Violence over school integration drives Boston mayor to seek help

BOSTON (AP) — Mayor Kevin H. White requested on Tuesday that U.S. marshals be stationed in South Boston to keep racial violence over school integration from spreading to other parts of the city.

"Without additional assistance, the school buses cannot roll in South Boston, the court-ordered busing plan cannot be implemented and the general safety of the community cannot be assured," White said.

"Unless adequate assistance is forthcoming, the volatile situation in one isolated area of the city can spread rapidly and relentlessly throughout the entire city," White said. "And unless the intense burden on the police can be relieved in South Boston, our efforts in other sections will be totally frustrated."

Scattered incidents of violence have broken out in other sections of the city in recent days.

There was no immediate response on the request for federal marshals from U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity, who ordered that black and white children be bused when schools opened Sept. 12.

At least eight people were injured Tuesday when violence erupted at English High School. They included a black television cameraman, four black girls, two white boys and a black teacher's aide. The school, on the fringe of predominantly black Roxbury, had been generally peaceful until now.

The violence spread to the nearby Mission Hill housing project, where several hundred black youths milled about, throwing rocks. Stones and other missiles were thrown from the project's rooftops and at least one policeman was struck and injured.

At Technical High School in Roxbury, about 75 black pupils stoned cars, smashed school windows and burned a black teacher's car.

Until this week, most of the disruption over integration was confined to South Boston, a working class Irish neighborhood. But trouble broke out Monday at Roslindale High School in another white neighborhood and Tuesday in the Roxbury area.

At English High, small groups of blacks and whites fought in the streets after the school was cleared by a false fire alarm. Some black pupils smashed the windows of police cars. Officers encircled a construction site where teen-agers were picking up pipes and sticks.

In South Boston, the black driver of a city bus suffered eye cuts and a chest injury when he was struck by a rock and the bus slammed into a parked car.

Three teen-agers were arrested in the Roslindale section when they failed to heed orders to disperse, police said.

White said he wanted the marshals called in before someone is killed. He asked: "Do you have to have the body on the altar to show a need for federal marshals, three bodies to show we need the National Guard and a holocaust to show we need federal troops?"

White said he had no immediate intention to call for use of the National Guard or federal troops.

However, members of the Black Caucus in the state legislature appealed to Garrity to call in federal troops or "federalize" the National Guard, "whatever is necessary to ensure the safety of black children attending school in hostile white communities."

In his letter to Garrity, White said the presence of police is provoking disruption in South Boston.

Ford asks aid for jobless

WASHINGTON (AP) — Warning that inflation can "destroy our country, our homes, our liberties," President Ford Tuesday proposed an anti-inflation campaign combining tax breaks for business expansion with hikes for corporations and many individuals.

In a nationally broadcast address to a joint session of Congress, Ford also called for special help for the unemployed and the beleaguered construction industry, and for new moves to conserve energy.

The President was interrupted by applause 25 times during the 44-minute speech, but most of it came from the Republican side of the aisle. Some congressional Democrats quickly modified general pledges of cooperation with criticism of his tax package.

As was widely reported in advance, Ford asked Congress to impose a temporary, one-year income tax surcharge of 5 per cent on corporations and individual taxpayers in the middle and upper income range.

As explained by the White House, the surcharge would hit families with adjusted gross incomes of $15,000 or more and single persons with incomes of $7,500 or above. It would apply only to their income above these amounts.

The President also sought a liberalized, across-the-board investment tax credit of 10 per cent to encourage expansion of factories and business and to assist public utilities complaining of increased fuel and borrowing costs.

Ford asked the American public to drive less, heat less and waste less food scraps from the family dinner table.

The President also sported a red and white badge spelling in capital letters the single word: WIN. Inviting every American to wear one, Ford indicated he wants it to become a symbol for winning the war on

'U' says unionizers ignore economic facts

By ROSANNE LESS

State News Staff Writer

The fledgling Student Workers Union may be threatening the people it wants to help.

That seems to be the consensus of university administrators, who maintain that the student workers are loaded with empty ideological rhetoric but are not facing harsh economic facts. The university claims that there is no way

Analysis

Students can get higher wages and lucrative fringe benefits without hiking costs for those who bear most of them already — the students who live in residence halls and pay room and board fees.

The leaders of the proposed union argue that this is not so. They do not have economic figures to support their view, but they said this is because the amounts involved are subject to collective bargaining.

For many students, the job in the residence hall cafeteria, no matter how menial and unattractive is the difference between staying in school and not going to school at all.

Increased wages and lucrative fringe benefits could mean only one harsh economic reality — fewer jobs and increased room and board rates — and these prospects may not be so appealing during a period of tight scholarships and a tight job market, Eldon Nonnamaker, vice president for student affairs, said.

"I have been working with budgets long enough to know that you don't get something for nothing. There is no such thing as a free ride," Nonnamaker said. "Students should get to know about the limitations of the University budget, how money is appropriated."

"We (the University) have been very neutral; we do not encourage or discourage unionism. There are no arbitrary or unilateral regulations imposed by the administration in regard to the Student Workers Union."

"I am not taking any position on the student union. I have not talked to that many students about the union. To be perfectly honest, no student has talked to me about the union," Nonnamaker said.

"The University can decrease wages any time they want to unless you have an organization to stop them," Tim Cain, spokesman for the Student Workers Union and president of ASMSU, claims. "Furthermore, every hour that I work should be equal in pay to what nonstudent personnel are paid."

"The University has money when they want to have it," he said.

Cain added that he could not justify how the University can spend "millions of dollars" on a new ice arena and a performing arts building and not consider current student demands.

But the ice arena was financed entirely through the revenue from football and basketball tickets. Nonstudent ticket prices have risen consistently with student prices. The new performing arts building is being financed through state appropriations and private donations.

"The University vice presidents, who were already in the $40,000-a-year income bracket got nice new raises (about two weeks ago)," Cain said. "The student workers want less than an eight per cent raise across the board."

"There's a lot of bucks around this University and we want our share of it," Doyle O'Connor, interim chairman of ASMSU's Dept. of Labor Relations, said.

"In the past 20 years the University has consistently found the funds that it needs for a massive expansion of its physical plant."

"AFSCME was unionized on this campus and fought for a decent wage level. The University found the money to pay for those wage increases despite claims that it could not. It's about time the University found the money for student workers," he said.

AFSCME, the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employees, represents about 1,200 service workers at MSU.

O'Connor added that he thought the University should begin funding administrators' salaries more realistically and that the basic bargaining point at this time is to move student pay to that of full time scale rates, though not necessarily to the AFSCME level.

The most common student jobs in a hall are those in the cafeteria and as receptionists. The rest are filled by AFSCME service workers.

The most controllable economic factor is also the food and labor. When maintenance costs go up, or if the AFSCME employees get a raise, this reduces the budget allotments of food and labor even more, Eckel said.

When this happens, he said, the question facing management is where to cut back. This is reflected in fewer jobs and smaller meal portions.

"There is no big clamoring (for a student union) as far as I can see," C. Keith Groty, assistant University vice president for personnel and employee relations, said.

Groty, who currently represents the University in collective bargaining, is both an arbitration labor leader and educator. He began his professional career in Royal Oak in 1963, when he organized the first teachers union for that school district.

Groty attributes the student workers movement to a "me too" attitude.

He says that students have been raised

Unpaid parking fines spur midnight arrest

By STEVE ORR

State News Staff Writer

An MSU senior hit the sack early Monday night. He had a test the next morning and, as he put it, "I always go to bed early the night before a test."

As Roger Addelson's roommate Greg Anstett studied, at a time Addelson estimated as 12:30 a.m., someone knocked at their East Akers Hall door.

Anstett answered the door to find an MSU public safety officer who asked if Addelson was there. Anstett replied that he was sleeping.

"You'd better wake him up," officer T. Barringer said.

Anstett complied, and when Addelson was awakened, he found that Barringer had a warrant for his arrest for four outstanding parking violations incurred on campus last spring.

Barringer told an incredulous Addelson that he had to come down to the public safety office and post a $40 bond or face a night in jail.

Addelson asked if he could come in the next morning and post the bond, but Barringer said no. Addelson agreed somewhat grudgingly to accompany Barringer, and asked Barringer if he could write a check for the $40. No, said Barringer. Addelson then offered two credit cards that feature bail bond money service and the officer again said they were no good.

Barringer explained that the public safety office would accept only cash.

Addelson roused a neighbor and borrowed the $40, and then tried to give it to Barringer on the spot. No go, said Barringer. It must be paid at the public safety building.

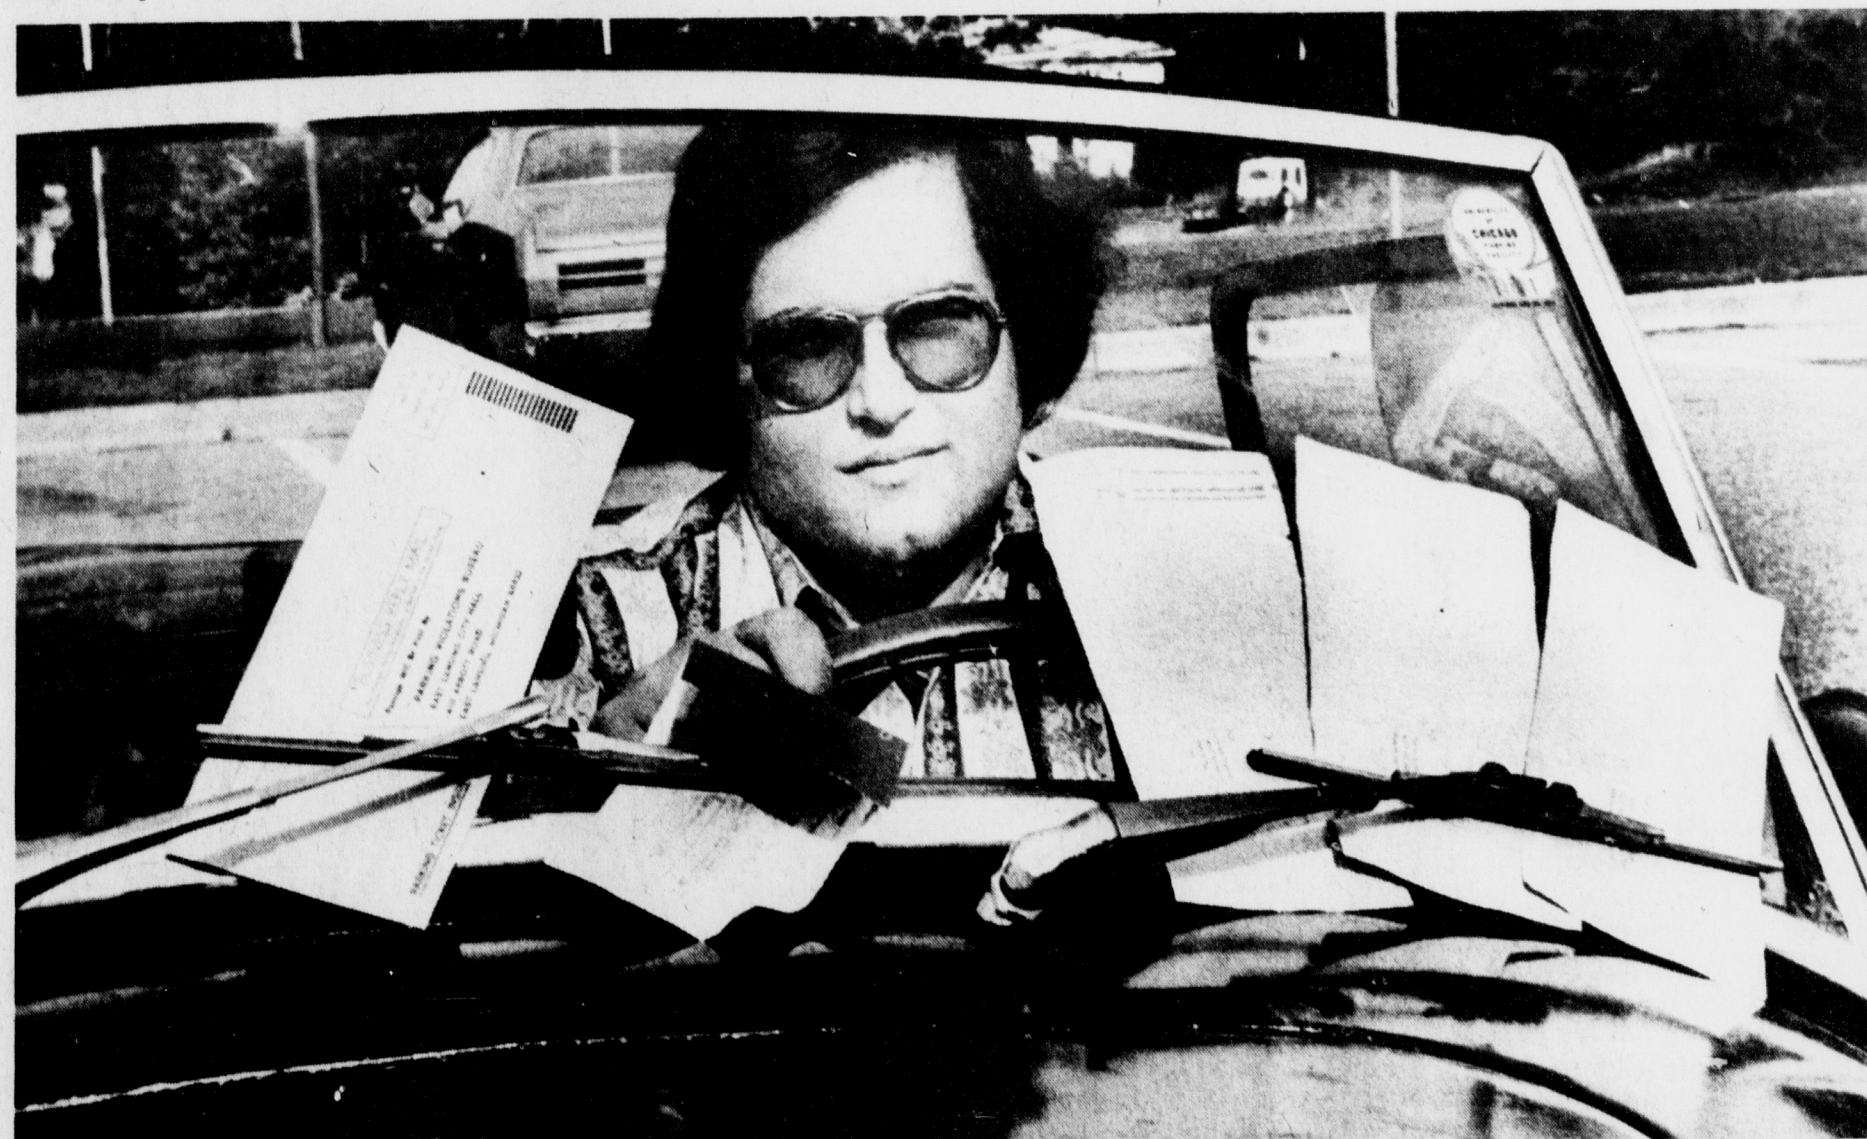

Addelson, who did not dispute the tickets themselves, went to the station, paid the bond, was released and made it back to bed at about 1:30 a.m.

"The whole thing just pissed me off," Addelson said later Tuesday. "All I had to do at the station was fill out a receipt. There was no reason why it all couldn't wait until bright and early the next morning."

Addelson said Barringer told him that the warrant had been issued sometime during the summer. Addelson said he had not been contacted by campus police until Tuesday morning.

Addelson said that when he asked Barringer if he could have come earlier, Barringer replied, "No, we're too busy." "You're lucky," Addelson claims the officer continued. "I was thinking about

Roger Addelson, MSU senior, looks a little peeved, but it is not so much the four parking tickets stuck under his windshield wipers that made him upset. What bothers him is that campus police woke him in his residence hall room in the wee hours of the morning to arrest him for not paying the parking fines. Addelson claims the police could have picked a little better time to serve their warrant.

Greek regime sworn in today

The national unity cabinet of Premier Constantine Caramanlis resigned Tuesday to make way for a caretaker government that will conduct Greece's first parliamentary elections in almost 11 years.

Caramanlis, 67, a veteran of more than 30 years of Greek politics, will head the interim regime scheduled to be sworn in today. He returned from exile in July with the fall of the military dictatorship. The election is scheduled for Nov. 17.

Committee OKs new tax plan

A tax plan worth $1.8 billion a year to savers and aimed at aiding the ailing housing industry, was approved Tuesday by the House Ways and Means Committee over Ford Administration opposition.

The vote was 15 - 6 in favor of the proposal by Rep. Donald G. Brozman, D - Colo., to exclude from taxation $500 of interest earned on money an individual keeps in a savings account, $1,000 in the case of a couple.

Rep. Herman T. Scheebeli, R - Pa., senior GOP member of the panel, who voted against the proposal, said after the vote that President Ford's economic tax package, which was presented Tuesday, did not include any comparable provision.

The Treasury Dept. fought the bill on grounds it would add to the federal deficit.

Ford layoff tests Labor party

Ford Motor Co. announced Tuesday the layoff of 4,000 men at a plant near London, causing new problems for Laborite Prime Minister Harold Wilson two days before Britain's national elections.

Wilson has spurned Conservative party proposals for a coalition government, arguing the Laborites alone are better equipped to insure industrial peace in Britain.

The Wilson government had already expressed dismay over a new pay settlement at Ford, saying it exceeded the norms of its "social contract" with labor and industry.

But the striking 1,000 specialist at Ford's Dagenham plant near London want higher shift allowances, and Ford says their absence has resulted in supply shortages and forced the layoff of workers.

Senate hearings may reopen

Nelson A. Rockefeller and his family have given more than $100,000 in recent years to the campaigns of Senate and House members now eligible to vote on his nomination to be vice president.

Senate Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield said Tuesday that publication of reports about Rockefeller's gifts to aides and public officials "could well reopen Senate hearings" on the vice presidential nomination.

As far as he could ascertain, Mansfield added, the gifts have "all been legitimate," but he said the reports are bound to raise questions.

Rockefeller still faces hearings on his nomination before the House Judiciary Committee.

Earthquake rocks Caribbean

An earthquake rocked the eastern Caribbean area Tuesday, badly damaging historic churches and other buildings on the islands of Antigua and St. Kitts in the Leeward chain.

Dr. Moises Vazquez, director of the Geophysical Institute in Cayey, Puerto Rico, said the quake was the hardest of six tremors in the Caribbean this year and one of the four most intense in the area in 400 years.

There were no immediate reports of death or serious injury.

Funds for Nixon staff revealed

The 64 federal employees detailed to the San Clemente, Calif., home of former President Richard M. Nixon are being paid salaries at the annual rate of $841,800, Sen. Joseph M. Montoya, D - N.M., disclosed late Monday.

Secret Service protection, costing $662,000, was not included in the figure.

Montoya, chairman of the Senate Appropriations subcommittee on treasury, postal service and general government, said the new spending figures released Monday were supplied by the White House at his request.

Leftists take safe conduct offer

The six leftist guerrillas holding the Venezuela consulate and seven hostages, including American diplomat Barbara Hutchison, have accepted a presidential offer of safe conduct out of the country, U.S. Ambassador Robert Hurwitch announced late Tuesday.

The ambassador made his announcement to newsmen near the consulate, where the hostages have been held for the past 12 days.

Hurwitch, the Spanish ambassador and the Venezuelan charge d'affaires had just conferred with Gen. Rafael Guzman Acosta, head of the national police, and confirmed what they had heard from Guzman with rebel chieftain Radhames Mendez Vargas.

The offer being accepted by Mendez and five of his cohorts assures them safe conduct out of the Dominican Republic to any country of their choosing under guarantees of the American, Spanish and Venezuelan embassies.

Ford testimony put off a week

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford's historic appearance before a House Judiciary subcommittee was postponed Tuesday until Oct. 17 "to afford ample time for selection and sequestration of the Watergate jury."

Chairman William Hungate, D - Mo., issued a brief announcement saying his subcommittee had made that decision with the concurrence of the White House and that Ford would appear before the subcommittee at 10 a.m. Oct. 17.

Hungate said he had talked with U.S. District Judge John J. Sirica on Monday, but not since then. Sirica is presiding over the Watergate coverup trial, which now is in the jury selection stage.

"We inquired at the courthouse if they had a jury as of today," the congressman said. "They said they didn't."

Hungate declined to identify to whom he talked.

Earlier, one of Sirica's clerks confirmed that the jurist had promised Hungate he would advise him "when he's made up his own mind whether it's likely we'll have a jury."

Hungate said Special Watergate Prosecutor Leon Jaworski had "expressed concern" that Ford's testimony on his pardon for Nixon might be construed as prejudicial to the trial of the former president's aides and campaign officials.

But the chairman said Ford would appear Oct. 17 "at the latest," even in the event jurors still have not been picked by then.

The White House said that any postponement would be up to the subcommittee.

The jury selection continued at a slow, careful pace earlier Tuesday, and prospects clearly were slim that one could be sequestered by Thursday morning. But lawyers said the jury could be empaneled by Friday.

Subcommittee Democrats and most Republicans, including Rep. David Dennis, R - Ind., said they agreed that they should not question Ford if that would risk prejudicial publicity.

"Nobody wants to put it off," Dennis said. "But nobody wants to gum it up if that's what the special prosecutor feels it would do."

Rep. Wiley Mayne, R - Iowa, said he was the only subcommittee member who strongly objected at a closed-door meeting Monday to any postponement.

Ford may be the first President in American history to go before a congressional committee for public grilling, according to Library of Congress research.

The library said that Abraham Lincoln met with members of committees at the White House during the Civil War. Experts are split on whether that constituted testimony or merely consultation.

Ford promised to answer 14 questions formally spelled out in two "resolutions of inquiry" before the subcommittee.

They include whether Ford knew of any specific pending charges against Nixon, whether negotiations for the pardon began before Nixon resigned and what Ford knew about Nixon's mental and physical health.

Ford has said at news conferences that no deals were made between him and Nixon or their staffs and that he only had news accounts of Nixon's health plus one aide's description of Nixon's personal appearance when he decided to grant the pardon.

Campaign funds bill OKd

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate passed 60 to 16 Tuesday night a sweeping, Watergate-stimulated bill to curb campaign contributions and spending and to finance presidential races with public funds.

The compromise measure was sent to the House for final action, expected within a day or two. Both House and Senate earlier had approved similar but separate versions.

Sen. Howard W. Cannon, D - Nev., floor manager of the bill, said the legislation, growing out of the Watergate scandals, was designed "to eliminate the problems so prevalent in the 1972 campaign."

But Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D - Mass., said he supported the compromise with mixed feelings.

He said it set "a double standard of reform" by providing for use of tax funds to finance presidential campaigns but not Senate and House races, in which he said the need for public financing was probably greater.

Republican leader Hugh Scott, said he also regretted the lack of public financing of congressional races. But he called it a reasonably good bill overall.

Like Kennedy, he said one of its key features is the establishment of an independent commission to administer the legislation and investigate alleged violations.

Sen. James B. Allen, D - Ala., said he was forced to vote against the bill because of its public financing provisions, which he denounced as "a raid on the taxpayers' pocketbooks for the benefit of politicians."

Common Cause, a self-styled citizens lobby, called the bill "the only major legislative response by the 93rd Congress to the Watergate scandals."

President Ford's position on the compromise measure is in doubt. But Scott said that in his judgment the President will sign it.

The public financing of presidential campaigns and party nominating conventions would be funded from the voluntary system established in 1971 under which taxpayers may earmark $1 of their federal income taxes for campaign financing by checking a box on their federal returns.

Cannon said that as of July 1 the fund contained about $29½ million and was projected to total about $75 million by the time of the 1976 election.

The bill would limit presidential candidates to spending $20 million on their general election campaigns and $10 million on seeking their party's presidential nomination.

The government would pay the full cost of the campaigns of the Democratic and Republican nominees and reimburse minor party presidential candidates in proportion to their share of the popular vote.

For primary campaigns of presidential contenders, the government would match private contributions of $250 or less on a dollar for dollar basis up to $5 million.

The bill also provides up to $2 million in tax money to finance both the Democratic and Republican presidential nominating conventions and lesser amounts for minor parties, depending on their popular support.

Two men awarded Nobel Peace Prize

OSLO, Norway (AP) — Former Japanese Prime Minister Eisaku Sato and Sean MacBride of Ireland were awarded the Nobel Peace Prize Tuesday for efforts to limit nuclear weapons and to protect human rights.

The Nobel Committee of the Norwegian parliament, which announced the award, said the two men would share it equally. It is worth about $124,000.

Sato, Japan's prime minister from 1964 to 1972, was cited for signing the nuclear nonproliferation treaty and for advocating that Japan not acquire nuclear weapons of its own. The committee said his policies contributed largely to stabilizing conditions in the Pacific area.

MacBride, a former Irish foreign minister, is UN commissioner for South-West Africa, a territory for which the United Nations is trying to gain independence from South

"Sean MacBride's efforts for human rights and Eisaku Sato's work for limitation of nuclear weapons and for international conciliation contributed, each in its own way, to securing peace," the committee said. "Their efforts have come in areas that in our time are central to the work for peace."

OFFER INFLATION IDEAS

Aged recall depression

By RALPH FRAMMOLINO

The threat of another depression is a growing concern in light of America's economic problems. But the real experts — people who lived through one roughly 25 years ago — cannot seem to agree with each other about the situation.

Senior citizens, some doing their shopping, others located in a nursing home, reflected on the availability of products and their own personal hardships Tuesday while President Ford prepared to deliver his economic message.

"I think most of it is a fake," commented Edward Schacht, 81. "I think there's plenty of everything. People can have what they want."

Schacht explained that today's hardships come close to what he had to go through during the depression.

"We, even the wife and I, were on welfare. We got $8 a week to buy groceries and stuff, and that was not living," he said. "If it happens again, it's not necessary."

Schacht admitted there is somewhat of a pinch being felt, even in the food he eats, but that does not shake him in his belief that there are plenty of resources available.

"Our grandson has a Lincoln Continental and only gets seven miles per gallon, yet he can get all the gasoline he wants," Schacht said.

Though very young then, Harriet Oppenlander, 50, remembers the effect the depression had on her family.

"We moved to Florida so we could pick grapefruit and eat them. The prices were too high, she said.

She also shed some light on the political situation of that time.

"People didn't like President Herbert Hoover," she said. "I always heard that if it weren't for Hoover, we wouldn't have a depression."

George F. Thompson, a 78-year-old World War I veteran, said the situation is similar to the depression he lived through. "Only thing that is different is we got more money. I don't think we're going into a depression. We talk one thing and do something else," he said.

emphasized. "They can call it anything they want to, but I've been through two or three of them.

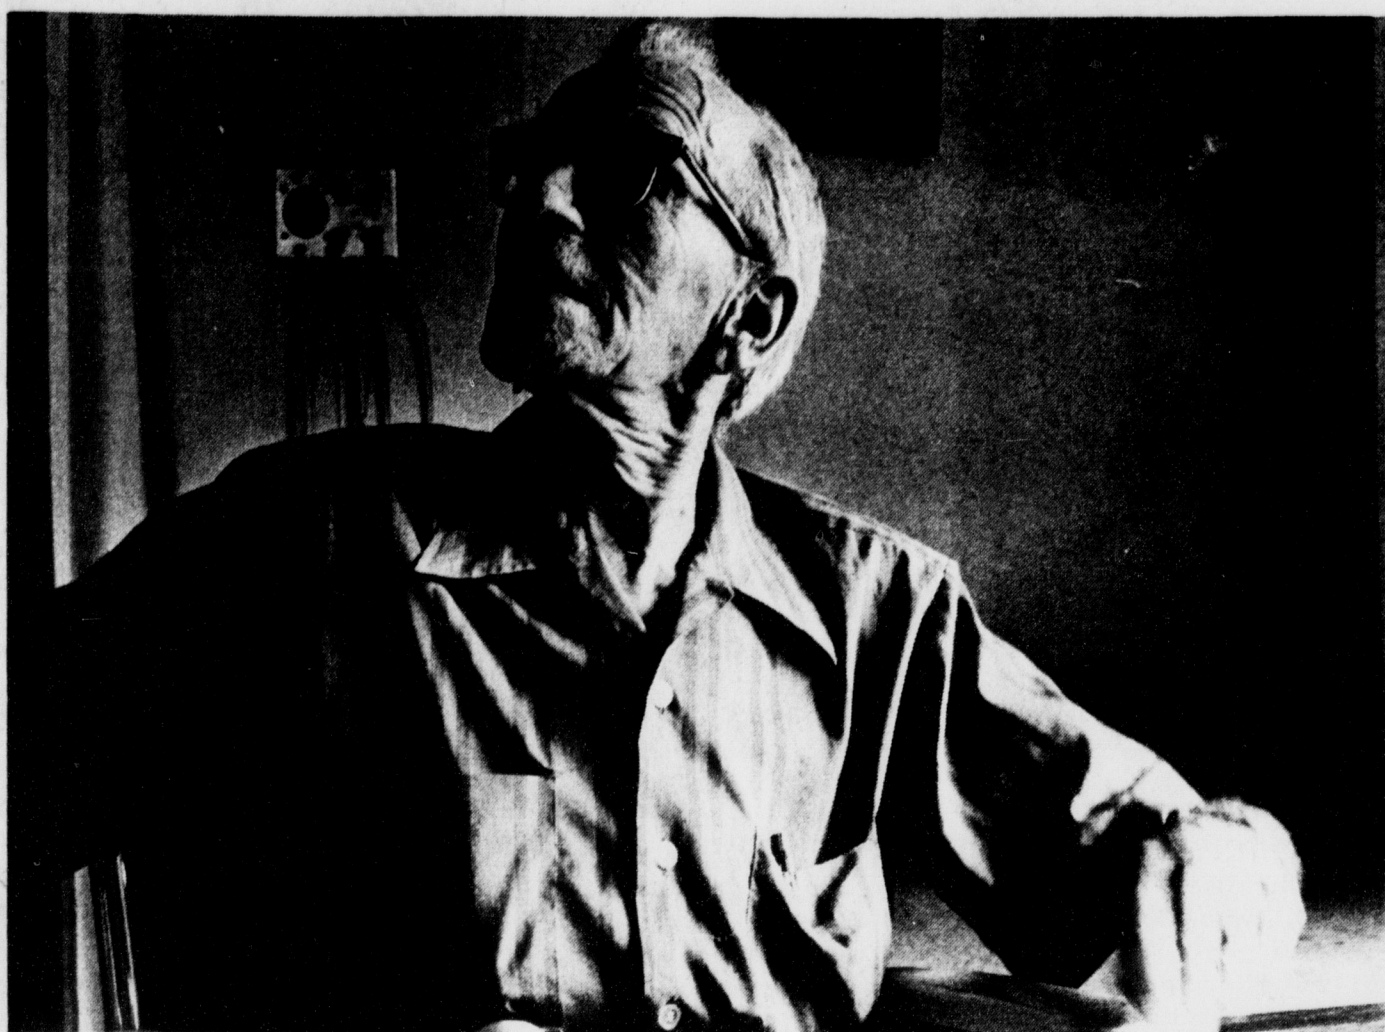

"I've been through four wars and I've never seen such a mess as this," she analyzed. "We have a very immature America, and it's not worth a damn."

She offered a few suggestions to help better the economic situation.

"Work hard, save your money, and don't give to charity, because everyone is taking care of them already. I started with nothing and rose above the top. Anyone who can't make it in America and isn't crippled is just lazy. If it's in you, you'll rise above it," she said.

Another woman suggested the current economic hysteria can be partly blamed on the media for its unfair polling of public opinion and criticism of the government.

"The rest of the world is in the same boat," she commented. "Let's be positive. Let's say 'no, there's not going to be a depression.'"

Having lived through one depression, Edward Schacht, 81, is not so certain he would want to try a second. Schacht says economic conditions today are not as bad as what he and his wife went through, though he admits he is feeling the pinch.

Common Cause seeks support of reform petition

LANSING (UPI) — Michigan Common Cause said Tuesday it is seeking support for a planned initiative petition on comprehensive political reforms from all candidates for the legislature.

The group said it is sending a statement outlining the basic elements of the petition to the candidates and will make their responses public shortly before the Nov. 5 election.

The petition includes provisions on campaign financing reform, regulation of lobbyists, prohibitions against conflicts of interest by government officials and an independent enforcement commission.

Common Cause also has scheduled a series of town meetings at which the public can review the proposals. The meetings will be held in Kalamazoo Oct. 22, in Detroit Oct. 22, in Ann Arbor Oct. 23, in Lansing Oct. 28 and in Grand Rapids Oct. 29.

MSU asks state for record budget

By GARY HOFFMAN
State News Staff Writer

The University is asking the legislature and Gov. Milliken to make the 1975-76 budget the biggest ever at a time when the governor and lawmakers may not even let MSU spend all the money already appropriated for 1974-75.

President Wharton told the Academic Council Tuesday the administration is requesting a $21 million dollar increase for next year's budget, the "largest single dollar increment we've ever requested."

However, the increases for next year's budget may not mean much as the state legislature may demand that MSU not spend a portion of its current budget. Under state law, the legislature may demand that a university not spend a portion of its appropriations if revenues to the state are lower than expected.

Wharton, mentioning possible freezes on spending of one-half or one per cent, said the state faces a huge fiscal deficit because of its depressed economy and possible loss of food and drug sales tax revenue.

"The governor has said he would not increase state taxes to cover any deficit, but would cut state services, which would include universities.

However, the bill to eliminate food and drug sales taxes will be on the November ballot and passage is uncertain.

Estimates about losses of revenue range from $160 million to $250 million.

Wharton said an attempt to cut one-half of one per cent from the budget would cut the money available for faculty salaries by 3 or 4 per cent.

Last year, in spite of inflation and tight funds, MSU was able to raise salaries to keep pace with inflation.

"Last year we were able to effectuate increases, though not as much as we would have liked to," Wharton said.

The University was able to economize and provide twice the funds provided by the legislature for salaries, without tuition or fee increases, Wharton said.

Provost John Cantlon said unanticipated enrollment increases placed additional financial stress upon the University.

"The increase is not incoming freshmen, but a high percentage of returning students," Cantlon said.

The "out of trend" enrollment increase reflects the nationwide high unemployment situation and is producing similar stresses at universities around the country, Cantlon said.

The record budget increase requested for 1975-76 will not alleviate the current tight financial situation in the University but will merely keep pace with inflation, Wharton said.

The request reflects salary and wage increases of 12 per cent and goods and services increases of 11 per cent, he said.

"Little of the increase is for new programs," Wharton said. But he did say the budget request included funds for a new college of law and a new school of dentistry.

"Needless to say, what the response of the governor's budget office, or the legislature will be, we don't know," Wharton said.

Fuel summit stigmatic

During the next generation the world community will consume enough energy to melt the entire Lake Michigan full of plate glass.

The American public is demanding energy in sufficient supply, from reliable sources, without environmental damage and without peril from radiation. Industrialists mutter that those conditions are impossible to meet. But industrialists, it may be noted, have not often been credited for far sightedness.

Neither have government commissions. The Ford and Nixon administrations have both issued measures to supposedly "ease" the energy crisis. But the new policies are shaping up as nothing but stop gaps. The 55 m.p.h. speed limit is notorious for its lack of enforcement. According to one Michigan State Police officer, "As long as you stay under 65 we'll overlook it."

Now, like a new ecological crumb thrown to an expectant public, President Ford is proposing "voluntary gasoline rationing."

But what Ford apparently does not want to recognize is that the answer to the energy crisis is not a few half-hearted attempts to reduce already swelling energy needs. America must abandon her inefficient, outmoded and polluting energy sources for new production alternatives.

The coal industry is plagued by antipollution requirements. Natural gas is in critically short supply.

Nuclear power, under the best conditions, will supply less than one fifth of America's energy requirements by 1985. The price of the country's oil supply depends largely on the political whims of Arab moguls. What sense does "reducing gasoline consumption" make in the wake of these and other reminders that America's present energy sources are obsolete?

And what of the alternatives? Solar power farms, superconductive generators, geothermal power, solar power space stations, waste heat, coal gasification and laser pulse devices have all surfaced possible means of energy production given adequate development funds.

Meanwhile, some 100,000 industrial scientists engineers and technicians remain unemployed. American corporations today employ less research personnel than does Germany or the U.S.S.R. And corporation heads, who hold a majority on Ford's energy commissions, seem obsessed with turning out next year's models and monitoring public access to fuel so that they can keep on turning out next year's models for a long time to come.

It is time that President Ford stopped stocking his energy summits with the visions of those who can only see to the self-indulgent tips of their green-stained fingers. The answers he seeks, he will be surprised to find, have been waiting for quite awhile.

Bicyclists need help

Bicycles are ecological modes of transportation, but they are so numerous in the East Lansing area that they contribute to the traffic problems in the city and on the MSU campus. But before area officials begin any crackdown against rule-violating bicyclists, corrective measures must be taken to improve biking conditions.

Anyone who has walked across campus can see that many bike riders do not pay any attention to traffic rules. This fall the MSU Dept. of Public Safety has placed two policemen on fulltime duty to catch all rule-violating bicyclists, but violations continue.

Meanwhile, a proposed East Lansing ordinance would have bicycles impounded if they are not properly licensed, and locked in racks. Perhaps the licensing regulation is enforceable, but few bike racks can be found in the city now.

MSU's campus also suffers from a lack of racks. Many racks around campus are often filled to capacity with extra bikes strewn all around. Some campus buildings do not even have bicycle racks near many doors, so people park their bikes in doorways, bushes and on sidewalks — against University regulations.

Also, the narrow campus bike paths are poorly lighted, so it is safer for bicyclists to ride on sidewalks after dark. That too, is against regulations.

The ecological and relatively safe bicycle is here to stay. Area officials should move to publicize traffic regulations and enforcement procedures, increase the number of bike racks and improve the lighting of bicycle paths before harassing the biking population.

The Doctor's Bag

BY ARNOLD WERNER, M.D.

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at the MSU Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

I have been to my doctor for a lump in my breast. He confirms that it is there, but says "it's nothing to worry about." How does a doctor decide when to do a biopsy or if the lump is something to worry about? My doctor's statement "it's nothing to worry about" worries me. Lumps in breasts are frightening, conjuring up immediate images of cancer. Yet, the overwhelming majority of breast lumps are not due to cancer but are due instead to benign accumulations of tissue fluid (cysts), inflammations, injuries and normal anatomy.

A physician makes a decision about a lump based on a number of factors. He assesses whether the lump is in one breast or both and whether there is one lump or many lumps. The doctor also decides whether the mass is easily moved or whether it is fixed to tissue underlying it, the quality of the mass (soft, firm, fluid-filled) and where in the breast it is located. Factors such as a history of breast cancer in the family and changes in the appearance of the lump at different times during the menstrual cycle also guide the physician in determining the importance of the lump.

The age of the patient is also significant, breast cancer being unusual in women under 30. A biopsy (surgical removal of a piece of tissue) is done whenever there is a slight possibility that the finding could be malignant.

The best protection against having an undetected breast malignancy is self-examination. While malignancies are unusual in younger women, it is wise to begin to examine breasts on a monthly basis in late adolescence or early adulthood. In this way, the woman can become familiar with her normal breasts and form the habit of regular examination. Examination by a physician is also indicated on a regular basis and should be a part of a routine checkup. The best way to learn how to examine one's breast is to have it demonstrated by a physician at the time of examination. Some guidelines follow.

The best time of examination is one week after menstruation begins. At this time the breasts are not swollen from hormonal influences and are generally not tender. The breasts should be observed in a mirror, first with arms at sides then with arms above the head. Although one breast is usually slightly larger than the other (the left one) they should, by and large, be symmetrical and not have any puckering of the skin. While in a shower or bath, when the skin is slippery, the breasts should be felt all over with the flat fingers.

Following the wet exam, the woman should lie down and place one hand behind her head. With the other hand, the fingers and palm still flattened, she should feel the opposite breast moving her hand in a spiral direction swinging outward on the upper part of the breast and inward on the lower part of the breast. The other breast is then checked in a similar fashion. Checking while lying down with the arm tucked behind the head, the breast is flattened against the chest wall and lumps are more easily detected. The procedure should be repeated with the woman sitting. This makes it possible to be more accurate in checking the lower part of the breast. Any new lumps should be brought to the attention of a physician immediately.

What is your view of steam baths? Are they beneficial or injurious? Do they put a strain on the heart or lungs? How often (if at all) should one take them and for how long? Ditto for sauna baths.

Heat generally feels good after physical exertion and seems to have a positive psychological effect for some people, placing sauna and steam bath use into a nonspecific and harmless class of activity.

Frequency and duration of use is an individual matter usually governed by time constraints rather than how well done one likes to be. Heat produces dilation of blood vessels and pooling of blood in the extremities. This makes some people dizzy if they stand up suddenly. However, the main dangerous effect remains buttock splinters.

Farmlife fizzles for family

FIERY RUN, VA. — The cool winds are now blowing across the Blue Ridge and seeping through the logs and mortar of our cabin. The crops and bills are coming in and it is finally possible for the proprietor to give an account of our family's war on inflation.

Our plan was simple if not very original. We would grow our own vegetables and raise our own beef on the hoof and get even with those robbers at the supermarkets. Our knowledge of yeomanry was smudgily vague, but we had resources.

Eleven acres with a distracting view of the Virginia mountains, a weary garden tractor, three sons, one daughter - in-law who could keep the books, another in law school who could keep us out of trouble, two unfailingly helpful neighbors, and, of course, the proprietor himself, historian of the project, who sat on the porch and gave orders.

We went over to Fairfield Farm next door and negotiated the purchase of three young steers with Don Allen, an honest man, who pointed out that the steers would eat the grass in the pasture, saving on mowing, but that steers had a way of wandering, so we must be sure to beat the bounds and see to it that they could not get out.

Cost of three steers: $802.00. Cost of barbed wire to fix the holes: $62.50. Cost of making the barbed wire to fix the holes: $84.70. Cost of new gate to keep steers from eating the boxwood: $24.00. Cost of fence to keep steers from fouling spring and falling into old ice-house:

The promise and enthusiasm of the spring ran into some rather awkward problems in the summer. Apparently unaware or indifferent to this strenuous effort to bring the family and the economy together in one noble patriotic endeavor, President Nixon resigned just when the runnerbeans were coming up and the weeds were flourishing between the rows.

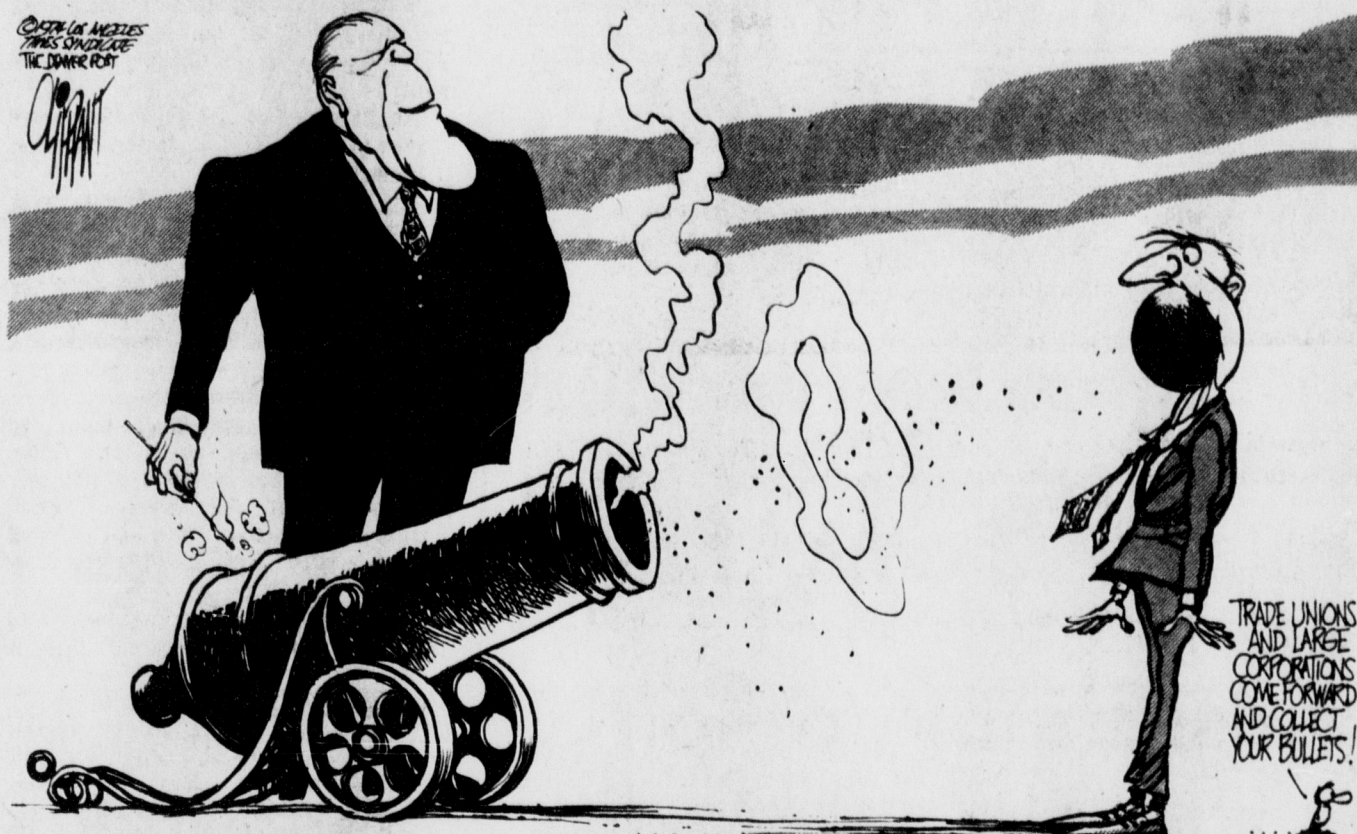

At that point, No. 1 son vanished into Washington to report the news of the departing President. No. 2 son thought he saw another novel in the tragedy. No. 3 son, an outrageously partisan Democrat, who giggles over Republican disasters, departed into Virginia to take his bar exam.

Still, we have had some consolations and even one or two triumphs. The deer got over the fence and ate the corn, which was not helpful. The manager of the whole adventure, Florencio Olguin, trying to kill the honeysuckle, poisoned the beans and killed the potatoes, but Jim Reston's tomatoes were spectacularly successful. He has in the process produced the finest pickles in the history of Virginia, and if you don't believe it, we have so many you can apply for a taste.

Meanwhile, of course, the steers have done their work. They have devoured everything on our 11-acre spread except the barbed wire, and at present prices, we figure they have lost less money than anybody on the place.

On present calculations, this was probably the worst agricultural disaster since the floods and droughts of 1861, but maybe it was worth it. The pickles stick in our mind rather than the deficit, and as they used to say in Brooklyn: "Wait till next year."

'Moderate' hit on issues

The article in your Welcome Week issue entitled "Race for Congress features surprises" by G. F. Korreck was one of the most spectacularly screwed up pieces of reporting I have seen in a long time.

The article describes the winner of the Aug. 6 Republican Congressional primary election, Clifford Taylor, as a "moderate on issues." Korreck must have gone on a long summer vacation and completely missed the primary or he could not possibly have written that Taylor is a "moderate" with a straight face. Taylor is far more conservative than even Congressman Chamberlain — somewhere, I would say, between Attila the Hun and Ivan the Terrible.

Let me give you a few examples, starting with the premise that President Ford is widely recognized as a conservative. Well, even Ford has backed National Health Insurance legislation; Taylor, on the other hand, violently opposed it. Ford has called for cuts in military spending; Taylor, a former naval officer, opposed cuts. Ford has called for some sort of increased public works or public employment program to help check rising unemployment; Taylor not only opposes such proposals, he has loudly attacked his opponents, such as Senator Ballenger and Bob Carr, for emphasizing the same thing the President has on this issue.

We all know that Ford has set up a program of limited amnesty or "earned re-entry" for deserters or those who objected to the draft; Taylor refused to answer the State News question on the same subject before the primary. Ford has voted for and reaffirmed his support of the Equal Rights Amendment to the U.S. Constitution; Taylor has fudged on that issue every time he has been asked about it, stating on a radio program that he was still trying to make up his mind about it, even though it passed the Congress over two years ago and has been circulating in state legislatures since 1972.

In short, if President Ford is a conservative, what is Taylor? He is certainly not moderate. He is way out in right field, and his campaign strategy has been based on the hope and expectation that the MSU campus is tuned out of the political process and that the students will not bother to vote this year. If that is the case, and Taylor wins the 6th District Congressional seat simply because of MSU apathy, every nonvoting student will get exactly what he or she deserves — a Congressman who will turn out to have even less in common with them ideologically than the Congressman who is now leaving after 18 years.

Animals need defenders

A man at a zoo rolls a tennis ball down the mouth of a hippo and chuckles as he watches the animal choke to death. A lynx, caught in a steel jaw leghold trap, in agony and fear chews off his own leg in order to escape. Over 50 dogs and cats a day (18,000 per year) are destroyed at the Ingham County Animal Control Dept. These are vivid reflections of the moral and social problems that occur today — they must change.

The average person does not realize that atrocities such as these and others occur to such a large degree. Many have been integrated into our everyday lives and people are not aware of the "behind the scene" cruelties and exploitations. For example, how many of you know how most fur products are obtained?

For those of you who feel a value toward living beings, both human and non human, an organization is being formed. This organization will function to speak out and actively protest animal abuse, to educate the members and the public about the problems confronting humanitarians and to become involved in humane legislation.

It is time that we made ourselves more aware of the cruelties inflicted on our fellow creatures. The attitude that nature and wildlife can adjust to man's destroying whims must be changed. We urge you to join us at 7 p.m. Oct. 10 in 117 Berkeley Hall. Two, free, excellent animal films will be shown and a national boardmember of Cleveland Amory's Fund For Animals will be there to help us get things organized. All are invited — please come.

Editor's Note: A spokesman for the Ingham County Animal Control Dept. told the State News that the department's annual report for 1973 indicates 11,680 animals were incinerated by the unit last year. Most of that number were dogs and cats destroyed by the department, he added.

TV freedom

I wish to respond to the Sept. 30 article in the State News entitled "Censorship dispute brews over cable TV."

Over the past year, I have made more than two dozen videotapes for the public access channel of National Cable in East Lansing. At no time has any of the tapes I have made been edited either in form or in content by the National Cable Co. David Korte, public access coordinator for the company, has been uniformly helpful and nonjudgmental in the implementation of the production of tapes on any ideas presented to him. I feel that, in the light of my experience, Councilman George Griffith's statements, that cable censorship will go over into "stopping unpopular beliefs" and that censorship of obscenity is "just a ploy to get a grasp on censorship power," are totally unfounded.

I also feel that the tone of the article, was unduly antagonistic to the cable company, which has been extremely helpful to the people of East Lansing who have been using the public access channels.

Column implies racism

I agree with Alfred Opubor, director of MSU African Studies Center, that Judy Rypma's characterization of Africa in her article "Foreign languages have many advantages" was indeed racist. Upon reading her article I considered that her reference to the jungles and natives of Africa was undoubtedly innocent in intent, a reflection of the racist educational system which has shaped her perceptions. However, even a statement or action which is innocent in intent may be classified as racist in its result.

Beyond Rypma's original article, I found her response to Opubor in Monday's State News to be the work of "a patently ignorant individual who harbors dangerous attitudes." That jungles do exist in Africa is beside the point of her stereotypical reference to the geography of this continent. (Some blacks do, in fact, eat watermelon.) To argue that a native is defined as a resident of a particular area is to ignore the historical connotation of this word as applied to Africa.

In her response to Opubor, Rypma demonstrated her unwillingness to think about why she chose the examples she did and from whence these characterizations came. Her sophomoric defense of her original statement is a testimony to the depth of racist structures and attitudes in white America.

Candidate slights nurses

Though I agree with Howard Jones, Human Rights party congressional candidate, that unconditional amnesty is preferable to President Ford's clemency program, his statement that "war resisters have more to offer this country than emptying bedpans" (Oct. 3 State News) is very objectionable. It snidely implies that there are people who are too talented, educated or creative to provide basic care for another human being.

While I don't suggest that everyone needs to work as an orderly or nurse, neither do I feel it is necessary to belittle those who do.

Arabs seek withdrawals

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger faces hard-line Arab demands for Israeli territorial withdrawals in his latest journey in search of Mideast peace.

Arab sources say his chances for regaining lost momentum for an Arab-Israeli peace conference in Geneva are not good unless he brings guarantees of Israeli withdrawal from all occupied Arab lands — guarantees that have not been forthcoming in a year of massive rearmament by both sides since the October war.

Egyptian, Syrian, Jordanian and Israeli government leaders have all visited Washington in recent months for talks with Kissinger.

Gloomy predictions by U.S. officials who expect no significant breakthrough are interpreted by the Arabs to mean that Kissinger is not bringing what they want.

At the same time Kissinger cannot give Israel what it wants — an Arab declaration of nonbelligerence.

Kissinger is reportedly bringing geographical maps outlining a partial Israeli withdrawal from some occupied territories. He will try to persuade the Arab governments that the Israeli proposals are not final, but deserve a declaration of nonbelligerence before firm boundaries can be agreed on.

The biggest stumbling block to compromise appears to be the Golan Heights. Israel has indicated it will only withdraw from the strategic Syrian territory if it is placed firmly under United Nations control. Syria says the area must revert to its control.

Egypt insists that Israeli roll back from the entire Sinai Peninsula and that its future be determined by the Palestinians themselves.

Israeli Premier Yitzhak Rabin has said Israel is ready to withdraw from "most of Sinai," providing it remains demilitarized.

King Hussein of Jordan wants Israel to vacate his occupied west bank and east Jerusalem. He has promised residents of the west bank a referendum to decide if they want to form an independent Palestinian state with the Gaza Strip. But Palestinian guerrillas question his sincerity, and Israel is known to oppose such an idea.

Rabin has indicated that Israel is willing to return a considerable part of the west bank to Jordan, provided it can safeguard the security of its border with a string of "nahals" or military settlements stretching all the way to the Jordan River.

Israel has said nothing about returning east Jerusalem to Arab control — a key issue in any settlement because of the importance attached to its Islamic shrines by King Faisal of Saudi Arabia.

Faisal used the Arab oil weapon last October to regain these shrines, and he has indicated a readiness to use oil embargoes and production cutbacks again until an Arab flag flies over east Jerusalem.

Kissinger has added three oil producers to his Middle East itinerary — Saudi Arabia, Algeria and Morocco — to discuss a wide range of issues that link oil with the Arab-Israeli impasse.

He will also try to tone down the escalating war of words between the confrontation states.

In Cairo, Western sources say that Egypt, backed by ever-growing Arab oil wealth, is shopping abroad for new weaponry, including entire assembly plants for French Mirage aircraft.

At the same time, Egypt is trying to negotiate with Soviet bloc countries to buy machinery for producing spare parts locally to keep its Soviet equipment in working order, the sources said.

The reports were not officially confirmed.

But the move to buy arms assembly lines is in keeping with Egypt's much publicized break from total reliance on Soviet equipment and the Arab bloc's new buying power in world markets.

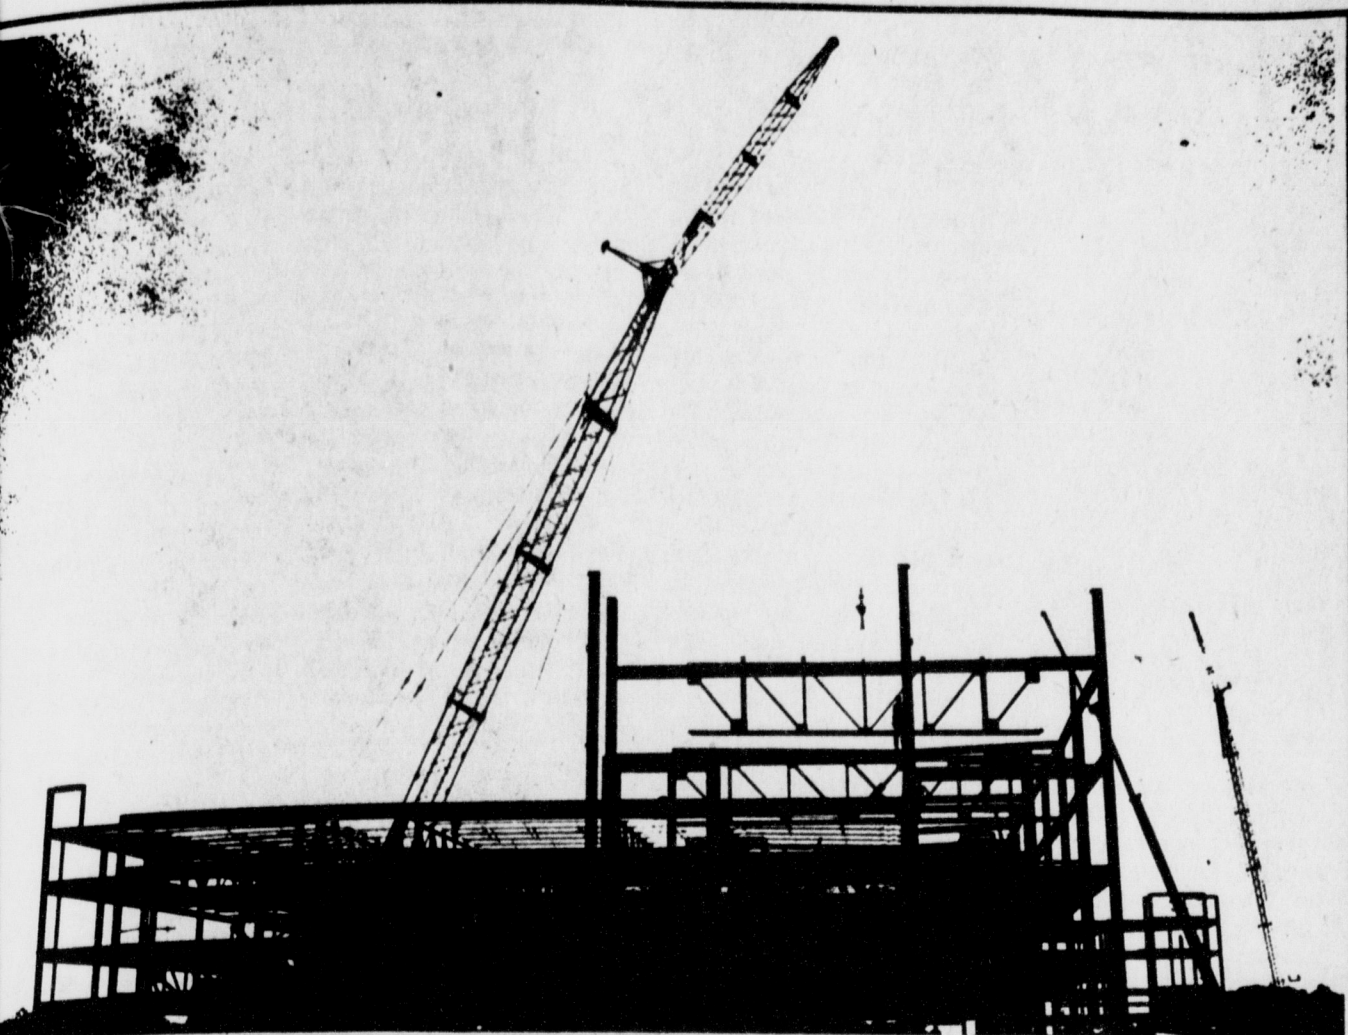

The sources are also convinced that Egypt is shopping for sophisticated Western weapons such as night sights for tanks, long-range tank guns and air to air missiles to customize their Soviet equipment in much the same way that Israel has adapted its military machinery.

Ferency plans campus stump

Human Rights party (HRP) gubernatorial candidate Zolton Ferency will be in Brody Complex at 8 tonight to discuss his party's policies and answer questions.

Ferency, former state Democratic party chairman and gubernatorial candidate, will appear in B2 Emmons Hall study lounge.

The HRP has a strong local base. Ferency has been instrumental in providing leadership and a quality candidate for the third party.

The large framework of steel, located between Farm Lane and Hagadorn Road, will someday accommodate 125,000 patients per year.

Construction of the Clinical Science Building began in January 1974 and will cost over $18 million. The project should be completed by January 1976, said Robert Siefert, executive vice president of University architecture. Siefert is in charge of the planning.

The completed building will provide clinical training for students in Human and Osteopathic Medicine. The major section of the building will be an out-patient clinic for the two medical schools. There are no beds or overnight accommodations; only ambulatory services will be available.

Citizens group asks stay to halt Michigan-Harrison construction

By JOE KIRBY
State News Staff Writer

James Anderson, leader of the environmental group, Citizens for a Livable City, asked Monday in U.S. District Court in Grand Rapids for a stay of proceedings which would halt construction at the Michigan Avenue-Harrison Road intersection.

Judge Wendell Miles said he would make a decision on the matter, hopefully by 5 p.m. today.

Anderson said his group presented evidence on several issues to which it claims the courts have not provided answers.

Anderson brought up the issue of the two segments of park and which were taken from the MSU campus for the construction. He cited a 1971 U.S. Supreme Court decision declaring that only in the most unusual circumstances could park and be used for road construction.

A U.S. highway Dept. statute states that park land cannot be taken unless there is no alternative, Anderson said.

Anderson also said that the state Highway Dept. should have held a public hearing on the project.

The most damaging evidence, according to Anderson, is a 1974-75 budget request from the State Highway Dept. for money to hire people to study the ecological effects of road projects.

Anderson said the document stated that the Highway Dept. has never had a process for evaluating the social and economic effects of projects on communities, neighborhoods and individuals in spite of a federal law requiring such evaluations.

Anderson contended that the Highway Dept. is guilty of not planning ahead and studying the impact of its projects on the people who live near them.

"Those people don't think they've done a day's work unless they've poured concrete," Anderson said.

East Lansing city attorney Dennis McGinty could not be reached for comment on the trial, but Anderson said the city argued that stopping the project at this time would be disruptive and dangerous.

Anderson said his group is still planning to appeal the case to the U.S. 6th Circuit Court in Cincinnati.

Three battle for 59th House District seat

By JOHN TINGWALL
State News Staff Writer

In the next five weeks, three candidates will battle for the opportunity to represent thousands of MSU students in the Michigan House of Representatives.

All of the candidates will be weighing the student vote heavily in their campaigns, since almost half of the 52,000 voters in the 59th District are MSU students.

Paired off as major contenders for the 59th District seat are incumbent Democrat H. Lynn Jondahl, elected to the office for the first time in 1972, and Republican Cathy Lessard, a 25-year-old MSU graduate student.

Human Rights party (HRP) candidate Carroll Hawkins, MSU associate professor of political science has discounted himself as a serious contender, but will campaign to acquaint voters with the HRP platform and orient voters to a multi-party system.

Jondahl, who won wide student support in his 1972 victory over liberal Republican James Pocock, says he believes his term in the legislature has proved he can offer voters the best representation and greatest access to the bureaucracy.

Clear record

"My record is clear," Jondahl said. "I've attempted to make the whole legislature more responsive to the people, as proven by my work for open public meetings, campaign reform and consumer protection."

The 38-year-old incumbent views consumer affairs and protection, environmental issues, civil rights and liberties, and low income state housing as the campaign's most crucial issues.

Jondahl cosponsored Michigan's generic drug legislation, passed by the legislature in February, which would allow druggists to substitute a less expensive, generic drug for a name-brand prescribed by a doctor.

Lessard has taken Jondahl's voting record to task, contending that he votes "consistently to the left" on all issues, ignoring voter opinions.

"The ideology of a piece of legislation is not important," Lessard said. "Mr. Jondahl doesn't do more homework than any of the other legislators on determining his constituents' opinion on legislation."

Currently assistant press secretary for the House Republicans, Lessard moved to East Lansing from Pontiac in 1966 to attend MSU. She has labeled Jondahl an ineffective communicator with his district constituents, and plans frequent door-to-door canvassing to acquaint herself with most of the district voters.

Task forces

"Mr. Jondahl has made one attempt at communication with his voters at the 59th District Legislative Conference in April," Lessard said. "I would initiate task forces on various issues and conduct forums to determine which actions would be in the best interests of the constituents."

Criticizing Jondahl's support of almost all major consumer legislation, Lessard said some consumer bills are not scrutinized closely enough by legislators to determine what repercussions they might actually have for the consumer.

LESSARD

"One bill that Mr. Jondahl supported, known as the holder-in-due course bill, would allow auto owners to stop payments on defective automobiles," Lessard said. "But the legislators ignored the fact that it could make bank loans much more difficult for auto buyers to secure, and it might make their interest rates on such loans increase considerably."

Both major candidates support November ballot Proposal C, which would repeal the 4 percent state sales tax on food and drugs, and Proposal D, authorizing the state to float $1.1 billion in bonds for mass transportation in Michigan.

Sales tax repeal

"The sales tax repeal is crucial to lessening the burden inflation has had on lower

"I'm not unalterably opposed to a graduated income tax, but before I speak out in favor of one, I'd want to see the rate and scale of such a system."

HRP candidate Hawkins, who considers Jondahl one of Michigan's best legislators, said his low-profile campaign is aimed at publicizing the need for a more viable alternative in elections than the two-party system offers. In his first campaign for public office, the 64-year-old former Milliken supporter said he would spend less than $100 in his campaign, circulating no personal literature and speaking only by request.

"We're basically coming from a socialist point of view, but even using the word 'socialist' scares people off," Hawkins said. "Hopefully we can establish a base large enough so we can make progress similar to that of the New Democratic party in Canada."

Low budget campaigns

Attempting to run low-budget campaigns, Jondahl and Lessard both expressed hopes of spending less than $10,000, focusing on newspaper and radio advertisements. A $250 contribution from a local real estate association has been Lessard's largest contribution, while Jondahl has received a $1,000 donation from the House Democratic Committee and $500 from the AFL-CIO.

Recently, Jondahl resides at 5166 Park Lake Road. He attended the University of Iowa and the Yale University Divinity School, and is an ordained minister in the United Church of Christ. After four years as a campus minister in Los Angeles, he came to East Lansing in 1966 as codirector of the Christian Faith and Higher Education Institute, which has its national office at MSU. In 1970, Jondahl lost the Democratic primary for the 24th District state Senate seat.

Lessard, 829 W. Grand River Ave., served as an intern to Michigan Congressman Jack McDonald from 1967-69 and was an alternative delegate to the 1972 state Republican convention. She made an unsuccessful bid for an Oakland County legislative seat in 1972.

Clerk predicts increase in city voter registrations

Final figures are not available yet, but East Lansing City Clerk Beverly Colizzi is predicting an increase in voter registrations over last year.

Colizzi said final registration figures would not be totaled for a few weeks yet, but totals submitted by deputy registrars are available.

Colizzi said deputy registrars submitted 2,555 registrations for East Lansing and about 3,000 voters were registered on campus. She said registration was heavy Monday at city hall with about 300 people registering during the day.

Last year 4,963 voters were registered by deputy registrars, 3,500 of those on campus.

The 1972 registration drive obtained about 10,000 new registrations before the national election. In the fall of 1971 nearly 7,500 new registrations were made.

Last year there were 32,775 voters registered in East Lansing, nearly three-quarters of them students.

Buddhists seek stillness of mind

By SUE McMILLIN
State News Staff Writer
If your idea of a Buddhist is a bald, Oriental monk who does nothing but meditate and eat vegetables, you are not keeping up with the 200,000, 20th century American Buddhists.

Rev. Jack Jones, Lord Abbot of the Matava Buddhist Temple, 2107 California St., Saginaw, has medium length hair and a moustache, smokes cigarettes, wears a Roman collar and holds a position with full authority to ordain Buddhist priests.

Buddhism arose in the 6th century B.C. in northern India as an offshoot of Hinduism. Today there are many different sects of Buddhism. The American philosophy is taken from Japanese Zen Buddhism.

Jones and two associate pastors of the temple, Rev. Timothy Newman and Rev. Ronald Thayer, visited MSU Monday night and told why they were attracted to this ancient religion and what Buddhism in America is like.

The Saginaw temple holds two Sunday services, communal meditation sessions, classes and lectures. The priests perform baptism and marriage ceremonies.

Newman, Thayer and Jones all help support the temple by holding outside jobs — they are not paid by the congregation.

Buddhists believe in moderation in all things and work to cultivate a stillness of mind. But there are no strict religious codes of behavior.

Thayer, who is married and has three children, said that if someone wants to go out and have a drink that is fine, but they should not get drunk.

The priests all wear the Roman collar in order to blend in with other clergy.

"In order to teach Buddhism in the U.S. one has to blend with society to be effective," Jones said.

Reincarnation is a basic belief of the Buddhist philosophy and is one solution to the age-old questions about the soul, heaven and hell.

Newman, who is a confirmed meat eater, said he was drawn to Buddhism because of the Christian idea about death. Christianity had instilled a fear of death in him, which he has since overcome.

"I feel I was a Buddhist priest before this life," he said.

But in the Christian world death is seldom talked about and makes most people nervous, Newman said.

"Try walking in a crowded room sometime and say 'Have you thought about dying?'"

Thayer, who is also Zen master at the temple, said he was drawn to Buddhism because "there is no damnation, only salvation."

The law of karma was another factor in his acceptance of the philosophy.

"The law of karma, conditioned cause and effect, is a valid explanation of why things happen," Thayer said.

Karma deals with the idea that every action has a reaction. The reactions to a person's acts may come in his present life or in a future life.

Jones said he first learned about Buddhism while in the Army. He read up on it and decided to join a study group at the temple in Saginaw.

"When I found Buddhism it was sort of like coming home," Jones said.

Leslie Newman, Newman's wife, is presently studying in Saginaw to become a priest. She is a deacon, which is the first step in the ordination process.

Mrs. Newman said that her husband got her interested in Buddhism.

Unlike the three priests, who all said they felt very much at home with Buddhism, Mrs. Newman said she was very frightened about it at first. She was raised a Christian and could not seem to rid herself of the idea of God, she said.

"In the back of my mind I was hung up on a man in the sky with a long grey beard," she said.

Newman said that the meditation and Kung Fu are taught for reasons of self-discipline.

"Many Zen masters are so in tune with their bodies that they often know when they are going to die," Newman said.

Jones and Thayer will perform a Buddhist service at 8 p.m. Oct. 20 at the United Ministries in Higher Education chapel, 1118 S. Harrison Road. The service will contain elements of the Mahayana, Theravada and Vajrayana traditions.

coming at 3:30 this morning."

Major Adam Zutaut, commander of campus police, said that Barringer had attempted to serve the warrant earlier at a more reasonable time, but could not find Addelson. At least some of the attempts, Zutaut claimed, were made during the summer.

"It seems to me that if the campus police are here to protect you, that's one thing," said Addelson. "But if they harass you, that's another thing."

"The point is, we are students. The campus police are supposed to be here for our protection," he said.

Addelson, who is a Democratic precinct delegate, said he contacted Human Rights party gubernatorial candidate Zolton Ferency, Democratic state representative H. Lynn Jondahl and county commissioner John Veenstra about the matter. He planned to bring it up at Tuesday night's meeting of the Ingham County Board.

THE ADVENT/2

Designed to Provide Absolutely Convincing Sound Quality and Completely Satisfying Overall Performance at Lower Cost than Ever Before.

If your budget for stereo equipment is limited, and you would like the highest possible quality for what you spend, we believe a stereo system built around the Advent/2 loudspeaker may well be the best buy you can make.

We make that statement out of a conviction that the Advent/2 is a genuinely new kind of low-cost loudspeaker. Its sound quality is very close to that of the best speakers available at any price. It can fill a big living room with more than enough low-distortion sound to satisfy most people's greatest demands. And the bargain it represents is further increased by its efficiency, which is high enough to provide satisfying performance in average use with low-cost, low-power amplifiers and receivers.

The Advent/2 is the product of twenty years' experience in the design of speakers intended to offer better and better performance at lower and lower cost. Its overall design is based on everything we have learned about taking the most simple and direct route to high performance, and we have put everything we can into it—including far more expensive basic loudspeaker components than ever before used in a system of its cost. Because it is intended to be first-quality in every sense, we have given as much attention to its appearance as to its performance, replacing the usual low-cost imitation wood cabinet with a distinctive molded enclosure that we believe will look fresh and appealing for years to come.

The Advent/2 represents our best effort to provide absolutely everything we believe important in a speaker for the lowest possible cost—and to bring genuine component stereo of very high quality to many people who otherwise might have to settle for something that only looks like the real thing.

Annual Bull Bowl slated for Sunday

By PAT FARNAN
State News Sports Writer

The Pigs and Freaks will duke it out again for ALSAC (Aid to Leukemia Stricken American Children) at 1 p.m. Sunday in Spartan Stadium in the fifth rendition of a street riot with yardsticks - the annual Bull Bowl.

A crowd upward of 40,000 is expected to attend this year's tiebreaker contest with the series currently standing at two wins apiece.

Last year the Freaks tied up the series with a 9-6 overtime victory by virtue of a 38-yard field goal, after the Pigs oinked out a pair of wins in the second and third Bull Bowls.

Proceeds from the game will go to ALSAC at St. Jude's Children's Hospital, Memphis, Tenn. All services rendered there are voluntary.

Tickets, which are available all over the area, are $1 in advance and $2 at the gate.

"Nobody makes a penny," Jim Quinn, general chairman of the Bull Bowl committee, commented. "There are 100 people behind the scenes who get little or no recognition for their services. We are extremely grateful."

The Pigs team consists of police officers organized under the Fraternal Order of Police, Capital City Lodge No. 141, local fireman and several federal agents. The Freaks team is comprised of local street people, bums, factory workers, businessmen, students and anyone else who wants a crack at a cop.

Pregame activities will commence at 12:30 p.m. with a simulated coin toss and a short performance by the 70-member Lansing Eastern High School band, followed by a presentation from ALSAC.

Al Toler, national executive fundraiser for ALSAC, and Sam Farhat, third vice president of ALSAC, will present an award to Gov. William Milliken for outstanding contribution to the cause.

Michigan has been the biggest fundraiser for ALSAC since 1964.

Folk singer Josh White Jr. will sing the national anthem accompanied by the Eastern band and the Jackson city police honor guard will raise the flag.

At 1 p.m. the fun begins as the Pigs and Freaks tee it up for the fifth time. The game will be governed by NCAA rules. Officials for the game will be head referee Chuck McCallum, MidAmerican Conference; umpire Marvin Rist, South Dakota Conference; head linesman Tom Minter, British Pro-Football Assn; field judge Tom Piasik, commissioner of the Midwest Pro Football League; and back judge John Graafmeyer, Midwest Professional Football League.

Halftime ceremonies will include presentation of the Danny Thomas award for special contribution to ALSAC, some colorful belly dancers and a medley of songs by the Eastern band including "When the Saints Come Marching In" and "The Long and Winding Road" of Beatles fame.

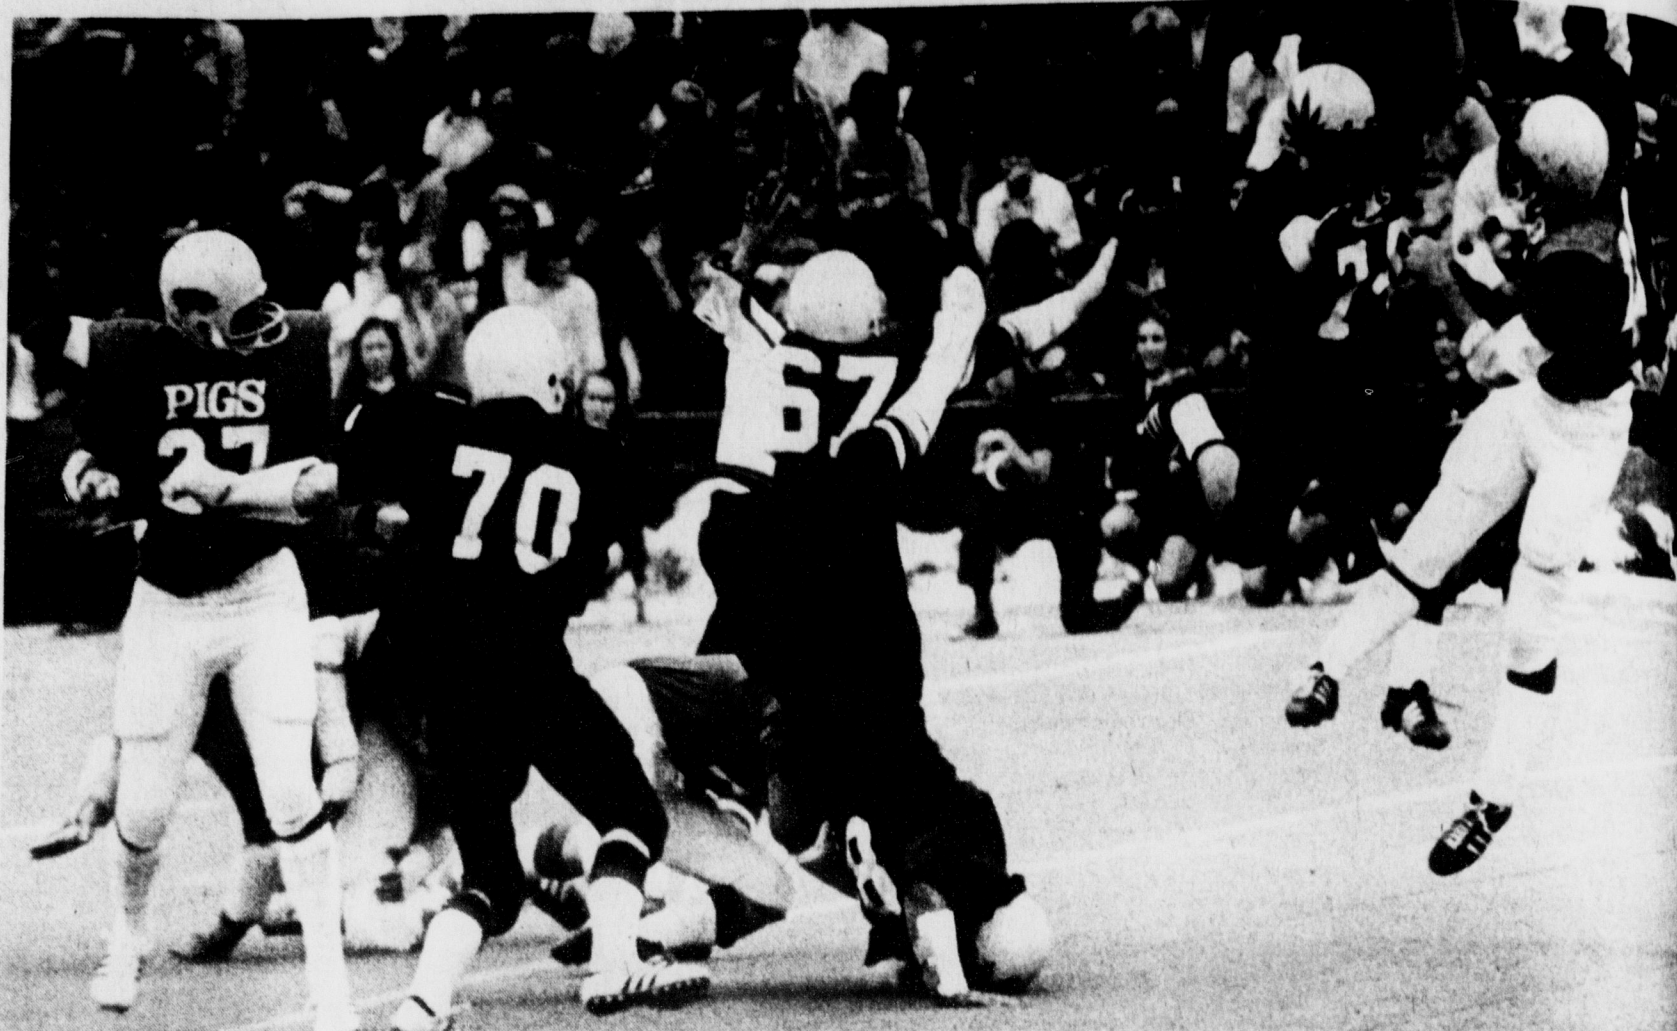

Field announcer for the Bull Bowl will be Terry Braverman, director of MSU's Ralph Young Fund.

The Pigs' coach will be Ted Bauer, teacher and ex-football coach at Everett High School. Bauer is a former Pigs' assistant.

For the Freaks, Charley Johnson of the Lansing All-Stars will handle the head coaching responsibilities assisted by former MSU all-Big Ten selection Charley Thornhill, who recently signed with the Memphis Stars of the World Football League, and Chuck Ginther, former Pigs head coach.

"We owe a million thanks to so many people," Quinn said. "Jack Breslin, Burt Smith, Nick Vista and Marty Daley have all been an invaluable help to us."

In the event of a tie, (last year's game was deadlocked at 6-6 at the conclusion of regulation play) a sudden death eight-minute quarter will be played, preceded by a coin flip.

The Pigs and the Freaks mix it up during last year's Bull Bowl played at Spartan Stadium before a crowd of over 40,000. The Pigs took it on the chops last year, 9-6, following a 38-yard field goal in overtime. The series is all even as the Pigs and the Freaks both have a pair of wins. The Lansing Eastern High School band and colorful belly dancers will highlight this year's pregame and halftime festivities. All proceeds from the game will go to ALSAC.

SPARKLING PITCHING DOES IT

A's, Pirates cop playoff victories

BALTIMORE (UPI) — Vida Blue fired an overpowering two-hitter and Sal Bando homered in the fourth inning Tuesday to lead the Oakland A's to a 1-0 victory over the Baltimore Orioles and to within one triumph of their third straight American League pennant.

The A's can clinch their third flag in a row by winning either the fourth or fifth games of the playoffs scheduled today and Thursday in Baltimore.

Blue, the sometimes fitful fireballer who was winless in seven previous post-season appearances, pitched a magnificent game, striking out seven and not permitting a Baltimore baserunner to reach second.

The hits off him were singles by Bobby Grich and Don Baylor in the fourth and seven innings, respectively, and the only other Orioles who reached first were safe on errors by second baseman Dick Green.

Green's second error provided the hometown crowd of 32,060 with its biggest thrill of the day. It came with two out in the bottom of the ninth and brought the dangerous Grich to the plate. Blue seemed agitated for a few moments but then got Grich to hit into a force play at second to end the game.

Bando, the A's captain who insists Oakland is one of the most underrated teams in baseball history, gave Blue the only run of the game when he rifled a 350-foot shot into the left field bleachers off Jim Palmer with one out in the fourth.

Palmer, who feared that he might have to pass up Tuesday's starting assignment if he was bothered by a pinched nerve in his right elbow, did not have his usual stuff but pitched a splendid game. He mixed curves and changeups with his fast ball and aside from Bando's homer, allowed only three singles.

Blue, who had an 0-4 mark in previous playoff and World Series competition, said he threw 99 per cent fast balls. Andy Etchebarren came closest to giving the Orioles a run when he chased centerfielder Jim North to the warning track for his towering fly with two out in the eighth.

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — Strongman Willie Stragell hit a three-run homer; Richie

Hebner followed with a two-run blast in the opening inning and the Pittsburgh Pirates averaged a sweep in the National League playoffs by beating the erratic Los Angeles Dodgers 7-0 Tuesday.

Reed, thin righthander Bruce Kison and 34-year-old reliever Ramon Hernandez shut out the Dodgers on four hits, two of them singles by Bill Russell off the Pittsburgh starter, and the Dodgers committed a playoff record five errors.

Checked on a dozen singles in 3-0 and 5-2 losses at home

Saturday and Sunday, the Pirates came back out bombing against southpaw Doug Rau and tagged four Dodger pitchers for 10 hits.

Stargell homered off Rau, a 13-game winner during the regular season, with one out in the first and Richie Stennett aboard on a single to right and Al Oliver on a walk.

One out later, Dodger first baseman Steve Garvey, the MVP in the All-Star game this season, threw wide to Rau covering first base on Bob Robertson's ground ball for the first Los Angeles error of the day.

Hebner, who had only one hit in six at-bats in the first two playoff games, then slammed a 2-2 Rau pitch into the same rightfield pavilion that Stargell found.

For the mighty Stargell, the only man to hit a ball out of Dodger Stadium in its 13-year history, it was his first home run in postseason play — four championship playoff series and one World Series.

IM guest policy dropped to reduce overcrowding

In an effort to reduce overcrowded conditions in MSU's intramural facilities, students, faculty and staff members may no longer bring guests to use the facilities.

The policy will take effect at 10 a.m. Saturday in both the Men's and Women's Intramural buildings.

It will not affect family core swimming periods or the use of the outdoor pool during summer term, however.

"It's a question of who you serve first," said Frank Beeman, director of intramural sports and recreative services. "We just want to remove the kind of thing which would impinge on a student's opportunity to use the facilities."

Only persons who present MSU ID cards will be admitted to the Men's IM starting Saturday.

The MSU Dept. of Public Safety is currently making a security system check of intramural facilities in an attempt to stop locker room thefts and overcrowding.

Beeman indicated that the full survey results are expected sometime this week and that elimination of guest policy was based on partial results of the survey.

Intramural Dept. officials reminded students, faculty and staff members to carry their ID cards with them to the intramural buildings.

Tryouts slated for JV cagers, men's golf team

Tryouts have been scheduled this week for two MSU men's teams.

A tryout for the junior varsity basketball squad will be held at 3:30 p.m. Thursday at Jensen Fieldhouse.

A second fall qualifier for the golf team will be held at Forest Akers golf course Saturday and Sunday.

Interested students should sign up on the bulletin board at the clubhouse at the course.

MSU's soccer team will try for its third win in as many outings today as the Spartans travel to the University of Michigan at Dearborn campus for a 4 p.m. match.

The Spartans have notched wins over Eastern Michigan (7-0) and Calvin (2-1) as coach Ed Rutherford has opened well in his first stint at soccer. Rutherford formerly coached football for 25 years.

U-M at Dearborn has posted a 5-2-2 record and defeated Northern Michigan, 3-2, last Saturday.

The Spartans hold a 2-0-2 career record over Michigan, including a 3-0 victory last season.

MSU booters gun for third win, face U-M at Dearborn campus

A pair of East Lansing graduates have paced the Spartan offensive attack. Peer Brunnenschweiler leads MSU with four goals, having scored twice in each game. Mike Kenney has tallied twice for the Spartans. Greg Pochmara and Zivond Zivanovic are the offensive mainstays for the Dearborn squad.

Field hockey team faces Albion in first home game

The MSU women's field hockey team opens its home season today facing a tough Albion squad.

The match, which is the second for the Spartans this fall, will begin at 4 p.m. at Old College Field.

MSU, which finished with a 2-1-4 record last year, will be depending on a strong returning nucleus of veterans and a host of new members for depth this season.

Locker room noise nothing new to Spartan trainer, harrier star

By JACK WALKDEN
State News Sports Writer

For most people the noise of a busy locker room is deafening. For Don Kaverman, an MSU student trainer, and Herb Lindsay, Spartan cross country star, the atmosphere is not a new experience at all.

Kaverman and Lindsay, you see, are stepbrothers and two of 15 children between their two families. The situation is similar to the movie, "Yours, Mine and Ours," a film which was about the marriage of a widower and a widow who each had six children.

The Kaverman and Lindsay families each also had six children, but then added three more after the marriage.

"It's not quite as noisy as it used to be," Kaverman said. "Some of the kids have married and others are away at college."

The story started in the mid-1950s. Lindsay's father died in 1954, while Kaverman's mother died in 1956.

Lindsay's mother and Kaverman's father were married in 1958.

"My dad sold and installed aluminum siding," Kaverman said. "He was installing the siding in that area and that's how they started conversing. They learned of each other's situation and one thing led to another."

After the wedding the new family bought a home in Belmont, Mich., a town just outside of Grand Rapids. The home was once used during the Civil War as a stop-off for the underground railroad and had later become a restaurant.

"They used to serve chicken dinners there," Kaverman said. "After we moved in we used to have people come around on Sunday afternoon and ask if they still served the chicken dinners. It was bizarre. They'd see all these people in the house eating and they'd think that the restaurant had opened up again. Actually it was just our family."

"As kids we fought some as most kids will do, but we got along pretty well," he added. "All of us had stepbrothers or sisters who were close to each other's age. Everyone had some one they could associate with all the way from the oldest down to Herb and I, who were the youngest. No one was left alone."

The family now lives in Reed City.

The main reason why both Kaverman and Lindsay came to MSU was because Kaverman's brother had gone to school here. Each also had another reason.

"I was an athletic trainer all through high school," Kaverman said. "I came here with that in mind because I knew they had a great staff."

Kaverman started out majoring in business and switched to accounting. Despite a 3.95 grade point average after three years of accounting, Kaverman decided the field was not for him.

"I didn't actually change from accounting until I went out and actually worked for an accounting firm as an intern," he said. "It gave me the opportunity to see what a firm was like and I didn't like it. I found that I wasn't interested in it."

Kaverman found training to be the challenging and rewarding field he wanted. He became a trainer his freshman year.

"If you like athletics on an intercollegiate or professional level, training is a great field," he said. "It's a field where you have to be continually on top of things. You must know what new things are coming up in the field. It's continually becoming a more demanding field."

Lindsay liked the challenge of Big Ten competition.

"I first was contacted by MSU in 1971, two years before I graduated," Lindsay said. "I wanted to come to a Big Ten school because of the competition. In high school

IM entries due for two sports

The intramural co-rec volleyball team entry deadline is noon today in 121 Women's Intramural Bldg. All entries must be submitted with a $10 entry fee.

The deadline for all Men's IM team paddleball leagues is noon Friday.

there wasn't any competition to challenge me. I knew if I went to a junior college, I wouldn't get the competition."

Lindsay's senior year of track was presumed halted after he came down with mononucleosis. Two weeks before the regional, however, Lindsay's Reed City High School coach talked him into running in the meet.

Shockingly, he won the regional and finished third in the state meet in the mile run.

He had won the state title during his sophomore and junior years in the two-mile.

Lindsay has set Forest Akers course records on both the five- and six-mile courses this season.

Lindsay and Kaverman still return home occasionally for what they call "family reunions."

"A few weeks ago we had a family reunion with just the immediate family invited," Kaverman said. "Only our brothers and sisters and their children were invited and we still had more than 30 people there."

British campaign style unique

By JOHN LINDSTROM
State News Special Writer

For's note: Welcome Week edition editor former State News campus editor John Lindstrom is living for several months in London. He has been reporting the mood and atmosphere of the Oct. 10 British election for the State News.

ON - The election campaign here, on the other hand, looks remarkably like a U.S. campaign. There are, however, very real differences.
Consider campaign financing. On one level,
British financing laws make U.S. laws look ridiculous, but on another, British laws are far more restrictive.
At the national level there is no limit to how much a party can raise or spend. There is also no limit on how much one can give to the national campaign.

U.S. law says technically one can give up to $5,000 to a campaign and no more, a rule that broke down completely in the 1972 presidential election.

Despite the lax rules, the British campaign will cost nowhere near the amount spent in the 1972 U.S. presidential campaign. Liberals say their national campaign budget will total $250,000 to $300,000.

Neither Conservatives nor Labor would give out figures but their spending is estimated at roughly $500,000 to $600,000 each.
Conservatives are financed mainly by big business, Labor mainly by the national unions.

All this money goes to posters, pamphlets, t-shirts, glossy manifestos, studio equipment, staff salaries and electronic equipment.

Electronic equipment is a major expense for the Liberals, who provide a closed circuit television hookup with Jeremy Thorpe in his North Devon constituency so he can communicate with reporters in London. Prime Minister Harold Wilson attends Labor's press conference every day, and Edward Heath attends the Tory press conference at least three times a week.

But there is a catch. At the national level, the party can spend all it wants on posters, but at the local level a party can spend only a small amount putting them up.

By a complicated formula based on constituency size and density, each candidate is allowed about $4,320 to spend on getting elected or reelected in his local district, based on the constituencies' roughly equal population division.

So there is an irony. At the national level, massive sums are being spent to put Wilson, Heath and Thorpe before the public, but for Thorpe in North Devon, Wilson in Huyton and Heath in Bexley sideup (their constituencies) they can spend no more on getting reelected than a first time politician.

The low funding mandates the popular technique of the walkabout, similar to a U.S. candidate going into a supermarket to meet the people. The difference is, the technique is used here all the time.

At a walkabout, candidates put on paper and ribbon rosettes and chat with people on everything from the price of meat to the weather and local soccer matches.

Another major difference between this campaign and those in the U.S. is in the relations with and use of the media.

For example, where television has become, in national U.S. campaigns, the most significant tool of media use, television use is minimal here.

There is no advertising allowed on either commercial television or radio. The law states that newscasts must devote an equal amount of time to covering Labor, Tory and Liberal campaigns.

Each of the three major parties is granted a certain amount of time for political broadcasts.

Detroit raid on gamblers yields little

DETROIT (UPI) — A red-faced Detroit Police Dept. said Tuesday that its much-publicized roundup of gambling big shots turned up nobody influential or important in illegal gambling.

Instead, a spokesman said, all 98 persons arrested in a weekend raid at a rented American Legion hall were just suburbanites in town for a game of cards or craps.

At the time of the raid, the police announced that 60 of the persons arrested by a 35-man crime task force were well known syndicate figures.

Deputy chief William L. Hart called the raid the "most significant" blow against organized crime in the past six years.

Tuesday police downgraded that claim considerably. "That raid didn't bruise the back of organized crime, much less break it," one undercover investigator said.

Police said that organizers of the game were charged with conspiring to violate state gambling laws while the others were charged with loitering.

Of the men charged with conspiracy, police said, only one has a police record. Some of the confusion, police sources said, stemmed from the fact that several of the men who were on the premises have the same names as men listed as organized crime figures.

One of the men charged by police, Leonard Imbronone, said that most of the men arrested were bricklayers, assembly line workers and other blue collar workers.

"I don't deny that there was gambling going on," Imbronone said, "but this was no Mafia game."

County sets up free clinics for immunizations

The Ingham County Health Dept. is setting up immunization clinics in the county to promote October as immunization month.

Area clinics include:
403 W. Greenlawn Ave., Lansing from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. and 1 to 4:30 p.m. Monday; and 8:30 to 11 a.m. Tuesday through Thursday.

Cristo Rey Community Center, 1314 Ballard St., Lansing, from 1 to 3 p.m. the first Wednesday of every month.

Delhi Twp. Hall, 1974 S. Cedar St., Holt, from 2 to 4 p.m. the third Tuesday of every month.

Services at the various clinics include tuberculin testing and adult and child immunization for diphtheria, tetanus, pertussis, measles and rubella, polio and typhoid.

Sickle cell testing, yellow fever vaccination for international travel and blood pressure testing are available at the health center at 403 W. Greenlawn Ave. only.

The county also sponsors 5 other clinics and publishes an immunization schedule listing periods when children and adults should return for future immunization.

Additional information regarding the clinics can be obtained by calling the Ingham County Health Dept. in Lansing at 371-5360 or in Mason at 677-3711.

Unionization could hurt students

in a decade when the unionization of public service workers has soared. Students see themselves as public employees, so they feel that they too must unionize, he said.

"The University needs student employees not only to help run the University but also because students need employment to get an education," Grotz said. "Whether or not a group chooses to unionize is their choice, but it must be an informed choice."

C. Patric Larowe, MSU professor of economics, labor organizer and defeated Democratic candidate for the 6th Congressional District seat, believes there are three places money could come from to meet higher student wage demands.

"The ideal solution, although it is not too likely, is to have the state legislature appropriate more funds to the University," Larowe said.

He said residence hall fees and general tuition fees could also be raised, but that the University should re-examine its overall budget and cut back in some areas and activities.

"There must be some slack in the University budget that would allow for the Student Workers Union," he said.

The student labor movement wants to force the University to reassess its economic and educational priorities and put the students where they claim they belong — on top.

Ford address calls for aid to unemployed

inflation like World War II's "V" for victory.

To help the jobless as the economy continues to slump — and living costs rise — Ford proposed the creation of a new Community Improvement Corps to provide public service jobs when unemployment exceeds 6 per cent nationally.

The current rate is 5.8 per cent and is expected to increase. Under the Ford plan, the one-year job program would automatically go into effect in local labor markets with high unemployment even if the national average remained below 6 per cent. Grants for jobs would be triggered when local rates exceeded 6.5 per cent.

The President also recommended an extra 13 weeks of special unemployment insurance benefits for those who have used up their credits and 26 weeks of benefits for those not now covered by a regular unemployment insurance program. These would be financed from Treasury revenues and not from taxes on employers.

Treasury Secretary William E. Simon told newsmen the one-year surtax was expected to raise $4.7 billion — $2.6 billion from individuals and $2.1 billion from corporations.

Simon said the liberalized investment tax credit would bring corporations $2.7 billion per year in benefits so the impact of the surtax on them would be more than offset by what would amount to companion tax cuts.

The President produced no new plan to lower taxes for the poor, but endorsed a tax revision bill now pending in the House Ways and Means Committee that he said would give the poor $1.6 billion of tax relief.

In the energy area, Ford fixed a goal of reducing imports of foreign oil by one million barrels a day by the end of 1975. This would be accomplished by increasing domestic energy production and by conserving oil.

To develop "a single national energy policy and program," Ford created a National Energy Board headed by Secretary of the Interior Rogers C. B. Morton.

One of the President's major proposals would set a 1980 target for voluntarily "eliminating oil-fired plants from the nation's base-loaded electrical capacity" by converting to coal and uranium.

While rejecting proposals that he ration gasoline or increase the tax on gas, Ford said:

"I will meet with top management of the automobile industry to assure — either by agreement or by law — a firm program aimed at achieving a 40 per cent increase in gasoline mileage within a four-year development deadline."

One section of the President's address dealt with the slumping housing industry. Urging Congress to make most home mortgages eligible for purchase by federal agencies, Ford said that if this is done, "I will make at least $3 billion immediately available for mortgage purchases, enough to finance about 100,000 homes."

Public hearing on bicycle paths slated tonight

A public hearing on nonmotorized transportation plans for Ingham County is scheduled for 7:30, tonight in East Lansing City Council chambers.

The county's Nonmotorized Transportation Advisory Group submitted copies of the plan to the county board of commissioners in September and plans on forwarding final recommendations to the board following tonight's public discussion.

The plans include development of a county bike path system and methods for implementing it.

A career in law — without law school.

What can you do with only a bachelor's degree? Now there is a way to bridge the gap between an undergraduate education and a challenging, responsible career. The Lawyer's Assistant is able to do work traditionally done by lawyers. Three months of intensive training can give you the skills—the courses are taught by lawyers. You choose one of the six courses offered—choose the city in which you want to work.

Since 1970, The Institute for Paralegal Training has placed more than 700 graduates in law firms, banks, and corporations in over 60 cities. If you are a student of high academic standing and are interested in a career as a Lawyer's Assistant, we'd like to meet you.

MSU plan directs doctors to UP

By PEGGY GOSSETT
State News Staff Writer

If you were to break your leg in one of the small towns of the Upper Peninsula (UP) it might take a four-hour trip to reach the nearest doctor's office.

The UP and other rural areas of Michigan are suffering from an acute shortage of doctors. For example, Keweenaw County does not have one physician to serve its 2,166 residents. Currently, only 13 per cent of Michigan's doctors are practicing in the 64 rural counties, with most of them situated in towns and resort areas.

MSU's College of Human Medicine initiated a program this fall which hopefully will direct a physician to Keweenaw County and to other needy areas of the state.

This Upper Peninsular Medical Education Program is situated in the UP city of Escanaba, and will train medical students who intend to establish a practice in the UP after graduation.

The first-year medical students will begin training next January in classrooms, physician offices, hospitals and ambulatory care facilities in the UP, to familiarize them with the areas where their future practices will be established. The cities of Crystal Falls, Iron Mountain, Marquette and Manistique will also be involved in the three-year program.

"A total of 75 medical students were interviewed for the 10 positions in the program," said Dr. James Conklin, associate dean of admissions and student affairs of the college.

"We had no strict stipulation that the 10 students must stay in the UP after graduation, but they were selected on that basis," Conklin said. Nine of the students selected came from the UP and one from the northern part of the lower peninsula.

Selection was also based on academic excellence and the ability to learn in a less structured educational environment, as the students will rely on self-instruction with limited faculty to oversee their learning, he said.

The exact number of professors for the program has not yet been determined.

The 10 students are on campus this term and will transfer their studies up north at the beginning of winter term.

"The students are treated the same as any other medical students at MSU. They are given no special financial aid or assistance, though some have aid through regular channels like anyone else," said Linda Terry, assistant instructor at the College of Human Medicine.

She said the students prefer not to have their names released until January when they move their studies to the UP so they will not be given any special attention while they are on campus this fall. They will graduate from MSU with the same medical degrees as any other student, though several universities and colleges in the UP are involved in the program.

The program was originated by Dr. Donald Weston, professor of psychiatry and human medicine, in his report on western states that have medical schools and import doctors from other states. MSU then applied the concept of importing medical students into the UP to study with the intention of establishing practice there.

Dr. Ronald Richards, director of the Office of Medical Education, Research and Development at MSU, will head the program, which receives more than $500,000 dollars from the state and $224,000 from the federal government for funding.
