demonstrated at least their commitment." Most increases involve only one or two percentage points, or a small number of people. Since 1971, for example, 38 minorities have been added to the academic staff, but only three minority women have been hired in the tenure system.

In 1970 and for nearly 10 years before that, women represented 10.2 per cent of the tenured faculty.

The unmet goal for minority representation in the tenure system was 6.4 per cent. In 1971, 4.5 per cent of the system were minorities. Now, 5 per cent are.

"The goals we set were unrealistic, and increases of even one percentage point are more significant than they might appear," Robert Perrin, vice president for University Relations, said. Perrin's office administers the Dept. of Human Relations.

vacancies in colleges and the availability throughout the country of women and minority Ph.D.s in specific disciplines.

Why were goals unmet? The report gives three possible reasons.

First, colleges' predictions of position vacancies were inaccurate for the most part, and turnover was much lower than expected. Only 62 new positions were available since 1971, 30 of which were filled by the Colleges of Human Medicine and Osteopathic Medicine, which hired a total of 10 women and eight minorities since December 1971.

Second, and perhaps most important, the indices used by the Office of Equal Opportunity (now the Dept. of Human Relations) to determine the number of qualified women and minorities in specific disciplines were "sketchy and misleading," Perrin said.

Especially for minority availability in the job market, the office was forced to use many scattered indices. The percentage of

Ph.D. recipients in the nation who are minorities is generally agreed to be three per cent, but McMillan called this only an estimate

For women, availability indices are provided by the Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare, but often a seemingly large percentage figure reflects only a small number of women Ph.D.s.

Competition from other universities, the third obstacle, is tremendous for the small numbers of qualified women and minorities in some disciplines, Perrin said.

Competition is especially vigorous for minorities, who constitute a smaller percentage of the Ph.D. labor pool than women, McMillan said. A possible solution, one which he calls "Grow Your Own" (GYO), is to attract minorities to graduate or undergraduate programs now, and draw future faculty from that pool.

Human Relations and Perrin's office. McMillan said future goals will not only be more realistic but may also increase college commitments to them.

The affirmative action report also evaluates hiring in the nonacademic areas, conveying a brighter image of that.

"If not for the nonacademic employes, our picture would look pretty bad," McMillan said.

Both black males and each minority group of females employed by MSU exceed their regional labor force availability, according to the report.

It states that particular attention will be given in the future to recruiting Spanish surname and American Indian men. Presently, only 11 Indians and 112 Spanish surnamed personnel are employed by MSU in both academic and nonacademic

That number is estimated from the 20 Move for consumer act hits snag calls the union received asking for a renewed loan. The financial aid office lists 12 students who have called to complain about the situation.

Tom Scarlett, asst. director of financial aids, said there may be more students in this situation because "most banks are reluctant now to give out loans. They have to pay more for the money they loan with the high prime interest rate than they get back from a student loan."

However, most banks are still renewing loans while not accepting new student applications, Scarlett added.

MSU's newly created loan program is one of three remaining aid sources for new students and those with changed financial

The loan predicament stems from a clash of state and University regulations. The state prefers to have MSU assume responsibility for a student's old outstanding loan by buying it up before granting him a guaranteed loan, but MSU policymakers have ruled that MSU cannot do that. Steve Crocker, A424 Armstrong Hall senior affected by the situation, said "Not only will I not be able to go to school next term if this isn't changed but I will be left owing hundreds in short - term loans and deferred payments."

Scarlett said he agreed with the state that many problems will exist if MSU does not buy the old loans. Multiple loans mean multiple payments with a student paying a monthly bill twice as large as a student with Multiple loans also create bookkeeping problems with the state trying to keep track of a student's various accounts.

However, MSU contends it cannot afford to buy up loans with a $2 million budget for the program.

Scarlett added that the creation of a secondary loan market at MSU would be the biggest problem. He said that once banks knew MSU was buying old loans, they may try to unload their unprofitable

However, the possibility of change exists. A plan will be submitted to the financial aid policymakers in November that would allow MSU to grant loans without buying up a student's old loan.

State aid officials said they would let MSU loan without buying up old loans in some cases, considering each case individually.

"If we really push it, I think, the state will allow us to do this," Scarlett said, "I think we are going to come to the realization that there are too many students being hurt by this policy and we will probably reverse it.

Scarlett estimates that loans will be available for winter term if the new policy is approved and urges all students who find themselves in this situation to contact him at 264 Student Services Bldg. He hopes to be able to take a list including each student and his loan source to the state so each case can be considered.

The dispute Tuesday between the Elected Student Council and ASMSU over a proposal to place four nonvoting student liaisons on the board of trustees apparently stems from the different philosophies of student government each group follows.

Larry Bartrem, executive assistant to ASMSU President Ed Grafton and draftsman of the proposal, told Tuesday's council meeting that the liaisons would inform the trustees of the nonacademic student concerns that would not be discussed in academic governance.

L.A. fire forces 700 families to flee

A fierce brush fire that drove hundreds of persons from their canyon homes on the outskirts of Los Angeles appeared to be under control Wednesday.

No damage was reported at the 700 homes ordered evacuated in fashionable Topanga Canyon 20 miles west of downtown following the fire that broke out late Tuesday afternoon. It has blackened more than 1,700 acres of dry, thick brush.

"Devil winds" gusting up to 50 miles an hour died down Tuesday night and then began to pick up again Wednesday. House pulls back debt legislation

The House abruptly pulled back legislation to extend the ceiling on the national debt as a conflict grew with the Nixon administration over adding tax reform and Social Security benefits

The postponement, expected to last about a week, was made by the House Ways and Means Committee to develop its own recommendations on tax reform and Social Security.

Administration spokesman have threatened to recommend a Nixon veto if proposals for a 7 per cent Social Security increase and a $3 billion revenue-raising tax reform plan are put on the bill to hike the debt ceiling. A debt ceiling extension is needed by Nov. 30 to avoid a government fiscal crisis.

Authors battle CIA censorship

In what has been dubbed the second Pentagon Papers case, the authors and publishers of a forthcoming book on the Central Intelligence Agency have filed suit in federal court to keep the government from deleting about 10 per cent of the book.

The manuscript of the book, "The CIA and the Cult of Intelligence," written by a former CIA man and a State Dept. employe, had been reviewed by the CIA under a previous court ruling. The new suit filed in New York City by publisher Alfred A. Knopf Inc., and coauthors Victor L Marchetti and John D. Marks, calls the CIA review a violation of freedom of the press.

A permanent injunction issued in March by an Alexandria, Va., federal judge bars Marchetti from disclosing any classified information and forcing him to submit the manuscript to the CIA for examination 30 days before publication. The CIA examination produced a 19-page document listing 339 deletions in the 517-page manuscript, about 15 per cent of the book.

Energy experts see shortages

A conference of energy experts meeting in Tokyo concluded that Western nations and Japan will face oil shortages until 1985. The 45 experts, who said industrial nations can do little to force oil exporters to roll back price increases, suggested austerity measures and a unified front by oil consumers.

Oil shortages will aggravate inflation and balance of payment deficits, the experts concluded, and threaten to destroy efforts by developing nations to improve themselves economically.

The conference was sponsored by the private Paris-based Atlantic Institute for International Affairs.

Paul Dudley White dies at 87

Dr. Paul Dudley White, 87, a pioneer in the fight against blood and heart diseases, died Wednesday in Boston's Massachusetts General Hospital.

He had been hospitalized two weeks ago after suffering a stroke. One of the nation's pioneer specialists in heart disease and an internationally recognized authority on the subject, White was a vige ous believer in the virtues of exercise not only as a preventive coronary thrombosis but also as therapy for those who had covered from this form of heart attack.

White regularly pedaled his bicycle 30 miles a day over the macadam roads of Martha's Vineyard, Mass., practicing what he

He contended that it was ridiculous for a person to quit exercising after age 40. Indeed, he was certain that many of those who did abstain thus contributed to quicker hardening and fattening of the arteries, with an increased peril of heart attack.

White attained national prominence as cardiologist to the late President Dwight D. Eisenhower after Eisenhower's heart attack in Pioneering in the diagnosis of heart disease in 1914, White was among the first to introduce the electrocardiograph, an instrument for measuring and recording the electrical activity of the various parts of the heart muscle.

White repeatedly advised Americans to eat sparingly, drink moderately, eschew cigarets totally and exercise daily. He stressed that programed exercise was essential, not bursts of summer tennis or weekend joggin

The son of a general practitioner in the Roxbury section d Boston, White was born June 6, 1886. He received his MD degree from the Harvard Medical School in 1911. Almost immediately began his lifelong association with the Massachusetts General Hospital and with Harvard as a clinical professor.

As part of this lifelong quest for improved medical technique White joined a group of American physicians on a visit to the People's Republic of China in September 1971

He was especially proud of two accomplishments - his roles founding the American Heart Assn. and the International Society of Cardiology.

Voting posts split in halls

By MELISSA PAYTON State News Staff Writer

East Lansing and Meridian Township residents face each other across a corridor in Holmes and Hubbard halls.

In McDonel Hall the boundary between the city of East Lansing and Meridian Township is between two rooms on one side of the hall and between two rooms further down on the other side of the hall.

The boundaries have existed since an East Lansing charter change in 1944, but things were simple until MSU built the east complex of residence halls on the lines.

Now, student voters who move to or within East Complex without notifying the city or township clerk, may have changed voting districts without knowing it.

Julie Michael, 173 E. McDonel, lived two doors away from her present room last year in Meridian Township, but now resides in East Lansing. "It got confusing this summer when I was in Meridian Township and tried to vote in an East Lansing election," Darlene Todloski, 570 E. McDonel, said she found out she was in Meridian Township last year when she went to register. "But last year I lived in 566 so now I don't know," she added.

Most of McDonel is in East Lansing, but the tips of the two wings are cut diagonally by the Meridian Township boundary so that a little over a third of McDonel's 1,128 residents are in Meridian Township.

None of the students contacted in the East Complex residence halls knew where the boundaries were, but some had learned of their district during voter registration.

Voters must change their registration 30 days before an election if they have changed districts before that time. If they

Director blasts shift for primary

The ASMSU legal relations director has criticized a bill in the Michigan House that would move August primaries to mid-September because it would place election day at the same time as MSU fall registration.

Rick Kincade said that under the proposed legislation, students would return from summer vacation and immediately vote in the election, knowing little about the candidates or the issues.

Kincade was refering to a bill introduced last week by state Rep. John Engler, R-Mt. Pleasant, which is intended to make it easier for college students to vote by placing primaries at a period when nearly all Michigan colleges and universities are in session.

"It would be pure insanity to try to hold an election in East Lansing at that time. It would screw things up royally," Kincade

He added that he hopes East Lansing would exempt itself from the provisions of the bill if it becomes law.

Under the Home Rule Act, East Lansing could elect to keep its primary in August. However, August primaries have been criticized by local student voting advocates, because most students are vacationing out of town then.

"Last year, we actually had a candidate speak here who proposed painting a white line along the boundary," he said.

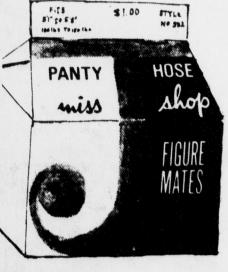

After some difficulty, Ostrander found a map and a listing of student rooms under East Lansing and Meridian Township. Neither are easily available to students. EDITORIALS City housing problem needs further actions

The new East Lansing Housing Ordinance, enacted by city council last June, is designed to give tenants adequate living space and to upgrade maintenance standards. If enforced, it will do this, but two things may happen.

· First, landlords could conceivably pass higher maintenance costs on to tenants. If this happens, the city council may have to look into rent control.

Secondly, sections of the ordinance put strict limits on the amount of floor space that must be available to each tenant. If the ordinance says only five people may live in a certain house but the facilities have already been rented to six, one tenant could be found out on the street looking for a place to live.

And with a person out in the street looking for a new place to live, the demand for housing could increase along with the price.

The Housing Ordinance has only been enforced since Oct. 1. Enforcement of the ordinance calls for strict plumbing, pest control and general maintenance regulations and sets strict spacial requirements.

For the ordinance to be effective, housing inspectors must make rounds to houses all over the city. The project is still young and only two inspectors have been hired because of budgetary constraints.

Now is the time city council should be looking at ways to combat problems which may arise from enforcement of the new housing code. If council merely watches the situation develop, tenants will just be forced to put up with the unpleasant side effects of higher quality housing.

Council should immediately get a legal interpretation on instituting rent control should higher maintenance costs swell tenant's

The question of rent control is not in the hands of the city council alone, however. The state legislature has the final authority and would have to enact special state enabling legislation, but lobbying efforts could be started by the city now.

The question of rent control could consume valuable time in the legislature with a long political battle, time when tenants would again be forced to put up with rising living costs.

City council candidates Nelson Brown and Margaret McNeil have a proposal to alleviate the housing crunch should it develop. They propose, in addition to rent control, for the city to go into the business of low cost rental housing. financing that project by selling municipal revenue bonds.

Brown and McNeil's proposal is innovative; it represents an attempt to cope with the city's growing housing problem now. But one drawback that may make the venture risky is that the bond market is currently deflated, and it may be hard for speculators to raise the money to purchase bonds.

But Brown and McNeil's proposals are ideas that must be looked into now. The Housing Commission has been directed to look into the question of rent control but has yet to report its

Nixon obsessed with his 'cool

By RUSSEL BAKER New York Times

WASHINGTON - President Nixon worries too much about coolness. He seems to believe that coolness is a good quality. He talks about having it himself in large

"The tougher things get, the cooler I get," he told his national television audience the other night, sounding like an overheated volcano. After the election victory last year he spoke in the same spirit to a news paper interviewer.

He did not spend valuable time watching television, as Lyndon Johnson had done, he said. It tempted men to hot, hyperthyroid views of the world, which he could not allow to distort his own cool, calm deliberations about the world as it really

When the White House people discuss the President in public, they often emphasize his coolness. He is frequently described in moments when decisions are being made as "the coolest man in the room."

This is surely the sycophantic praise of courtiers eager to please their principal by telling the world what they know he likes to hear, even if it is not so. Successful a nasty talent for striking the delusionary note that will ingratiate them with their

The fact, of course, is that President Nixon has a very short fuse. When the spark hits the powder he goes sky high, as he did in his news conference Friday.

In his earlier political career he used to acknowledge that he had a hot temper, that Truman and Eisenhower - and we do not seem to have held it a weakness in them.

Coolness is an idea whose time seemed to come in the Kennedy era. It had something to do with shorter answers in presidential press conferences, with narrow lapels and a good fit through the waist, with an occasional crackle of dry wit and -.

But all that is silly, of course,

"At this moment somebody in the White House could strike a small blow for reason by telling the President the truth.

'Mr. President,' he might say, 'you are kidding yourself about being cool. You are not cool. You have a very short temper, and it gets you into trouble sometimes.

We all know that nobody in the White House would dare tell the President he is not cool, and we know why. It is because they all believe he occasionally "blew his stack," as he used to put it. The stories of the legendary stack blowing in Caracas after he escaped from the famous mobbing in 1958 are part of the lore of men who have followed him over the long haul.

The question, however, is not whether or not he is cool, but why it seems to matter so much to him. We had two unashamedly hot tempered presidents in recent times —

Meaningless, imprecise. It does not get to the essence of the famous Kennedy style. But what does? In politics, the Kennedy style pledged us to go anywhere, pay any price, bear any burden. It made us adventurers on a new frontier. Was this coolness? Surely not. Surely it was hot and

Still, the idea of coolness fetched the Kennedy people. It must have sounded good, being called cool. There was a great deal of talk and writing in the early 1960s about the coolness of it all, even when during the 1962 missile showdown when the White House bet Khrushchev he would not dare put up the hottest war ever held

Afterwards, the memoirs agreed that when things were at their hottest, President Kennedy was the coolest man in the room

And now we have President Nixon insisting that he is the coolest of them all He has what it takes, he tells us. Coolness

At this moment somebody in the White House could strike a small blow for reason by telling the President the truth.

"Mr. President," he might say, "you are kidding yourself about being cool. You are not cool. You have a very short temperand it gets you into trouble sometimes.

"The beauty part, however, is that you don't have to worry about not being cool because there have been several uncool presidents who were just fine with the American people."

We all know that nobody in the White House would dare tell the President heis not cool, and we know why. It is because they all believe it.

Liberation vital to South Africans

By WILLIAM DERMAN Associate Professor of Anthropology and African Studies

On Oct. 3, delegates from over 100 nations walked out of the United Nations General Assembly when a delegate from the Republic of South Africa (Azania) rose to speak. In late September, eleven African gold miners were murdered by South African police. On Sept. 26, Guinea - Bissau declared its independence from Portugal even though the entire territory is not yet

And on Oct. 4, President Nixon snubbed General Gowon, head of state of Nigeria and the new president of the Organization of African Unity. The State News deemed none of these events newsworthy and did dish or report any of them.

Liberation is not rhetoric to the peoples of Southern Africa; it is on the immediate agenda. Liberation means the survival of the peoples of Southern Africa and the regaining of independence which was taken away by white minority rulers.

Liberation of Southern Africa will be accomplished by the Africans themselves. However, we should not minimize the extent and nature of United States and European involvement in preventing such an outcome. Nor should we ignore the positive role that we can play in hastening real Southern African independence and forestalling even greater United States government's efforts to block that independence.

Currently, the Portuguese are using United States bombers and napalm to attack Mozambiquans, Guineans and Angolans. They obtain these arms (and others) through United States contributions to NATO, or buy arms from the U.S. with the money the U.S. gives to Portugal for the use of the Azores. Other U.S. citizens indirectly support the Portuguese military efforts by travelling in Portugal or buying Portuguese products.

We should have also learned from our opposition to the war in Indochina that what we do has an effect. We invite you then to join us in developing programs to work for the liberation of Southern Africa and against those who are trying to forestall

At the present time the Southern Africa Liberation Committee is thinking of instituting a boycott of Gulf Oil and is affiliates including Holiday Inns, of fund raising to directly support liberation movements, of providing films and speaker for the Lansing and East Lansing communities and of educating ourselve much further in Southern Africa developments.

Rent control creates more problems than it solves

To the Editor:

There is nothing radical about Margaret McNeil and Nelson Brown's plans for East Lansing. They are the same plans, on a smaller scale, which have made our federal government the bungled mess it is today.

Take their "solution" to the housing problem: rent control. With that in effect, goes the simplistic argument, rent will stop rising and everything will be peachy - keen; rising costs will simply come out of the landlord's profits.

How this will ease the housing shortage is not clear. It plainly discourages new housing development in East Lansing; a landlord would be crazy to settle in an area where rent control is in effect when there is more profit to be had elsewhere.

And rent control is sure to have a detrimental effect on the housing already existing in East Lansing. Since every improvement will eat into the landlord's profits, it will be to his advantage to do as little possible in the way of maintenance and improvement.

McNeil and Brown will have a ready answer for the last problem: simply enforce the housing code. Now, in addition to rising costs due to inflation, the landlord will be faced with the prospect of being hauled into court if he does not want to trim his profits still further. Using such tactics, the city could succeed in driving private landlords out of the city altogether.

Rent control creates more problems than it solves. It is ironic to see McNeil and Brown, who are always paying lip service to long - range planning, supporting such a short - sighted policy.

Time of pain

The tone of the article written by Melissa Payton in the Oct. 24 State News concerning the Israel support rally was not in keeping with the tone of the rally itself. The mood of the event did not call for cheers of other forms of expression. It was a moment of pain and sadness, reflecting on the struggle of our brothers in Israel.

Those who went to see Gov. Milliken were merely following through on their convictions and this action was not the central focus of our intention.

Students living on the east end of no avail. Even more confusing than the boundaries is the method of solving the problem. First, the board of trustees must initiate action to have the land transferred from Meridian Township to East Lansing. Then Meridian Township must release the land and East Lansing must accept it. After all this, voters in East Lansing, Meridian Township and those living in the residence halls in guestion must vote on the proposal. All three voting groups must have a majority yes vote for the proposal to Meridian Township is not likely to give up the area it now holds on the eastern section of MSU. The township faces a loss of approximately $60,000 in state aid based on some 3,000 students living in the Meridian Township portion of East Complex. The East Lansing sector of east campus contains approximately 2,600 students.

There is no easy solution to the confusing situation caused by the boundaries. But it seems that before building the residence halls, some consideration should have been taken by the University in regard to the city - township division.

Now East Lansing and Meridian Township are faced with the bulk of the responsibility for finding a solution to the problem. It is essential that the MSU Board of Trustees look into the situation and initiate some action to help student voters living on the eastern end of campus.

Students appeared to enjoy Polomsky's emphasis on solving mechanical problems

Concentration levels were intense during a recent class as the students strained to come up with creative solutions to mechanical problems posed by the instructor.

Polomsky's interest in students carries over to his job as a public relations coordinator who recruits students for the Engineering Dept. from community

When the energetic candidate took the job, the department virtually had no recruitment drive. Within three years, Polomsky had turned the tables and had organized a highly charged, tightly coordinated program.

"We innovated some real communication ideas to get this thing moving," he said. "With posters, logos and leaflets we've created an organized campaign for awareness."

Polomsky's public relations has a unique personal touch. When engineering students are accepted into the college they fill out a form stating the name of the person most responsible for their interest in engineering.

Polomsky then sends a thank you letter to that person for his part in the recruitment program and for his role in helping direct another person's life.

A whirlwind observation of Polomsky's typical daily schedule involves a stop in an office stuffed with books, papers, magazines, and baseball pictures.

"The council has had tin ears," he said. "I would like to open up city government to the participation of people.

He feels that the council should not be an elite group of people that consults socalled experts when making decisions while ignoring the people of the community.

"Problems must be solved through the input of people in the area who may not know about technical considerations, but who know how problems affect them in practical, commonsense terms," Polomsky

He has an extensive background in education that he would like to use on the council.

Polomsky attended MSU from 1952 -56, earning a B.S. degree in engineering and industrial education. He earned his master's in educational administration in only nine months in 1961. He then earned a Ph.D. in vocational and industrial education.

While completing his undergraduate program, Polomsky won six letters in hockey and baseball. He won the John A.

Hannah Award for excellence in athletics and scholarship in 1956.

Polomsky was offered professional baseball and hockey contracts, but he only played semipro hockey in Canada until he was called for duty with the Marine Corps in the Korean War.

He hasn't foresaken sports however. He coaches a Greater Lansing Hockey Assn. team of 8 to 10 year - olds.

In spite of his busy schedule, Polomsky spends much time with his wife, Ann, a former schoolteacher, and five children, John, 16; Michele, 14; Sherrie, 12, and Phillip and Michael, 4 - year - old twins.

The family shares Polomsky's personal motivation and friendly attitude. A welcoming atmosphere permeates the comfortable, warm Polomsky home at 1985 Rutgers' Circle Drive.

"Our campaign has been mostly a family affair," Polomsky said. "The spirit of it has been really great.'

Liaison plan action upsets ASMSU

By BOB OURLIAN State News Staff Writer

ASMSU is becoming increasingly displeased over administration handling of their student trustee liaison proposal.

An announcement yesterday that the proposal will go before the Academic Council at the Tuesday meeting has moved ASMSU to suggest a boycott by student government associates of the Student Advisory Group dinner with President Wharton tonight.

An impromtu confrontation Tuesday with students of the Academic Council has left members of ASMSU with an additional conflict over a proposal that they never intended to go through the Academic Council, ASMSU officials said.

ASMSU has said that the purpose of the proposal would be to open lines of communication to deal with nonacademic

The boycott of the Student Advisory Group dinner tonight, which is to demonstrate displeasure and show student unity, stems from what some student representatives feel is unnecessary channeling and intentional bottling up of the liaison proposal.

However, not all organizations are boycotting the dinner.

Representatives from ASMSU, the Office of Black Affairs, the Off Campus Council and the Intercooperative Council are declining to attend the monthly dinner, intended for communication between student leaders and President Wharton.

The Intercooperative Council is also not attending, though President Dean C. Sweet said it is not due to the boycott.

COGS and the Panhellenic Council plan to attend the meeting.

"I didn't pigeon-hole the proposal," Wharton said Wednesday. "Quite the contrary. I sent it to a committee specifically charged to review academic governance. It was sent to the steering committee for them to review and provide a response." Wharton said members of the Academic Council expressed a strong desire to express their views as well.

Ed Grafton, ASMSU president, said Wharton told him that the Ad Hoc Committee to Review Academic governance, which is part of the Academic Council, wanted to look at the proposal to see what effect it would have on its study of academic governance.

Lester Mandersheid, chairman of the ad hoc committee, reported prior to receiving the proposal that the committee had no intention of studying the board of trustees.

However, after the proposal was examined by the ad hoc committee, it was not sent back to Wharton, as Grafton had been led to believe.

Academic rules governing procedures specify that once a proposal is given to the steering committee of the Academic Council, it must travel through the remainder of the channels cannot get out of the Academic Council until the council has seen it.

Because of this, the liaison proposal

"This gives the faculty a shot at it," Grafton said. "We never wanted this to happen, especially where they have a controlling voice.'

Grafton said that if the Academic Council votes it down and Wharton chooses not to sent it to the board of trustees, it would mean that the faculty has a veto

"I think the trustees would pass it now," Grafton said.

"The question is, will the president allow it to continue to the trustees over faculty objections?"

Grafton said Wharton has indicated that the Academic Council vote will not influence his decision.

Grafton said that Wharton, who is presiding officer of the Academic Council, indicated to him that the proposal would go straight to the ad hoc committee and straight back to Wharton.

"Maybe I'm ignorant," Grafton said "Maybe I should have known that once it was going to the ad hoc committee it would have to go to the steering committee and the rest of the way through the Academic Council process."

Ms. Mary Sharp Department of Human Relations Michigan State University East Lansing, Michigan 48823

Dear Mary:

If the Harts were registered voters in East Lansing, you could be sure of at least three votes: yours, Janey's and mine.

But all I can do is wish you success in your campaign for reelection to the City Council.

Whether the fight has been to protect individual liberties or civil rights, to stop our undeclared war in Indochina, or extending compassion and help to the least advantaged among us, you have been there early, in good times and bad. And, wholely personal, I'm grateful for help you have given me in my campaigns.

Yours is a sensitive conscience and quiet courage. There aren't enough, especially today.

Sincerely,

Failing to get the necessary 74 votes for a two-thirds majority, the Michigan House Wednesday upheld Gov. Milliken's veto of a ban on antlerless deer hunting.

MSU tests Badgers

By PAT FARNAN State News Sports Writer Wisconsin is a football team which believes in starting at the top. Try Colorado, Nebraska, Michigan and Ohio State for

After seven grueling weeks, coach John Jardine and his Badgers have found out what it is like up there and have since come tumbling down.

But not without a fight. They lost to Nebraska and Colorado by a combined total of seven points. Now it's the Spartans' turn to take a swipe at Wisconsin 1:30 p.m. Saturday in Spartan Stadium, and the Badgers, no doubt, will be in a feisty mood.

noted Thursday. " Their offense, which they've had many problems with, is starting to come along now and their defense has been steady and tough all year. Their defense is one of the more formidable we've faced all year.

"They're headed in the right direction after last week," he continued. "We expect a tough ballgame from them and we're going to be ready, too."

Wisconsin made a move in the right direction last week, too. The Badgers smashed Indiana 31 - 7 with an explosive running game complemented by the passing of Greg Bohlig.

Bohlig currently leads the Big Ten in passing and is second in total offense figures. He has the ability to put the ball in the air or run with effectiveness.

"He's a fine quarterback," Spartan coach Denny Stolz said. "He's another one of those guys that can hurt you two ways. He really helps that offense move."

A solid corps of running backs averaging nearly 250 yards per game gives the Badgers one of the strongest ground attacks in the conference.

Scrappy Billy Marek, only 5-8, leads the Badger ball toters with over 700 total yards, an average of approximately 100 yards per game. Marek is a Rufus (Roadrunner) Ferguson - type back - short and stocky with a low center of gravity. He eclipsed the Wisconsin single game rushing mark earlier this year against Wyoming with 226 yards. Fullback Ken Starch is next with 479 yards.

"No question about it, they've got real fine backs," Stolz commented. " Their running game is excellent and they've got just about everybody back from last year's offensive line."

Jardine said the Badgers' passing game would play a key role in Saturday's contest.

"We're going to have to throw the ball to loosen up their defense," he said. "We are going to have to put points on the board if we're going to

The women's field hockey team will play on home soil today when it faces the Western Michigan University squad. The game will begin at 4 p.m. at Old College Field.

The Spartans, winless in their last three efforts, can expect a rough game with the Western Broncos. "Western is always real tough," sophomore goalie Rosie Wilkens said. "We should be able to do okay, though, if our offense can get it together."

The offensive line has been plagued with problems this season. Though the Spartans' field and stick work has improved, they have been unable to put the ball in the cage. The Spartans have been scoreless in their last three games, registering a 2-1-3 record.

No doubt their biggest disadvantage is their inexper There were only three returning players on the squad this year and the young line has not been able to get used to working with

A NOTICE TO STUDENTS

From the University College Faculty Affairs Committee

During the coming weeks University College will choose its nominee for a distinguished Faculty Award. Candidates for this honor, who must have served on the faculty at least five years, will be assessed in terms of teaching, other contributions to their departments and the University, creative scholarship, and public service.

Since University College regards distinguished teaching as a primary qualification for the award, it solicits nominations from students at any academic level who have taken one or more University College course. Should you wish to make a nomination, send the faculty's name and a brief supporting letter to the chairman of the advisory Council of his or her University College Department:

Dr. Bernard Engel, American Thought and Language (229 Bessey Hall)

Dr. Clarence Nelson, Office of Evaluation Services (202 S. Kedzie Hall)

Dr. John Reinoehl, Humanities (122 Bessey Hall)

Dr. Floyd Monaghan, Natural Science (100 N. Kedzie Laboratory) Dr. Cyrus Stewart, Social Science (129 Bessey Hall)

The Advisory Council of each department will choose a candidate from those nominated by faculty and students. The names of these candidates, together with nominating letters and other supporting documents, will then be submitted to our committee, which will make the final selection.

Academic Council, ASMSU dispute stems from differing philosophies of governance

But Carl Hill, College of Education representative, said the Academic Council and its standing committees could consider any problem, since almost any aspect of University life affects academic achievement.

Both Hill and Bartrem may be mistaken in their respective Hill pointed to the Building, Lands and Planning Committee as an example of how the Academic Council could handle student problems in the residence halls.

But committee Chairwoman Anne C. Garrison said Wednesday that the Building, Lands and Planning Committee would not consider the current housing shortage to be within its purview.

"That matter certainly wouldn't be in our jurisdiction," Garrison said. "The matter has never come up before our committee and is not part of the long-range planning of building on campus, which we do consider.'

Bartrem, however, erred in saying no standing committee considers nonacademic student problems.

John R. Brake, chairman of the Business Affairs Committee, said Wednesday his committee discusses such matters as housing and tuition as part of its business.

"One item on the agenda for our Nov. 8 meeting will deal with the overcrowded residence hall situation," Brake said. "Most of the issues we discuss are usually nonacademic, as our title

When told of Brake's comments, Bartrem said Wednesday, "If the Academic Council is going to deal with nonacademic matters, ASMSU may as well discuss curriculum matters."

But Bartrem, who is also chairman of the Student Affairs Committee of Academic Council said that nonacademic matters are also discussed by his committee,

"The committee does handle matters which are clearly nonacademic but this is at the insistence of individual members," he said. "Even though this violates the Bylaws of Academic Governance, this has been going on since the committee was established two years ago."

Bartrem denied, however, that this practice supported Hill's contention that academic governance could handle nonacademic matters.

"This practice is a function of the composition of the committee, which has five ASMSU and four COGS representatives," Bartrem said. "Carl Hill is attempting to justify the presence of Elected Student Council members on the board by manufacturing excuses to classify every student concern as an academic matter.'

Hill said the bylaws made no provision for anyone, let alone student council members, to sit with the trustees.

most enduring love stories created for the media.

No Western has escaped being influenced by "Gunsmoke." Yet underpinning the structure of the series is a love story of classic proportions.

The first piece of film shot for the series in 1955 was a dialog between Matt and Kitty in the Longbranch. This short sequence introduces the complex relationship between Matt Dillon and Kitty Russell. It also introduces the two actors who would develop the two characters and interpret their relationship over the course of 18 years.

In the scene Matt told Kitty she worries too much and she replied "Sure, I could oversleep any morning and miss your burial." Later in the episode Matt suffers his first serious bullet wound on TV, Doc has to operate, while Kitty endures a long night waiting to find out if Matt will recover. Her fear for him and her terror at the thought of losing him have been a major subplot in the show.

The tough - minded attitude of producers, writers and actors has elevated the series from a simple story about a devoted, loving woman and an honest, upright marshal. The characters and their relationships have many sides and many levels. Not all of these

The fact that marshal Dillon did not marry Kitty seemed a logical attitude for someone in a hazardous profession. It appeared sensible to avoid a permanent relationship and also seemed romantic - no ties, no screaming children and no hassles. Kitty, in most respects, is the original liberated woman. Her insecurity stems from a lack of emotional commitment, not the lack of a husband's name or money. She does not know why Matt will not marry her, so she can only assume he does not care about her except as a convenience.

When she was kidnaped and held hostage by renegade white men, the renegade leader assumed that Matt would prevent the hanging of another renegade in order to save his woman. Kitty, on the other hand, never expected Matt to intervene. She explained with a tragic dignity that Matt Dillon held the law above everything. When the hanging occurs on schedule the band brutally uses her, throws her on the streets of Dodge and shoots her in the back. Matt has been in the capital trying to convince the governor to issue a stay of execution.

When he returns Matt sees what has happened to Kitty and hears from Doc that she has lost her will to live. Doc attributes to the brutal treatment she has suffered. However, Kitty thought Matt had deserted her. One of the most moving moments in the series comes in this episode when he sits beside her sickbed and begs her to survive because he needs her.

Two episodes of "Gunsmoke," this season, have concerned the relationship between Matt and Kitty. It seems the producer and stars are thinking of matrimony for the couple, but they will make the decision on the basis of viewer response.

If you would like to see Matt and Kitty married, send your vote to the State News care of the entertainment editor.

Williams moves into bluegrass music

State News Reviewer

few years ago, Mason Williams was given the nickname Mr. Media. He was always busy with success, being the head comedy writer for the "Smothers Brothers Show," composing and recording "Classical Gas," and writing several books of poetry. He was always' changing, and his new look at the Stables for the rest of this week gives a glimpse of the "Man for All Concepts.'

He opened the show alone. with his guitar and a battery of surrounding microphones. He rushed through his 1968 hit instrumental "Classical Gas" with good aplomb, and another lead guitarist, Rick Cunha. joined him for a couple more classical numbers, including "Greensleeves" from the old Williams repertoire. Then came some surprises.

Four more musicians, trooped onto stage: Bill Cunningham on electric fiddle, Steve Keith on banjo and fiddle, Georges Bouhey on 8:15 p.m.

Together they rattled through some fast fiddle and banjo music, with the spotlight shared equally by Williams and Keith, though it was obvious that Cunningham's fiddle was laying the base and timing for the group.

Original tunes such as 'Cowboy Buckaroo," "The Yo-Yo Man" and "Fresh Fish" brought out the modified bluegrass sound. Williams' music, which is cowritten by Keith, is easy-listening and not hard - core. It is almost foot stomping and definitely whistling music.

Williams is 35 years old, and got out of his classical period a year and a half ago. He needed a change, and Santa Fe Recital, his new band, was the outcome "I've always made a real bid to take it all in, to do everything that I possibly can," says Williams, "If you're really creative, sticks and stones or whatever else lies out there just isn't going to deter you."

SERVE ON EDUCATION COMMITTEES

Students named to state panels

By AL SMITH State News Staff Writer

Two MSU women students have been appointed to advisory committees of the Michigan State Board of Education.

Neither applied for the posts and both indicate they have no backgrounds in the fields for which their committees are responsible.

Both were appointed on the recommendation of a personal friend, James F. O'Neil, a Ford Motor Co. executive and vice president of the Board of Education. Kimberly Knickerbocker, 20, of 1109 South Hubbard, an MSU junior majoring in business, was named to the advisory council for school management services. "I don't know what the committee consists of," she said, "but I expect it will be a fantastic experience for me." She said that O'Neil had been a neighbor of her family in Livonia

"Being a friend of his, I can relate what happens at our meetings to him," she added.

Gayle Thomas, 23, of 4632 S. Hagadorn Road, a senior majoring in social work, was named to the advisory committee for vocational rehabilitation services. Thomas, who said she met O'Neil while working in a delicatessen in her hometown in Dearborn, said "I don't know anything about vocational rehabilitation, but I'm interested in the field and am sure it will be an excellent experience for me.' She said O'Neil had been a personal friend for several years who occasionally visits her on campus and takes her to dinner.

O'Neil, manager of purchasing, facilities and staff services at the Ford Design Center in Dearborn, has served on the eight-man State Board of Education since 1963.

O'Neil said he recommended Thomas because he was "very impressed with her efforts to work her way through school at the delicatessen and with her interest in social work."

He said that Knickerbocker had also worked at Ford during the summer and had done outstanding work in rewriting emissions control computer programs.

"The capacity she has demonstrated in working for a major corporation qualifies her to speak about business management services in the educational field as well," he said.

He said the state board is "making a total effort now to add students to all of its advisory committees.'

O'Neil said it was possible that the board in the future would adopt a more formal procedure for making student appointments. Students receive only expenses for their services, he noted, and "the beneficial experience which serving on the committees provide."

Lad Dombrowski, administrative secretary for the State Board of Education, said his staff customarily makes "a perfunctory search" for students and other nonprofessionals to fill out the 13 advisory councils to the board.

"The idea is simply to have student input on the committees," he said. "They don't need any special experience for the job."

Dombrowski said there was no application process for the jobs. The majority of positions on the advisory committees are filled by professionals representing organizations in the various fields.

Matt Wirgau, a Ferris State College senior, also was named to the school management council advisory committee.

State board appointees

Gayle Thomas, left, 4632 S. Hagadorn Road, and Kim Knickerbocker, 1109 S. Hubbard Hall, have been named to the advisory committees of the Michigan State Board of Education. Both were appointed by a personal friend. James F. O'Neil, vice president of the board.
