enough to contain hospital beds, which are carefully arranged to make the most of limited space. Some wards contain eight or nine beds leaving little room for walking space inbetween.

"We definitely have a space problem here," Robert Brown, head administrator of the facility, said. "Things are tight but the patients don't really mind. Many of them request placement in the wards, because ther's a better chance for companionship. "Usually it is the relatives who ask that the patient be in our private rooms instead of wards. For them it's a kind of social stigma.'

"We try and stress friendly activity for all of the patients," Brown continued. "Everybody's always saying that the elderly people here don't get enough social stimulation. That's just not true."

In the basement of the main building, a room is set aside for diversional therapy. Clown dolls, ceramic molds, woven rugs and brightly colored pictures decorate the pale walls and lend a certain atmosphere of friendliness to the area.

Patients often sell articles they make, including molds fired in the facility's kiln.

"Working with elderly patients in this type of activity demands a great deal of dedication," Brown said. "We've thought of implementing all kinds of programs.

"Suggestions that the patients be give garden plots to cultivate, or group projects to carry out are just not feasible given the level of invalidity we have here. Frankly, we have just about all of the activities we can handle."

Many of the old people at the home are visited regularly by students from the MSU Volunteer Bureau. About 50 volunteers spend several hours a week talking and joking with the patients, running special errands and in general trying to provide a vital link to the outside world. Volunteers also run a horticulture room for the more mobile patients who enjoy gardening and a beauty shop, which is visited frequently by enthusiastic women patients.

"Whatever the county does, it cannot dismiss its responsibility to care for these people," Brown said. "Many of the patients have no family and no other place to go.' "I would hate to see the place close because some of the

"I don't want the patients to worry about what is going to happen to them," Brown said.

For many of its elderly patients the Extended Care Facility is really the final step of human defeat. Age has left them totally unable to care for themselves. Life revolves around an occassional friendly talk with an MSU volunteer of the inevitable nap that helps sleep away the endless succession of days.

What will happen?

Robert Brown, right, head administrator of the Extended Care Facility, said he was concerned that patients at the home would have no place to turn for the care they need if the facility is closed. He said he does not want them to have to worry over what will happen to them.

By commissioners New facility for aged urged

By LINDA SANDEL State News Staff Writer

Ingham County must continue to provide extended care for the county's elderly and disabled but not at the present facility, county commision members from the East Lansing area

Commission members said however, that they were not certain what action the county could take following a conclusion reached in a study by a Lansing firm that the Ingham County Extended Care Facility should close down its current operation.

"The county cannot afford to stop providing extended care for the people who need that particular type of service," Richard Conlin, D - 10th District, said. "Private enterprise won't serve the patients out there whose only hope is federally financed care."

'Situations at the present facility are unbelievable," Conlin said. "You can keep people in the building, but that's no life. We shouldn't keep it open just to give the elderly a place to die.

They must be given something to live for, but that old place is just too inadequate to allow the changes this objective (meeting federal guidelines by 1975) calls for.

"Something has to be done, but it's going to take more study and discussion before we arrive at a decision," Conlin said.

Financial problems plague officials who must decide whether or not continued extended care is feasible.

"Each of the alternatives relocation, construction of a new building, change to basic care, even closing - pose inevitable funding problems," James Heyser, D - 8th District, said.

"We have to face the basic question of where the money is going to come from and who's going to carry the financial burden this will create." he added. "The land the present structure is on is valuable, but given today's construction costs, money we could obtain by selling it wouldn't go far." John Veenstra, D - 6th District, which includes East Campus Meridian Township, said he wo support construction of a new buil or relocation.

"We couldn't subsidize inflationary costs of hopital care patients needing extended care," said. "Somehow the financial aspect going to have to be adjusted to fu construction so that we can contin providing a good intensive program.

Penny Stern, D - 7th Distr emphasized the demand for a we coordinated, modern program aim at the "real need of the po financially dependent elderly.

"The epitome of a good pro dealing, with this type of care is create an atmosphere that plays do the psychological depression of aged," she said. "Keeping this in we're going to have to do a lo research and discussion before m

our decision. "Hopefully the future will new extended care facility."
