Witnesses of African famine talk of woes in ravaged zone

By PETE DALY
State News Staff Writer

An MSU student from Ethiopia recently drove his car through the rural areas of his home country and found bodies lying next to the road.

They were victims of a massive famine in Africa that has been going on for six years and has claimed over a million lives. Betru Gebregziabher, who came to MSU from Ethiopia last fall, said Wednesday that the famine in Africa is becoming worse all the time. He feels the world community must be made aware of the problems of unequal distribution of resources and the lack of natural resources some countries now face.

"Someday this will be a global problem if every person still eats as much as he can hold," he said. "It could come to America someday."

William Derman, associate professor of anthropology, returned a week ago from the drought-ravaged belt of Africa.

"You have to be aware of what you are going to see long before you actually go there to be able to stand it," he said.

Today, over 5,000 area residents will forego a meal to help bring the reality of the tragic famine home to Americans.

For each residence hall student who agrees to give up his or her meal tonight, MSU will contribute the cost of that food — 65 cents — to the African Famine Relief Committee. This pledged amount totals about $3,300. The committee reports it has already collected over $1,000 from other sources.

The affected African nations are Senegal, Mauritania, Mali, Upper Volta, Niger, Chad and Ethiopia. Of a total population of about 50 million, at least 30 million people are severely affected by the drought, the worst one in Africa in 60 years.

Over one third of all cattle there have perished; cattle-raising used to be the major economic asset of the people in those regions.

Derman said the perceptions that many Americans have of the famine is wrong.

"Some people here may think that those people in Africa are just quietly starving to death, but it is not true that people there are accepting the famine passively," he said. Derman noted that the people there are trying to escape the affected areas.

He also said much of the problem is political, involving both the governments of Ethiopia and the United States.

"Ethiopia has received more aid from the United States than any other African country," Derman said, "and much of that was for the military. The government there has tended largely to ignore the peasants who are now starving to death."

"What is the United States doing supporting an emperor, anyway?" Derman asked.

Though the United States has earmarked $60 million for aid to the drought-stricken countries, it is for long-term programs and will not provide much help for the people who are starving to death right now, Derman said.

Derman and other eye witnesses will speak and show slides tonight at a series of workshops sponsored by the African Relief Committee in 100 Engineering Bldg.

Derman will hold the first workshop at 5:30 p.m., using slides he took as a member of a U.S. Agency for International Development team which recently returned from Senegal and Mauritania. At 7 p.m. a film, "Sahel: Border of Hell," will be shown.

James Lucas, stockroom supervisor in the Zoology Dept., will hold the second workshop at 8 p.m. Lucas, also a member of an agency team, recently returned from Nigeria where he went to help design a program for cereal production.

African students, who have been doing extensive canvassing of the residence halls preparing for the fast day, will also be helping direct discussions at the workshops.

Bud Day, relief committee member, said the money they are collecting will be sent to the stricken countries as soon as the most suitable agency is chosen for the delivery of the aid. Agencies being considered include CARE, the Red Cross and church affiliated relief funds.

Day said people who missed an earlier opportunity to contribute to the relief committee can send donations to African Famine Relief, account number 5-03040-2, at the East Lansing State Bank.

Nixon rejects another subpoena from panel

FROM WIRE SERVICES

WASHINGTON — President Nixon today rejected on Wednesday the House Judiciary Committee's latest subpoena for tapes and documents and said he would do the same on any such future demands.

Nixon wrote Chairman Peter W. Rodino, D-N.J., that he must respectfully decline the committee panel's subpoenas for 11 more tapes of Watergate discussion and the President's daily scheduling diaries. And that decision applies to "such further subpoenas as may hereafter be issued," Nixon said.

"He's telling us in flat terms the cover-up continues," Rep. George E. Danielson, D-Calif., said. "We'll just file it away and consider it another impeachable offense," Rep. William L. Hungate, D-Mo., said.

Indeed, adding the issue of Nixon's defiance to its list of potentially impeachable offenses may be the only procedural recourse available to the panel, though several alternative actions are possible in theory.

The committee could seek a court order, but that, in the opinion of many, would jeopardize the argument that the Constitution gives Congress exclusive powers over impeachment issues.

No one seriously entertains the notion of sending the House sergeant-at-arms, whose job over the years has become purely administrative, to the White House for a show of force. And without the enforcement of power, the House would gain little by formally holding the President in contempt.

Nixon's balk at the subpoenas — whose deadline expired at 10 a.m. Wednesday — was his second rebuke to the committee within hours.

The panel was informed late Tuesday night that the President would hand over a partial transcript of one discussion in response to a separate request for tapes of 66 conversations relating to the ITT antitrust settlement and milk price cases.

The President's counsel, James D. St. Clair, then delivered the chief executive's answer to the Watergate subpoena at 11 a.m. Wednesday.

Nixon wrote, "It is clear that the continued succession of demands for additional, presidential conversation has become a never-ending process."

The President also repeated an earlier offer "to answer, under oath, pertinent written interrogatories and to be interviewed under oath by you and the ranking minority member at the White House."

Nixon asserted again in the letter that he had given the committee "the full story of Watergate" when he released the edited transcripts of a number of conversations April 30. The tapes of most of those talks had also been subpoenaed, and the panel notified Nixon that the edited versions were not sufficient to comply with that order.

The President also is fighting District Judge John J. Sirica's order Monday for him to turn over 64 tapes sought by Special Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski. Jaworski revealed the White House had claimed in that dispute that the special prosecutor could not take the President to court, a disclosure which prompted the Senate Judiciary Committee to declare Tuesday its support for Jaworski and his independence.

In New York, Vice President Gerald R.

Ford said Wednesday that the White House should reach a compromise with Jaworski over the 64 tapes sought by the prosecution for the Watergate coverup trial.

Ford said that Jaworski had said he has sufficient evidence for indictments in the Watergate coverup case, in which former Nixon aides H.R. Haldeman, John D. Ehrlichman and John N. Mitchell have been charged.

"If he needs more relating to additional evidence for the prosecutions, I hope there will be some compromise with the White House," Ford said.

Would revamping of commissions better East Lansing government?

By LINDA SANDEL
State News Staff Writer

The second of this two part series, which examines the East Lansing commission system, focuses on possible reorganization of the citizen advisory groups and minority and student roles on the commissions.

How can East Lansing best carry on a representative democracy?

City officials hope to answer that question after completing a review of the present advisory commission system, which some officials say has become cumbersome, confusing and ineffective.

In addition, several commissioners say they hope the review, which is scheduled to be completed in late summer, will question the fairness of citizen representation on the advisory groups.

Since Councilwoman Mary Sharp proposed the review in October numerous suggestions for cutting down the number of commissions, redefining their duties and redirecting intergroup communication have been bandied about.

Consolidation of several advisory groups has been proposed by both city officials and commissioners.

Most comments fall into two categories: "Some support the idea that consolidation will increase the effectiveness of the system by eliminating overlapping functions and decentralizing communication."

"Some criticize consolidation, saying it will decrease citizen participation and sacrifice representation in the name of efficiency and speed."

"I expect that our study is going to show a proliferation of too many committees," City Manager John Patriarche said. "We are having difficulty staffing all of our groups. The system may be a good method of getting citizen input but it has to be channeled and developed in such a way that you don't get all that red tape."

Commissions have proliferated within the past two years, primarily since Councilman George Griffiths and former Councilman George Colburn, who were elected in 1971, began lobbying for more citizen input through citizen advisory groups.

"Without a broad perspective we couldn't possibly handle city business democratically," said Griffiths. "Eliminating commissions would be maximizing the worst aspect of the city manager form of government."

A few active councilmembers now see the reversed push for few commissions as part of a trend toward more conservative policymaking.

"While there may be some merit in discussing mergers of commissions, you have to be careful not to streamline to a point where you eliminate the citizen input built up over the years," said Donald Power, member of the Mass Transit Committee and Planning groups.

Powers said a merger of the Mass Transit and Traffic commissions could be worked out, but added that traditions would have to be overcome.

"Without a broad perspective we couldn't possibly handle city business democratically. Eliminating commissions would be maximizing the worst aspect of the city manager form of government."

—East Lansing Councilman, George Griffiths

said Benjamin Hickok, chairman of the task force. "The city council wanted us to act solely as an advisory and research group for the Planning Commission. When we tried to initiate action, overlap and duplication were created."

But task force members say they hope the council will realize that the group is slightly over one year old and has not yet had time to work out wrinkles and establish tradition.

would redefine communication lines.

"You don't have to jeopardize input and you don't have to eliminate commissions," Kessler said. "The only logical way of improving the system is to use a different organizational scheme with formal links of communication and coordination."

Elimination of commissions would cut down on the number of people able to participate in decision-making and could have an impact on the already minimal input students have on advisory groups.

A State News survey of 23 citizen groups composed of 140 members indicated that though 68 per cent of East Lansing voters are students, only 11 students sit on commissions.

Seven blacks and 43 women hold commission posts.

Kidnap victim Hearst now a kidnap suspect

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Kidnap victim Patricia Hearst became kidnap suspect Patricia Hearst Wednesday, as authorities charged the newspaper heiress with joining her new-found comrades in abduction, assault with a deadly weapon and robbery.

"In our opinion, Hearst was acting on her own free will," said Los Angeles District Atty. Joseph Busch, who filed the state felony charges against Hearst and two members of the Liberation Army (SLA).

"She is a suspect in a kidnapping and not a victim."

The 20-year-old college student was charged from her apartment Feb. 5, and later said she was joining the SLA terrorists who claimed to have kidnapped her. She was accused Wednesday in a multi-count indictment along with William and Emily Harris. Federal firearms charges were filed earlier against the three by the FBI.

Authorities say the Harris and Hearst were involved in a shooting and in a bungled shoplifting attempt May 16 that resulted in a citywide search for SLA members in the Los Angeles area. A police raid Friday left the terrorists' chief, Donald David "Cinque" DeFreeze, and the other SLA members dead. Authorities said they were the nucleus of the group.

Police said Hearst sprayed the area of a downtown sporting goods store with bullets in the aftermath of the shoplifting attempt, and joined the Harris in commandeering several vehicles and kidnapping a teenager and Hollywood man, who was later released unharmed.

Hearst reportedly told the teenager, Dean Matthews, 18, that she emptied clip of bullets from a semi-automatic rifle to cover the Harris as they fled after the shoplifting attempt.

Busch said it was the first case he knew of where a kidnap victim had become a kidnap suspect. Hearst is charged with 19 counts in the indictment and the Harris with 18.

Maximum sentence for conviction on the robbery and kidnap charges is life imprisonment. Bail was set in advance of the trio's capture at $50,000 each. Conviction on the federal charges could carry a maximum penalty of 10 years in prison and a $10,000 fine. Federal bail was set at $500,000 each.

In San Diego, Steven Weed, whom Hearst had been planning to marry, said, "I believe it would be incredibly painful for Patty to come back, at least in a psychological way."

Hearst and the Harris were charged with five counts of assault with a deadly weapon with intent to commit murder, four counts of assault with a deadly weapon, four counts of robbery, one count of kidnapping, one count of kidnapping for the purpose of robbery and three counts of violating the California Vehicle Code relating to unlawful use of vehicles.

In addition, Busch said, Hearst was charged with an additional count of assault with a deadly weapon for allegedly aiding and abetting in a knife attack on a Los Angeles landlady who said the newspaper heiress and two men tried to rent a room Sunday night. When the landlady said she did not have a room, one of the men slashed at her with a knife, cutting her dress but not hurting her.

City councilmember George Griffiths says he is satisfied with the way East Lansing's commission system works. He claims a study of the system suggested by other city government officials is an attempt to undermine the functions of the commissions.

Panels nix extra aid for Vietnam

Senate and House conferences agreed Wednesday to prohibit $266 million in supplemental military aid to South Vietnam.

The action was reached as members of the Senate and House Armed Services committees ironed out differences in a supplemental military procurement authorization bill for the rest of fiscal 1974.

The conferees agreed to retain a $1.126 billion ceiling imposed on South Vietnam military assistance for fiscal 1974, rejecting a Nixon administration request for a raise to $1.6 billion.

They agreed on the intent of an amendment by Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., which bans a suggested bookkeeping adjustment making $266 million more available to South Vietnam immediately.

The conference agreement also lowered a Pentagon request for $1.25 billion in supplemental military appropriations to $769 million.

The agreement also authorizes a $155.8 million appropriation from the treasury to replace, at higher cost, weapons furnished Israel from U.S. stocks during last October's Middle East war.

Attacker of princess sentenced

Ian Ball, a 26-year-old, unemployed English drifter with a history of mental disorder, was ordered to a secure mental hospital Wednesday for attempting to kidnap Princess Anne in March.

Lord Widgery, lord chief justice of England, sentenced Ball to an indefinite term in a mental institution instead of prison because Ball has a history of schizophrenia.

Ball attacked a car carrying the princess and her husband, Capt. Mark Phillips, near Buckingham Palace on March 20. Four men, including two policemen, were wounded in the attack.

North Ireland strike continues

A general strike in Northern Ireland continued into its eighth day Wednesday as Protestant extremists moved to reconstruct street barricades in Belfast torn down by British troops.

Nearly all industry has been paralyzed, and authorities said the province's entire power system would close down within four days.

The strike was called to protest British moves seen by extremists as leading to eventual union with the mainly Roman Catholic Irish Republic.

British troops cleared more than 100 Belfast streets of barricades Wednesday, but militant Protestants erected them again within hours. No injuries were reported.

Next Thailand premer predicted

Political observers in Thailand said Wednesday that Kukrit Pramoj, speaker of the Thai National Assembly, is the most likely successor to ex-Premier Sanya Thammasa.

Sanya and his cabinet resigned Tuesday.

Sanya, who took power last October after a revolution against a military dictatorship, said he would not reconsider his decision, even though the powerful National Student Center of Thailand said it would back him.

Pittsburgh mayor wins primary

Pittsburgh Mayor Peter E. Flaherty Tuesday won a narrow victory in Pennsylvania's Democratic senatorial primary and predicted he will defeat Republican Sen. Richard Schweiker in November.

Flaherty's strength in western Pennsylvania was enough to carry him to victory over former state Insurance Commissioner Herbert Denenberg, a consumer rights advocate, and two other candidates.

House defeats energy measure

The House defeated standby emergency energy legislation Tuesday that would have given President Nixon the authority to ration gasoline in the event of a renewed crisis.

The 207-191 vote also rejected a rollback in domestic crude oil prices to pre-embargo levels. Nixon vetoed the original energy bill because it contained a similar roll-back clause.

Meanwhile, the American Automobile Assn. (AAA) reported that there appears to be no serious gasoline supply problems and that pump prices are holding steady.

The AAA said the average price of regular gasoline at 5,000 surveyed stations is 55 cents a gallon, while premium averaged 59 cents a gallon.

Auto workers to get pay raise

About 600,000 Big Three auto workers will receive a 13 cent-per-hour wage increase in June due to increases in the cost of living, the United Auto Workers (UAW) said Tuesday.

UAW President Leonard Woodcock said the raise is the biggest cost of living wage adjustment since escalator clauses were first negotiated in 1948.

The raise will bring the average straight pay for workers at Ford, Chrysler and General Motors to $5.77 an hour.

Four arraigned in Zebra killing

Four young blacks indicted for three of the 13 Zebra killings of whites in San Francisco were arraigned Tuesday.

The four, Manuel Moore, J.C. Simon, Larry Craig Green and Jessie Cooks, were indicted by a San Francisco County grand jury May 16 on a series of charges involving several of the random street murders that began last October.

A trial date will be set Wednesday.

Israel, Syria agree on basics

DAMASCUS, Syria (AP) — A senior American official said Wednesday Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger has worked out all the basics for separation of Israeli and Syrian forces on the Golan Heights.

But as Kissinger shuttled here to meet with Syrian President Hafez Assad, newsmen were told he could be "hung up for a while on the details" — principally the precise number and kinds of armor that would be permitted behind the demilitarized zone.

Kissinger was said to be still holding to his deadline for returning home this weekend — with or without a final settlement.

He appeared more relaxed than usual and the mood in his camp was decidedly optimistic. If Kissinger heads home without a settlement, the official said, Israeli and Syrian technical experts would be invited to Washington or Kissinger might send American specialists here.

President Nixon urged the secretary of state on Tuesday to keep plodding away at a settlement as long as he was making progress. Now the decision when to pull out is Kissinger's, said the official.

"We're sort of plodding along," he said, "but the overall trend is upbeat ever since Syria and Israel tentatively agreed to Kissinger's proposed line."

The Syrians were said to be "very ambivalent" in their objectives but no more favorable to "guerrilla warfare" than the Israelis.

Evidently not all of the pact would be made public. Like the Israeli-Egyptian disengagement of last January, part of its success will rest on understandings conveyed from one side to the other through Kissinger.

In Israel, residents of towns along the Lebanese border were issued arms Wednesday in a massive effort against the possibility of more Arab terrorist infiltrators.

The state radio said the military had reinforced its defenses from east of the Mediterranean and south of the Lebanese border to Nazareth and beyond.

Jerusalem resembled an armed camp with paratroopers guarding Premier Golda Meir's office, helicopters sweeping overhead, and soldiers posted at schools, supermarkets and city gates.

The measures followed the terrorist attack at Maalot which claimed the lives of 26 Israelis a week ago Wednesday.

Jerusalem police announced the capture of three Arab saboteurs said to have planted bombs and rockets in the city eight days ago. The explosives were all defused. Some of the rockets were found aimed at the King David Hotel where Kissinger was sleeping.

The army magazine Bamahane reported that army engineers had improved the warning system on the barbed wire fence along the border.

Conference committee discusses bill to expand 18-year-olds' rights

By JOHN TINGWALL
State News Staff Writer

For proponents of full privileges for 18-year-olds, one of the major battles could be decided behind the closed doors of a conference committee.

A proposal to lower the age requirement for the offices of governor, lieutenant governor and legislator to 18 was sent to a conference committee by the Michigan House Monday after representatives voted not to concur with amendments added by the Senate last week. The amendments would place the proposal on the August ballot, rather than in the November general election and would change the language concerning the dismissal of legislators for the conviction of a felony.

Jackie Vaughn, D-Detroit, sponsor of the bill and chairman of the House conference committee, said Wednesday he was pleased with the appointments of Philip Mastin, D-Hazel Park, and James Farnsworth, R-Holland, to the committee.

"We will probably begin meeting this week and I predict we will work well together," Vaughn said. "Without any major complications, we should have this out of committee within a few weeks."

Vaughn said he hopes the issues discussed in committee will be restricted to the ballot date and the language concerning felony convictions.

"I led the fight to reject the Senate ballot change so that the proposal appears on the ballot most advantageous to its passage," Vaughn said.

"The November ballot," Vaughn continued, "draws a larger turnout. A far greater number of young people and students are around to vote in the general election. A proposal as important to students as this should not be on any ballot but the November one."

Both Farnsworth and Mastin said they supported placing the issue on the November ballot. Neither expected the bill to be stalled in committee.

Senate members of the conference committee expressed differing opinions on the committee discussion.

"The longer the issue sits in committee," said Sen. Robert Richardson, R-Saginaw, "the better the chance it will be on the November ballot."

Sen. Basil Brown, D-Highland Park, said the major issue in the committee may be reinstituting the 25-year-old requirement for governor and lieutenant governor that some suggest is necessary to the bill's passage.

"This is a distinction," Brown said, "that is unnecessary. There is no logical reason to raise it to 25. I know some 30-year-olds not mature enough to run for public office."

Brown said he favored any change that would insure adoption of the proposal by the voters.

"I've heard arguments for both ballots, but whatever we decide, it should be resolved as soon as possible, to give people time to work for the bill's passage or defeat."

Energy office extension hits snag in state Senate

Senate Republicans Monday lost a skirmish with their Democratic colleagues over a bill extending the life of the state's energy office, which will end June 30.

Senate Democrats, many of whom say the worst of the energy crisis is over, Monday succeeded in referring the bill to the Senate Appropriations Committee for further study.

The bill, supported by Gov. William G. Milliken, would grant a one-year extension to the Emergency Energy Act, which gave broad powers to the governor and the Republican-dominated Public Service Commission (PSC).

The PSC has been empowered to take over the distribution of electricity and other energy forms in the event a severe energy shortage is declared by Milliken.

City council supports marijuana initiatives

By LIZ ARASIM
State News Staff Writer

The East Lansing City Council passed a resolution Tuesday night endorsing marijuana initiatives for a referendum to be held on the November ballot. Councilwoman Mary Sharp introduced a motion, which the council passed, to change the proposed text of the resolution. Sharp's motion deleted reference to the Michigan Marijuana Initiative.

Sharp said that the council should not be restricted to backing only one initiative because it is important that the issue get on the ballot — no matter who originates it. The resolution declares that the city of East Lansing supports a marijuana initiative and encourages East Lansing citizens to sign petitions. The referendum would decriminalize the private adult use, growth and possession of marijuana. City council also dealt with meetings held by the Zoning Board of Appeals. Councilman George Griffiths recommended that all meetings of the zoning appeals board be held in public. City Manager John Patriarche explained that only executive sessions of the board are closed. The zoning appeals board usually holds public hearings, but the executive session — where discussion and voting on matters takes place — is a closed meeting. The vote is announced in public after the executive session.

Council approved Griffiths' motion, with Mayor Wilbur Brookover and Sharp voting against the recommendation. In action not on the agenda, representatives from the African Famine Relief Committee got council to pass a resolution declaring today a day of fast and requesting people to make donations to aid famine-stricken African nations. Sharp questioned the credentials of the committee.

She said it is "not proper for the city council to encourage citizens to send money to a group about which it has no factual information." Sue Ann Allen, 1137½ Fry Ave., explained that the committee has an account at the East Lansing State Bank and that all funds will go directly to that account. She also said that the group is studying different channels for the money to get to the people in need. Sharp said that she resented being placed in the position to make a decision at that time because she did not have enough information on the organization.

Approval was given to an ordinance that would change the name of the Human Relations Commission to the Human Resources Commission, and to expand the duties of the commission to include social welfare and mental and physical health services. In other business the council: Passed an ordinance increasing water rates by 20 per cent in order to meet bond payment to build the new water plant; Approved a request by the East Lansing Bike Day committee to close Whitehills and Burcham drives, Alton Street and Albert Avenue on July 4 for a bicycle race and other bike day activities; Accepted a motion by Griffiths that the proposed relaying of Burcham Drive, to provide a bike lane on either side of the street, be sent to the Traffic and Planning Commission to work out technical questions and years and suggested a study of the St. Lawrence Hospital obstetrical unit, with an eye toward closeout and consolidation with other area hospitals. Acting as a liaison for the Ingham County Medical Society, the chief of staff at St. Lawrence Hospital, Dr. Joseph Caruso, disputed the projected figures, citing an increase in deliveries over the past two years. Discussion also dealt specifically with St. Lawrence Hospital's plans for making 80 per cent of the beds in the new facility single units.

OFFICIALS CLASH AT MEET

CATA, union pact seen

By JIM KEEGSTRA
State News Staff Writer

For the first time in the present Lansing bus system's most three-year history, a mass transit may be in solid position. A new two-year contract is expected to be signed late Wednesday between the Capital Area Transportation Authority (CATA) and the bus drivers' Amalgamated Transit Union Local 1039.

Delhi Township Tuesday night became the fifth local government served by the blue and white diesels to approve subsidy payments to CATA for the 1975 fiscal year beginning July 1. The sixth municipal unit, Meridian Township, took no action Tuesday on the fiscal year request from CATA but did approve its supplemental payment for the system's debts on March 4 to June 30. CATA has been operating without a labor contract since Nov. 1, 1973. Executive Director Clare Loudenslager said at the CATA Board of Directors' meeting Wednesday afternoon that the contract is better than any past agreements.

It will grant a 10 per cent wage increase over its two-year duration and cover 53 drivers and 12 garage employees. Drivers are already receiving $4.50 an hour provided for in the agreement and their pay will rise to $4.85 in January, 1975.

However, the CATA directors almost did not give their approval to the contract. The authority's attorney, James Vande Bunte, told the board he could not recommend signing the contract without rereading it carefully and checking some small last minute changes.

Loudenslager objected, claiming that Vande Bunte had since Tuesday afternoon to read the contract and all the changes were reviewed with him before the board meeting. Tom Kane, one of Lansing's representatives on the authority, told the lawyer it was unnecessary to delay several hours and reconsider the almost 40-page document. Vande Bunte responded, "Goddammit, don't tell me what my job is!"

The board finally decided to send the attorney away from the luncheon meeting to quickly read the contract. Chairman Joseph Kiersey was directed to postpone union officials a half hour and sign the contract at 3 p.m. if Vande Bunte gave his blessings. "You realize if the attorney says don't sign it we don't have a contract," Kiersey told the directors.

As it was, the contract signing meeting began late and was still in progress at 6 p.m.

Encouragement for transportation systems across Michigan came Wednesday morning when Gov. Milliken announced he has asked state officials and legislative leaders to examine the feasibility of a public referendum this year on a billion-dollar bond issue to finance a statewide public transportation program.

State House passes bill of rights for mentally ill

UPI — The Michigan House Monday adopted legislation which could give the state the nation's first bill of rights for the mentally ill and retarded. The 10-section bill of rights, part of a 134-page revamping of the state's mental health laws, was passed by an 87-3 vote.

Its sponsor, Rep. Joyce Symons, D-Allen Park, said it may be the first such legislation in the country.

The proposal was passed without debate and, if approved by the Senate, would rewrite the state's 50-year-old mental health statutes and combine them into a single act.

Rights that would be guaranteed the mentally ill and retarded include the right to: Live under humane conditions, have periodic examinations and an individualized written plan for care and treatment, and to be regularly informed of clinical status and progress. Refuse psycho surgery and shock therapy except in life-threatening emergencies or by a court order. Be free of physical abuse. Communicate by mail, telephone and visitation.

Possess and use personal property, including clothing. Have control over the expenditure of their money and property. Be paid the minimum wage for any work done and to refuse to perform work. Be physically restrained or placed in confinement only when physically dangerous. Have all records and information kept confidential. Exercise all government-regulated privileges, including voting, and receive benefits offered persons not under treatment.

Ma Bell opposes ax of rate hike request

Michigan Bell Telephone Co. told the Public Service Commission (PSC) Wednesday that it cannot legally dismiss the company's application for a record $111.4 million rate increase. Jack Shuler, the company's vice president and general counsel, said that if the PSC dismissed the application without full hearings it would show that "not even a semblance of due process being provided."

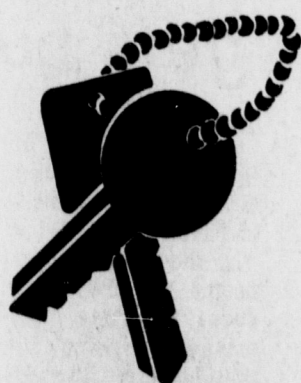

The PSC heard arguments from both Bell and Attorney General Frank J. Kelley on the attorney general's motion to dismiss the entire request. A decision on whether to dismiss it is expected in about a month, chairman William G. Rosenberg said. A full rate case would take more than nine months to decide. Shuler said it is "one of the most fundamental rights under the right to a full and complete hearing."

Bell President David K. Easlick told newsmen it would be "ridiculous" for the PSC to dismiss the case. The PSC staff Wednesday also urged the commission to dismiss the case. "This application on its face is unreasonable, premature, has previously been decided and is wholly inflationary," Kelley said.

MSU deflates inflation

Present and prospective MSU students must have breathed a sigh of relative relief Friday when the MSU Board of Trustees approved a $10 per term room and board increase for next year.

The administration was justified in asking for the increase, a small one.

More than that, MSU officials deserve praise for keeping the raise at only 2.4 per cent over this year's room and board while inflation in 1973 was 6 per cent, and this year shows signs of growing even more.

Charged with the responsibility of operating the largest educational institution in the state, the administration has still managed to keep student living rates down. Nearly every other public university in Michigan has upped its room and board for next year by at least $100.

There are several factors contributing to the low increase.

The massive size of the University — which often draws complaints from students — worked to the students' advantage by allowing the administration to operate under economies of scale, the fixed costs can be defrayed among the large number of students.

However, the University is gambling on food. The trustees left room for only a 10 per cent increase in food costs in the upcoming year, while food costs went up 21 per cent in the year just past. The trustees are relying on a rather hopeful recommendation by MSU food stores manager Robert Herro that food costs will not increase by so much this year.

But with some of the lowest student rates in the state, as well as a good academic reputation, MSU is able to attract a large number of students. And the more students there are living on campus in residence halls, the lower the University can afford to keep its rates.

It is nice, if somewhat surprising in this age of great inflation, that MSU can manage to at least hold down room and board costs. Hopefully, administration and trustees will be able to do the same this summer when they face a decision on next year's tuition.

Save educational unit

MSU officials must move soon or the Center for Alternatives in Higher Education, an experimental program which offers an alternative to traditional systems of higher education, is doomed.

The center was instituted by United Ministries in Higher Education to demonstrate the need for independent field studies for MSU students and faculty. MSU was to take over the program, the only one of its kind in the United States, if a three-year study proved it valuable.

As the study period nears its end, the program's value is unquestioned, but its future is clouded by University inaction and indecision.

Since United Ministries no longer intends to maintain the program, MSU must pick up the tab. Six colleges, the Office of the Vice President for Student Affairs and MSU volunteer programs have contributed funds during the past year. But additional funds, office space and a new staff needed to continue the program are nowhere in sight.

The center's offices will be closed Friday, and students seeking its services will have no place to go. Unless MSU officials make a positive commitment now, the successful, nontraditional educational program will be lost in a traditional morass of bureaucratic red tape.

'Scalp hanging' deplored

To the Editor:
The response of the State News to letters received from a Communications 100 class was an excellent example of childish striking back and avoidance of issues: something I learned was never to be done when I had journalism in high school.

Instead of responding to the criticisms with intelligent reasoning, asinine statements like, "Apparently the writer is asking for more liberal tennis coverage," were made.

An example of sidestepping a question was the rather weak attempt at placing the blame for the "cheap shots" at Nixon on the national wire services. Are we supposed to believe that no articles about President Nixon have been written by the State News staff? (Bylines I have seen in the past would tend to refute this idea.)

Equally asinine was the repeated use of statements that apparently did not reflect much thought. Undoubtedly this was supposed to show everyone how poor the letters were. (Maybe they were, but taken out of context who is to know?)

Perhaps the worst thing about the article was the reproduction of one entire letter. Was this scalp hanging — on a post supposed to serve as a warning to future letter writers to beware of the State News' wrath?

As a journalist Chris Danielson should be more knowledgeable in the area of writing clearly and concisely than freshmen in a Communication 100 class. With this increased competence, perhaps increased tolerance for others less knowledgeable would be more in order than the response given.

Editor's Note: The column in question was intended to aid readers in using the State News Opinion Page as an effective channel of communication. The "asininity" was an added bonus.

Drama rehearsal review criticized for 'omission'

To the Editor:
When are your theater reviewers going to get on the ball? Kathy Esselman's review of the theater department's production of "The House of Bernarda Alba" appeared in the May 17 issue of the State News. Esselman neglected to include in her review the fact that she saw the play on the final dress rehearsal rather than opening night. The cast of the show was told that this had to be done because there were too many shows to be reviewed that particular weekend.

I was grateful that the review was done early so that it could be published during the run of the show, but there is a world of difference between being a lone observer in an empty house and being part of an enthusiastic opening night audience.

Esselman's negligence by not mentioning the circumstances under which the review was written probably hurt more than helped by creating a false picture. I am no longer grateful for the early attention and am tired of having to prove my abilities to reviewers who repeatedly show me no proof of their own.

Ford merits vocal greeting

The vice president of the United States is going to be on campus Friday.

Gerald Ford, who will receive a Distinguished Citizen's Award from the board of trustees at a 12:30 luncheon Friday at Kellogg Center, has recently been voicing opinions most MSU students should find appalling.

Recently Ford said that even adding up all the good Nixon has done and all the bad that has come of his presidency, this country is still better off than had we elected George McGovern.

I can't imagine where Ford was able to find an adding machine that could come up with that sort of a total. Perhaps it was handed down from one of Nixon's tax consultants.

But considering the important place Ford may take in history, we can't allow him to continue making such ludicrous statements. We can't let him think that we agree in silent acquiescence that Nixon can be lied back into respectability. Why, next thing you know, Ford will be telling us how lucky we are that we have Nixon as our leader and not a more honest schmuck like himself.

Ford has spent endless days on the proverbial road (in Air Force Two?) of late. Between speeches on the virtues of Nixon and the Boy Scouts, Ford has been smothered in flowers and kisses by seventh-grade Hawaiian girls, and he just recently missed a dose of LSD that was slipped into the coffee at one of his appearances. Ford has met American greetings from sea to shining sea.

But the salutations that seemed most appropriate were the protests of University of Michigan students at Ford's recent commencement address in Ann Arbor.

Whether we at MSU say it with posters, LSD or if we actually smother him in flowers (omitting the kisses this round), we have a chance to voice our opposition to the diseased regime of Nixon when Ford comes to campus Friday.

We have a chance to say that we are the ones who voted for McGovern in the first place, back when Watergate was something Nixon shrugged off as the work of a bunch of thugs, controlled by nobody in particular.

We have a chance to tell Ford that since MSU voted 65 per cent for McGovern and against Nixon in 1972, we have not been appeased.

We have not been appeased by the Christmas bombing in Vietnam, the better late-than-never Paris peace agreement or the continued torture of prisoners in South Vietnam.

We have not been appeased by the San Clemente golf carts and other expenses, nor by Tricia's masked ball and other deductions.

We have not been appeased by Spiro Agnew's resignation, nor the Saturday night massacre. We have not been appeased by learning the true nature of the motley crew Nixon chose to be his right hand men.

We are not appeased by buggings and break-ins; by unanswered subpoenas, missing tapes, 18-minute gaps and deleted expletives, characterizations and innuendoes.

We are not appeased by faulty phased lay offs, gas shortages, oil company profits and vetoed energy bills.

The good does not outweigh the bad, it is smothered by the bad. We know that. Ford knows that. And surely, Nixon must have realized that by now.

We cannot cheer for lies any longer. We cannot shake hands and be friends.

If we don't bother to tell this to Ford on Friday, we might not get the chance to tell him if he becomes President. Ford may never get this close again.

Ford's trips raise questions about future

By MARJORIE HUNTER
New York Times

WASHINGTON — For seven months now, Gerald Ford has been the Marco Polo of a troubled Republican party, an airborne circuit rider who has traveled more than 75,000 miles, visited 28 states and made 350 public appearances.

The vice president has been cheered and booed. He has been mobbed and ignored. He has been swathed nearly nose deep in hawaiian leis, topped with a lamprock hat by the Irish, and had plaques, keys to cities, fishing rods, gold bags and countless crystal, wooden and stuffed elephants bestowed on him.

Why is doing it? Is he understudying the President in order to take over the job if President Nixon resigns or is removed from office? Is he running for the Republican presidential nomination in 1976?

These are questions being asked not only here in Washington but across the nation as the vice president moves restlessly from state to state.

Ford insists that he is neither understudying Nixon nor seeking the 1976 presidential nomination.

"President Nixon is not going to resign," the vice president has said repeatedly, at nearly every stop. "And I'm convinced that he will not be impeached, either."

As for the 1976 presidential nomination, Ford has said he is not a candidate, has no intention of being a candidate and is not sure he would agree to run even if drafted — a situation he does not expect to occur.

Why, then, is he traveling so much, why is he speaking so often?

"I want to do everything I can to rescue the Republican party from the tragedy of Watergate," he said recently. "I think somebody has to get out, and communicate and develop a rapport, not only politically, but with other groups."

He said he also found it difficult to say no, particularly to old friends in Congress who are seeking re-election in this politically troubled year.

"Our biggest problem is sorting out what we think is the right group or the right area to go to," he said. "It's pretty hard sometimes because I am an easy touch when it comes to saying yes..."

Because he has said "yes" so often, he has been away from Washington probably three quarters of the time since he became vice president Dec. 6.

It was on one of those infrequent mornings in town that Nixon called him to the Oval Office at the White House nearly two weeks ago.

As Ford later told it, the President "was concerned about the fact that I was working too hard at the job. He cautioned me to be a little less on the road and not work so hard on behalf of candidates of the party and speaking to the public generally."

Some have interpreted the President's suggestion as an indication that he might feel he has been overshadowed by the man he chose as his vice president. Ford disagrees.

"He was only a little concerned that the lack of sleep and long hours might be interfering with my health," the vice president said last week. "I assured him I never felt better."

The vice president has no intention of following the President's advice that he slow down.

"I would get very bored if I sat around and didn't get out to see the people," he said. "I know it's looked on by some as too broad a schedule, too much time on the road. But I enjoy it. I intend to continue it."

And continue it he has.

In one recent 72-hour span, he flew to three states (Illinois, New York and Texas), made nine speeches, attended five Republican party receptions and held three news conferences.

In the days and months ahead, his schedule will be hectic. To New York City for a Father of the Year Award... Delaware one day, Michigan next... speeches in the Carolinas, Alabama, Florida, California, Missouri and dozens of other states.

Vice President Gerald Ford

Groups to stage protest during Ford's MSU visit

Demonstration is alive and well at MSU. Wednesday night 10 men, representing various left-wing groups, met in the Union to organize a protest against Vice President Gerald Ford's visit to the campus Friday.

Ford will receive a Distinguished Citizen's Award from the MSU Board of Trustees at 12:30 p.m. in the Big Ten room of Kellogg Center. He will address the state Legislature at 2:30 p.m. at the Capitol.

The students, who did not want to be identified except by group affiliation, presented the Human Rights party; the Coalition for Human Survival, New American Movement, a national leftist group, and the United Front Against Racism and Imperialism, a local group. They may also be joined by the Attica League, an Ann Arbor based organization, who helped organize the protest against Ford in Ann Arbor.

"We are not attacking Ford or his personality, but what he represents," one organizer said. "This is a coalition of groups that are willing to participate in such a demonstration."

"We may not share the same ideology, but we want to show Ford and those who run the country that they can't get away with crime all the time."

Will revamping help city?

received numerous applications from students for commission seats, but added that the council has appointed only a few to the positions.

Mayor Wilbur Brookover cited the high mobility of students and their lack of expertise in various problem areas of the commissions as the council's major reasons for not appointing students, or for tending to appoint them to short terms.

Several council members and commissioners noted that the city has in the past had difficulty finding qualified people who were willing to give up the necessary time to sit on advisory groups.

"People should be concerned about this issue because it's the personal involvement in city government that counts," Hickok said. "You go through a lot of sweat to get representative democracy and then people don't give a damn."

Among the many suggestions for consolidations being tossed about within city circles are:

- An amalgamation of the Traffic Commission and Mass Transit Committee;
- A combination of the Housing Commission and Zoning Board of Appeal;
- A realignment of the relationship between the Planning Commission and the Environmental Quality and Aesthetics Task Force;

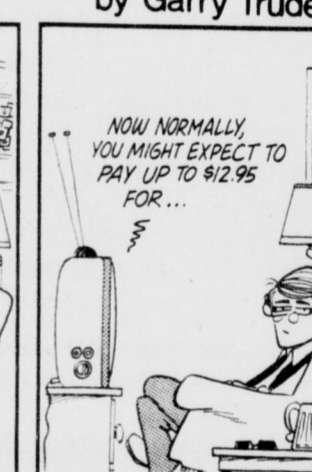

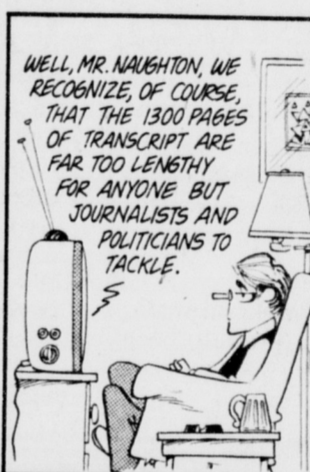

• A possible adjustment of the relationship between the Planning Commission and the citizen group dealing with traffic and transportation;

- A merger of the Recreation Commission with the Fine Arts and Cultural Heritage Committee;
- A merger of the fine arts group with the environmental task force;

• A broadening of the duties of the Human Relations Commission to include responsibility for East Lansing social services. The commission now supposedly handles only discrimination problems.

FM, AM fare improving

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Reviewer

Despite continual cries to the contrary, the radio scene in East Lansing is not as bad as it is cracked up to be.

The past few years have brought about a gradual change that was inarguably long in coming to this college town. There is a fairly good chance that now, one way or another, listeners can find about anything they desire on the radio dial. The problem lies in the compromises one must make with the radio station of their choice.

To clarify matters, here is a brief outline of most of the "youth oriented" (the term is applied loosely) radio stations in the area. All are capable of being received anywhere in East Lansing.

First, the AM stations are: WVIC - AM 730 - This is clearly the station pulling in the highest ratings these days, as the number of commercials continuously aired might readily attest. WVIC - AM is simulcast (simultaneously broadcast) with WVIC - FM, and programs are standard Top Forty. Broadcasting for WVIC -

AM stops at sunset.

WKAR - AM 870 - Earle Robinson does his "Taking Care of Business" show five days a week from 2 to 4:45 p.m. The show features contemporary black music mixed with relevant information concerning campus black affairs.

WJIM - AM 1240 - Programming is a combination of Top Forty interspersed with quieter, more middle-of-the-road sounds.

WILS - AM 1300 - The station has been broadcasting in the area for over 25 years. Current Top Forty is programmed during the daytime. Simulcasts with WILS - FM take place at night.

The FM stations are undoubtedly of greater interest to the majority of MSU students. If not for their variety in musical programming, the FMs are generally preferred due to their superiority in transmitting recorded music on a full-frequency spectrum.

The FM stations are: WKAR - FM 90.5 - "Audio Aftermath," broadcast from 11 p.m. to 2 a.m. Monday through Friday, is without reservation the best progressive rock show of its type in the East Lansing area. Thanks to the combined energies of Dick Rosemont and Dan Wardlow, each show features an excellent combination of fine music and interesting local affairs. The show expanded from its once-a-week schedule to its current five-day run last summer due to increasing popularity.

WVIC - FM 94.6 - At night, this station has continually attempted a merging of Top Forty with pseudoprogressive music. More often than not, the Top Forty overshadows everything else. The potential and audience are there, but with the cozy loft of advertisers and ratings to rest on, the station seems to continually display inertia.

WRBJ - FM 92.1 - A new station that broadcasts from St. Johns, WRBJ features a fine blending of Soul Top Forty with progressive jazz from midnight to 6 a.m. The mixture seems just perfect.

WILS - FM - 101.7 - Another fine midnight-to-6 a.m. show is featured - Jim Collins' "Afterhours Program" and jazz is heard, with a minute sprinkling of progressive rock. Since WILS - FM is simulcast with WILS - AM, the station is a best bet for those cruising the town late at night with just an AM car radio to listen to.

WFMK - FM 99.0 - As of last October, WFMK's middle-of-the-road format scheduled a sign-off at midnight. Somehow, someone got the idea to try a progressive rock program after the usual sign-off. Now, from 11 p.m. to 5 a.m. Monday through Saturday, Eric Allen hosts a progressive rock show. The program was fine at conception, but nowadays seems sadly on the decline.

Campus radio should not be forgotten, despite its admittedly limited audience. Complaints of poor residence hall reception notwithstanding, those stations that are completely run offer a viable alternative.

Progressive rock and soul are most often heard, but the recent efforts of the Michigan State Radio Network (which controls all five of the campus stations - WBRB, WMSN, WEAK, WMCD and WKME) to program public affairs and campus events seem to be working out comparatively well. Campus radio, in any case, is to be commended for continuously showing the initiative that many so-called "professional" stations are lacking.

And that covers almost everything. Those still dissatisfied will be glad to note that with the influx of Cable TV and radio in the East Lansing area, statewide radio reception will soon be a local reality, at least for those who are willing to pay for it.

Local writer edits literary review

The Garfield Lake Review, a literary magazine which includes works by faculty and students from MSU, will be released Friday by a local freelance writer who put it together the way he would "put together a baseball team."

"Instead of the old trick of magazine editing, waiting for appropriate material to come in, I went out and solicited the material on my own," Alan Steinberg, editor, said. "I got only the best," he added, "just as I would gather only the best players for a baseball team."

The Garfield Lake Review includes poets from New York, California and Illinois as well as local and statewide talent. Illustrations by MSU student Diane Hamel and local artist Carole Berk highlight the poems.

The Garfield Lake Review debuted four years ago and is named for the Garfield Lake Tavern in Olivet, a favorite spot of the original editor, Jim Coleman. The magazine will be distributed nationally. It will also be sold at Paramount News Center and at the Union.

Bob Rosen tunes his timpani during an MSU Symphony Orchestra rehearsal. Practice sessions are held daily. The orchestra, conducted by Dennis Burk, consists of over 100 musicians and performs 22 concerts annually, including the unique International Series.

Fine music, little fanfare surround MSU orchestra

By ED ZDROJEWSKI
State News Reviewer

Every class day around 10 a.m. some 100 music students gather in 120 Music Bldg. and begin to warm up their instruments, creating a chaos of sound.

Dennis Burk, associate professor of music, enters the room as the principal violinist climbs up to the podium and sounds the tuning note. Everyone tries to match the note.

Burk sits on a stool that is set up on the podium, raises his baton and the MSU Symphony Orchestra begins its daily rehearsal.

The orchestra has been rehearsing and performing for almost 50 years.

Before 1966, the orchestra played five concerts a year. Since then its program has expanded to 22 concerts a year, including off-campus concerts throughout the Lansing area.

Burk, who was responsible for expanding the orchestra's program when he was hired as conductor eight years ago, has had no formal college education. He became a professional musician after studying in Europe under the apprenticeship system and learned the art of conducting in Germany and Italy.

Burk chooses the music for the orchestra's performance himself.

"You have to pick music that will serve the orchestra as a training ground," he said. "It has to be music which has not been played by this orchestra or the Lansing Symphony and it has to be competitive to challenge the musicians' abilities and introduce them to a variety of composers."

The orchestra, a training ground for professional musicians, is open to all students though it consists mostly of music majors. Competition to get into the orchestra is stiff and only the best performers in auditions are accepted.

Though its members are not paid, the MSU Symphony Orchestra is treated like any other professional orchestra. It has the heaviest schedule in the state except for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra.

Burk believes that the orchestra is at least "at the same level with all the community orchestras in the state." This is shown, he said, by the fact that many members of the orchestra are principals in the community orchestras around Michigan.

It is hard work for students to stay in the orchestra and they must practice on their own for several hours a day, Burk explained. The pace is demanding, so a musician must be in good physical condition, he added.

Probably the most important service to the East Lansing community that the orchestra provides is its annual International Series, a program not found on any other college campus in the nation. It brings guest artists from around the world to perform with the orchestra.

The program gets unofficial support from the federal government because it helps promote good rapport between countries. It is financed, in part, by a grant from a New York organization and contributions from local businesses.

This school year the International Series has sponsored appearances by such renowned musicians as Peter Toperczer of Czechoslovakia and Marta Deyanova of Bulgaria. Later this term Alun Francis, resident conductor of the Ulster Symphony in Northern Ireland, will perform.

The program will be expanded for 1974-75 and will include more solo recitals, which have been a popular addition to the program this year.

Burk feels that the MSU Orchestra shares many problems with all American orchestras.

"There has to be a feeling of being useful to society," he said. "Musicians in the United States generally don't feel themselves to be a part of society."

Burk said that the orchestra is not as widely recognized on campus as it should be.

"No society survives in quality without the refinement of culture," he said. "Many students from the Midwest may feel awkward or ashamed that they don't understand symphonic music, but it is an acquired taste. It must be tried a few times."

And so the daily rehearsals go on. An entire rehearsal might be spent in ironing out all the bugs in one movement of a piece or maybe just the string section. But it is the daily rehearsals that create the fine performances.

Spring chorale concert to feature Brahms and Renaissance pieces

The University Chorale will give its spring term concert at 8 p.m. tonight in the Music Building auditorium. The concert group will be under the direction of Robert A. Harris, associate professor of music.

The chorale will open the concert with selections from Renaissance and Baroque music by Sweelinck, Barnabei, Monteverdi. Following this will be a performance of the "Psalm 98."

The featured work of the evening will be the "Liebeslieder Waltzer, Op. 52" by Johannes Brahms. Ralph and Albertine Votapek will appear as guest artists in this work, playing the duo-piano part. Vocal soloists in order of performance for the Brahms will be Charles Larkowski and Edward VanOveren, Sharon VanOveren and Sally Cargo, Candace Goetz Greer, Sandra Smalley and Sandra Wloszek, William Edward and David Pollock, and Charles Larkowski. Also featured will be a performance of "Psalms" by Foss. In this work soprano

Barbara Harris and tenor Edward VanOveren will be the soloists.

The Chorale will also perform works by Igor Stravinsky, Peter Schickele and Paul Hindemith.

The concert is free and open to the public.

DEEP THROAT
ADULTS ONLY IN COLOR X

DEEP THROAT is shattering records across America. It has become the most widely seen adult film in cinema history. Words are simply inadequate to convey the incredible eroticism of the film. DEEP THROAT is astoundingly explicit - it goes beyond anything previously made. DEEP THROAT is rapidly becoming the standard to which all other adult films will be compared. DEEP THROAT cannot be described - it must be experienced. Anything you have seen before is merely preparation for the experience of DEEP THROAT.

Deep Throat is still banned in New York. It's the film that was found obscene in Detroit and was responsible for the padlocking of five theaters. Deep Throat has been banned and subsequently acquitted more than any other film in history. The Beal Film Group is showing Deep Throat, uncut, not one frame has been deleted.

We present DEEP THROAT only to those persons over 18 years of age who enjoy extremely explicit erotic entertainment. We have no wish to offend or shock. If you do not enjoy viewing incredibly graphic sexual behavior, we at Beal strongly recommend that you stay away. In DEEP THROAT we have the ultimate in erotic entertainment, if you wish to experience it, we cordially invite you to attend - if you have any doubts about your probable reaction to this film, we strongly encourage you to enjoy another program. DEEP THROAT is strictly for those who can take it. All persons desiring admission to this picture must have proof of age.

Space Station's IM reign ends

By JACK WALKDEN
State News Sports Writer

The reign of Space Station as the intramural residence hall softball champion is over.

The Wilson Hall team, which won the title a year ago and had won its first five games this season, was eliminated from this year's tourney Monday night, by Wroden's, another Wilson Hall team, 8-7, in a thrilling nine-inning contest.

With the win, the Wroden's moved their season record to 7-0 and advanced into Wednesday night's quarterfinal of the IM championships.

The women's IM softball tourney is also in progress.

Wroden's, coached by Tom Mellen, bolted into an early lead against Space Station. Led by third baseman Charlie Rule, Wroden's scored seven runs in the first two innings. Rule clouted a pair of home runs, his third and fourth of the season, in the first two frames and drove in five runs.

Space Station was not to be denied, however, as it fought back to tie the contest, scoring one run in the third, three in the fourth and three in the sixth.

Even though Space Station tied the game in the bottom of the sixth inning, that frame proved to be the turning point of the game.

With the score tied 7-7, Space Station still had runners at first and second with just one out when Howard Wallach came in to pitch for the Wroden's. Wallach hurled four scoreless innings to win the game, but needed a freak play to end the sixth inning rally.

A Space Station player hit a fly ball to the Wroden's centerfielder, who appeared to make a diving catch, but the umpire ruled that the ball had been trapped. The two Space Station runners, figuring the ball had been caught, headed back to their respective bases.

The alert Wroden outfielder fired the ball to the second baseman Jeff Wilson, who tagged both runners for a double play.

The Wroden's won the contest in the ninth when Larry Prakken reached on an error and advanced to third on a pair of groundouts. After Wallach was intentionally walked, Pat O'Keefe delivered a run-scoring single to win the game.

Hitting has carried the Wroden's thus far this season, as the team boasts a .465 average.

Leading the squad in runs is Rule, who, along with batting .620, has hit four home runs. Three other players are hitting .500 or better, including O'Keefe (.571), Pete Picard (.550) and Wilson (.500).

Gudelsky glitters as freshman

By MIKE DRESCH
State News Sports Writer

Tom Gudelsky is a name that will become increasingly familiar to tennis fans at MSU in the next few years. The Muskegon freshman was a bright spot in an otherwise mediocre year this past season, and all indications are that he will continue to be a mainstay for the Spartan netters. Gudelsky, playing No. 6 singles, made it to the finals of the Big Ten tennis championships — the only Spartan to do so. The fact that he lost the finals did little to detract from his play.

"I thought it was a good experience for me," Gudelsky said. "I wasn't all that nervous playing in a championship meet. I'd played in tournaments before. It wasn't that different."

He did, however, qualify the statement. "This isn't to say that I wasn't nervous at all," he said. "I was a little tight. I always get up for the big matches."

Tennis is not a new game to Gudelsky. He first started playing when he was around nine years old. After taking lessons for short time, he decided he did not really like them. Instead, he started to hit a ball against a wall. He also played pick-up with other guys in the neighborhood.

"You see, I come from a tennis family," he said. "My uncle, my father and my brother all play. It was just natural that I would start playing."

"I used to play in tournaments during the summer with guys from other towns. Our mom used to drive us all over. I guess that's when I got really interested," he said.

"He (Drobac) has been real good for me," Gudelsky said. "He taught me how to play more aggressive tennis, and that's great. He was also really helpful during matches when he'd come over between sets and tell me what I was doing wrong or how to beat the guy I was playing."

Drobac is equally impressed with Gudelsky.

"Tommy has played some outstanding tennis this season," Drobac said. "He always gives his best. When he's behind, he still tries hard. He's going to be a good one."

As for his future in tennis at MSU, Gudelsky says he'd "like to move up."

"I can beat anybody on the team on any given day. It's just a matter of where I'll be the most effective. I'd rather play in a higher division than in one where I can just coast. I need the competition."

"It's hard to say where I'll be playing next year," he continued. "We've got this high school senior coming up that's supposed to be pretty good. We'll do alright next year."

Gudelsky plans to teach tennis in Muskegon this summer for the recreation department.

"It's a lot of fun," he said. "I did it last year and enjoyed it. The only trouble is that my game suffers. There's no real competition up there. I'll probably enter a couple of summer tournaments to stay active."

Gudelsky ended the Spartan tennis season with a 10-5 record. "It's alright, but I'd like to do better next year," he said.

"I've got to keep improving. That's my main goal."

Freshman Tom Gudelsky was the only Spartan tennis player to make it to the finals of the Big Ten championships.

Wrestler whips brother for fifth IM championship

Jim Fujii defeated his younger brother Bob Tuesday in the Men's Intramural Wrestling Tournament to win his fifth consecutive 118-pound title. The match was tight for the first two periods before Jim exploded in the third stanza, scoring five points en route to a 9-3 decision.

Dave Thrower was the winner at 142 pounds, shutting out both of his opponents. In the preliminaries Thrower defeated Garth Beatty, 4-0. He shellacked Gregg Pike 7-0 in the finals.

Bob Grigg's one-point escape with only 19 seconds remaining in the match proved to be the winning point in the 158-pound weight class as he nipped Curt Rickett, 1-0, for the title.

In the 177-pound weight class, which was by far the toughest division fielding three returning champions, Dan Pillow held off an aggressive Mario Gracia in the third period of the finals to win his third title this year, 3-1.

In an injury plagued heavyweight division Ron Erwin started out the first round eliminating Dave Hackem, who suffered a severely sprained ankle early in the opening period. Later Pete Edmund won the title when Erwin was unable to complete the match which tied, 4-4, in overtime.

Golfer notches first hole-in-one

Mike Watson, a member of the intermediate golf class at MSU, scored a hole-in-one on the seventh hole at Forest Akers east course Tuesday during class.

Watson used an 8-iron on the 154-yard hole. His shot hit about 10 feet short and curled into the cup. He shot a four-over-par 37 for the round.

He said it was his first hole-in-one.

Red tape snags grade changes

By PAT NARDI
State News Staff Writer

Eight weeks ago, Barb Smith, junior, 556 S. Wonders Hall, received a final grade of 1.0 in calculus.

Since then she has talked to her professor, the head of the Mathematics Dept., the ombudsman and a departmental grievance committee in a futile attempt to get her grade changed.

Smith said only two of the three members of her grievance committee showed up for her hearing, and one was very late.

"The committee didn't give me much time to talk, and they kept shooting questions at me," Smith said. It became very obvious whose side they were on. They were very much for the prof and they made no real bones about that."

Smith has discovered what several students have already learned — changing a final grade is a complicated process in which few students come out on top.

Ombudsman James Rust said that considerably less than 10 per cent of student appeals are successful. Last year a dozen students appealed their grades.

Smith said she was told by her professor that she had a 2.5 going into the final examination, and that the final would count one-third of her final grade.

"I didn't think my grade could have possibly dropped that much," Smith said.

Since then, Smith says she now understands that it was possible for her to get a 1.0, and will not further appeal the grievance committee's decision handed down Friday, which sides with her professor.

Smith, a medical technology major, said grades are important to her now because she is trying to get into medical school.

Rust agreed that grades are important in society.

"The pressure for grades is just incredible. I would not be a student now if you paid me. The students just dig for grades. I hate grades, myself, but unfortunately society places a great value on one's record, making grades necessary," he said.

Rust, also a professor of English, said he talks to more students in his office about grade changes than for any other reason.

"It is a very difficult thing to get a grade changed, and I think as a faculty member, that's the way it should be," he said.

Rust said the faculty "sweats blood" whenever they make up grades.

"When I was an instructor, that's how I earned my money. You take grading seriously and try to do the best you can. And I don't think I'm the exception to the rule," he said.

The ombudsman said the first person a student should go to in trying to change his grade is the instructor who gave it. Most disputes are settled between the student and the instructor, Rust said.

"You must convince your instructor in order to change your grade. Nobody can change a grade except the person who gave it. The department or college grievance committee can recommend a change but they cannot order it."

Smith said this rule is unfair.

"I don't think it's fair for a prof to have the final say in changing a grade if the grievance committee looks into it in a justified and unbiased way, and comes to a conclusion in the student's favor," Smith said.

Rust went on to explain that if the student does not get satisfaction from a professor, he can go to the head of the department and he or she will grant the student a hearing with a grievance committee.

If the student loses at the department level, he or she may appeal to the college. The college grievance committee will not read any examinations to determine if a student deserved a higher grade, rather it will determine whether the student received due process, in which instructors made class requirements explicit and then abided by them.

"They are concerned with procedure rather than substance," Rust said.

Rust said of the dozen appeals made last year at the department level about two or three went as high as the college level.

After the college level, a student can only appeal to the dean of his college. However, if he bases his case on the professor giving him a bad-faith grade because of a personality clash, he may take his case to the Student Faculty Judiciary.

Though several students have come into the office to question their rights, Joyce Tubaugh, asst. director of Judicial Programs, said there has never been an actual case.

CASH BONUSES OF up to $600 for Michigan's 420,000 Vietnam veterans will be up for voter approval on the November ballot, following Gov. Milliken's signing Tuesday of a legislative proposal that was recently approved.

The bonus would apply to veterans who served for at least 190 days between Jan. 1, 1969, and Sept. 1, 1973, and received honorable discharges.

A similar proposal which contained education benefits not included in the current proposal was defeated at the polls in 1972.

MICHIGAN'S TWO-CENT gasoline tax increase enacted in 1973 will not be subject to voter repeal, the Michigan Supreme Court ruled, 4-3, Tuesday. The per-gallon tax hike, of which one half of a cent goes to mass transit programs such as Lansing's Capitol Area Transportation Authority, had been attacked by citizen groups who wanted to repeal it through an initiative ballot proposal.

The high court ruled that citizens may not reject legislative appropriations to a state agency.

THE STATE CAPITOL was plagued with power brownouts Tuesday as temperatures soared above 80 degrees and government air conditioners plugged away at peak capacity.

The state House was forced to adjourn its afternoon session when the lights went out, microphones would not work and the electrical voting board became inoperative. The lights also went out in Gov. Milliken's office during the signing ceremony for the Vietnam veterans bonus proposal.

AN ANN ARBOR ordinance, similar to one under development in East Lansing, which tightly controls the outdoor display of advertising signs was declared partially invalid Tuesday by the Michigan Supreme Court.

Several provisions in the sign ordinance, when taken together, illegally outlaw the use of billboards in Ann Arbor, the court ruled. The court sent the case, which is a law suit by Ann Arbor businessmen, back to circuit court for fact-finding. East Lansing officials have enacted a temporary ecologically motivated ban on the erection of free-standing outdoor signs while they wait for the Ann Arbor case to be completed.

THE REPUBLICAN WHO lost to Democrat Richard VanderVeen in the special Grand Rapids congressional election last February to replace Gerald Ford has announced he will seek the office again in November.

Sen. Robert VanderLaan, R-Kentwood, said he will seek reelection to the state Senate instead.
