Rebel barrage hits Cambodia refugee convoy

PHNOM PENH, Cambodia (AP) — Communist-led rebel gunners unleashed a deadly barrage on a Mekong River convoy Tuesday, killing 26 refugees and wounding 42, Cambodian navy sources reported. Government forces immediately launched counterattacks north and east of Phnom Penh.

In South Vietnam, heavy fighting flared along the Cambodian border 55 miles west of Saigon and along the central coastal plain 300 miles farther north. Several attacks also were reported in the Saigon region.

One South Vietnamese military official said: "Hostile acts between the opposing forces have reached what is believed to be the highest intensity since the cease-fire nearly two years ago."

In Washington on Tuesday, a State Dept. spokesman renewed U.S. accusations, against the North Vietnamese, saying Hanoi committed "massive violations" of the Paris peace agreement.

He was asked about reports of American planes flying reconnaissance flights over North Vietnam in violation of the pact. While not directly acknowledging the flights, he said, "selective violations" of the cease-fire "cannot take place on only one side."

When asked if the United States was living up to all the protocols, he replied, "I have nothing further to add."

In New York, U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim expressed "grave concern" at "the increased scale of the fighting in recent weeks" in Indochina.

"It is essential for all parties involved to abide by the terms of the Paris agreement and to make progress toward the required political settlement of this lengthy and tragic war," he told a news conference.

But Waldheim avoided singling out North Vietnam or the Viet Cong and said he was still studying "very carefully" a U.S. note he got Monday asking that he appeal to North Vietnam and the Viet Cong to stop the fighting and work out a peaceful settlement.

The note accused the Hanoi government of grave violations of the cease-fire and both North Vietnam and the Viet Cong reacted sharply Tuesday. They turned the charge back on the United States and accused it of increasing its military involvement in Indochina.

The Cambodian counterattacks were aimed at pushing rebel forces back from positions they have occupied for the past two weeks, the Phnom Penh command said.

It said in one of the drives, less than 10 miles north of the capital, 74 rebels were killed. Field reports said another counter-attack, directly across the Mekong River from Phnom Penh, met heavy resistance.

Propeller-driven T28 fighters bombed and strafed insurgent positions along the east bank of the Mekong River and the planes pulled out of their dives over the city. Scores of persons lined the city's riverfront to watch the action.

Along the Mekong River southeast of Phnom Penh, insurgent troops stepped up their pressure on besieged Neak Luong and on the river traffic between the town and Phnom Penh, navy sources said.

Earlier Tuesday, rebel gunners blasted a navy convoy carrying the refugees from Neak Luong to Phnom Penh. Navy sources said all the casualties were in one boat hit by five 75 mm shells. The convoy was carrying more than 250 civilians, mostly women and children, and ran through a 15-mile corridor of fire.

Neak Luong, 32 miles southeast of Phnom Penh, straddles the Mekong River and control of the area is the key to keeping the shipping channel to Phnom Penh open. A resupply convoy for Phnom Penh has been unable to travel upriver for the past 25 days.

The Saigon command claimed its forces, backed by heavy air and artillery strikes, killed more than 150 North Vietnamese and Viet Cong troops and destroyed three armored vehicles in the fighting along the Cambodian border, a key infiltration corridor into South Vietnam's western Mekong Delta. One South Vietnamese bomber was reported shot down by a heat-seeking missile. The pilot bailed out and was rescued, field reports said.

North Vietnamese gunners slammed 600 shells into government hilltop positions guarding the western approaches to the rice producing coastal plain 300 miles northeast of Saigon, the military command said. The South Vietnamese rushed in reinforcements and claimed their forces killed 73 North Vietnamese while suffering six dead and 32 wounded.

Milliken proposes scholarships to assist middle class students

By PAT NARDI
State News Staff Writer

Middle class parents of college students demonstrated the power of the pen. Gov. Milliken has responded to volumes of mail from the class parents urging liberalization of the state's financial aid program.

Milliken said the program would not deny financial assistance to low-income students who qualify.

He said the program would not deny financial assistance to low-income students who qualify.

That is not our intent. Our intent is to expand the program to help people in the $14,000 to $17,000 class who are ineligible for scholarships and for whom school is a financial burden," — James Phelps, education adviser to Gov. Milliken

Phelps said the program would not deny financial assistance to low-income students who qualify.

Phelps said the program would not deny financial assistance to low-income students who qualify.

"Our intent is to expand the program to help people in the $14,000 to $17,000 class who are ineligible for scholarships and for whom school is a financial burden," — James Phelps, education adviser to Gov. Milliken Ronald Jursa, director of Michigan's Student Financial Assistance Services, said the additional funds would be welcome.

"Anytime the state makes available more funds for students it is a good thing," he said.

Henry Dykema, MSU's director of financial aids also welcomed the prospect of getting additional funds. He said he did not object to the shift to academics as long as needy students could still get the money they needed.

Jursa said the pressure to academics has been increasing over the past two years. Many parents have complained that the scholarship needs analysis was too strict, especially with today's inflation.

A press aide to the governor said details of the funding will be worked out closely with the legislature and presented in bill form later this winter.

Dale Kildee, D-Flint, a member of the Senate Appropriations Committee, said there was a good chance that the legislature would approve the funding because education is a "high priority" program.

"Despite the fiscal situation, this is the type of program that reaches the people directly," Kildee said.

Last year at MSU 2,741 students received state aid totaling $1,468,512, or an average of $535 apiece. This year's figures are expected to be slightly higher.

These students must carry at least 12 credits and retain a 2.0 grade point average (GPA).

One MSU senior with a 3.35 GPA who has been unable to qualify for financial aid complained bitterly that middle class students have been ignored in the past.

"The upper class students don't need money. The lower class get all they need. The middle class student gets nothing and they are hurting because of it."

"I try not to be prejudiced, but it seems the lower income people — especially blacks — on campus do not even lift a finger to help pay for their education," she said.

Another student who receives financial aid thinks low-income students deserve first crack at scholarships.

"I think grades are an important factor for schools to view potential, yet many lower-income people have more pressures to overcome than people with higher grades," said senior Tom Silver, 252 River St.

Ford, Congress battle lines form

WASHINGTON (AP) — The 94th Congress proceeded through its traditional opening day ceremonies Tuesday with battle lines already forming between its heavily Democratic majorities and President Ford over tax and energy programs.

Sixth District representative M. Robert Carr was one of those sworn in Tuesday.

Carr, 31, will serve on the important Armed Services Committee and the Interior and Insular Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives.

Bob Grossfeld, Carr's press secretary, said the new congressman has not drafted any formal legislation yet.

Most Congressional Democrats said Ford's tax cut plan should be revamped to concentrate benefits on lower and middle-income taxpayers. The White House did announce that the permanent tax reductions to be sought by the President will strongly favor lower income groups, which might meet one of the Democratic objections.

Ford's press secretary, Ron Nessen, spelled out in some details the President's proposed $16 billion reduction in regular individual tax rates. Ford will outline them Wednesday before a joint session of Congress in his formal State of the Union speech. The permanent cuts would be in addition to the one-time 12 per cent rate Ford outlined Monday night, applying to 1974 income alone.

As the rituals of swearing in members whose terms actually started Jan. 3 proceeded before galleries packed with family members in both houses, the Senate promptly became enmeshed in a battle over its disputed New Hampshire seat.

The debate was set off when Democratic Leader Mike Mansfield moved to send the entire matter, including rival election certificates for Democrat John A. Durkin and Republican Louis C. Wyman, to the Rules Committee for a recommendation.

Neither was seated as 33 senators, including 10 newcomers, with their home-state colleagues proceeded to the rostrum in groups of four to be sworn in by Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller, presiding to open the session.

FORD PLAN UNCLEAR Address will explain tax gift to students

Will students benefit from President Ford's proposed tax cut? Students who are not claimed by their parents who did not earn enough last year to be taxed will get a gift of $80 from the government. But no one knows for sure yet about the majority of students who do not fill both those qualifications.

Based on an announcement Tuesday by White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen, it can be assumed that nontax-paying adults who earn under $2,100 and are not listed on someone else's dependent for tax purposes will receive an $80 cash payment from the federal government.

But it is not clear whether independent students who earn more than $2,100 or income students who are listed as someone's dependent will benefit from the proposed tax cut.

Al Hattal, U.S. Treasury Dept. public information officer, said Tuesday that Ford and his staff are working out the details related to low-income and dependent students. Those details would be contained in Ford's State of the Union Address, he said.

The 12 per cent across-the-board cut in the 1974 taxes would enable taxpayers to save a maximum of $1,000. An individual with 1974 taxes of $2,000 would receive a refund of $240 or 12 per cent. But a person with $9,000 in tax money would get a $1,080 refund, instead of $1,180, which would be 12 per cent.

Report reveals discrimination

Boston suburban communities have developed policies on housing and land use which have tended to exclude racial minorities, according to a report released Monday by two anti-discrimination agencies.

"Housing discrimination in the suburbs has restricted minorities to the inner city," said Glendora Putnam, chairman of the Massachusetts Commission against Discrimination.

"Housing discrimination in the city has limited minorities to certain sections of the city," she said.

"The discriminatory policies of the Boston school committee have combined with these factors to produce a segregated school system which now resists reform and redemption," Putnam added.

U.S.—Soviet talks to resume

White House Press Secretary Ron Nessen said negotiations with the Soviet Union on a new 10-year agreement to limit strategic offensive weapons will resume in Geneva on Jan. 31.

The talks, which recessed Nov. 5, will aim at implementing the understanding President Ford and Soviet leader Leonid I. Brezhnev reached at their Vladivostok summit on Nov. 24 to place ceilings on the number of launching vehicles for nuclear weapons and on the number that can be outfitted with multiple warheads.

Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger said, meanwhile, that the Soviet Union has started deploying its first big new missiles capable of multiple warheads which could be aimed at separate targets.

Navy grounds new jet fighters

All of the Navy's new F14 Tomcat jet fighters were grounded in San Diego today after the second crash of one of the $14 million planes, the Navy announced.

The two crew members apparently escaped serious injury in the latest crash, which occurred earlier in the day in the Indian Ocean, a Navy spokesman said.

The Pacific Fleet Naval Air Force spokesman said all routine training and test flights of the Tomcat were suspended but commanders could "conduct missions as required" in an emergency.

He said most of the Navy's 113 swing-wing Tomcats are stationed in San Diego. He declined to estimate how long the grounding of the planes might last.

Court upholds divorce ruling

The Supreme Court ruled Tuesday that states may require a one-year residency period for divorces.

In a 6 to 3 ruling, the court affirmed a ruling by the U.S. District Court in Cedar Rapids, Iowa, upholding the constitutionality of Iowa's one-year residency rule.

The law was attacked in a suit filed by a Green Island, Iowa, woman who sued for divorce from her husband after living in the state for one month.

Harold Spaeth, MSU professor of political science, predicted the Supreme Court would uphold the Iowa court's ruling, but he was wrong in his prediction on how the justices would vote. Spaeth said the final vote would be unanimous in favor of the District Court.

Washington and Louisiana are the only states without residency requirements for persons filing for divorce.

Pontiac man gets probation

A Pontiac, Mich., man who was convicted of manslaughter for helping his ailing wife commit suicide has been placed on 30 months' probation and fined $3,750.

Robert Waters, 65, a retired high school principal and former Clarkston village president, was sentenced Monday by Judge William Beer.

Waters pleaded no contest late last year to a manslaughter charge in connection with the carbon monoxide death of his wife, Kathleen, 65.

Police free 20 Arab suspects

Police rounded up and then released 20 Arabs Tuesday in a search of Paris for two men who fired Soviet-made bazookas at an Israeli jet Monday. Police sources said the investigation was at an impasse.

The Arabs, most of them Jordanian and Iraqi students known for their Palestinian sympathies, were freed after their rooms were searched. In Beirut, Lebanon, the Palestine Liberation Organization issued a statement denying any connection with the attack and denouncing it.

Angolans promise protection

The Portuguese government and three black liberation groups agreed Monday on provisions to protect any of the 250,000 white settlers who choose to remain in Angola after the West African colony becomes independent, Portuguese sources in Alvor, Portugal said.

They said this had been Portugal's prime concern in the negotiations which began last Friday to work out details of the eventual transfer of power out of the hands of the Lisbon government.

Details of the "agreement in principle" to protect the Europeans were not made public.

The sources said Monday's meetings also produced agreement on major political questions, including a formula for the three guerilla groups to share power during a transition period.

OTHER SURPRISES DUE IN UNION ADDRESS

Ford to ask for additional tax cuts

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford, already seeking a one-shot $16 billion tax reduction to counter the recession, let it be known Tuesday he will ask Congress for $22.5 billion in additional permanent tax cuts.

Administration sources said the President also plans to seek postponement of clean-air standards for power plants to help them convert quickly from oil-burning to coal-burning boilers.

Press Secretary Ron Nessen said the proposed $2-a-barrel tax on crude oil and taxes on windfall profits of oil companies would add some $30 billion to federal revenues. This money, he said, would offset the income lost because of the tax reductions.

Spells out policy

Ford will spell out his entire economic and energy policy package in his broadcast State of the Union address to Congress on Wednesday. Though Ford himself and Nessen disclosed much of the program in advance, the press secretary promised there will be other surprises in the Capitol Hill speech.

The President has also invited the governors of the 50 states to a White House briefing Thursday on his proposals. In addition, invitations have been sent to representatives of state legislatures and organizations of city and county officials.

Power conversion

Interior Secretary Rogers C.B. Morton disclosed Tuesday that Ford's State of the Union address would include proposals to speed power plant conversions to coal.

Morton would not reveal the specific suggestion planned, but another administration source said the proposal would be to amend the clean air act, postponing for several years the power plant standards scheduled to take effect in 1975.

Ford disclosed Monday night in a TV-radio address that he will ask Congress to authorize a one-time cut of 12 per cent in last year's taxes, to be accomplished through rebates to individual tax payers of up to $1,000. In addition he said he wants a one-year increase in the flat 12 per cent, in the tax credits businesses claim for money to expand and modernize their production facilities.

Tax cuts

Nessen made additional key disclosures Tuesday that include:

• A Ford plan to cut individual income taxes, starting this year with $16.5 billion, with the largest reductions going to the top taxpayers.

• A proposal to cut the maximum corporate tax rate to 42 per cent from 48 per cent on a permanent basis, resulting in a $4 billion revenue loss.

• Direct federal payments of $80 to each adult American who poor he pays no income taxes. This would cost an estimated $1 billion.

• A $2 billion annual increase in revenue sharing funds distributed to state and local governments, the increase designed to offset higher fuel costs they would pay if Congress imposes a $2 extra each barrel of crude oil entering the economy from either foreign or domestic sources.

Fuel bill rise

Nessen estimated the per-barrel charge plus the impact of price controls from much domestic production would add $2.20 to the annual fuel bill of the average American family. He said gas prices would rise about 10 cents a gallon.

Ford's objective is to discourage oil consumption and thus reliance on imports. Nessen said he will seek standby authority from Congress to impose gasoline rationing if higher costs meet his objective of reducing imports by a million barrels a day and 2 million in 1976.

Agricultural expert warns U.S. of food shortage within 25 years

By GREG KRAFT

State News Staff Writer

The world is living on borrowed time. Critical food shortages may lie ahead if immediate agricultural programs are not launched soon.

Sylvan Wittwer, head of the MSU Agricultural Experiment Station and head of National Research Council's (NRC) Board on Agriculture and Renewable Resources, gave this warning to the nation last weekend in Washington, D.C.

The comment was made during a news briefing following the NRC release of a 199-page report on prospects for U.S. agricultural productivity. According to the report, new research is the key to achieve desired production increases in the future.

While there may be enough food to last for the next decade or so, the United States may face shortages in the next 25 years. The rate of increase in agricultural productivity is slowing, Wittwer said, but output in the future may level in contrast to the increased demand for food.

One of the factors blocking increases in productivity is the U.S. commitment to the Soviet Union and other nations to export the vast majority of its wheat production. Two-thirds of the wheat produced in the United States was shipped abroad last year.

"We have exported a sizeable component of our productivity," Wittwer said.

Three years ago there were 50 million acres of surplus land in the United States. Two years ago that sum dwindled to 20 million acres. In 1975, there is no surplus farm land in the country, Wittwer said.

MSU is a frontrunner in advancing the type of research needed, Wittwer said. The MSU Agricultural Experiment Station is currently researching the development of increased productivity of corn, wheat, soybeans and navy beans. The station is also experimenting with new varieties of crop and water management, development of new plant varieties, biochemical processes that control growth, new methods of pest control and, at the same time, seeking ways to limit the use of chemical pesticides.

Improvements in animal breeding are also being researched at the agricultural station.

"There are those that say we can no longer tolerate the production of animal products because of inefficient conversion of grain to produce commodities such as meat, milk and eggs from animals," Wittwer said.

He claims the best way to overcome this problem is to substitute other forms of roughage in farm animal feed for grain.

"In this way, we make animals less competitive with man for both energy and protein," Wittwer said.

When corn is harvested in the fall, the stalks are usually left on the ground. Fifty per cent of the corn plant's energy is housed in the stalk, Wittwer said. Combining the stalk with non-protein nitrogen can add to the surplus of corn silage which the animals need.

Wittwer said MSU is in front with research of a new chemical, prosta-glactin. This substance is believed to increase the fertility of livestock.

Since energy shortages are also plaguing the nation, Wittwer stressed the need to reduce the energy put into food production.

The agricultural station is now experimenting with solar energy to increase productivity in plants. Wittwer said that if research is continued, man will soon be able to reduce the energy going into food processing.

A recent New York Times article said that increased use of land for cultivation purposes and food production has had detrimental effects on the environment. Wittwer said there is always disagreements between agriculturalists and environmentalists, and that the only solution is for both sides to weigh the issues and determine priorities.

"Food and energy come before the environment," Wittwer said, but added: "We really don't need to destroy the environment."

DNR: laws needed to protect woods from off-road vehicles

By WILLIAM J. HOLSTEIN

United Press International

LANSING — Legislation to protect wilderness areas from motorcycles and other off-road vehicles (ORV) is "desperately needed," Dept. of Natural Resources (DNR) officials say.

Warren Shapton, DNR chief of field operations, said reports of environmental damage from ORVs have been escalating rapidly since 1970 in state game areas, forests and parks.

A bill which would have regulated motorcycles, dune buggies and trail jeeps was vetoed by Gov. Milliken last year because he considered it too weak. A similar bill is expected to be introduced during the 1975-76 legislative session.

DNR officials said snowmobiles have not presented as serious a danger to the environment as other ORVs, particularly motorcycles.

Operation of an ORV off a road or trail is illegal everywhere except in designated scramble areas.

DNR law enforcement officials claim they have not been able to successfully post signs to prevent the ORVs from zooming through environmentally sensitive areas.

"They're laughing at us and taking the home as souvenirs," Shapton said.

In addition to environmental damage, officials also point to "user conflicts" between motorcycle riders make life unpleasant for campers and hunters.

"Those involved do not usually belong to organizations or groups," Shapton said. "They use the machines to get into secluded drinking parties, illegal camping or 'enduro' contests."

"These activities lead to significant erosion problems as well as conflicts with hunters, bird watchers, berry pickers, hikers and training dogs."

One of the biggest problems in enforcement is actually catching the ORV operators. Ironically, Shapton said DNR law enforcement officers have begun experimenting with motorcycles to catch motorcyclists.

If the signs say a trail is open to ORV hikers and hunters tear them down. If a trail is closed, ORV operators rip them

MSU council considers cuts teaching code revision

BRUCE RAY WALKER
State News Staff Writer

The MSU council is considering cuts in the teaching code revision, which would affect the way students are graded. The council is also considering a revision to the code that would allow students to appeal their grades.

The council is also considering a revision to the code that would allow students to appeal their grades. The council is also considering a revision to the code that would allow students to appeal their grades.

would give dishonest students a chance to doctor exams and then appeal their grade.

"If I allow a student to take an exam paper away and he then appeals it, how do I defend myself?" asked Daniel Moran, associate professor of mathematics.

Moran entered amendment that would allow instructors to keep finals for one term so that the instructor would have possession of the exam in case of appeal.

Higher grades

Lawrence Lezotte, associate professor of urban studies, said he had an experience once in which students got their exams back immediately. One student borrowed a paper from another with a higher grade. She put her name at the top and then appealed it. He added there was nothing that could be done to keep the student from receiving the higher grade.

Fred Horne, professor of chemistry, said he can spot a doctored exam right away.

"Perhaps 2 per cent of the students cheat, let's say, but we can catch them," Horne said.

Martin Fox, professor of statistics, said if he had to return exams immediately he would photo-copy each one to protect himself.

Same questions

The provision that would allow instructors to release exam questions at their discretion was also attacked by many members.

Michelle Matel, student member at large, said she has heard students complain that some instructors used the same questions on the final year after year.

"It becomes a question of who you know that took the test last term" Matel said. This gives an unfair advantage to some students. This could be remedied by allowing students to take all final exam questions home and thus forcing instructors to form new questions each term.

Computer tests

Chitra Smith, EPC chairman, said forcing instructors to continually form new questions would cause an influx of poor, untested questions.

Others pointed out that computer graded tests are unfair to students if the instructor does not allow them to keep the questions. Without the questions they can't tell from the print-out what they missed but only how many.

Furthermore, Paul Smith, COGS member, cited a case where one of his students marked the questions on a separate sheet of paper, kept it, and found out that the computer was programmed wrong. He said this mistake would never have been found out with the instructor keeping the questions.

State picks international relief head

LANSING (UPI) — Gov. Milliken has designated a Dept. of Social Services official as state foreign disaster relief coordinator to work with Michigan citizens who want to help disaster victims in other countries.

Mary Jo Wood, emergency welfare services, will work with the U.S. Agency for International Development (AID) to coordinate the efforts of Michigan citizens in foreign relief drives.

Wood's appointment Monday was part of a nationwide drive by AID to make its overseas assistance efforts more efficient. In past disasters, unneeded or inappropriate clothing has been collected, goods have been improperly packaged or marked and there has been no means available to transport the supplies.

'Playful' dogs kill MSU sheep

By MARY ANN CHICK
State News Staff Writer

Two playful, stray dogs ended their playtime Monday morning by killing 10 lambs and four ewes at the MSU sheep barns.

The incident cost three dogs their lives.

Harold A. Henneman, professor of animal husbandry, estimated the dead sheep to be worth about $1,650. The sheep were part of a breeding experiment that will be delayed a year because of the deaths.

MSU officials believe the deaths of the sheep were an accident. The dogs were only trying to play with the sheep, not kill them for food, Henneman said.

The dogs, who jumped a fence to get at the sheep, also injured one lamb and 10 ewes. Only two of the 24 sheep in the shed escaped injury.

The dogs bit the lambs on the ears and the legs. Several of the sheep had bare bone exposed where they were gnawed by the dogs. One ewe's stomach was slashed.

The first dog was shot shortly after the incident by an Animal Control Officer. Two MSU workers followed the second dog, a German shepherd, to a home near Mt. Hope and Hagadorn roads. The resident denied owning the dog.

The German shepherd returned to the sheep barn Tuesday morning and was shot.

A third dog was shot at the same time because it was in the sheep pen.

"It is our responsibility to protect the livestock," Henneman said. "If we find a dog on our land, we call the Animal Control officer."

The sheep were part of an economic experiment that was being conducted by the Animal Husbandry Dept. The researchers were trying to produce a strain of sheep that would breed market lambs every eight months. Most lambs now breed once a year.

Because of the time involved in selecting and breeding the sheep, the experiment will be delayed for about a year.

"It is impossible to go out and buy this breed of sheep," Henneman said. "We will have to breed the strain ourselves."

The incident could cost the department even more money before the month is out. The surviving ewes are all pregnant and it is not certain that the fetuses will survive.

"Based on past experience, some of the sheep will abort the lambs," Henneman said.

If the lambs are born, they will be weaker and smaller than most lambs, he said.

It is common for dogs to attack sheep. Usually, the dogs attack playfully and not because of hunger.

One of the two students who found the sheep said dogs are the largest problem in the sheep industry.

"People let their dogs run loose and the dogs find their way into the sheep pen," Henneman said.

The dogs start pawing at the sheep and the sheep get scared and run. The dogs then start yipping and snapping at the running sheep.

"The dogs bite, the lamb starts bleeding and the dog keeps going," one of the student sheep workers added.

State officials blame students for outbreak of flu infection

Flu is not the only college students are bringing around these days. State health officials are blaming the outbreak of the influenza epidemic expected to peak by the end of January on students.

Link they (students) are who brought it here. Those who brought it to college," said Maurice S. state health director.

First two cases of the flu in Michigan were cited in the state. The third case occurred in Ingham County.

A flu, the most common of the disease, strikes 24 to 72 hours after exposure and lasts three to five days. It causes weakness, muscle aches, pains, chills and fever, but not the usual diarrhea associated with the illness.

Students had been meeting in a rooming house, executive director of the Capital Comprehensive Health Assn., and decided to investigate when Taylor complained of aches and other flu symptoms. Taylor turned out to be the first reported case of a flu in the Lower Peninsula.

Students went to a movie where a lot of students, Reizen said. He said that he believes that the contact with students was the reason Taylor picked up the bug.

Type A flu is also called the "Port Chalmers" strain because it was first isolated in that New Zealand city in 1973. Health officials said bedrest is the best remedy for the sickness.

Someone with spray paint and a sense of humor near Bonners Ferry, Idaho, altered the state's billboard expression of pride in its people and potatoes.

Doctors need sex ed

The World Health Organization concluded recently that most medical students are not receiving adequate training in human sexual problems. Students at MSU are no exception.

The failure of both the College of Human Medicine and the College of Osteopathic Medicine to offer a comprehensive course in human sexuality leaves MSU graduates ill-prepared to answer questions from their patients concerning sexual problems. MSU should assume a leadership role in eliminating this unfortunate situation.

The family doctors are the first sources consulted when sexual questions arise. When they are unable to cope with these questions, a very real physical and mental health need of the American public goes unmet.

While there are some scanty efforts to teach human sexuality to MSU medical students, these programs are at present grossly inadequate. Top priority should be given to expanding these programs before MSU sends more doctors into practice with an insufficient knowledge of facts of life. The College of Osteopathic Medicine seems to be on the right track. Discussions are currently being held among the various departments in that college to determine the best way to attack the problem.

The College of Human Medicine, however, seems to be engaged in a program of buck passing. Administrators there recognize that a problem exists, but claim that medical schools such as MSU should not be responsible for teaching human sexuality. That job, they say, should be left to residency programs and other post-MD education.

MSU's medical school should not wait for others to provide its graduates with a basic competency in human sexuality. The ability to cope with basic sexual problems should be an integral part of a medical student's general medical training.

This University should set an example for others to follow in attempting to meet the educational needs of its medical students and their future patients.

Ebony may curb bias

The population of minority students at MSU has ballooned over the past few years, and it is time these students were considered in planning on-campus entertainment.

Pop Entertainment has taken a long-overdue step into the 1970s with the formation of Ebony Productions, an organization designed to bring minority-oriented entertainment to MSU.

This is probably the best and fastest method to fulfill minority interests.

For the past five years black students from Minority Pre-Law, fraternities and sororities have tried to interest Pop Entertainment in minority-oriented groups.

But their sales pitches fell on deaf ears. Pop Entertainment did not think there would be an audience for this type of entertainment and nothing was accomplished until this past week.

Hugh Surrat, adviser to Pop Entertainment, of the Dean of Students Office, admitted black students have been ignored and there has been "not so subtle" discrimination in the Pop Entertainment selection process.

If black students had been able to be more involved in Pop Entertainment previously, a separate organization would not have had to be formed to force input of minorities.

Had Jim Fleming, chairman of the Union Activities Board, not stepped forward at the crucial time, Ebony Productions would still be a concept and not a reality.

But one important aspect of Ebony's promise is yet to be fulfilled. Though the planners have all been black and the orientation of the infant organization aimed pointedly at black interests, Ebony Productions will hopefully rise above the uni-ethnic implications of its title to provide quality entertainment to all long-frustrated minorities at MSU.

The Doctor's Bag

BY ARNOLD WERNER, M.D.

Letters may be addressed to Dr. Werner at the MSU Health Center. Names need not be included unless a personal reply is requested.

Recently, while home on vacation, I had a strange and frustrating experience. I went out again with an old boyfriend, and as the evening progressed we renewed old intimacies — or at least tried to. We had not been together for over a year, during which time he has been having relations with his current lady friend.

We had a very poor time of it and he thought he had gotten into a sexual rut. Because I wasn't responding as his girlfriend does, he couldn't become aroused. Do you think this could be possible or could he have been having guilt feelings from being with me again when he felt it was wrong to be doing so? We have been friends for over four years and have been lovers on and off for 2½ years.

Such a complex question! If he wasn't aroused why was he trying to have sex with you? The rut theory doesn't impress me too much. People in sexual ruts usually are more aroused by a change of pace, at least for a little while. The guilt theory might have something going for it, though it need not be a full blown, teeth mashing and handwringing affair. Men are very susceptible to having sexual performance inhibited by psychological factors and even a small preoccupation could do the trick.

Possibly, over the period of time that you have known each other, he has changed or perhaps both of you have changed. A sexual relationship between the two of you may not make as much sense now as it once did and this was reflected in your current meeting. People and friendships change with time.

I am very fond of plants. Lately I have developed a compulsive craving for clay, eating bits of dirt every time I water my plants. Now I do it daily. I remember that I did it between ages 9 and 11 but since then I haven't. Could I lack some vitamins? I'm apprehensive about getting some germs or parasites along with my clay since it may come from organic gardens; still, I feel I cannot help it. I only take two or three bits a day. [This question came from a woman.]

Recalling that unusual cravings are usually associated with nutritional deficiencies, your question produced a different type of craving in me and set me loose on a number of my colleagues and friends seeking an answer. A geographer friend, who has always amazed me with the scope of his studies, more than satisfied my appetite.

Geophagia, or earth eating, is a common practice in many African countries, where women who are pregnant or breast feeding consume certain types of clays. The practice is so widespread that the clays are even packaged and sold as pharmaceuticals. He studied the nutritional implications of

U.S. political power diffusing

At the beginning of the new year, the most hopeful sign in Washington is the general decline of pretense. There are still a few windbags around pretending that everything will turn out rosy, but on the whole, the mood here is serious, and there is a greater willingness to face the economic and political facts.

This is a big change. No big promises now. No Self-proclaimed saviors babbling about generations of peace and prosperity. Just a lot of ordinary guys in trouble, looking for a way out and asking for help. It's not very heroic, but it's a little nearer to reality.

Suddenly, all the big shots have been cut down to human size. The President doesn't pretend he has all the answers. One day he is fighting inflation with budget cuts and bigger taxes, but he changes with the facts and proposes tax cuts and a bigger deficit to fight the recession, and doesn't grieve much over the switch.

Even the President's wife, who is expected by tradition to strike an adoring pose, treats her guy in public like any other fallible husband. Watching him on television celebrate International Woman's Year the other day, she took him by the hand and laughed and told him he has "come a long, long way."

Things are so bad now that even the Vice President is given work to do. Unlike his predecessors, Nelson Rockefeller is spending most of his time downtown on the second floor of the Executive Office Building across the street from the White House, making coffee for a stream of visitors. He hasn't had time to move in to the new Vice President's house on Observatory Hill, to move his family to town or to organize his staff, but already he is deeply involved in domestic and foreign policy, not to mention the CIA controversy, and is getting almost more assignments than he has time to handle.

The mood is different on Capitol Hill, too. Freshmen members of the House of Representatives are supposed to slip quietly into town and tip their hats to the elders. This year, the 75 new Democratic members arrived and demanded the right to question the Democratic chairmen of the committees, and their demand was granted. In the next few days, they will also be questioning Kissinger.

The balance of power is shifting in the Congress. The authority of the autocratic chairmen of the committees is waning. The tragic collapse of Wilbur Mills is merely a symbol of a much wider dispersal of power. The chairman of Ways and Means will no longer have a veto over tax policy. It will, for good or bad, be determined by a much larger and more liberal Ways and Means Committee. And even the leaders of the House, Speaker Albert of Oklahoma, and Tip O'Neill of Massachusetts, are no longer as secure in their jobs as they were a year or so ago.

In short, at the beginning of the new year and the new Congress, there is an obvious reduction in personal authority in both the legislative and executive branches of the government, and this extends even to the authority of men like Henry Kissinger, the secretary of state, and to institutions like the Central Intelligence Agency, which have been relatively free of congressional control in the past.

Now Kissinger, who starts the year with a bad back, is complaining, with some justification, that the Congress is not only performing its duty to set the broad lines of foreign policy, but is trying to dictate the day-to-day negotiations. And the CIA is protesting that it cannot run a secret intelligence operation if all its secrets are subject to public disclosure.

So the new mood around the White House and the Congress raises some new questions. Both places, the procedures are more open and more liberal. The exercise and the trappings of personal authority have been stripped away.

Hugh Sidey of Time magazine, for example, notes that Richard Nixon's sliding door in the Oval office, the secret entrance for secret guests, has been removed and plastered over by Ford. The 15 eagle battle streamers in the Nixon Oval have disappeared, along with the recording system, and the President of the United States is now available to members of the Cabinet, the Congress, and the press for candid discussion of the nation's problems.

All this is to the good, but the question now is how this new freedom will be used. Nothing in recent history has prepared Washington for the shared responsibility President Ford is now offering to the net, the Congress, the press and the people. They have all been complaining in the years that the President and his staff were doing too much and were too remote. Now they are complaining that President Ford is doing too little, not being tough enough, not coming up with a program to solve all our problems in a hurry.

Washington doesn't quite know how to react to these new conditions. The dominant personalities and presidential styles of Kennedy, Johnson, and Nixon, the members don't quite know how to exercise their new authority. The Democrats are split a dozen ways, with half a dozen members in the senate running for presidency, and it can't quite agree on a party program to deal with the problems.

Even the press is slightly baffled by President's informal and disarming. He gives interviews whenever he wants. Some of them are on the record, and some are off the record, and usually they are frankly and casually as he did with the boys in for a drink on Capitol Hill.

In the process, he exposes his weaknesses. In other words, he is a man, limited in many ways and needing help, insisting that the remedies lie with him alone or even with the government as a whole, but with the cooperation of the whole nation — business, labor, and rest. In short, no pretense, and the result is that Washington hasn't yet adjusted to a president who admits honestly he doesn't have all the answers.

No Viet aid

As I picked up a copy of Friday's State News, and read the headlines, all I could think of was "here we go again."

I don't know where Gerald Ford was during the '60's, but I wonder if he was aware of the matters of State. With President Ford "considering" more aid to South Vietnam, he is committing political suicide.

I don't think the American people could go through the disgrace of another Vietnam. I hope Congress realizes our past mistakes and stops President Ford now, before it is once again too late.

Solve the problems at home and then play hero with your life, not somebody else's.

Cover-up time on the fen

A headless body has been in the Fen at Fenwick Wold, ancestral seat of the Earl of Hingham. "Foul play hinted," say the headlines. On Baker Street Holmes scrapes his violin and awaits the inevitable call from the prime minister.

"It looks like you'll soon be serving on another blue-ribbon commission, Holmes," Dr. Watson observes.

Holmes is moody, uncommunicative. He is tired of serving on blue-ribbon commissions appointed by the prime minister. They are always headed by the Duke of Frisby who cannot tell a headless earl from a bob-tailed nag, but lends immense authority to the commission's findings because of his impeccable Toryism.

"Old Frisby will chair it, of course," Watson muses.

"Brilliant, my dear Watson," Holmes' tone is sarcastic. "Next you will tell me this means that that old Liberal dunce, Lord Withers, will have to be appointed because the prime minister will need an outspoken Liberal to offset Frisby's impeccable Toryism."

"Naturally, Holmes. Lord Withers is always appointed to these blue-ribbon commissions. It reassures the working class that the Tories will not pin the murder on some wretched stable boy."

Holmes is no longer listening. He has tapped the blue funk out of his meerschaum and slipped into a dottle. He yearns for the old days when he would have slipped out to Fenwick Wold after tea, found a few telltale hairs in the fatal Fen and turned the murderess — in this case obviously the dowager Marchioness of Gorham Wells — over to Inspector Lestrade in time to have dinner at Rule's.

Mrs. Hudson interrupts the aging detective to announce the prime minister's arrival.

"Nasty business, these media stories about poor old Hingham having a corpse in his Fen," says the prime minister, "Inky devils! Why are they always looking for ways to discredit the peerage?"

"Still, you'll have to investigate, I suppose," Dr. Watson remarks.

"No getting out of it, I'm afraid," says the prime minister, turning to Holmes. "England needs you to serve on the blue-ribbon commission I am appointing to look into these sordid allegations, Mr. Holmes."

Holmes examines him under his magnifying glass, detecting tiny blue threads on his pin-pricked thumb which prove that he has already pinned blue ribbons on the Duke of Frisby and Lord Withers.

"There is no need," says Holmes, "for a blue-ribbon commission. If I can slip out to Fenwick Wold after tea and find the telltale hairs which, I am certain, will be in the fatal Fen, I can prove conclusively that the

"Some luckless wretch, born headless perhaps, might simply and innocently have stumbled into the fen and been bitten by an adder."

headless body belongs to the earl's footman and that he was murdered by the dowager Marchioness of Gorham Wells, who had mistaken him for her wastrel son-in-law, Lord Clinchweather."

The prime minister is irritated. "Come, come, Mr. Holmes. You know we don't do things that way any more. The government cannot go off willy-nilly on the assumption that there is a body in the fen simply because the media say so. And even if there were a body there without the conventional head, is the government to accept media presumptions of foul play? Some luckless wretch, born headless perhaps, might simply and innocently have stumbled into the fen and been bitten by an adder."

"You wish me to be a blue-ribbon commissioner," Holmes observes.

"With you on the commission, Holmes, it would persuade the public we were making a sincere attempt to discover if there really was a body in the earl's fen. There will be very little news of organizational meetings over the next six weeks, and then you will only add your signature to the report. The commission concludes there was no body in the fen, you might even file a minor report."

The worst of it, Holmes knows, is that Hercule Poirot will be brought over the Continent to serve, or order to the Common Market opinion, and that the Americans must always be assured they carry twice as much weight as Whitehall as the Market. Sam Spade, Lew Archer will be brought from Los Angeles to serve.

Holmes cannot abide Spade, with his penchant for getting idly beaten up and dives when he should be attending to a ribbon commission meetings to discuss appointment of press officers. He depresses him with his puritanical refusal to take Holmes' advice and try a bit of gin and tonics to overcome his tiresome weltschmerz.

As for Poirot, Holmes knows from blue-ribbon commission experience that he will spend his entire time complaining about English cuisine and file a minority report declaring the whole affair an elaborate hoax brought on by the consumption of too much mutton and brussels sprouts at Fen Wold.

Holmes repacks his meerschaum with violin and sighs. He is, after all, an Englishman, and must do his duty. He says as he says, "It is a ridiculous way to do with a crime."

"Nonsense, Holmes," says the prime minister. "It is the very latest method of investigation from the Americans."

Recycle 'Cadillac economy'

Politicians and businessmen in America are flogging a dying horse.

The old gray mare in this case is our economy, which is so sick even a government economist can see it. It seems the knees of this old nag have begun buckling under and it looks like she may not get up again. So what do we do?

Production and consumption of that production is the basis of economics. To boost our lagging consumption, all kinds of bizarre gimmicks are being devised by Washington and Detroit. President Ford wants to give us some money in the mail, but I think you first have to send in larger sum by April 15. Chrysler Corp. will gleefully send you money, but first you have to shell out plenty for a flashy new Thunderbolt Belchfire 488.

These solutions seem familiar. Perhaps they are a calculated amalgamation of the more successful game shows on television.
Like the one where the contestant dresses up like a cucumber, hops up and down and squeals like a pig when he wins five big dollars.

I believe the real economic situation is this: America has long enjoyed a disproportionate share of the world's wealth and other nations are getting tired of it. Only a Pollyanna would believe that each nation on earth could maintain a rate of individual consumption such as ours. How long would the supply of petroleum last for over one billion autos, even if there was enough steel and rubber to produce them?

But our pampered country is worrying about these shortages. Do you think the masses in India, Africa or Latin America could be panicked by the mere price of gasoline, like our masses?

So now these international inequalities are beginning to be shaken. The Arabs are finally wising up and practicing a little of our own national religion of Free Enterprise when they began fishing for the maximum price we are willing to pay for oil.
And other underdeveloped nations are taking second looks at the price they get for raw materials going to the United States.

Rather than wringing our hands and crying at the resultant damage to our "Cadillac" economy, the United States had better find other realistic fields of production for the future. Cheap mass transportation, which is practically nonexistent in America, will have to be rebuilt from the ground up. New supplies of safe electrical energy such as geothermal and solar will be needed and eventually tapped.

We will have a ready labor force for these projects, because I don't see the auto industry ever returning to the peak production of the recent bonanza years. But who will finance these new fields of production? Industry? Possibly, but the slow rate of investment return would probably make it doubtful.

But wait! Don't we have a rich uncle, who even now is trying to give a miserable little dictator in South Vietnam billions of dollars a year? He might be interested in helping out America again, as he did back in the '30s.

We also need an uncle who will halt the dog and pony show and lay the cards on the table. The days of the one man - one car economy are over, so why don't we begin hauling the old gray mare down to the glue factory and recycle her?

Mime artist Marceau wows MSU

By ALFRED NEWMAN
State News Reviewer

Mime extraordinaire Marcel Marceau far surpassed his billing as "the world's greatest nonverbal communicator" with a hilariously exquisite performance Monday that left 5,000 tongues wagging their vociferous approval.

Marceau, equally adroit as actor, dancer, illusionist and clown, is undoubtedly the master of spacial manipulation - the essence of dance as well as mime.

The finest dancers create the illusion of controlling a shape that is greater than the dimensions of their bodies - extra-corporeal movement. Through projection and epaulement, they seem taller, longer and faster.

In dance, especially modern, the extra-corporeal forms and movements are abstract. In mime, the forms are specific.

When Bip (Marceau's comic character) rests his arm on an imaginary mantelpiece, the audience sees the mantelpiece. When the inebriated Bip places hand over hand on a vertical plane, the viewer sees a wall. But Marceau does not stop at the mere creation of invisible objects.

Marceau's comic talents are perfection. Nearly every gesture brought pleased laughter. In this century, mime is Marcel Marceau and Marceau is mime.

Tom and Dick thank Jerry

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford timed his economic speech Monday night so he would not pre-empt the return to television of the Smothers Brothers. The White House received in return a message of thanks and a free comedy plug.

Aides said they took into account the premiere of the Smothers Brothers variety hour in recommending that Ford make his address at 9 p.m. EST. The Smothers' hour - long show was shown at 8 p.m. EST.

After the time of the speech was announced Monday, Deputy White House Press Secretary John Hushen said he received a telephone call from the show's executive producer, Ken Fritz, who said a collective sigh of relief was breathed with the disclosure that the Smothers Brothers would not be pre-empted.

Hushen said Fritz told him the Smothers Brothers were adding this line to their script: "If the Smothers Brothers can come back, so can the economy."

PBS series elucidates romantic art movement

By KATHY ESSELMAN
State News Reviewer

Lord Kenneth Clark has returned. The man who brought "Civilisation" to television now offers his view of "The Romantic Rebellion."

Monday night presented an hour preview of the series which will run in 15 half-hour episodes. Gericault, Ingres, Constable, Turner, Delacroix, Millet, Rodin and Degas. Ingres and Turner are each given two episodes.

The program has modest range compared to the lavish production standards of BBC's "Civilisation." It was produced by Colin Clark for Visual movement, leaving off at Rodin because he was the last of the romantics. Delightful, eccentric and a bit crochety, Clark opens vistas and suggests connections, whereas productions like "America" regurgitate liberal dogma.

"The Romantic Rebellion" offers a delightfully comprehensive introduction to romantic art with ample illustration. Discussion of innovations in the use of color could be meaningless to those without color televisions, an occupational hazard in programming devoted to art. However, illustrations are well-chosen and illuminating of Clark's points.

His somewhat stubborn championing of the classical values of restraint and simplicity against the emotional, liberating tendencies of romanticism peppers this history. He rightly observes that we are now in a post-romantic period and the values espoused by this art no longer validly represent our period. We stand at the beginning of a new period in art and expression, we have a proper perspective on romanticism.

ROOTS

Canadian leathers. All 10 styles of Roots use top-grain hides, finished naturally with no cosmetic cover-ups. The leather pores breathe freely. So do your feet.

Craftsmanship. Two generations of Canadian shoemakers (a father and four sons) guide production. Good work, much of it still done by hand, is a family tradition.

Cool leather lining. Soft skins inside give your feet just a little extra cushioning, and since few materials breathe as well as leather, a little extra coolness as well.

Built-in heel support. A sturdy counter (hidden behind the lining at the back of the shoe) helps hold your ankle and helps your Roots hold their shape.

Naturally shaped toes. Roots' roomy uppers aren't shaped like ordinary shoes. But they are shaped like ordinary feet. Your toes will stay healthy, fully uncrowded.

Rocker Sole. Body weight shifts from your heel down the outer side, across to the big toe for lift-off. Roots' sole makes each lift-off less work.

Comfortable arch support. If you spend a lot of time moving around, or standing around, on hard floors or city sidewalks, your arches need this kind of help.

Gently recessed heel. Helps your posture as your leg muscles develop a little more strength. With no heel to fall you forward, Roots give you a more natural walk.

Prof recommends family role changes

By BRAD MARTISVIS
State News Staff Writer
Good news, men. Women's liberation may make it possible for you to spend fewer hours at work every week.

In return, you will be expected to spend more time at home doing housework and watching the kids because your working wife is sinking under the double load of a job and housework.

Many women would consider that a pretty fair trade-off, but a lot of changes will have to be made in American work institutions before men will be able to assume their fair share of the work load at home, Joseph Pleck, of the University of Michigan, said in a speech Monday.

Pleck coauthored "Men and Masculinity," a required text in the Sociology Dept.'s sex roles course. His speech, sponsored by the MSU Sociology Undergraduate Assn., was on changing work, family and sexual roles. He is a teacher and researcher at the Residential College and Institute of Social Research at U-M.

Pleck said the growing conflict between male and female family roles will force changes in working arrangements. Pressure is growing as a result of the changing roles of women in America's work force," Pleck said. "A majority of women now hold jobs outside the home, but because men haven't assumed a greater share of household chores, these women have had a doubled work load."

Pleck based his figures and conclusions on a number of studies conducted in the New York area.

He said the strain developing between male and female family roles is a result of an institutionalized segregation of roles, meaning that a change in one sector of family organization has not resulted in a change in another sector. Theoretically, because of women's changing work roles, men should already be spending more time helping out around the house.

"However, men's responsibility has traditionally not extended beyond the task of family breadwinner, while women who work outside the home have had to continue doing a large share of the work in a family," Pleck said.

"In addition, the structure of most men's jobs does not allow them to devote much time to their families," he added. "Men often bring work home from the office, and what family time they have is used to recuperate from the stresses of work."

"If there are difficulties in the family, if Johnny gets in trouble at school, it has been the woman's job that has been interfered with."

Pleck said this has been used as an excuse to justify women getting jobs lower in pay and prestige.

"For women, the assumption has been that the family role is primary, while for men, the work role has been primary," he said.

"However, the changes that are occurring now in society with regard to female employment are being reflected in the family will in turn be changing attitudes regarding the employment of men."

"Capitalism is set up to keep people adapt themselves to a job. What we need now is a change of orientation, so capitalism will adapt to changing needs of employment."

State officials defend state forest oil drilling

By JEFF MERRELL
State News Staff Writer

The controversial decision Friday by the Natural Resources Commission tentatively approving a plan to expand drilling in the Pigeon River Country State Forest is being defended by state and company officials.

The area, in the northeastern section of the lower peninsula, only provides habitat for the only elk herd east of the Mississippi, but also sits on top of some of the largest oil deposits in the state.

The development plan by the Dept. of Natural Resources (DNR) and oil companies is designed to facilitate use of deposits without causing irreparable damage to the forest environment.

The Natural Resources Commission will make a final decision on the plan in March after evaluations and public hearings.

Ray Pfeifer, of the DNR forestry division, said the plan calls for cooperation between companies in an effort to minimize overlapping of exploration.

"All seismic exploration will be complete before drilling is allowed," Pfeifer said. "We much prefer that they do the exploration than do the drilling."

DNR approval

After exploration results are compiled, requests for individual drilling sites must be approved by the DNR and meet numerous environment-oriented requirements.

"With this plan, we can reduce disturbances 50 to 70 per cent," Pfeifer said.

Ned Cabaney, area forester for the Pigeon River Country, said the plan has no major faults.

"If oil has to be developed, this is the best plan I've seen yet," Cabaney said.

Ted Pfeister, an attorney for the Shell Oil Co., said Shell is one of three companies that have agreed to the plan, thought not without some reservations.

Shell submits

"I don't think we can develop to the potential we thought we could or were entitled to. But in the interest of the environment, we are willing to submit to the DNR's plan," Pfeister said.

The Pigeon River area has been divided into four sections, running south to north, with Shell designated as operator of the southernmost and most productive section.

The American Oil Co. and Northern Michigan Exploration have also expressed satisfaction with the plan. Pfeister said if Getty Oil Co. also submits, which is likely, 90 per cent of the mineral leases will fall under the development plan.

The Pigeon River Country, comprised of sections of four state forests, was first designated as an individual state forest in 1973, and a special management plan was designed for it.

Exploration allowed

The management plan allows for "prudent, conservative" exploration and development of oil, if great care is taken not to disturb the forests and wildlife.

Also, an advisory council of 19 citizens was formed as part of the area's original management plan to facilitate public input in management decisions.

Ford, Congress battle forms over economy, energy

The House, in one of its first votes, voted to abolish the Internal Security Committee, known as the Un-American Activities Committee. The committee's jurisdiction was transferred to the Judiciary Committee when a package of rules for the new Congress was passed 250 to 150.

The Democratic caucus had voted by a wide margin to abolish the committee. The representatives were ordered by the House to order by the House, former Rep. W. Pat Williams of Virginia. Then, after a 45-minute call of the roll of 435 members, they re-elected Rep. Carl B. Albert of Oklahoma to his third two-year term as speaker.

Albert, unanimous choice of the majority Democrats, defeated Rep. John J. Rhodes of Arizona, the Republican leader, by a party-line vote.

He then swore in the new House, whose 291-144 Democratic majority is the biggest since a 295-140 Democratic margin in the 89th Congress elected in 1964.

In the Senate, where the Democratic majority stands at 61 to 38 pending the New Hampshire outcome, both parties elected their leaders at morning caucuses.

The Democrats, for the eighth straight time, picked Mansfield, who has broken all records for service as majority leader and his party's leader.

They also re-elected their other leaders, including President Pro Tempore James O.

Eastland of Mississippi, the senior Democrat, who presides when Rockefeller is absent.

The Republicans, meanwhile, elected one of their most conservative members, Sen. Carl T. Curtis of Nebraska, to succeed the retired Sen. Morris Cotton of New Hampshire as Senate Republican Conference chairman.

Brooklyn import Pete Davis 'sweet man' of MSU backcourt

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

Riddle: What does a chocolate bar and Spartan guard Pete Davis have in common? Answer: Both are smooth and candy sweet.

Though Davis, a 6-1 senior from New York City's Boys High School, is definitely not posing a serious threat to the Nestles Company, on the basketball court his wizardry qualifies him as one of the "Big Apple's" choice products.

For 3½ years, including a lucrative first-year stint on the Spartan freshman team, Davis has electrified MSU basketball fans with his tricky moves and aggressive offensive style of play. But until this year most of his playing time was limited to a reserve role.

Davis is currently one of the Spartans' starting guards, alongside 6-2 senior Bill Glover, and of course that is exactly where he wants and says he should be.

"I'm just glad that I have been given the opportunity to help the team the best way that I know I can," Davis said. "All along I've known my ability and that includes leadership and playmaking. . . anything that may help us win."

Since being elevated from the freshman squad to the varsity after his first year at MSU, Davis has seen his playing time restricted because of MSU's abundance of quality guards and an injury jinx that hindered him the last couple of seasons.

However, this season Davis has been at 100 per cent and apparently his talent and experience has impressed Spartan coach Gus Ganakas enough to award him a starting position.

"I believe that I can score 30 points a game anytime I want to, but I don't feel this is what the teams needs," Davis said. "Like most good ballplayers, I've always felt that I was the man for the position, but apparently the coaches thought otherwise."

In the past, Davis has been categorized by some as a talented player, but not necessarily a team player. In fact, after the 86-78 victory over Michigan Saturday, Ganakas said Davis has been "reborn" with a new team attitude since the suspension incident of Jan. 4.

"I'm the same player that I've always been," Davis said. "I've just been given a chance to play and subsequently, I'm concentrating more on defense and the other facets of the game besides scoring."

Davis came to MSU as a heralded all-league guard from Boys High, one of the most reputable basketball schools in the country. He says he chose MSU because of the people who were already on the team and the people who were being recruited at the same time he was.

"I felt that we definitely had the makings of a great team, but it's taken a little longer than I thought it would," Davis said.

"The team that we have this year is a team of brothers," he added. "There is no animosity among us and that's why I believe that we are getting into the kind of team that is necessary to win.

"(Terry) Furlow scored 33 Saturday against Michigan, but I swear I felt like I had scored 33. He scored 33 in the column and I scored the 33 in my heart.

"We love one another — and that includes everyone on the team. When we do something we do it together."

Icers in second in national poll

MSU's hockey team leads Minnesota by one point in the battle for first place in the Western Collegiate Hockey Assn. (WCHA), but the Gophers are still ranked No. 1 this week in the national collegiate hockey rankings.

The Spartans have maintained their No. 2 position in the poll, which is conducted by radio station WMPL in Hancock, Mich.

The Gophers, who have won seven of their last eight games, received eight of the 10 first place votes from the coaches across the country who do the voting, while MSU and third-place Harvard each picked up one vote.

Coach Amo Bessone's MSU squad faces Denver Friday and Saturday nights at Munn Arena. The Spartans completed a seven-game road trip last weekend by splitting a series with fourth-ranked Colorado College. MSU, with a 13-4-1 record in the WCHA and a 15-6-1 mark overall, has won eight of its last nine contests, including six of seven on the road swing.

Ali to defend title March 2

NEW YORK (UPI) — Heavyweight Champion Muhammad Ali, accepting the 1974 diamond-studded S. Rae Hickok Belt as Professional Athlete of the Year, agreed Tuesday to defend his newly won title against Chuck Wepner in Cleveland on March 24.

Ali, who scored an eight-round knockout over George Foreman in Kinshasa, Zaire in the pre-dawn hours last October said, "If things work out the deposed champion (Foreman) will get er crack at the heavyweight crown." Ruling out former champion Joe Frazier, opponent in 1975, the 32-year-old champion that Ron Lyle of Denver and Britain's champion Joe Bugner were also likely opponents in addition to Foreman during the year. "Some people will criticize me for taking Wepner," Ali said. "But he's ranked No.

Grapplers whip Rhode Island, 28-6

By MIKE LITAKER
State News Sports Writer

MSU wrestling coach Grady Peninger went into Monday's matchup with Rhode Island looking to give his team a tune-up before heading into this weekend's road trip against powerhouses Oklahoma and Oklahoma State.

Peninger not only got his tune-up, but a free grease job and oil change as the Spartans rolled over the Rams 28-6.

"We needed something like this after wrestling so terribly against Iowa last week," said Peninger.

"I felt like we should have won them all (against Rhode Island) but you can hardly expect a 10-man victory very often. I felt we needed this going into this weekend's matches."

The Spartans reeled off six straight wins before Ollie Williams dropped a 9-6 decision in the 167-pound bracket and Jeff Hersha took an 8-4 loss at 177.

"We dropped some matches that we shouldn't have, but we're coming in these weights. Hersha and Williams are better than what they showed," acknowledged Peninger, who went into the match unsure of where Rhode Island was the strongest.

MSU's Jim Bissell didn't waste much time finding out that the Rams' 118 spot was vulnerable, as the senior grappler cradled Dan Beltrami at 2:25 for the only pin of the night.

Spartan junior Pat Milkovich kept his undefeated record intact in the 126 slot with an easy 12-5 decision over Scott Pucino. The win raised Milkovich's season record to 4-0-1.

Denny Brighton fought off Rhode Island's Mike Willner, 11-4, at 134 before 142-pounder Don Rodgers disposed of Marty Pereira, 9-6, with a gutsy performance.

Rodgers had to fight off an untimely case of stomach cramps halfway through his match that limited his straining before disposing of his opponent and his malady shortly thereafter.

Steve Rodriguez at 150 and Rick Greene at 158 tucked away a couple of key middleweight decisions for MSU over Glen Bissailon, 8-4 and John Richard, 6-2, respectively. Continuing his fine work and upping his record to 11-1, Wickard won the 11-1 superior decision over Tadd Sargent of the Rams.

"I didn't realize I had a lot of time left when coach told me to go out," said Wickard. "I found myself chasing him around most of the match, finally catching up in the rack up most of his points."

"Those two (Oklahoma and Oklahoma State) are going to be the pests not only for everyone who wrestles them, but if you can come away with them with two wins, you've done all right," said Wickard.

Spartan heavyweight Larry Avery eked out a last-minute 1 decision over the Rams' Miro in raising his season record to 8-2.

Marshall Dill ineligible for winter term events

MSU sprint star Marshall Dill has been declared academically ineligible for winter term. Clarence Underwood, assistant director in charge of academic affairs, said Dill could be eligible for spring term, providing his grades improve.

Dill owns career bests of 9.2 seconds for the 100-yard dash, 20.2 seconds for the 220 and 5.9 seconds for the 60. His time of 20.2 seconds for the 220 is a world record.

A senior from Detroit, Dill won the Big Ten 100, 220 and 300 yard sprints in 1974 and has won eight conference and one NCAA crown in his outstanding career.

Spartan 177-pound wrestler Jeff Hersha strains against Rhode Island opponent Stu Horowitz during Monday night's dual meet.

Hersha dropped an 8-4 decision but the Spartans rolled anyway, defeating the 1974 Yankee Conference champions 28-6.

Will pros buy
'lovers' story?

Now that the happy basketball family over at Jenison Fieldhouse is once again partaking in utter conjugal bliss and everyone has kissed and made up, when will we see the consequences and ramifications of this little "lovers quarrel" materialize?

It is already a foregone conclusion that coach Gus Ganakas and his staff are going to have their work cut out for them when they go recruiting around the state for high school talent, trying to convince prospects that nothing but love and kisses await them at Jenison as soon as they sign the dotted line on an MSU letter of intent.

Some are predicting that Ganakas might not even be around to do any recruiting. The feeling is that this latest incident was the dunk shot that broke Gus' backboard, so to speak.

But don't start fretting over the fate of Gus. Even if the decision from on high decrees that he be removed from office (I thought they only did that to presidents), Ganakas will most likely be given an administrative position in the Athletic Dept., even if one must be created to accommodate him.

This would be done on the basis of Ganakas' goodwill ambassador work for MSU over the years which has seen him become a highly likeable charismatic figure. And in times like these, MSU needs all the charisma it can get its hands on.

But the man who might end up paying for that stroll through Jenison before the Indiana game for the rest of his basketball career is none other than team captain Lindsay Hairston.

Going into the season Hairston was by far the most professionally marketable basketball player MSU has had since Ralph Simpson. In fact, many people close to the basketball scene considered him to be a high draft choice in the pro talent hunt.

What is going to happen come March when the NBA sits down and starts to divvy up the cream of the college crop? Will some owner still be willing to risk using a No. 1 draft choice on a player who abandoned his coach in his hour of need?

Even if Hairston does go reasonably high in the draft, will he still have the same bargaining power to command some astronomical contract through a high-roller agent?

Who is to say that a pro team won't throw the walkout incident up in his face at contract time and call his hand? That is one thing that a sports owner doesn't need is an $80,000 a year activist.

Let's face it, Lindsay, Gus will always have a job to fall back on. It might not pay 80 big ones, but at least he knows he won't be standing in the unemployment line this summer either.

Pro basketball is a funny business, Lindsay. It's like here today, gone tomorrow and if you don't believe it, ask Flynn Robinson.

After eight fairly decent years in pro ball, Robinson has suddenly found himself teaching basketball at a YMCA in Chicago and playing in the International Basketball Assn. with the Grand Rapids Tackers.

"I still know I can play with the best," says Robinson, whose demotion to obscurity mysteriously coincided with his last in a series of contract holdouts in the pro ranks.

"One week they say they don't need any more guards and then they go and pick up somebody else who they eventually cut. If that isn't being blackballed I don't know what it is," he said.

All of this leads me to wonder whether or not the other nine players who walked out are going to chip in and pay Lindsay the monetary difference in the inevitable decrease of his professional value because of their collective action. I hope it was worth it, Lindsay.

MSU students offer free tax form aid

By BRAD MARTISIUS
State News Staff Writer

You have been tearing your hair out over your income tax returns, and wondering if the cost of your new toupee is deductible, relax. The income tax service of the MSU Volunteer Bureau wants to make things easier for about 1,500 people this year by helping with their tax returns. The service will begin operation on Feb. 3.

McKinnon, student coordinator of the service, said that he believes that goal, about 50 volunteers would be needed, 20 of them have now. Last year, the service processed the tax returns of about 800 people.

Foreign students
The free service is meant primarily for those who cannot afford an accountant and for foreign students and others who have little understanding of the American tax system.

Most MSU students have little trouble with their tax forms, McKinnon said. "But if they need help, we encourage them to get it."

4 area offices
MSU provides space for one of the four offices in the Lansing area at 27 Student Services Bldg. The other offices are: West Junior High, 500 W. Lenawee St.; the Lejon Building, 1801 W. Main St., and Cristo Rey Community Center, 1314 Ballard St.

So far, the service has catered primarily to minorities in the Lansing area.

"We helped only 200 students last year," McKinnon said. "However, we expect to help a few more this year."

Student volunteers
Most of the volunteers come from the ranks of MSU students. "The tax service allows students to contribute on a short-term basis," said Elizabeth Shields, a graduate student in soil science. "Many students are unable to make the long-term commitment some volunteer agencies ask for. Students can volunteer to work for the tax service without making commitments they might not be able to keep."

Help from all fields
Volunteers usually work for two nights a week. Tom Lush, who runs the volunteer program, says there is no prevalence of business majors in the program. "The people we get come from all fields. The one thing they have in common is that they want to help out in any way they can," Lush said. Students who wish to take advantage of the tax service should call for an appointment, which can usually be arranged within a week. Income tax forms can usually be processed while the student waits.

Last minute action
McKinnon suggests that students who wish to take advantage of the service not wait until the last minute. "Most of our people are going home for the spring break at about that time," he said. "That, combined with the normal increase of people we get as the deadline nears, puts a strain on our system, and we might not be able to handle all the requests." Most of the tax forms the volunteers handle are straightforward. However, Internal Revenue Service agents conduct seminars to better prepare volunteers to handle difficult problems. The seminars for this year will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday in 34 Union.

MSU offers co-op study programs

By PAUL J. PARKER
Student complaints of irrelevancy in college have finally been heard by the College of Engineering.

There are about 50 openings for students in a new program in the College of Engineering that lets them gain professional experience in their field as they pursue their degree.

The five-year cooperative education program is new to MSU, but variations of it are offered at many universities and most Michigan community colleges. Under the program students will attend classes full-time for two terms and work full-time with engineering firms for the next one or two terms.

"The objective of the program is to provide professional experience before graduation so that a student gets first-hand knowledge of engineering careers," Program Director Frank Hatfield said. "It also provides an opportunity for the student and the employer to get to know each other."

The program will begin summer quarter. Participants will be placed with employers nationwide. Two companies that have expressed a great interest in the program are Wyler Foods in Chicago and the National Security Agency in Washington, D.C. Hatfield expects many employers will be interested due to predicted shortages of engineers in the near future. He hopes that students will be paid the same as others working at the same job but admits that pay will be up to the employer.

Students cannot apply for this program until they are enrolled in the College of Engineering and have taken classes at MSU in the employers' fields, Hatfield said. The student's first period of employment would follow their freshman year. By that time the student would have completed ATL, chemistry, three terms of math and some introductory engineering courses such as computer science, drafting and surveying.

Participation in the program will be decided by the student's academic ability and his desire to pursue a technical career.

Kathy Fisher, a junior in civil engineering, is gaining professional experience working with the Okemos Geological Survey. Fisher is being paid the same as others working at her job. Her job level was determined by an interview and the civil engineering courses she has taken.

"The people I work with help me a lot," Fisher said. "It's a lot of desk work right now but I'll be working full-time this spring doing some field work measuring water levels and taking water samples. It's along the same basic lines of the work that I hope to do when I graduate."

With the new cooperative education program engineering students like Kathy Fisher will not have to make their own arrangements for practical job experience.

Hatfield said his office will collect resumes and try to bring together employers and students, in addition to providing academic advising to the students in the program so that they graduate on time.

Students wishing to apply for the cooperative education program should enroll at 103 Engineering Bldg.

State outlaws bar pay toilets

Drinking women without dimes have been rescued from the sexism which permeates many restrooms in Michigan's bars and restaurants.

The Michigan Liquor Control Commission outlawed by March 1 pay toilets in the state's bars and restaurants licensed to sell liquor.

Ann Arbor health spa invaded

ANN ARBOR (UPI) — Chris McBride and Cathy Deffenbaugh managed to get paddleball for only 10 minutes, but it was long enough to make their point.

"We may go to court next time," said Miss McBride, a 27-year-old research assistant at the University of Michigan. Their objective: To force a health spa's alleged "sexist" policies.

Miss McBride and Miss Deffenbaugh, a 23-year-old university photo technician, invaded the spa Friday night and touched off a scurry by naked men when they passed through a locker room on their way to the paddleball court.

"Hey," someone shouted. "There's girls in here."

The men dashed for their clothing. The two women went wordlessly through the locker room, stepped onto the court and began playing.

Ten minutes later, new County sheriff's deputies removed but did not touch them.

The women said their action only after fruitless attempts to get the spa, Vic Tanny, to allow for women or abrogate "anti-female" policies.

THE QUESTION BOX

Question: Wasnt Robert Forster of "Nakia" in a series before? The character is so different, I can't be sure... but I am a fan of "Nakia"; he's good.

Answer: Yes, Robert Forster did have an earlier, and brief, starring series; it was "Banyon," on NBC and was all about a tight-lipped private eye. Unfortunately, "Nakia," also was also short-lived. Though it had many boosters among viewers, it didn't catch on fast enough in the ratings for the network (ABC this time) to gamble further on it.
