S. Viet Senate denounces Thieu

SAIGON, South Vietnam (AP) — The South Vietnamese Senate on Wednesday assailed President Nguyen Van Thieu's regime and called unanimously for "a new leadership" to end the war. The declaration came with three-quarters of the country swept up by the Communist-led offensive and orphaned babies being airlifted from possible turmoil in Saigon.

In Washington, Vice President Nelson A. Rockefeller said he thinks "it's really too late" to do anything to stem the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong advance.

Asked about the hordes of refugees, he said, "They're trapped. They couldn't get out...I guess a lot of them are going to die. For us, we go on living," he added.

Five more enclaves in the central part of the country fell without a fight on Wednesday, including Tuy Hoa, Phan Rang, Phan Thiet, Dalat and Cam Ranh, the big $250 million U.S.-built base. Anarchy and panic gripped the cities, and relief sources said the appearance of North Vietnamese forces at the fallen coastal city of Nha Trang halted the U.S. sealt of 60,000 refugees there.

The fall of Dalat and Tuy Hoa gave the North Vietnamese and Viet Cong control of two more provinces, Phu Yen and Tuyen Duc. About half of South Vietnam's 20 million population now are in the 17 of the country's 44 provinces conceded to the Communists or in areas contested by both Saigon and the Communist command.

Apparently fearing an attack on Saigon may be imminent, a World Airways DCS jet took off for the United States with Vietnamese orphan babies aboard.

Accusing Thieu of "an abuse of power, corruption and social injustice," the previously pro-government Senate said Thieu was "counting exclusively on a military solution...in solving a war with many political characteristics."

The Senate, which has no real power, also charged the United States with failing to respect its "commitments" to South Vietnam. Saigon's ambassador in Washington leveled a similar charge in a television interview, saying the world probably would conclude it was safer to be an ally of the Communists than the Americans.

In other Indochina developments: • The Viet Cong said life has "returned to normal," in several locations under their control, including the old imperial capital of Hue and the central provincial capital of Quang Ngai, and that nearly 100 government workers and officers have joined their side.

• Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger was reported asking other countries to urge Hanoi to live up to the 1973 cease-fire he helped negotiate.

• South Vietnamese Premier Tran Thien Khiem pledged in a radio address to hold onto the provinces still in government hands and "from there to work toward retaking control of the entire country." He acknowledged that "lack of calm and discipline" have been a factor in the government's heavy losses. The nation's top military commander, Gen. Cao Van Vien, urged in another radio broadcast that government soldiers "fight for survival" and "stand at any cost."

• The U.S. Embassy in Phnom Penh made plans to evacuate 15 per cent of its 200 American staffers "temporarily" to Thailand. The move came as Communist-led rebels swept over Neak Luong, the Cambodian government's last stronghold on the Mekong River, and tightened the noose around rice-rich Battambang, the country's second largest city 180 miles northwest of the capital. An American plane was reported damaged and a U.S. civilian pilot

• Prince Norodom Sihanouk, nominal leader of the Cambodian rebels who has refused to talk with the Phnom Penh regime, urged Thailand, Malaysia and Indonesia to press the United States to stop its "interference in the internal affairs" of Cambodia. Japan's Kyodo news service reported from Peking. Kyodo said this was the first time that Sihanouk made such diplomatic overtures toward neighboring countries.

PLANE FLEES SAIGON WITHOUT OK

Viet orphans fly to U.S.

By PETER ARNETT
AP Special Correspondent

YOKOTA U.S. AIR BASE, Japan — A plane carrying 57 orphaned Vietnamese children to new homes in the United States made a dash for freedom from threatened Saigon without official clearance and reached Japan early Thursday on the first stage of the 8,000-mile flight.

It was almost totally dark when we boarded the World Airways DC8 jet because Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport was on full alert.

The children, many of them babies in diapers and most already spoken for by new parents, were laid out on the blanketed cabin floor with a pillow for each. Some of the older ones chattered with excitement in Vietnamese. Others lay back with their eyes wide with wonder.

Within a few minutes of the orphans' boarding, a stewardess called from the rear of the cabin. "Any Pampers? It's diaper service time already for this one."

Ed Daly, the pistol-packing millionaire president of the charter airline, went to lend a hand with the diapering—something he said he had not done in 25 years.

As the jet prepared to take off for the 25-hour flight to Oakland, Calif., via Tokyo, the airport was closed down because of an anticipated Viet Cong attack and all nonmilitary people were ordered off the base.

"Don't take off. Don't take off. You have no clearance," pilot Ken Healy said he was told by Tan Son Nhut airport tower.

Healy—who flew refugees out of mainland China in the late 1940s and made the chaotic last flight out of Da Nang last week—put the plane into the air anyway.

"I just didn't get the message in time," he said later with a smile. Healy is from San Leandro, Calif.

The babies rolled on their backs in surprise as the plane took off. About 20 adult passengers, including two physicians, watched over them as the plane rose.

There was no crying on the flight to Yokota, a big U.S. air base on Tokyo's western outskirts where the jet was refueled. Most of the babies slept most of the way. But at Yokota, some scrambled to the windows to look at the bright lights.

It was the first time any had flown. Daly, who said he was paying for the $70,000 journey with his own money, had loaded milk, soft drinks, baby food and paper diapers aboard the plane.

Daly had announced Tuesday he would fly out 1,500 orphan babies because of the Vietnamese orphans, some of them wrapped in blankets, sit on the floor of a World Airways DC8 jet as the plane stopped over at Yokota U.S. Air Base in northwest Tokyo early Thursday for refueling hours after it took off from Saigon's Tan Son Nhut airport despite control tower order saying: "don't take off."

Communist-led troops advancing toward Saigon. He planned to send 500 to Australia and 1,000 to the United States.

However, the Australian flight was canceled because Daly claimed the government refused to grant him landing rights. Officials in Canberra said they had ordered the evacuation of 200 Vietnamese babies in government planes. The Australian lift was expected to begin Thursday with 130 orphans going to adoptive parents in Australia and the rest to Europe.

Then Daly scaled down his planned U.S. flight to 600 babies, but that fell apart, and Daly blamed the U.S. Embassy and the Agency for International Development (AID). He said U.S. officials convinced the Friends for All Children—a charitable organization helping Americans adopt orphans—that his planes were not safe.

Connally trial arguments heard

By New York Times

WASHINGTON — A government prosecutor told the jury Wednesday in the bribery trial of John B. Connally that there was documentary evidence to prove that the former secretary of the dairy solicited, and got, a $10,000 payoff for helping the dairy industry.

"Unlike most cash, this money left a trail of footprints" to Connally, said Jon A. Sale, the asst. Watergate special prosecutor, who outlined the government's case in U.S. District Court here. But Edward Bennett Williams, the chief defense attorney, told jurors he would show that Jake Jacobsen, the key prosecution witness on whose testimony the documents would bear, was an elaborate perjurer who actually "embezzled" the funds that allegedly went to Connally in 1971.

The 58-year-old former cabinet member and governor of Texas, his face flushed and chin occasionally jutting, as the prosecution defense took turns describing the case they would make to a jury of seven women and five men impaneled Wednesday morning.

At one point Connally stared at the prosecutor and shook his head, as if to say "No," when Sale described the $10,000 as a dairy industry "thank you" to increase federal milk price supports in March 1971.

Connally is accused of twice accepting $5,000 in cash later that year from Jacobsen, who was then a lawyer for Associated Milk Producers, Inc., the nation's largest dairy cooperative.

Sale said that Jacobsen would testify that he met with Connally on April 28, 1971, and that the treasury secretary said then:

Sale said he would present evidence "in black and white" to show that Jacobsen obtained $10,000 from officials of the dairy group on May 5, 1971, that he gave half the cash to Connally on May 14 and the rest on Sept. 24 of that year.

The documents were records of Jacobsen's access to bank deposit boxes in Texas and Washington that tended to corroborate his accounts of payoff meetings in 1971 and efforts by Connally and Jacobsen two years later to cover up the transactions, the prosecutor said.

The starry lights of Lansing blaze in this one minute time-exposure photograph, as traffic streams past into the night.

Though it would be hard to see, the nation as a whole consumed 2.2 per cent less energy in 1974 than in 1973.

Energy levels show 2.2% decline in '74

WASHINGTON (AP) — Energy use in the United States declined last year for the first time since 1952, the government reported Wednesday.

Preliminary Bureau of Mines figures show that reduced use in the transportation industry led the way to a 2.2 per cent decline in overall energy use from 1973. Consumption of oil products dropped 237 million barrels. This is nearly two-thirds of the million barrels a day savings which President Ford set as a conservation goal.

But only 44 million of those barrels represented a decrease in petroleum imports, which is the principal target area for savings.

Outgoing Interior Secretary Rogers C. B. Morton cited five reasons for the bulk of the decline: the Arab oil embargo, higher prices, economic slowdown, conservation efforts and relatively mild winter weather.

A Bureau of Mines spokesman said figures are not available yet to show just how much of the drop is attributable to each cause.

Energy use had risen at an average annual rate of 4.1 per cent since 1960. Morton said he is "delighted — and frankly gratified — at this drop. I hope we are seeing the start of a new trend."

"If so, then our efforts to meet energy shortages by increasing domestic energy production could be effectively supplemented by measures aimed at decreasing consumption."

The Bureau of Mines figures show that transportation use of energy slackened by 3.4 per cent from a year earlier. Household and commercial use was off 2.9 per cent; industrial use and electricity generation each dipped .9 per cent.

In terms of primary energy sources, consumption fell in six of eight categories. The only increase was in nuclear power, up 32.1 per cent, and hydroelectric power for utilities, up 1.8 per cent.

Draft registration changed

Men reaching age 18 during the rest of this year must wait until a time period is set up for them next year to register for the draft.

Before Selective Service announced the change on Tuesday, men were required to register during a period from 30 days before to 30 days after their 18th birthday.

Draft Director Byron V. Pepitone said the decision to confine registration to a few days each year is in part an economic move by the agency, which has not drafted anyone since Jan. 1, 1973.

Young men are still obligated to register for the draft, after they reach 18. However, the number of draft boards have been reduced from 2,700 to 600 and the boards are not meeting as often.

U.S. defense site operational

The United States' only anti-missile defense site was declared operational Tuesday in northeast North Dakota. The Army announced that its Safeguard site "is now integrated into the nation's defenses."

The Safeguard system, once the focus of a national controversy, was authorized in 1967 with original plans calling for 12 sites principally to protect land-based Minuteman missiles from surprise attack.

The Russians also are limited to a single complex protecting Moscow.

Ford conference planned

CBS, NBC and ABC said Tuesday they will broadcast and telecast President Ford's news conference today from San Diego starting at 3 p.m. (EDT).

Connally trial jury chosen

The jury in the bribery trial of former Treasury Secretary John B. Connally was told Wednesday that Connally accepted $10,000 "as a thank you" in 1971 for helping get milk support prices raised.

"Unlike most cash, this money left a trail of footprints right to Mr. Connally," the asst. prosecutor, Jon A. Sale, told a jury of five men and seven women that just had been sworn in.

But Connally's chief defense lawyer, Edward Bennett Williams, urged the jury to keep an open mind. He tried to separate Connally from the scandals that brought down the Administration of Richard M. Nixon.

Connally, a three-time governor of Texas, is charged with two counts of accepting an illegal gratuity. The charges carry a possible sentence of four years and $20,000 fine upon conviction.

Officials run unopposed, lose

The entire city government of Uniontown, Kan. ran unopposed for re-election and lost.

The mayor and five city councilmen lost Tuesday to write-in candidates. Councilman Noland Headley was beaten by his brother, Herbert. Uniontown has a population of about 300.

Bishop halts ordinations

Bishop William F. Creighton of the Episcopal Diocese of Washington has announced that he will not ordain any more men to the priesthood until church leaders also permit him to ordain women.

In a letter to fellow bishops around the nation, Bishop Creighton said Tuesday that "to ordain men who are deacons while being compelled to refuse ordination to women who are deacons has become conscientiously impossible and a form of injustice of which I can no longer be a part."

The deaconate, normally the first step to the Episcopal priesthood, has been open to women since 1970, but the church has never sanctioned the ordination of a woman to the priesthood.

Fischer may give up title

The president of the International Chess Federation gave Bobby Fischer another 24 hours today to agree to meet Soviet challenger Anatoly Karpov for Fischer's world chess crown.

But Fischer has apparently decided to give up the title rather than play by someone else's rules. A chess master close to the champion said his principles were at stake and he would not change his mind even though the winner of the match, beginning in Manila on June 1, would get $3,175,000 and the loser $1,825,000.

Karpov will be declared the world champion by default, if the federation does not hear from Fischer by the new deadline.

Iraqi army seals off border

Iraqi armor is moving unopposed through mountain strongholds vacated by Kurdish rebels, sealing off large chunks of its northern border with Iran.

Mulla Mustafa Barzani's 13-year-old war for autonomy appears to have crumbled. His Pesh Merga guerillas are either exiles in Iran or posing as civilian refugees in Iraq. The oil-rich Kurdish region is effectively under government control.

A final offensive launched Tuesday by more than 100,000 Iraqi troops had become a mopping up operation by Wednesday. Columns of tanks and armored cars encountered only ragged bands of Kurdish civilians returning from refugee camps in Iran.

Recession stifles recycling attempts

By Associated Press and State News

Because nature's resources are limited, most people recognize the need to recycle waste products into something usable instead of simply burying or burning or otherwise destroying them.

But recognition of the necessity does not lead automatically to the accomplishment, as dealers in recycled paper products are learning today. Some are in a desperate way, their warehouses filled, their order books blank.

Despite the recognition of the need, the industry has closed 18 huge paper-making machines since late last year. Some of these machines were mills in themselves. Altogether, nine or 10 recycling plants have closed.

A recycling program at MSU has been in operation for about three years.

"We've been hit financially by the low market prices, just like everybody else," said Fred Moore, manager of the MSU Waste Control Authority.

Moore said, though, that since the authority has begun renting a new bailer, which can bail 12,000 pounds of paper, it will be able to get the higher prices paid for bailed paper.

Paper collected by the MSU unit is purchased by the St. Regis Co. in Battle Creek. Harold Hanselman, manager of resource development at St. Regis, said the problem is with the economy in general, not recycled paper.

"It isn't that people are using substitutes," he said. "But a lot of industries have been cutting production and buying less from us."

COUPLE LEAVES UNPAID BILL TRAIL

Education agency's funds vanish

By GENE I. MAEROFF
New York Times

NEW YORK — A major educational agency is on the brink of bankruptcy; one college has gone out of existence and another is foundering; several prestigious foundations are unable to trace hundreds of thousands of dollars in grants, and dozens of prominent educators have received worthless checks in the biggest scandal in the academic world in years.

The Institute for Educational Development, the troubled New York-based nonprofit agency that received and was supposed to disburse most of the missing funds, is at the center of the controversy.

It is some $500,000 in debt, and its president, Dr. Samuel B. Gould, former chancellor of the State University of New York, has resigned in embarrassment.

Private accountants and Internal Revenue Service agents have begun trying to untangle the fiscal affairs of the development institute. They hope to shed light on the mystery surrounding Harry and Barbara Lowther, and Illinois couple who gained control of the agency last March and, since then, have left a trail of unpaid bills across the country.

In a lengthy meeting Wednesday afternoon at the Princeton Club in Manhattan, the trustees of the Institute for Educational Development voted to initiate proceedings to remove Mrs. Lowther from the board, to sever ties with her and her husband and to cooperate with legal authorities in actions against the Lowthers.

Also, according to Dr. Lawrence Dennis, who succeeded to the institute's presidency after Gould's resignation, the institute will seek financial support to reinvestigate its program and keep itself afloat.

A spokesman for the Illinois attorney general said Wednesday that a preliminary injunction would be sought Thursday in the Circuit Court of Dupage county to keep in effect a temporary restraining order under which the books and records of the Lowthers' operations were seized last week.

Meanwhile, Prescott College in Arizona has had to close because the banks would not honor thousands of dollars in checks that the Lowthers gave the 9-year-old college last month to rescue it from insolvency.

Lincoln Open University in Illinois has replaced Mrs. Lowther, who has a Ph.D. in psychology, as its president. But half of a $350,000 grant that the university received from the Lilly endowment is missing, and the court order obtained by the attorney general has tied up whatever assets remain.

Portions of grants that the Institute for Educational Development received from the Exxon Education Foundation, the Richard K. Mellon Foundation and the Swiss-based Rothschild Foundation are unaccounted for, and checks paying consultants in grant-sponsored projects have bounced.

Among the consultants who found that checks reimbursing them for honorariums and expenses were worthless are Dr. Mary I. Bunting, a former president of Radcliffe College; Ralph A. Dungan, the New Jersey chancellor of higher education, and Dr. David Sweet, the president of Minnesota Metropolitan State College.

Educational Testing Service, which had control of the Institute for Educational Development since its creation in 1965, turned over control to the Lowthers last March on the promise that a Lowther family charity, the Phillips Research Foundation, would support the institute's budget. Educational Testing Service says it stands to lose $170,000 in loans that were personally guaranteed by Lowther.

Most of the financial mismanagement began to come to light after it was revealed last month.

Hanselman said that though the St. Regis mills have been closed off and in recent weeks, the company will not cut down the amount of paper it buys from the MSU Waste Control Authority.

"The MSU program has been one of our pet projects and we're not about to scuttle it now," he said.

While the nationwide problem has become worse in recent months, it is not a short-term phenomenon. Since 1968, between 60 and 70 machines have fallen idle.

Recycled paper is more than shirt boards and corrugated boxes. It's newsprint, packaging of items from soaps to hardware, bathroom and facial tissues, gypsum wallboard facings, furniture backings — even fine writing papers.

Thirty years ago, when the word ecology was barely recognized, about 35 per cent of all paper consumed by Americans was recycled. Today, only 22 per cent comes from that source, though tonnage is higher.

The most recent part of the downturn is an understandable consequence of recession. Bales of waste paper, the raw material of recycling plants, piled up as demand fell. Prices plummeted.

Last summer, a ton of waste paper, generally newspaper, brought $20 to $30 a ton to the Boy Scout, church or other voluntary organization that collected waste in its neighborhood. Now the price is about $3 or less.

The paper industry maintains it has exhibited a social conscience and that it has made great efforts to "clean up our mess," but it is not totally free of blame or responsibility.

The fact is that in today's capital-strapped economy, the expenditure for a recycling plant is about one-half that of a virgin pulp facility. That in itself is one incentive for promoting recycling.

But, explains an institute spokesman, the industry's major customers — packers, manufacturers, builders — generally are specifying the recycled product.

There is another reason for the dilemma of recycling: the paper makers themselves prefer to deal with virgin fibers.

Many companies find themselves with an overwhelming capital commitment to virgin fibers that conflicts with their realization that the recycled end of the industry must be further developed.

"We want to see the ratio change," said J. Rodney Edwards, the American Paper Institute. "The long-term future of the conservation of materials will require increased recycling, and this includes increased use of waste paper."

Up to now, it has not been wasteful to cut forests, but the practice cannot continue, he said. "The crossover period will come in 1990-2000, when cuttings exceed annual growth."

Though faced with this ultimatum from nature, the industry feels it needs tax credit incentives to spur the development of recycling facilities and the use of recycled products.

The National Cable Co., located at 1070 Trowbridge Road has been the site of a dispute over the use of facilities for public access channel 11 by local citizens who use the channel for local programming.

A studio such as this used to be available to public access users for free up until three weeks ago. Now National Cable Co. has clamped down on the usage of the facilities with restrictions that access users claim are unfair.

AMATEUR PRODUCERS DISCOURAGED

Public access TV rules debated

By FRED NEWTON
State News Staff Writer

Amateur television producers have been shoved off East Lansing's public access channel 11 because of recent enforcement of once-ignored channel use restrictions.

National Cable Co., which runs the East Lansing public access channel 11, began three weeks ago to enforce rules calling for a limit of one free half hour to each user per week, and charging users 50 cents per minute thereafter.

The action has made it impossible for many former users of the channel to continue using it, led to the resignation of public access programming coordinator David Korte and caused a heated dispute between users and the National Cable Co.

At an informal meeting Tuesday night between the cable TV management, public access users and the East Lansing cable commission, arguments centered on the alleged unfairness of newly enforced restrictions on public access users.

A little known aspect of cable TV is the availability to the public of channel 11. Anyone in East Lansing wishing to produce a program is able to use the facilities and equipment at the company's studios, 1070 Trowbridge Road.

Use of the facilities have been, for the most part, free to the community, with National Cable providing instructions and technical assistants.

Up until three weeks ago use of the studio and equipment was unlimited and free with very little restrictions. However, recent restrictions by the company have stirred a flurry of protest among the users of public access who claim that they are now being limited both in time and financially, because money is now charged for studio use that was virtually free before.

Korte, who resigned three weeks ago, shortly before the restrictions began to be enforced, said that his concern was for the encouragement of the use of public access in the community.

"Public access is not a money making part of National Cable, but I am getting the impression that they (National Cable) are trying to make it a profitable thing and in the process discouraging its use," Korte said.

When Korte was public access program coordinator he encouraged the use of public access by the community by not charging any fee for studio use and allowing easy use of and access to studio equipment.

Company officials have charged that Korte was too lax in allowing the use of equipment and the studios. Most access users disagree.

Ted Pregitzer, director of program origination services for the company, said that Korte was too lenient in his use of the facilities.

"There has been a misunderstanding by the users of public access," Pregitzer said. "The lack of enforcement of the rules that have always existed have misled the users of the service."

Those who support Korte say that the lax rules allowed more of the community to take advantage of public access.

The current management now charges 50 cents per minute of studio use after an initial free half hour of use. There was no charge previously. The studio has also put a limit of one free half hour per week. Before it was one free half hour every day. The company said it fears a "monopoly" of the facilities by only a few public access users.

Since these rules have gone into effect, the use of the public access studios have dropped to almost complete disuse.

Marilyn Hanley, a local resident who is hostess for the twice monthly "Parent Report," a question and answer program dealing with the East Lansing High School that is aired over public access TV, said that the recent changes will definitely hurt her show.

"The cable commissioners have a responsibility to give this service free to the users," she said. "The program would not have the spirit of free inquiry about the schools if funds from sources like the school have to be sought to pay for the program."

Another locally produced program, "Black Notes," which is shown an hour each week, will also be affected. The producer will have to look for funds from outside sources to keep his show an hour long.

Neal McAlpin, producer of the black-oriented show, said he recently moved out of the city limits, but was still allowed to produce the show because it is geared for the East Lansing community. However, the rule restrictions that allow use of equipment by city residents only has been enforced and he can no longer be responsible, at least on paper, for the program.

"The net effect of the enforcement of rules has been to shut down the studios for all practical use," said Mike Price, a

Background:

Cable TV was first introduced to East Lansing nearly five years ago, to 1,500 units in MSU married housing. In 1972 the city drew up a cable TV ordinance that has since proved to be a model plan for the country.

The ordinance established a cable commission and paved the way for widespread use of cable TV throughout East Lansing. In May 1973, the National Cable Co. was awarded a franchise from the city to supply the community with cable TV.

Since then cable TV has grown to serve over 5,000 units in East Lansing with 18 channels which range from a 24-hour news station to locally-produced programs.

The operating funds for cable TV come from subscriber revenues. After an initial installation charge, each subscriber must pay a monthly rate which has recently gone up to $6.95.

Five per cent of the subscription revenues are given to the cable commission, whose job is to promote public access programming and advise the city council on areas dealing with cable TV, such as rate increases.

Public access channel 11, which has been the focus of recent dispute, is available for public use and presentation of programs of local interest. The public access TV facilities, which are open for use by any East Lansing resident, have been available for free until recently.

The facilities, which include the use of video programming equipment, has been used by hundreds of groups such as firemen and parents groups.

Recently, however, the management of National Cable Co. has enforced rules that were always on the books but supposedly never strictly adhered to by the former public access coordinator.

The recent enforcement of rules have been cited by many access users as unfair and causing a limitation to those presenting their views on what was previously free and unlimited use of public access TV.

member of Delta productions, a local media group. The group is one of many groups that have been affected by the new restrictions.

Bob Muhlback, head of the East Lansing cable commission, said that his group would consider the local input by the 35 people who showed up for the meeting and would like to see the commission come to some solution over the dispute.

Regardless, the restrictions put on users of public access channel 11 by National Cable have brought production of locally produced programs and the use of channel 11 to a standstill. The users say they cannot produce programs in a limited time and they cannot afford the payments for programs produced in the studio running over 30 minutes.

Council delays study of housing after commissions' disagreement

By JOE KIRBY
State News Staff Writer

East Lansing is planning to do a study of housing in the city—but it appears the study will be delayed for awhile.

Tuesday's meeting East Lansing City Council voted 3-2 to hold back $3,000 slated for a study of East Lansing until the city's Planning and Zoning Commissions agree on what should be included in the study.

The city had contracted the Tenants' Center (TRC) to draw up a proposal for the study for $500. If the proposal was approved by both the Housing and Planning Commissions the TRC was to be paid $3,000 to carry out the study. The problem is that the two commissions can not agree on what should be in the study so the Housing Commission asked Tuesday that the $3,000 be released without Planning Commission approval so the TRC could begin the study.

Byron Brown, member of the Housing Commission, said it was important the study begin soon so the information could be gathered before the students left at the end of spring term.

Councilwoman Mary Sharp said council should not rush into it until they were sure of what they were doing. She said she would like to find out what differences there were between what the two commissions wanted in the study.

"I frankly don't know the problem so I plead ignorance," Sharp said. "I still don't know the purpose of the study, no one told me."

Councilman George Griffiths and Mayor Wilbur Brookover both felt they knew enough about the study and felt the TRC should be allowed to go ahead with the study approved by the Housing Commission.

Charles Ipcar, co-coordinator of the TRC, said the Planning Commission wanted a larger sample, which would cost more than $3,000, and also wanted a lot of "people's opinions" included in the study.

Council will receive additional information from the two commissions and city staff before making a final decision on the funds.

In other action, council adopted a new ordinance which would increase the length of a cable television franchise from seven to 10 years.

Griffiths and Brookover both opposed the ordinance because they felt seven years was enough and it gave council a quicker chance to review the job the cable company was doing.

"I don't think it makes any difference, despite all the propaganda," Brookover said. "In East Lansing, there is no place for a competing company."

Council also approved a contract between the Michigan State Highway Commission, the Ingham County Road Commission and the city for the reconstruction of Abbott Road from Saginaw Street to Lake Lansing Road. The cost to the city for the project will be $421,950.

Michigan's title as Winter Wonderland may be outliving its usefulness. Ask the tires on these cars, the frozen feet and numbed hands of the pedestrians, the frostbitten tree buds and the footprints — no doubt leading to a parked car and a drive home for those who have had enough.

Welfare abusers get 30-day grace period

The Ingham County Prosecutor's office is offering a 30-day grace period for persons who are now collecting welfare but are not eligible. They will not be prosecuted, if they repay the state before the month of April ends.

There are about 12 active welfare fraud cases in Ingham County pending now, but none concern student food stamp users.

Ingham County Prosecutor Raymond Scodeller said Tuesday his office would continue to issue warrants for welfare fraud, including ineligible persons receiving food stamps, if persons fail to take advantage of the grace period program.

Thomas Kulick, prosecuting attorney, said "We will continue our diligent program of welfare fraud prosecution that we always have."

Donald Dempsey, director of the state Dept. of Social Services, publicly asked the prosecutor's office for a grace period in which welfare cheaters can turn themselves in without fear of prosecution. The state must reduce its welfare error rate, if it is to retain approximately $30 million in federal funds.

"It's a substantial problem. We are offering a considerable program for someone who wants to make amends without getting prosecuted," he said.

If a welfare cheater is caught owing over $500 to the state, the offense is considered a felony and is prosecuted as such. The prosecution moratorium will allow cheaters to avoid a possible stiff penalty.

Essential costs force room and board hike

The most intense frustrations of modern living — both for individuals and institutions — are those problems and decisions which are dictated by external, inescapable forces.

The powerful voice of inflation has decreed such a decision for MSU. Irreversible rising costs have put a gun to the heads of University administrators and compelled them to plan a room and board increase for next fall of something close to $100 per year.

It is an option that MSU surely would rather avoid exercising — because such a fee increase can only discourage students from attending MSU. But it is a stand that cannot be dodged.

Essentials like food and paper products, which normally are paid for by room and board money, have zoomed in cost over the last few years, and MSU has only students to turn to for the additional needed money.

Of course, MSU could cut back its residence halls budget to make up for added expense. There has, however, already been a push for efficiency and dollar-stretching in residence halls which hopefully has conserved all possible funds there.

One proof that the nation's largest residence hall system is pinching pennies as well as could be expected right now is that students here still pay less for room and board than students at any state public university in Michigan except Grand Valley State Colleges.

MSU cannot tighten its belt too much, for it must not curtail services that a large, respected university should provide.

Blame the economy, blame the federal government or blame your favorite scapegoat, but the green-and-white gnomes in the Administration Building appear to be guiltless this time.

Save Lake Superior

The score now stands at Industry 1, the People and the Environment 0, after the Supreme Court's reprehensible decision Monday concerning the Reserve Mining Co.

The Reserve Mining Co., if you recall, is the Minnesota ore processing company that spews 67,000 tons of poisonous waste material daily into Lake Superior, the largest fresh water lake in the world. At that rate, almost 150 million tons of waste have found their way into one of the state's most valuable natural wonders in the six years the case has dragged on.

In upholding an Appeals Court decision that allows Reserve to continue its operations, the court has recklessly allowed possible cancer-causing asbestos fibers to endanger the public health and upset the delicate environmental balance for another day — while it weighs the possibility of giving the case a full scale review.

If parties in the case request that review, there is still a chance Reserve's despicable actions can be halted.

The damage, however, is done. No one should need to think twice about the public safety and responsibility for creating what could become the world's largest "freshwater" cesspool.

TV pays Bonnie to tell all

WASHINGTON — "In keeping with our policy of paying all news sources, the Combustible Broadcasting Co. presents tonight an exclusive interview with Bonnie Parker, aide, confidante and chief-of-staff to Clyde Barrow, the greatest bank robber of our time. Bonnie Parker was paid $354.67 to appear on this program which we believe has great historical significance."

"Bonnie, you were closer to Clyde than anyone else. What was he like when you worked with him?"

"He was weird. There was a part of him which was very decisive, like when he decided to stick up the Third National Trust Co. of Omaha. But there was another part of him which showed he had a great inferiority complex."

"Explain that."
"Well, he never thought he tipped enough when he went to a roadside diner. He always believed that after he left, the waitress would say he was a cheapskate."

"Once he said to me after we took a Brink's truck outside of Des Moines, 'I wonder if history will remember me for this or for the fact I left a dime at a Howard Johnson's in Tulsa, Okla.'"

"Bonnie, Bill Quickfire in his book 'The Rise and Fall of Bonnie and Clyde' said you were ruthless in the way you ran the gang — that you had a short temper and chewed out anyone who tried to get near Clyde. How do you plead?"

"I wouldn't say ruthless. I would say tough. Clyde always had a lot of things on his mind. He was planning payroll heists, savings and loan stickups and he even had a grand plan to break into the national mint."

"My job, as I saw it as chief aide, was to protect him from all the third-rate crooks who were trying to suck up to him. I had to keep Clyde free from the day-to-day operations of the gang. Sure, they got mad at me. But no one makes friends in this job."

"Bonnie, one of the things said was that you and Clyde, as well as the rest of the gang, looked on everyone as enemies. True or not true?"

"True. But I think Clyde summed it up best in his farewell address to us when he said, 'Always remember, others may hate you, but those who hate don't win unless you hate them.' I think you have to keep this all in the context of the times. We were robbing banks, and the press was on our backs for it. The newspapers never wrote anything good about us. Well, after a while this gets to you. It isn't much fun for you or your families to be called gangsters. So we decided anyone who didn't approve of our business was our enemy. That's only natural."

"Right. Now, Bonnie, let's get on to the job that finally got you all caught — the break-in of the First National Bank of Watergate. Looking back on it, would you have done it again?"

"In retrospect, I guess it was stupid, not because we did it but because we were caught. I have to take some of the responsibility for that."

"Why?"
"Well, after the robbery we split up the money and we had all these canvas bags left over, with 'First National Bank of Watergate' printed on them. Clyde asked me if we should destroy the bags."

"But I said no — that we should keep them for historical reasons. I never in my wildest dreams ever thought the bags would be used against us as evidence. If I knew then what I know now I would have told Clyde to burn them."

"Then what you're saying, Bonnie, is that you have no regrets about robbing banks. You are only sorry you got caught?"

"That's correct. At the time we thought bank robbing was the best thing for the country. But I'd like to say one more thing. The Bonnie and Clyde gang spent only 10 per cent of their time sticking up banks — 90 per cent of what we did had nothing to do with crime. But the press doesn't talk about that. Someday when passions subside, I hope the people will think of the other things we did, like watching baseball and drinking beer and going to the movies and hunting squirrel. Take away the bank robberies and we're as American as apple pie."

Tax bill equalizes incomes

Distributed by Los Angeles Times SYNDICATE

Administration and the ineptitude of its successors.

The tax bill at least raises the possibility of a new program. As the New York Times' expert on tax legislation, Eileen Shanahan, has pointed out, the combination of 1974 and 1975 tax cuts provides tax reduction at the rate of 238 per cent for the poorest, and 103 and 51 per cent for the next poorest classes, while the per cent of reduction for the middle-class runs only from 15 to 28 per cent, with wealthy held below 6 per cent.

In addition, the bill establishes the principle of cash payments to the poor through a "negative income tax" — with such assistance scaled not only for the lowest income levels but also for the working poor. A straight cash payment to help social security and railroad retirement beneficiaries represents another step toward a program of direct income assistance.

The tax bill, of course, does not constitute anything like a real incomes plan, one that might substitute for the welfare program, and for some of the other social services the government now provides. But from political as well as the economic view, a substantial start in that direction, one the Democrats — whose bill this measure is — would do well to capitalize on their prime election problem: to win and hold for another political generation votes of working-class people.

An incomes program holds out possibility for several reasons. It is an American politics, save for Richard Nixon's ill-fated experiment with the Family Assistance Plan. It is conservative in that it money in people's hands to do with as they wish, rather than subjecting them to advice and regulation of a federal bureaucracy. It is populist because it redistributes income and wealth by direct transfer to the affluent to the poor — prefer through the tax system. It is liberal in that it is equitable across-the-board, benefiting the white ethnic, the Spanish-speaking, the black poor alike and on the same basis.

Ultimately, an incomes program was aimed at alleviating the economic ills of American society — "soaking the rich" to some extent, not for what can be called "visionary social schemes," but to increase the amount of hard cash available to the at the lowest levels of the economic ladder.

Then it would be reasonable to hope if the most disadvantaged people of American life had more money to spend they saw fit, and fewer grievances against a wealthy society that they believed to be exploited and discriminated against by that society might be less torn by violence, unrest and animosity between races and classes.

That may be a lot to deduce from one bill, and too much to expect of a party long bankrupt of ideas as the Democrats. But 40 years after the New Deal, where are they going to go?

Proxmire attack unfair

I would like to address my comments to your recent editorial (March 28) regarding Sen. William Proxmire, (D - Wisc.)

I gather from your editorial that you obviously know very little about Proxmire. Your characterization of Proxmire as an "ignorant" and "anti-intellectual" statesman completely baffles me. I can only conclude that your editorial policy equals your own description of the senator, since you constantly advocate the very same issues Proxmire supports.

The fact is, your paper supported cutting off aid to Southeast Asia — so does Proxmire. His amendment on Aug. 21 was defeated 47-44. You also supported CIA reform, on June 4, Proxmire's proposal to disclose the cost of CIA operations was also defeated. Think about that.

You say the senator is mixing politics with science to his own advantage. How can he possibly benefit from his criticism? The fact is, Proxmire is one of the few men in Washington who consistently questions the expenditures and allocations of U.S. tax dollars. Is it so unreasonable for a U.S. senator to challenge the validity of $343,000 in federal funds?

Finally, you say that the people of Wisconsin would be better served by someone else. I guess the State News must know something the people of Wisconsin don't. On the other hand, maybe Sen. Proxmire knows more than the State News.

Jenison acoustics OK

As one who has no doubt over the last 34 years bitched as much as any about the lousy acoustics in Jenison Fieldhouse, I wouldn't want them closing up the place after another basketball season without some public recognition of and appreciation for the wonderful improvement in the public address system. I'm not an engineer, but I don't think the better hearing was just because there were only 9,800 rather than 12,500 pairs of ears listening.

And while we're on the acoustical kick, I guess the proposed MSU Performing Arts Center is supposed to be an acoustical improvement over the present Auditorium (it, too, is being programed for far fewer ears and one wonders why).

Surely nothing can improve on the melodious sound of Ken Beachler's voice as he introduces the programs and the movies. And last year's Preservation Jazz Band concert had the old Auditorium rocking like I've never seen it rock before (even more than when my wife and I received our diplomas there in 1940).

So here's a public word of thanks to the Jenison Fieldhouse crew and to the future-Concert Series staff for all their efforts on the public's behalf. I'm sure I'm writing these words for many, many other appreciative folks.

Apologize Weisenfeld

This letter is addressed to anyone who is interested in professional news media operations at WVIC.

On Monday morning the International Committee Against Racism (INCAR) called a press conference. The press conference was to inform members of the media of the cases of two MSU women faculty members who are scheduled to be fired by the University.

Attending the meeting were a State News reporter; myself, a reporter for the Grapevine Journal; and the most notable Paul Weisenfeld, news director at WVIC in Lansing.

Weisenfeld's behavior at the conference was a fine example from someone who is not only a reporter but also news director.

As a student of journalism I have always been told that a reporter is one who reports what is happening. In this particular case, it would be the reporter's job to relate the accusations made against MSU by INCAR to the mass audience and properly attribute those accusations to INCAR.

Weisenfeld came to the meeting equipped with preconceptions and acted as an official for the University and not a reporter for the public airwaves.

The type of behavior displayed by Weisenfeld is intolerable and warrants a case for mistrust of the news media by the public. This behavior should not be tolerated by the management or owners of WVIC. And I hope that this matter will be looked at closely by those groups.

When someone sees a display of such character by a person who is heard by potentially over a half million people, it makes one wonder the state of a medium such as WVIC and in turn raises unjustified doubts about other news agencies.

I am quite disturbed over what I saw Monday morning.

Farmers stage cheap beef sale

LANSING (UPI) — The National Farmers Organization (NFO) has announced plans to stage another beef and cheese sale in Michigan.

"We are farmers and we want to stay in farming," she said.

Mrs. Koenes said the sale last Saturday in Detroit was "very successful."

Two sales in the Lansing area will begin at 9 a.m. today at the Frank's Nurseries in the Lansing and Meridian malls.

The group has also held sales in Detroit and Port Huron.

Lorraine Koenes of Alto, a member of NFO, told a Lansing news conference Tuesday farmers will sell ground beef, Wisconsin cheddar cheese, potatoes and navy beans at prices "far below those found in the supermarkets."

At the Detroit sale in late March, a 5 1/2-pound package of ground beef sold for $5; 20 pounds of potatoes went for $1.25; a 25-pound bag of navy beans sold for $7, and a five pound block of cheese went for $6.25.

Mrs. Koenes charged that the retailers, and not the farmers, are making profits and that the sales are held to demonstrate that point.

In Friday's story about the expected residence hall rate hike, a statement was incorrectly attributed to Kathleen Day, 320 Campbell Hall. Actually the statement was made by Cathy Dean, 318 Campbell Hall who answered Day's telephone.

The State News incorrectly stated in Tuesday's paper that married students filing joint income tax returns would be eligible for a $200 minimum rebate under the recently approved tax-cut legislation, provided they paid $200 in taxes. The figure should have been $100. We regret the error.

Conscientious taxpayer' may face jail

NEW YORK (AP) — "If I have any fear at all in my lifetime, it's being exactly where my conscience is going to take me," Francis J. Costello's conscience now has him battling with the federal government. At 33, a high school teacher, a husband and a father, Costello faces the loss of part of his salary and the possibility of imprisonment.

Costello is one of the thousands of "conscientious taxpayers" who refuse to pay all or part of their taxes because of their opposition to war. He sees himself as struggling to maintain his personal integrity against the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Dept. of Justice and the ultimate foe, the President and Congress may continue to debate over whether to provide further military aid to Indochina, whether to develop new weapons systems or whether to spend enough next year to maintain the position of the United States as the world's leading super power, but Costello and other individuals like him simply refuse to pay for it.

In March 12, a federal judge handed down a decision against Costello in a civil action brought by the IRS for nonpayment of taxes for 1971.

Neither the First Amendment nor the other legal principles invoked by the petitioner nor the evident sincerity of his beliefs furnishes any basis for granting him relief from his obligation to comply with the income tax law," the judge wrote.

Conscience or not, Costello must pay the taxes, and the IRS will have the right to confiscate his wages to get the money, the court held. Costello says he will appeal.

Now the government is considering whether to file criminal charges against him for his tax returns of 1972 - 74. Costello claimed as many as 10 exemptions so that less money would be withheld from his paycheck for taxes in proportion to the share of the Defense Dept. in the federal budget.

Costello says he took the extra money and poured it into community projects of his own choosing. But the law says falsely inflating exemptions is fraud, and he could wind up in prison.

There are others like Costello. A 64-year-old woman, Martha Tranquilli, was released from a federal prison in California March 3 after serving 7 1/2 months for tax fraud for claiming anti-war organizations as dependents.

In Fremont, Mich., Paul Snyder and his wife had their property confiscated by the IRS last month for nonpayment of about $3,000 in taxes since the 1971 invasion of Cambodia.

An IRS spokesman said that for the year 1971, at the height of U.S. involvement in the Vietnam war, there were 1,740 tax returns readily identifiable as protest returns for war resistance or other reasons; for fiscal 1974, the number dropped to 667, though he said many such returns could go undetected.

The full scope of the protest might be more accurately reflected in the number of persons withholding payment of the federal excise tax on their telephone bills, a tax imposed specifically to pay for war costs. There were 56,445 instances in 1971 compared to 50,371 in fiscal 1974, the IRS spokesman said.

YEARBOOK POSITIONS OPEN

The MSU Yearbook, the Wolverine, is accepting applications for positions on the 1976 yearbook staff. All positions are paid and begin next fall quarter. A complete reorganization and redefinition of the Wolverine has recently taken place, with all positions being reviewed and explicitly defined. Staff positions involve a maximum of creativity and responsibility and offer excellent on-the-job training in copywriting, reporting, layout, photography and sales.

Positions to be filled include editor, photo editor, organizations editor, advertising-sales manager, copy editor, layout editor, reporters and photographers.

Persons interested in applying should call or stop in the yearbook office in 30 Student Services Bldg. any afternoon between noon and 5. The Wolverine phone number is 355-8263. Deadline for applications in Friday, April 11.

ASMSU LEGAL AID

We are petitioning for students to work on student related problems, research, and clerical duties.

We prefer students who express themselves well and who have sufficient spare time to work in the office.

LAWYER-TURNED-MUSICIAN PROMOTES MUSIC

Mexican conductor breaks many molds

Jorge Velazco, a Mexican musician and University official, shares his observations of differences — and similarities — between Mexican and U.S. music and society. He is on campus this week to lecture and conduct the MSU Chamber Orchestra in concert Thursday night at 8:15 in the Kellogg Center auditorium.

By PETE DALY
State News Reviewer

"I studied law. I finished law school. I quit law."

That is how Jorge Velazco — a musician — sums up his short and involuntary law career. He is a cultural emissary from the National University of Mexico, at MSU this week to lecture on Mexican music and to conduct the MSU Chamber Orchestra at 8:15 tonight in Kellogg Auditorium.

The 33-year-old Mexican does not like to be known as a lawyer. He only entered law school upon pressure from his family, which has a long tradition of lawyers, he said.

"I wasn't really motivated to be a lawyer . . . so let's talk about something else," he said, changing the subject.

Velazco's love of music began at age 15, when he started a serious study of piano. Later he shifted primarily to conducting, which he has studied in Mexico and Europe. That worked to a position as asst. professor in charge of the conducting workshop at the University of Mexico. Now he is the asst. head of that university's Office of Cultural Promotion.

He says a problem with classical music in Mexico is that its cultural traditions are not really a part of his native country.

"It is an expression of the western European culture. In Mexico it is more of a borrowed culture," he said, pointing out that the relatively widespread poverty in Mexico clashes with most young people there indulge in to an almost fanatic degree.

"We have places in Mexico called 'funky houses.' These places usually offer only rock the assimilation of classical music.

"Scientists now know that culture begins at 2,500 calories a day. A lot of people in Mexico still don't eat that well. But the Mexican government has done much to bring . . . culture to many Mexicans."

"Scientists now know that culture begins at 2,500 calories a day. A lot of people in Mexico still don't eat that well," he explained.

"But the Mexican government has done much to bring this kind of culture to many Mexicans. For example, the University this year is organizing over 300 concerts around the country."

Velazco said most Mexicans listen to one of three types of music. "Ranchero" is native folk music that is still popular in some areas. Other social strata prefer traditional Mexican songs of romance, which began developing in the late 19th century, he said. Last, but not least, is rock and roll, which and roll (no food or alcohol), and sometimes they go nonstop on weekends. I've seen people at Funky Houses dancing like Watusis, sometimes for six or seven hours in a row! I don't know how they do it!" Velazco exclaimed.

The concert conductor admits that even he is not immune to the appeal of rock and roll.

"I'm a little old fashioned. I like the Beatles," Velazco said. "And I guess I like some of the Rolling Stones' music. But I try not to be so enthusiastic about rock and roll at home, because I think its prevalence there is too much of an imitation of the U.S. Rock and roll is out of place there."

Despite a standard of living much lower than their neighbor's to the north, some of the more banal accomplishments of commerce and technology can also be found in Mexico. Namely, supermarket music.

"Oh, I loathe that stuff," Velazco said, covering his face with his hands. "Yes, we have that same kind of idiotic music in Mexico. I could kill someone if I had to listen to that for two days!"

Velazco believes the low degree of tonal variations in the canned music often found in supermarkets and doctor's offices could be dangerous. He said that though one seems to be oblivious to it, it is actually having some effect on the brain.

"Neurological experiments have shown that brain waves are affected by music," he said. "Sometimes this is obvious, like when you listen to a marching band. It makes you want to march, too."

"If you have constantly stimulating music, I am sure it is having some kind of effect." Velazco will travel to New York after leaving MSU on his cultural mission.

Ensemble wins with diverse repertoire

Avant-garde attracts big crowd

By RANDY SAMUELS
News Special Reviewer
The New Musical Arts Ensemble (NVAE) hit the Practice Building slightly later than the advertised 8:17 kickoff time. The postconcert was due to an excitingly large audience of about 100 people. Who would have thought that avant-garde vocalists had so many proponents?

"Sueno Real No. 9," composed in 1975 by Richard Jennings, the ensemble's director. "Sueno Real No. 9" employed the innovative "talk tube," a device that combines the human oral cavity with electronically generated sounds to produce voicing, used in this piece for a poem by poet Lawrence Ferlinghetti. The tube showed intriguing possibilities. It might be interesting to see it used by several people at once, in a trio or even a chorus. "Charlie Rutledge," the second Ives piece on the program, featured Jennings, this time singing baritone. He is quite a crooner, but his voice is a little light on the low end. Perhaps if he gained some weight. . . The highlight of this number was pianist Jonathon Hubbard's cowboy hat. Sandy Sloszek, mezzo-soprano, sang Aaron Copland's "Heart, We Will Forget Him" and with soprano Sandy Smalley, selections from Ned Rorem's "Gloria." The two women can really belt out a tune and were the evening's strongest singers. Alan Hohavahness' "Three Songs" displayed the rhythms and postromantic harmonic styling that characterize the composer. The softened Stravinskian approach suffers from being overworked and simple-minded. The concert's only nonvocal offering was "Burst of Applause" by Vito Mason. The piece, as the title suggests, had the NVAE clapping in four-part harmony instead of singing. The work is based on a good idea, but in this context it was used up quickly. This technique would serve better as a portion of a larger work. The same criticism applies to Pauline Oliveros' "Sound Pattern." The piece shows Oliver-os' outstanding compositional ability, but suffers from over-extension of the vocal idea of popping and shooshing noises. Robert Starper's 1969 composition, "Pain Has An Element of Blank," was interesting. Adding to the performance was Sheila Wallace's dance. More works combining several art forms would be welcome in future MSU concerts. Three selections stand out as the most notable performances of the evening—two live and one on tape. The tape was of the world premier of noted composer Charles Dodge's "The Story of Our Lives," based on a poem by Mark Strand. It explored the mysteries of what happens when the separating line between one's life and one's autobiography become obscured.

Dodge's voice realization was entirely computer generated—a virtuoso demonstration of the computer's capabilities, which Dodge himself has tried to expand through his work at Columbia University. "Story," like his "Earth's Magnetic Field," suffers from a lack of polyphony and by the more than mannered pace at which it proceeds. The second of the best three was "Determinant and Indeterminant Proportions" by John Celona and performed by the entire NVAE. Performed vocally here for the first time, it displayed the resourcefulness of the NVAE—interpreting a unique score as well as developing individual vocalizations. The piggy grunts were especially noteworthy. Without a doubt, the showstopper was Jack Breson's much anticipated "To a Sinister Potato," which tried to solve the musical question, "Indiana or Idaho?" The combination of a sound musical score with strong wit proved to be the audience's favorite.

Lighting and visuals were provided by the media group Intermediary, who seem to have the energy, talent and know-how, but were not quite capable of pulling off a solid presentation. The addition of a stronger visual element in the performance would have made it truly a product of the 20th century. Seeing a concert such as this at MSU is heartening. There should be more, and I am looking to the New Musical Arts Ensemble concert on May 8.

I would like to see the incorporation of more students' contributions toward expanding the musical language in addition to premiering the works of others. For that type of demonstration, we should be getting the composers themselves.

Abrams presents cosmic musing

By FRANK FOX
State News Reviewer

As earth once visited by intergalactic gourmets who taught native man the secret of the hamburger? As Aristotle just a traveling man from Mars? Erich Von Daniken a philosopher of outer space or merely a cosmic musing and starchy speculations like these are explored in "The Godfathers," the new program at Abrams Planetarium. The show will be presented every weekend through June 1. "The Godfathers" is largely inspired by the popular books of Erich Von Daniken, including "Chariots of the Gods?" and "Gods on Outer Space," among other works. Von Daniken has speculated that earth was long ago visited by beings from outer space who were accepted as gods by primitive man. Now, if you can buy that, Von Daniken adds that these kindly travelers taught men the sciences, crafts and such abstract concepts as law and justice. Having advanced mankind from benighted darkness, the "gods" departed, leaving behind all the unsolved mysteries of the earth. Von Daniken, and other writers, have been making hay with these speculations. "The Godfathers" critically examines some of the salient points of Von Daniken's theories. But wait, the staff at Abrams has made significant, original additions to Von Daniken's research. Von Daniken has wandered the globe in search of traces of ancient star travelers, but strange as it may seem, he missed MSU. Yet there is intriguing evidence that other worldly beings have trod through the Beal Gardens and dunked doughnuts in the Union grill. And would you like to buy some Mexican gold-mining stock? "The Godfathers" will be presented at 8 and 10 p.m. Friday and Saturday evenings and at 2:30 and 4 p.m. Sundays.

Socialist presidential candidate puts emphasis on human rights

By ROSANNE LESS
State News Staff Writer

The 1976 presidential candidate of the Socialist Workers party (SWP) campaigned at MSU Tuesday, emphasizing that human needs must come before capitalistic profits.

Peter Camejo accused Republicans and Democrats of war mongering and perpetrating inflation and unemployment because the inherent goal of the capitalistic ruling class is to cause such economic maladies.

"There is no logical reason why eight million people are unemployed," Camejo said. "If you want inflation and unemployment, racism and sexism, then vote Democratic or Republican in '76."

Camejo acknowledged that he really does not expect to wake up on Nov. 2, 1976 and suddenly find himself president of the United States. The hope of his campaign is to win people, to build a movement and to provide a viable political alternative, he said.

Socialism can be built politically and economically without sacrificing basic human rights, like freedom of speech, press, religion and assembly, he said. Socialism will make the bill of rights real.

Camejo frequently told the crowd of 100 people that the American economy is sick, but that the people that made it ill are the very ones who say they can cure it.

"Can you walk into a grocery store and say, 'Wow, inflation struck last night?'" he said. "Who makes the decisions? Would you decide to have 8 percent of the population unemployed?"

Camejo and his running mate, Willie Mae Reid, were chosen by the SWP National Committee in October 1974. They have been on the campaign trail since December. Reid did not accompany Camejo to MSU because she was in Chicago waiting for mayoral election returns. Reid received 16,365 votes in that race.

The SWP platform consists of five points:

- Campaigning for the right to campaign. Camejo has been arrested twice so far during this campaign for what he says are contrived reasons. "Our campaign is being Water-gated," he said.

- To inform people that a rational, planned economy is the solution to the present economic crisis. Camejo said the best response among the population so far has been with the unemployed and the workers.

- To capitalize on the Water-gate reaction. One of the effects of Watergate is more people are politically independent, he said.

- To have cost of living allowances in every labor contract, so that as prices rise wages will immediately follow. Camejo called inflation "a myth," saying that it does not matter that a pound of butter costs $3. Numbers are meaningless. What is significant is that if a person's wages meet the cost of commodities, there is no such thing as inflation, he said.

- Abolish the CIA and the FBI.

- To work for increased rights of women and other minorities.

Camejo additionally called for a complete cut of the war budget and to cease interest payments to the rich. As an example, he said that there would be a moratorium on all people making over $30,000. They would not get interest payments from the government, he said. The individual would still be free to increase his own personal income but he would do this by working, not by getting money from the government.

National interest payments are paid on bonds purchased to finance the national debt. Bonds like this are tax free, and frequently serve as a tax loophole for people with large incomes.

There are 25 million people in the United States who live at the poverty level, Camejo said. If the $85 billion war budget and the $31 billion interest payment allotment were abandoned, each family in the nation would be "rationed" an annual income of $18,800 under the SWP plan.

Poverty causes crime, Camejo said. Ninety per cent of all people arrested in the United States have an income of less than $5,000. There are more "cops" in the United States right now on a per population basis than in Nazi Germany," he added.

Peter Camejo, Socialist Workers candidate for president, told an audience at MSU Tuesday night that America must put human priorities above capitalistic goals.

Co-op schedule info meeting

Looking for a place to live next year? Tired of dorm and apartment life?

For those who are, area co-ops will be sponsoring an information session Sunday at 1 p.m. in 35 Union for all those interested in co-op living.

"We want people to join co-ops who want some degree of control over their lives and are willing to take some responsibility while living with others," said Susan Brownlee, a member of the Hedrick House co-op.

There are many co-ops near campus, both co-ed and male or female only. Inexpensiveness and control by those living within each co-op house are two of the major advantages of co-op living.

A slide show and talks will take place during the meeting, which will be followed by tours of the various co-ops.

All those interested in finding out more about co-op living are strongly encouraged to attend the meeting.

WINS HONORS FROM MEDIA, TEAMMATES

Hairston named basketball MVP

Lindsay Hairston was presented with the two most prestigious awards at the MSU Basketball Bust held Tuesday night at Long's Banquet Center in Lansing.

Hairston, the Spartans' senior captain, won the most valuable player awards voted by both the media (the Charles

S. Phillips Award) and his teammates.

The latter award, the Chicago Tribune Award, makes Hairston eligible for Tribune Big Ten Player of the Year honors.

Guard Bill Glover, another graduating senior, was presented with the most improved player award (MSU Mid-Michigan Alumni Club Award) and junior Lovelle Rivers won the award for sportsmanship (Stephen G. Scofield Award).

About 300 people attended the bust, which was sponsored by the Rebounders Club. Former Spartan All-American Johnny Green, who spent 14 seasons in the NBA, was the featured speaker at the bust. Green, a former Bryan Hall Man of the Year, now works in sales and public relations for the Xerox Corp. in New York.

A first at Munn Ice Arena: women's 'ringette' tilt tonight

MSU students, faculty and staff will have a chance to take a look at a new sport tonight at 7:30 in Munn Ice Arena.

A half-hour "ringette" exhibition game will be played by two teams from Flint women's ringette league, in the hopes of generating interest for an MSU women's intramural league.

After the game the teams will give a free half-hour clinic for any interested women.

There will be no admission charge.

Ringette is played similarly to ice hockey, but a large, donut-like ring and sticks instead of the regular puck and sticks.

Body contact is reduced and puck passing increased as a result of game rules.

The game is designed for the skater who does not skate well enough to play ice hockey.

SCHOLARSHIPS MAINTAINED

No cuts for nonrevenue sports

By CHARLES JOHNSON
State News Sports Writer

A decision by MSU Athletic Director Burt Smith to allot the same number of scholarships as last year for the seven men's nonrevenue sports teams apparently has the backing of the affected Spartan coaches.

In an announcement made Monday in a meeting of all the MSU head coaches, Smith said that the 10 to 15 per cent cut in the nonrevenue sports grants-in-aid program made last year will not be increased.

Under Big Ten rules, MSU is allowed to allocate 20 full-ride scholarships for nonrevenue sports.

Baseball, track, wrestling and swimming have four tenders each, while golf, tennis and gymnastics each have one tender. One other tender is left at-large for the team which needs it most. Coaches can use the scholarships in full or break them down to help several athletes.

Smith said that he discussed the entire financial situation with the coaches at the meeting and everybody came away with a good understanding of their status for next year.

"It was an excellent meeting," Smith said. "They are a very understanding group and an excellent group to work with."

When contacted, most of the Spartan coaches affected by the decision shared Smith's feelings and some even seemed relieved. "It's definitely better than being cut again," MSU tennis coach Stan Drobnac said. "At least now I know what I've got to work with."

"We just lost the best recruit in the state to the University of Michigan. You've just got to do with what you've got. Naturally, I'd like to have the best budget in the nation, but I'll have to get the most out of what is available."

Spartan swimming coach Dick Fetters said he thought the budget was fair and echoed the relief expressed by Drobnac.

"I think the four scholarships is fair in light of the increasing economic situation," he said. "There is no hope of increasing the amount of scholarships, so it's good to see that at least the amount won't get chopped."

The seven men's nonrevenue sports at MSU are mainly supported by the funds taken in from football. However, Grady Peninger, MSU's wrestling coach, believes it is time to start seriously considering charging admission for wrestling meets and other nonrevenue sports matches.

"I just happen to be one of the people who feel we have to have the realization from our students that we need help," Peninger said.

"You just can't keep the same level of program without raising some kind of new revenue. I believe that we have the fans and the backing of the students to charge an admission. Fifty cents for students and $1.50 for the public isn't unreasonable in this day," he said.

Peninger expressed optimism about the future of MSU's athletic program and said its problems are not exclusive and not as severe as a lot of other colleges.

"Our main objective at MSU is to maintain our program without hurting anyone else," he said. "Positions (jobs) in the country are being cut and tenure personnel in the universities are being let go. It's not just this University that is experiencing trouble, but it's everywhere."

"We have a tremendous athletic program and our future is in the leaders of this University," Peninger continued. "Our football program is all-important to everybody in the athletic department. Any coach who doesn't wholeheartedly support football is stupid."

"Spartan football coach Denny Stolz has done just a fantastic job and I'm more than willing to give any support to his program that can offer," Peninger said. "We've got to hope that our revenue generating people, Stolz, Gus Ganakas (basketball) and Al Bessone (hockey) are successful every year."

HARASSMENT EVIDENCE CITED FBI info may aid SWP

By ALLEN LENGEL
The Socialist Workers Party (SWP), which has been campaigning against a law requiring political contributors' names to be made public, may gain additional support as a result of FBI reports released last week.

The FBI released, under a court order, 3,000 pages of documents revealing that for 31 years it has systematically harassed Socialist Workers Party members and their supporters.

Kelly said that in New Jersey there was an attempt to slander a cub scout leader whose wife was a member of the party. He cited other examples in which the FBI posed as anonymous citizens and sent letters to election boards and newspapers about the party's candidates.

In Denver, letters were sent to election boards stating that candidates were subversive Communists and insinuated that they were unworthy, Kelly said.

No smoking regulations must join licensing laws

By JIM KEEGSTRA
State News Staff Writer
Some 50 enthusiastic non-smokers were told Wednesday proposed new state laws setting their rights to clean air will be unenforceable unless they present licensing regulations such as those for hospitals and restaurants.

Adsit, state Health Director Dr. Maurice Reizen and leaders of three nonsmokers' organizations discussed nonsmokers' problems and possible legal solutions in a downtown Lansing public conference sponsored by the Michigan Dept. of Public Health.

The growing sentiment against smokers' unfettered freedom to burn tobacco anywhere was also voiced by incensed members of the audience and by a short American Lung Assn. film titled "Everything You Always Wanted to Know About How to Stop Smoking—But Were Afraid to Try."

Eight bills introduced in the Michigan Legislature this year would restrict the free use of tobacco in hospitals, restaurants or public places.

Forum to view political topics

A three-day forum on energy, ecology, food and politics will be held at MSU on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday.

Two Dept. of Public Health staffers reviewed these bills, suggested amendments to two and proposed additional legislation to expand clean air rules into nursing homes, government or school buildings and enclosed public meetings.

A survey by the department showed 12 states with no proposed or present laws on smoking, five states; the District of Columbia and New York City which have such laws, and 28 states working on a total of 200 pieces of legislation intended to restrict smokers to designated areas.

Court blocks building of nuclear power plant

CHICAGO (UPI) - A federal appeals court Tuesday ordered a permanent halt to construction of a nuclear power plant being built in Chester, Ind., near a national lakeshore and only 30 miles from the Chicago loop.

It was believed to be the first time a U.S. court has blocked construction of a nuclear power plant.

In the 2-1 decision, a three-judge panel of the Seventh U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that the Bailey Harbor Nuclear Plant would be too close to Chicago, Portage, Ind. and the Indiana Dunes National Lakeshore and could endanger thousands of persons in those areas.

Under the Atomic Energy Act (AEC) of 1954, the AEC may not issue a permit if doing so "would be inimical to the common defense and security or to the health and safety of the public," Judge Robert Sprecher wrote in the 33-page decision.

The court last October had ordered the Northern Indiana Public Service Co. to temporarily halt excavation at the 107-acre plant site while it considered the merits of arguments for and against the construction.

The court acted on petitions filed by the Porter County chapter of the Izaak Walton League, the Concerned Citizens against the Bailey Nuclear Site and Businessmen for the Public Interest, Inc., a Chicago watchdog group.

Illinois Atty. Gen. William J. Scott later joined in legal action with opponents of the plant. The court ruled that the (AEC) violated its own regulations last Aug. 29 when it authorized a construction permit for the Northern Indiana Public Service Co. to construct the plant.

Many as 87,000 persons would visit the lakeshore and Indiana State Park daily, that Bethlehem Steel Corp. has 7,500 employees only a mile from the site and that eight nuclear power plants already are functioning 75 miles of down town Chicago.

The court also said that the AEC regulations provided that nuclear plants cannot be located nearer than two miles from cities with populations of at least 25,000 persons. Portage, Ind., will have a population of almost 29,000 by 1980 and its western boundary is only one mile from the site, the opinion stated.

Chickens alleviate egg-coloring hassles

MSU's Poultry Research and Teaching Center may just be harboring the solution to the last minute rush to color Easter eggs. An egg that comes complete with Eastercolor from the chicken.

The center houses several hundred Araucanas chickens that produce eggs that have a green or blue-green hue. The chicken's South American sisters produce eggs that often range in color from robin blue to brownish-pink to red. The chickens are natives of South America.

The brighter colors of the South American chickens is a result of their "purebred."

The chickens are also rumpless. They have no caudal vertebrae, which means they have no rump or normal tail feathers.

The Araucanas eggs may be the perfect solution to the lazy man's procrastination because they not only sport easter colors but taste like a normal white egg.

Lloyd Champion, MSU professor of poultry science, said that the eggs, when cracked open into the frying pan, look and taste identical to a white egg. The flavor of the chicken's meat is also indistinguishable from most other poultry.

"They're not strictly used for egg production," Champion said. "They just haven't been bred to lay volume."

"I guess the reason they're available in various sections of the country is primarily for curiosity's sake."

MSU uses the "Easter Chickens" to provide eggs for MSU students to use in classroom research.

However, the colorful chickens are not confined to MSU's classrooms. Ruth and Ollie Dostater own about four roosters and five hens of the Araucanas breed on their farm near Mason.

"We get a big kick out of the different colored eggs," Ruth said. "Most of ours lay blue ones, sometimes with flecks of white."

"The chickens look like quail when they hatch and the roosters are extremely colorful, with every imaginable shade in their feathers," she said.

The South American roosters vary widely in their physical characteristics also.

"Some have beards, feathered legs or tufts of hair on their ears," she said.

AFTER 26 YEARS OF BLINDNESS

Sight provides joys, frustrations

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn. (AP) — Pauline Cook Martin says there are times when she wishes she were back in the world of the blind.

Martin, considered blind for the first 26 years of her life, discovered by accident seven years ago that she could see an image through a magnifying glass held next to her eye.

She was fitted with special contact lenses and now drives a car, works for the opera guild and her church. She teaches piano to 30 children and spends much time playing with her 4-year-old son, Chris.

At other times, she says she marvels at the singing and acting talents of her husband, Jim, an insurance underwriter active in Chattanooga's Little Theater.

She has seen the ocean, the sunrise, the sunset and the rain that she only felt before.

But she says she also has seen into the darker side of human nature that once was hidden from her.

"Driving a car is great, but you really find out how rude people are when you get into traffic," she said in an interview Tuesday.

For years, her means of communication were limited to the spoken word and braille. Now, she is expected to read and write, and she says that is not easy.

"That's probably the most frustrating thing," she says. "I'm still trying to learn to read and I still can't make certain letters when I write. I can print pretty good, but writing is something else."

After years of walking with a deliberate gait, each step carefully measured, she says she now finds it difficult to stride and stroll. And she says watching television with her son is sheer frustration.

"We watch programs like Wild Kingdom, and I don't know what all those animals are," she says. "I was reading to Chris and I came across the phrase 'totem pole' and I didn't know what that was. People just don't realize how much you learn with your eyes."

Her home is clean and orderly, but she says she worries about interior decorating and frets over her role as housewife.

"I don't see cobwebs in the corner because I never had to look for them before," she says.

In spite of the difficulties of adjustment, she says she is happy most of the time, but she says she has some doubts about how lucky she is to have vision after so many years of being unable to see.

"I think people miss an awful lot by being able to see everything," she says. "I was so much more tolerant before. I didn't judge people so quickly. Now, if I look at someone who is fat, I wonder why they are. And when I go to church, I don't get nearly as much out of it as before. There are so many distractions."

Senator proposes bill requiring Freon study

WASHINGTON UPI — Sen. Clifford P. Case, R - N.J., introduced legislation Tuesday that could result in a ban on aerosol spray cans that release Freon gas into the atmosphere. Freon is the propellant used in most spray cans. Case said there is cause for concern about whether the gas is destroying the protective ozone shield in the earth's atmosphere. He said a lower ozone level would increase the risk of skin cancer.

The bill proposed by Case would require studies by the National Academy of Sciences and the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA) to determine whether Freon really poses a risk to the atmosphere and, thus, to public health.

"There is insufficient knowledge now available on the subject to enable us to make sound judgments and decisions as to whether the ozone level is in fact decreasing and, if it is decreasing, whether this decrease is caused in part by the release of Freon into the atmosphere," Case said.
