Wharton writes letter on NCAA probe

By R.D. CAMPBELL State News Staff Writer

Media reports of "innuendo and unsubstantiated 'facts'," have prompted President Wharton to write a letter answering frequently asked questions about the NCAA probe of the MSU football pro-

The letter was mailed Thursday to contributors to the Ralph Young Fund, which channels donations into the athletic

But since that mailing the following has been reported:

•Two MSU high school football recruits from Ohio have said that Ohio State University football coach Woody Hayes, who also attempted to sign them, told them that MSU would soon be placed on probation for its recruiting techniques. •The OSU student paper reported that Woody Hayes is seeking immunity for an OSU freshman to testify to the NCAA that Howard Weyers, MSU asst. football coach, gave the player money inducements when the Spartan coach was recruiting

In his letter to Spartan backers, Wharton said that though he was not certain what prompted the investigation, the excellent crop of 1974 recruits including Ted Bell, perhaps the nation's most highly - sought after halfback - may be partly responsible.

"Rumors regarding alleged recruiting violations increased soon after the end of recruiting in the spring of 1974 when MSU signed up an unusually excellent groups of prospects," Wharton wrote.

The NCAA presented Wharton with a list of allegations regarding the football program on April 17. The following day Wharton told the MSU trustees at the board's montly meeting that the program was being investigated for "certain practices and policies."

Wharton said that the University will football player. present its response to June 2 and go before the NCAA Committee on Infractions sometime between June 12 and June 16. That four - member committee could hand down rulings ranging from total innocence to a mild reprimand to prohibition from bowl competition.

If the University disagrees with the committee's findings, it may appeal and ask for a second decision from the NCAA member schools when the association holds its annual meeting in August.

Wharton said he publicly announced the investigation to avoid accusations of "coverup" when the media eventually learned of the probe. "Releasing the details of the allegations is a different matter," Wharton said. "Such actions would result in the cases being tried in the press rather than in the proper forum which is the NCAA."

When he announced the investigation, Wharton asked those involved not to comment on any of the details of the investigation.

Since then he has released only one individual from that request. That was T. Michael Doyle, a Lansing attorney and Spartan booster, whose credit card has been connected to purchases of $650 worth of clothes, shoes and records at area stores, allegedly made by an MSU

Such actions would be in violation of NCAA regulation which prohibit aid beyond tuition and fees, room and board and one paid visit to campus. The University is held responsible for any assistance from recruiters or "friends."

After Wharton released Doyle from his "no comment" obligation, Doyle provided affidavits to the media in which coach Weyers said that Doyle had given him the use of the credit card as a personal

The card mysteriously disappeared from Weyers' possession when the series of unexplained purchases was made.

Last week the Lansing State Journal reported that Aaron Brown, freshman defensive end at Ohio State, said that Weyers gave him money "now and then" when he was being recruited in his senior year at an Ohio high school.

The Lantern, Ohio State's student paper, then reported that Brown said Hayes is trying to get him immunity to testify to NCAA officials.

"I can't say anything until something comes down. Coach Hayes is looking into it," Brown was quoted.

On Friday the State Journal reported that recruiters from both OSU and the University of Michigan had told Larry Savage, defensive end from Warren, Ohio, who will attend MSU this fall, that MSU would be placed on probation.

"When I visited Ohio State, Woody Hayes told me MSU was going to be put on probation. Woody said he was sick of people breaking recruiting rules. He said if nobody else did anything, he would personally press charges," Savage was quoted as saying.

Rick Underman, fullback from Elyria, Ohio, also coming to MSU, said Hayes told him MSU would be put on probation, the Whatever the results of the referendum, the Residence Halls Association (RHA), sponsor of the referendum, will take the results to the regular meeting of the board of trustees this Friday.

The trustees voted against sponsoring either a University referendum on the issue or an all - University boycott at its meeting on March 21, after hearing six hours of testimony from supporters and detractors of the boycott.

The MSU Boycott Committee also gave the trustees a petition with 9,000 student signatures supporting the boycott.

Earlier this month, some of the trustees said they would support a boycott if the students overwhelmingly did, but cautioned that the turn - out would have to be larger than the one for the ASMSU elections during spring registration. Less than 20 per cent of the undergraduates voted in that election.

Even though representatives from both the Teamsters Union and the UFW were sent telegrams last month about the referendum, there has been little campaigning on campus by or for either side.

The UFW started passing out leaflets this weekend to students in at least three of the 28 residence halls on campus. But most students are still not aware that there will be a referendum vote today or Tuesday.

Students with a University room and board contract will be asked to vote yes or no on "Boycotting all southwestern United States non - United Farm Workers - picked iceberg head lettuce and table grapes with the understanding that alternative greens will be served when possible

Boston hears final order

The final school desegregation order for Boston issued by a federal judge drew mixed reaction Sunday, with some arguing that the plan does not go far enough and others saying there will be too much forced busing.

Unveiled at a news conference Saturday, the so-called Phase II, of citywide desegregation plan drawn up by U.S. District Court Judge W. Arthur Garrity Jr. would require the busing of approximately 21,000 students, 12,000 in lower Alan Greenspan, chairman of the Council of Economic Advisors, says people might be surprised by the strength of the economy's recovery this year, but some businessmen are skeptical.

Rizzo battles for nomination

There's really only one issue in Philadelphia's namecalling, no holds barred mayoralty primary next week, incumbent Frank Rizzo. The maverick Democrat and former police commissioner is battling the party organization for his political survival.

Former City Solicitor Martin Weinberg, Rizzo's coordinator in the labor-packed independent campaign reportedly financed with $1 million, predicts "an overwhelming renomination victory."

"Everything looks great," Weinberg says.

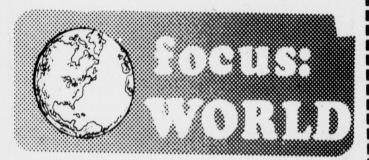

Rizzo, 54, a cop all his working life until he ran for mayor in 1971, was denied endorsement for the second term, mainly because he openly supported the re-election of Republican Richard M. Nixon.

Arabs form arms authority

Four Arab states have taken the first major step toward establishing an arms industry, forming a joint authority with over $1 billion in capital.

Egypt and the wealthy Persian Gulf states of Saudi Arabia, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates formed The Arab Authority for Military Industry with contributions of $260 million each.

The authority's headquarters will be in Cairo.

Forming the authority represented a major Arab attempt to capitalize on its growing oil wealth and build up an arms industry to match Israel's.

The dramatic defeat of American-backed governments in Indochina has boosted the morale of Palestinian guerillas in their struggle against Israel.

"Today Vietnam, tomorrow Palestine," rejoiced the current cover of Palestine Revolution, the weekly organ of the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The United States departure from Saigon and Phnom Penh was taken as a lesson throughout the Palestinian movement, from chieftain Yasir Arafat to machine-guntoting guerillas in remote hill camps.

"Comrades, your victory over American imperialism and its agents in your country has given us limitless confidence to pursue and strengthen our struggle the same way you did," Arafat cabled the Viet Cong after their triumphant entry into

The World Petroleum Conference opened in Tokyo Sunday with repeated calls for cooperation between oil consumers and sellers and for stepped up oil conservation.

About 2,000 foreign delegates were on hand from nearly every major oil producing or consuming nation, except China. No immediate major developments were expected.

The new U.S. Secretary of Commerce, Rogers C. B. Morton, told the conference that the United States does "not seek confrontation with the producer nations. We seek mutual accommodations among all nations."

"At the moment we're just holding," said a State Dept. spokesman, asked about progress of the resettlement.

"The speedy part of the operation has pretty much run its course," he said Sunday, noting that most of the refugees who have American relatives have already been processed through the centers and moved to new homes around the nation.

For the remaining refugees, he said, the Immigration and Naturalization Service has begun a more elaborate clearing process which is taking longer.

And since most of these people do not have relatives in the United States, the finding of sponsors to help them get resettled also is

no surprise to most

The suspense is over. The University has insisted on a formal hearing in front of the Michigan Employment Relations Committee before it will consent to a labor representation election among student workers.

But there was not much suspense, anyway. Surely no one expected the University to agree willingly to an election which might result in the unionization of 7,000 student workers.

It would have been nice for the University to recognize the justice in better grievance procedures and more worker participation in determination of wage scales. But such a hope was entirely unrealis-

The University, in its need to keep costs down, could almost be said to have a duty to Michigan taxpayers, nonworking students, and academic programming to attempt to block the union.

It accomplishes nothing to blame parties in the dispute. In particular, it is probable that the recent dispute between ASMSU and the union organizing committee had no effect on the proceed-

If ASMSU had enthusiastically supported the union, would the University's economic interest in thwarting the Union have been diminished?

If the SWU organizers had been less extreme and acted less like sophomoric social revolutionaries, would the University's fears of increased costs been appreciably assuaged?

The answers must be "no" and SWU organizers predict that formation of the union will now be delayed until fall. Delays are frustrating, but not unbearable.

Since the University can be expected to fight unionization with all the cleverness it can summon, it is all-important that the organizing committee carry on its side of the battle. Professionalism and persistence would further unionization far more than radical antics and threats.

The situation is perhaps no more unfortunate than it is surprising. It is the salutary peculiarity of labor disputes that out of the clash of private interests emerges a public interest superior to each.

the Southwest. For years, there have been sporadic attempts to boycott the produce of scab and Teamster workers.

Tonight and tomorrow night at dinner, residence hall dwellers will have a chance to do something positive about it.

The Residence Halls Association will sponsor a student referendum on the question, "Do you support boycotting southwestern United States non-United Farm Workerspicked iceberg head lettuce and table grapes with the understanding that alternative greens will be served when possible?"

Students in the residence halls should take the time to vote - and vote "yes."

The referendum will advise the MSU Board of Trustees that students want the University to change its buying policy, which now results in the purchase of large quantities of Teamster lettuce.

A "yes" vote will indicate that students oppose sweetheart con-

For years, there has been talk tracts between growers and unabout the plight of farmworkers in representative unions, and that they endorse free and open union elections in the fields.

> The vote will show that students object to the exploitation of farmworkers by growers and their Teamster buddies and that they are willing to make a sacrifice to help the workers.

Fortunately, a solution to much of the problem seems to be developing in California, where legislation that would provide for supervised elections and an end to secondary boycotts is virtually assured of passage.

If the bill is passed, an MSU boycott may no longer be necessary. That determination, however, can be made by the board of trustees when all the information

The fact that a solution may come soon should not weaken the resolve of students who want to make justice a reality for the farmworkers.

The referendum is their chance, and a "yes" vote is their means.

Recent world events have thrust foreign affairs back into the forefront of public discussion

The fall of South Vietnam is only the most tragic and dramatic upheaval of the last months. Cambodia also has fallen, and our other former allies in Southeast Asia seem to be following Thailand's lead toward unfriendly neutrality.

Portugal, whose people voted overwhelmingly against the Communists and their fellows, is managed and controlled not to say tyrannized - by a Communist military which appears to be dedicated to roping the country into the Soviet orbit.

And with Portugal go the Azores, which are indispensable to the United States if we should ever desire to airlift men or suplies to the Middle East, which, incidentally, remains a cross between a powder keg and a highway robber.

It is small wonder that foreign affairs, which only a short time ago appeared safe in the hands of a competent Secretary Kissinger, are again a subject of public controversy. For it seems that our foreign policy has failed.

The policy that has guided the United States in world affairs over the last several years has gone under the name of "detente." It represented a break with the bellicosity of the past, a movement toward "normalization of relations" with the Communist world.

The intended benefits of detente were a bilateral slowing of the arms race, a lessening of Communist pressure on the develop Russian industry, against the backdrop of an accelerated Communist drive for world domination.

WJIM programming

A recent letter to the State News complained about WJIM's April 29th decision to pre-empt a CBS Vietnam Special in favor of Tiger baseball. I would agree that WJIM's decision was esthetically a poor one, but I believe that all aspects of the decision haven't been fully

Put yourself in the broadcaster's shoes. You are faced with two alternatives: to go for the more profitable baseball broadcast or the public interest special. Theoretically, there is no question-you would opt for the CBS special in the public interest. Realistically, you opt for baseball, because it means profit and a large audience share. Just by the audience size alone, you could say it was in the "public interest."

By opting for the baseball game, WJIM had another factor on its side. The Federal Communications Commissions (FCC) has had a 40-year policy of encouraging local programming. WJIM has recently been challenged for its license renewal because of a lack of local programming and the telecasting of this game met that requirement.

My point is that no programming decision is any easy one. Each decision affects every person in the viewing audience, which is why the FCC so vigorously advocates programming in the public interest.

I do not condone WJIM's actions, but I would be willing to wager that most local stations, given the same opportunity, would have taken the same course. Profitwise, it was a highly logical move. WJIM's reasoning to the FCC would be that it fulfilled its local programming responsibility, and the FCC would likely

Our system of broadcasting is far from perfect, and one problem is obtaining greater community input in programming decisions. Broadcasting is for the community, and it is only through intensive community input that local stations will adjust their programming to fit our needs

Drug Education Center

East Lansing City Councilman Polomsky's denigration of the Drug Education Center (DEC) (State News, May 5 and 6) is a misinterpretation based on a highly questionable set of values.

In Polomsky's world, where appearances are everything, a vehicle doubtless cannot be a "car" unless it resembles a Cadillac, a building doubtless cannot be a "house" unless it resembles a palacial mansion. Thus, Polomsky believes the DEC cannot be a respectable "clinic," since it does not resemble Sparrow Hospital. This worldview not only places undue emphasis on mere appearances, but it values things in preference to people.

Polomsky ignores DEC's human services and criticizes the quality of things at DEC ("... it's a damn dingy place ... I didn't care for the type of furniture there - I wouldn't let my dog sit in it.") With its limited budget DEC admittedly has a humble physical plant, but the great wealth it offers patients lies in the realm of human services. DEC has trained counselors of many different types and an extension network for patient referral; it can handle competently almost any conceivable counseling situation. DEC medical clinic services rank favorably in quality with those of other local medical facilities. Community physicians staff the clinic and sare assisted by other human services at DEC are delivered in a supportive, empathic, nonjudgmental manner, in which human warmth is actively extended to clients.

Polomsky's pampered poodle aside, when the quality of furniture at a clinic becomes more important than the human services offered, then it is time to board the place up, or perhaps to convert it into a furniture

343 Albert St. Advisory Committees

In the four years that I have been at this university, I have heard so many complaints about courses, profs and departments, that it all just seems to be a part of life around here. Yet there is so much that can and should be done by all of you perpetual gripers, if you would only channel your wind. Believe it or not there is a way to get things done around here, through the system, in the form of the student advisory boards in each department. Now either you have no idea what the board is, or you are laughing, knowing how many of them are.

The student advisory board can only be what you yourselves make it - a voice in the system. Students have a vote on many faculty committees such as the Curriculum Committee, a vote in the form of student representatives. These representatives act as very important go-betweens for the student body. They can not function, to know your representatives and complain to them, not your friends, or give them your

VIEWPOINT: LABOR

Stop Student Workers Union

By PHILIP S. LANG JR.

One should avoid the easy "yes" or "no" answers to the favorite question, "Are you in favor of unions?" Our personal predilections may lead us to support the growth of strong independent unionism. We ought to reserve the right to be openly critical of those aspects of unionism which seem to us to be in conflict with our concept. of a free society.

In order to reach an honest opinion

(SWU), one should weigh both the positive and negative aspects of the union and decide, with the aid of available data, whether to vote for or against union representation for all of the student First and foremost comes job security. If voted in, the SWU will offer a muchneeded grievance procedure, whereupon the student worker's rights as a human being and an employe will be upheld. There are far too many instances of unfair labor practices on this campus. These practices definitely have to come to an end, and a workers union would more than fill the gap

concerning the Student Workers Union that exists in this respect. Second, and almost as important as job security, comes safe working conditions. Traditionally, unions have avidly fought for safe working conditions, and rightly so. On campus, there exist a few unreasonable safety hazards that appear in, on and around student working areas, for example, microdot rubber gloves supplied to cafeteria "pots and pans" washers and uncovered garbage disposal units.

The most misunderstood topic surrounding the formation of the SWU is the torped that sinks the boat - higher wages. Let's start with some undebatable facts:

• The SWU is proposing a $1 to $1.25 increase in wages per hour. Raising the minimum wage to between $3.05 and $3.30. • Last year, 99.9 per cent of the wages paid out to residence hall workers came directly from room and board rates. · Currently, the budget for the residence hall workers amounts to about 4 million • On the all-University level, 8.6 million dollars was spent on student wages.

Let's stop a minute and do some freshman math. With the proposed "moderate" wage increase, the budget for the residence hall workers would be raised by $2 million. With this cost being reflected back into residence hall room and board rates, and the fact that there are approximately 17,000 students living in residence halls, a shocking figure "pops" out in the air.

The wage increase goes right back to students at a cost of $117 per year. This, along with the University's proposed $100 increase in rates for next year has just priced out every minority and middleclass student living on campus at MSU!

It would be nice to be able to say that the extra monies would come from University "waste" like the air conditioning of Fee Hall.

But the end of University extravagance has come to pass. The University is now going through a period of "tight budget" where there are going to be layoffs and worst of all, cuts in student programs.

The avid supporters of the union seem to lose touch with reality when confronted with the problem of no funds. They simply say, "That's the University's problem, not Classically, unions developed out of employer resistance and worker individualism. Whatever success unions have had in organizing workers must be attributed in large part to their ability to identify the union with the fulfillment of the worker's expectations. There is no way on earth that this could possibly happen with the proposed SWU.

It surprises me no end that there is no great ground-swell of student discontent, yet there seems to be only a handful of power-hungry people presently trying to get the SWU to be a reality. What seems to be happening here absurd: there are just a few people to get a union that represents mately 6,500 student workers ultimately have a detrimental effect entire student community.

I do not fault Ganakas solely for the incident which happened last January. I think he did what he could under the circumstances. But it was just a culmination of the events which has led to Ganakas' loss of authority.

People I know who attend practices tell me players just walk away from Ganakas while Ganakas tries to correct or repri-

The mere fact that the players didn't expect any disciplinary action against them is an indication of how much they thought they could get away with.

The worst part of Ganakas' record is the lack of in-state talent that he has managed to bring to MSU. This year is a prime example. Bruce Flowers, Tom Staton and Alan Hardy all decided to go to other schools. State was never considered by any of them.

Terry Duerod, the star of Highland Park's champion Class A team, didn't give us a second glance. The best Michigan prospect that MSU picked up was a third team All-Detroit pick, not even an All-Star.

Basketball players know which schools have good programs and which do not. The fact that MSU has produced two pro players in twenty years indicates how our program rates.

Obviously, an overhaul is needed. A coach must be brought in that is willing to work hard to bring in high-quality players. A man with a Detroit background, such as Arizona coach and former U-Mass. Coach Fred Snowden, would be even more Respectability must be brought to MSU's basketball program. Gus Ganakas has had his chance. I think Burt Smith should give someone else a chance.

Right now I am standing in line at Case Hall in order to secure a room here for next school year. I arrived at 3:30 p.m. and proceeded to break my back sitting on the hard floor for 21/2 hours.

In the meantime, others were arriving periodically and getting in line in a somewhat haphazard fashion. Nonetheless, I assumed that since I had arrived earlier than these people, I would be taken care of

However, this turned out to be a false assumption. I witnessed (with due amount of dismay) the people who arrived at 5:55 proceed to the front of the line when the doors opened.

Warped values

For years I've always thought of college students as liberal, open-minded people who educated themselves in the hope that some day they would be able to right some of the wrongs that society is constantly confronting us with. My faith was only slightly shaken by the intolerance shown the gays at Dooley's several weeks ago.

But when I pick up the paper and read how some guy is lying to the Red Cross to receive compensation because he lost some speed and a set of "Man From U.N.C.L.E." books in the flood, I have to wonder. How could anyone have such a warped sense of

In my eyes those who put in such claims lost something as vital as anything that was ruined in the flood. They lost their self-respect and the right to be called sensitive, concerned human beings.

Having some personal experience, I would like to clarify some of the somewhat misleading conclusions drawn by the May 2 article "Students Lose as Bible

Spring term 1973, I was contracted by the Southwestern Co. A short time later, overcome with doubt in my ability and the company, I called my student manager to resign. He assured me that the contract was not binding, but said if I didn't go I would miss the opportunity to develop self-confidence, overcome fear and learn to communicate with people effectively.

Well, God knows I could use some improvement in these areas, maybe I would even make some money, and at least I was in for an adventure. Thirteen hard weeks later I returned to East Lansing virtually ecstatic that I could attempt the difficult, and see it through.

My second summer with the company yielded about $3,800 gross, $2,400 cash with experience managing five students. Now, working with Field Enterprises, I was promoted to an area manager, only two weeks after I started working steadily. Because of my experience, I was successful.

Southwestern's contract, which isn't binding, is mainly to get a mental commitment, because talking yourself into doing this job is like talking yourself into riding a bicycle over the Rocky Mountains. It's hard, but then you do get to ride down when you get to the top.

The way any product is represented lies ultimately with the representative. If an individual decides to use tactics of deceit and falsehood, it does not mean that the company condones it or that the "company" is unscrupulous. The nice thing about working with Southwestern, which is over 100 years old, is that the principles of success and skills of communication you learn last the rest of your life.

Orchesis showcases talented dancers

By DARRYL GRANT State News Reviewer

This spring's Orchesis Dance Concert proved to be an artistic success. Despite some choreographical shortcomings, it provided, on the whole, a vehicle for some very fine work by some talented and original artists both student and instructors alike.

The concert opened with "Strummings," a work choreographed by Marylou Stack Duschl. It was a deceptively simple piece with a "grass roots," down home flavor. "Strumming" was a stunning piece that particularly displayed a delicate but firm control over every movement. It exuded a sense of effortless grace that belied the amazing strength behind it.

Next was "Lunar Muse" choreographed and danced by Diane Newman. "Lunar Muse" was a starkly modern work, choreographed and danced with an astute flair. It was full of tightly balanced percussive movements.

These sharp, stabbing particulars called for firm control over technique that was faultlessly provided by Newman. One could only applaud and admire a dancer who not only performed beautifully, but also smoothly. Her dancing possessed none of the jerkiness that it might have. This was a fact that was in evidence from a beautiful allegro to a slow sinuous finale.

"Palm Grease," choreographed by Karen Sprech and danced to music by jazzman Herbie Hancock was a tightly percussive work that remained true to its fine score. It was performed with a close attention to detail, but yet ex-

The dancer's timing was exquisite and essential to the success of the piece. In fact it can be honestly said that those carefully crisp movements were better than any previously seen in this area performed by equal talent. It was direct in its appeal and thoroughly enjoyable to watch.

"Friends," choreographed by Deborah Vogel, was an impressive, classically stately number; one that thoroughly numbed the audience with its visual beauty. It was a beauty that - though breathtaking in its' impact - did not depend solely on that aspect.

At the base of "Friends" was a strong, secure framework that enhanced rather than restrained the dancers as it so easily could have. Particularly impressive was the strong and bold arabesque line displayed in the opening sequence by Deborah Vogel.

It served to set the tone for the remainder of the piece. "Sound Waves," chore-who should know better. "Essence of Night Dreams," choreographed by Carolyn Webb, was an intricate work that displayed some truly fine moments. However, it was overladen with repetitious and superfluous movements. Webb obviously possesses a sparkling talent, but needs to rid herself of the unnecessary frills. As the great architect/designer Mies Van der Rhne once said, "Less is more."

"On Love, the Tenderest Branches," choreographed by Gerard Ziaia to readings of Kahil Gibran, was too farreaching. It attempted to do more than it was equipped to do. It also contained a syrupy sweetness that was disconcerting. Though, there were some interesting allegro/percussive shadings, with some group versus-solo dancing, it was on the whole uneventful.

The result was a mass of pretty confusion. It was visually pretty, but artistically belabored. There was far too many pique pirourettes against too many contractions.

However, there were some fine displays of technique and control by some very talented dancers. Kudos go to John Lee Howard and the remaining members of the MSU Repertory Dance Company, who danced the piece. But one still must admit that the work was awkward and over fastidious.

"I haven't blazed any trails, but the work is coming," Thornton said.

Three years ago, Thornton began working as a reporter at WLWT-TV in Cincinnati. Last May, she received a call from a man claiming to be from CBS in New York, who wanted Thornton to come to New York for an interview. At first she thought it was a joke, she said, but it turned out to be real. A month later she was hired by CBS

Thornton said that though four women were hired at the same time (two of whom are black), she is not aware of any formal affirmative action hiring policy at CBS. "I am aware that I was hired because I am a woman, and being black sure helped too," Thornton said. "I don't think, though, that I've ever covered anything that is just a woman's story. I don't know that there is even any such thing as just a woman's story."

While CBS does not consciously send women reporters to do stories on subjects like higher grocery prices, she said, she does not think women are getting the "plum" assignments either.

Thornton said Lesley Stahl was first assigned to cover Watergate, "when it was just a third-rate burglary."

"As it got to be the story of the century, she was eclipsed by Fred Graham and Daniel Schorr," she said.

Thornton's brief tenure at CBS has not been without strife. When she first arrived at CBS in June, she said, she requested

Thornton said that the physical demands of working for a large national network are tremendous. During the first five months she was employed by CBS, she did not have two consecutive days off, she said.

Thornton told aspiring lady journalists to be realistic and use all your connections in trying to find a job.

"You cannot deal with pride in this economy," she said. "Most of all you must have perserverance, tact and magnanimity. Learn to forgive some of the bitches that are always trying to

"If I have a weakness, I would say that it's in my short game," he continued. "I don't feel any disadvantage to any of the big knockers."

Weston, a member of MSU's White (second) team, was competing in his first tournament of the spring. In fact, after playing here as a freshman, Weston didn't even come out for the squad last year, his sof homore season.

The Flint native has aspirations of going to law school. He took last year off in order to bring his grades up. That accomplished, Weston returned to the Spartan squad this

"I was out every day last spring anyhow," he admitted.

Weston hit 16 greens during the final 18 - hole round Saturday, but four three - putt greens kept him from running away with the title, which he won by two strokes over Rusty Pierce of Southern Illinois at Edwardsville and Jay Anderson of Marshall.

Weston played the back nine first Saturday and scored a 35. After three - putting the fifth, sixth and seventh holes for bogies. Weston then birdied the eighth and ninth to win it all.

The MSU golfer won the title while the top two first round leaders were having their troubles.

First - round pace - setter Tom McParland of the University of Michigan, who shot a two - under - par 69 friday, ballooned to an 82 Saturday MSU's Bill Brafford, who carded a 71 during the first day's play, skied to an 83 the second round.

"Mark (Weston) is one of the fine, young amateur golfers in the state," said tourney director Fossum. "It will be hard not to take him to the Big Ten tournament (coming up this weekend) now." The big story of the team competition, meanwhile, was not Illinois State, who ralllied from a five - stroke deficit after the first round Friday to take the 13 - team university division by four strokes over the MSU Green (first) team. Everyone at Forest Akers was talking about the play of Southern Illinois at Edwardsville, the winner of the 15 team college division. That school's 370 score Saturday was the best team mark. of the tourney and allowed to win the college title by whopping 31 strokes over rur nerup Saginaw V alley.

Southern Illinois' 756 tw day score was nine strokes better than Illinois State's winning total. Following Illinois State and the MSU Green team in the university standings were ( n cinnati, Marshall, Msl (White) and Illinois (tie), MSU (gold), Michigan, Louisville. Drake, Cleveland State, Wa terloo and Xavier.

U - M's McParland cracked the longest single drive during the driving contest Friday 288 - yard shot down the first fairway. Bob Bohr of Aquinas College was the only golfer to put three out of three drives in the fairway, as he clouted shots of 190, 243 and 235 yards to win that title.
