Wharton gives reply to charges, penalties

By EDWARD L. RONDERS
State News Sports Writer

MSU's three-year probation and subsequent penalties leave some questions unanswered regarding the entire football program and the future of two assistant coaches and Spartan players.

President Wharton stated Monday "The University remains convinced of the validity of its appeal and feels it must explore whether any further action could or should be taken."

He explained that the possibility of an appeal through the judicial system will be discussed with the University's board of trustees when that group meets later this week.

The status of asst. coaches Howard Weyers and Charlie Butler, who the Wharton stated that MSU admitted to 14 rule violations, disputed 19 others and that 38 alleged infractions were dismissed by the NCAA. He noted that there were "four questionable practices and a cluster of 30 violations involved."

The charge against the two Spartan players and coach Weyers regarding the use of a credit card received "considerable notoriety," according to Wharton.

East Lansing attorney T. Michael Doyle had lent his personal credit card to Weyers who in turn left the plate in his automobile. Wharton commented, "The relationship between the representative and the coach is not disputed; that use of the card by the two student athletes was an independent—and illegal—act on their part. Both students have made arrangements for restitution. Under these circumstances, we believe our appeal of this charge was justified."

Other charges lodged against MSU were those of improper or illegal inducement in recruitment of athletes. Primarily, these allegations involved gifts or promises made to four prospective players who eventually enrolled at Ohio State.

As reported in a copyrighted story in the State News Friday, these violations included: an assistant MSU coach giving cash to two prospective student athletes to spend for their own personal use; an assistant football coach giving a prospective student athlete a ring; an assistant coach, on two

Who squealed? Some say OSU

Woody who?

Ever since it was announced that the MSU football program was under investigation by the NCAA, people have speculated that it was Woody Hayes, Ohio State football coach and sometime poor sport, who blew the whistle on MSU.

The NCAA will not comment on who pointed the finger at MSU and President Wharton would not say Monday who was responsible for initiating the MSU football probe.

Wharton said he did not definitely know who turned in the Spartans and did not care to hazard a guess as to who it might be.

"I wouldn't even dare speculate," Wharton said with a smile.

In answering questions, Wharton did acknowledge that four unnamed Ohio State football players presented testimony at the NCAA hearing. Wharton did not say if that was more than coincidence.

See related story on page 6.

University admitted to the NCAA had violated several rules, will also be determined this week.

The contracts for all staff members, excluding head coach Denny Stolz, expire this week. The board of trustees has the final decision in the re-hiring or dismissal of the coaches.

Wharton would not speculate on renewal of their contracts.

Butler, the University admitted, had suggested to a prospective athlete that he request extra benefits as a condition of enrollment at MSU. The NCAA had charged that Butler had promised a high school player from Ohio that if he would attend MSU he would receive extra spending money when needed, an automobile, an apartment for his girlfriend, financial assistance at the University for his girlfriend and transportation between East Lansing and his home during vacation periods.

Butler has been ordered, by the NCAA edict announced Sunday, to refrain from any off-campus recruiting for one calendar year during MSU's probation.

Asst. coach Weyers, Wharton said, has been accused of giving money to two former Ohio high school players. Weyers has been restricted from any off-campus recruiting throughout the entire three-year period.

Wharton also noted that the original penalties handed down by the NCAA Infractions Committee had specified Weyers be disassociated with any athletic activities at MSU. But, in its appeal to the NCAA Council, Jan. 18, MSU's Select Committee convinced the council to lighten that proposed penalty.

In addition, Wharton said, all players involved in illegal activities face ineligibility for future football competition. Spartans Joe Hunt and Mike Cobb's statuses are the most precarious, since they have admitted to illegally acquiring and using a credit card belonging to an MSU booster. Wharton said he had no idea when the NCAA would rule on the matter.

MSU football, circa 1976-79?

This quandry holds the biggest challenge for MSU head coach Denny Stolz. And, to hear him speak, it's the biggest challenge he's ever faced. He says he's willing to meet it head-on — at full speed.

"We'll have a fine program at MSU for the next three years. We'll have a winning program at MSU the next three years," Stolz declared Monday at the University's NCAA press conference.

"If people will just leave us alone and let us get down to business we'll be alright."

"We've been honest with athletes we've recruited so far. We've told them the truth. I believe it might be the player who's been here a year or two and might have expected a bowl bid that may tend to be disillusioned now."

"Sure, I feel responsibility for these things happening. There's no question about that. I'm guilty of anything that's happened."

"I wasn't aware that players using our equipment was a violation, but that doesn't excuse me."

"I can honestly say that we at Michigan State have never knowingly broken any rules."

"We don't need that kind of thing here."

"I'm amazed at the severity of the penalty. I think it's very, very harsh."

"But I'll be in favor of whatever President Wharton and his Select Committee decide."

"If I had one thing in my entire life that I could wish away, I would wish away this whole mess."

"We, the coaches and the players just want to get to work."

With that, Stolz retained the determined disposition on his face and quickly exited the meeting room.

tuesday bulletin

MSU beat Purdue, 66-65, on a shot with 18 seconds left by Terry Furlow. MSU, who trailed by as many as 13 points in the first half, held the ball for the last three and a half minutes of the game before Furlow's shot. The star forward who scored 31 points, made a long shot from the corner and raced to the other end of the floor to rebound a desperation shot by Purdue with three seconds remaining. The Spartans are now 4-4 in the Big Ten and 8-9 overall.

weather

Today's weather calls for only partly cloudy skies with an afternoon high in the mid-20s. Tonight the low will be near 10 degrees, with westerly winds of 5 m.p.h.

Delegated as he has been, President Wharton managed, at least part of the time, to maintain a sense of humor at Monday's NCAA press conference.

MSU reacts to probation

Findings upset officials

Fair? Students are split

By MICHELE BURGEN
State News Staff Writer

Initial University reaction to the NCAA's findings and subsequent penalties against the MSU football program appears to be one of bitter disappointment.

President Wharton called the findings "unfair" and "incorrect" and the punishment "excessive." He stressed that the University would explore whether any further action could or should be taken to reverse the NCAA decision.

Wharton read a 15-minute statement Monday at a press conference packed with reporters, photographers and a sprinkling of onlookers.

He insisted that none of the alleged abuses within the football program were a "deliberate or deeply-rooted subversion of the Big Ten Conference rules" and said many of the infractions came about because of unfamiliarity with the rules on the part of recruiting coaches.

He will never barter the good name of Michigan State University for fleeting fame on the playing field by permitting or engaging in improper actions by our athletic staff or representatives," he said.

Wharton said the option of further appeal of the NCAA's rulings was discussed by the MSU Board of Trustees, though the item has not yet been placed on the agenda for the board meeting this week. A court action is a likely avenue for appeal, since the decision can be appealed again to the NCAA council.

One of the trustees contacted could say whether or not an appeal of the NCAA matter would come in the open meeting on Monday. Trustee Pat Carrigan, D-Farmington Hills, said certain aspects of the investigation would warrant consideration in a closed session.

He called the NCAA penalties "unusually harsh" and warranted. She said other schools have been handed down penalties for such breaches of integrity as changing Student reaction to the NCAA decision to slap a three-year probation on the Spartan football program appears split down the middle between those who consider it a fair decision and those who think a harsher penalty is in order.

Rick Seid, a pre-law senior, 4815 Dunckel Road, Lansing, and member of the MSU baseball team, said, "If it is true that they were guilty, it is a fair and just decision. The NCAA has established laws and they should be obeyed."

Seid said he is aware that many universities are guilty of the same crime, but MSU just happened to be caught.

"Minor sports will also feel a major burden because of the decision," Seid said.

Paul Hahn, senior, 541 Abbott Road, said he has mixed emotions.

"If it will stop illegal recruiting it might be a good thing," Hahn said. "The NCAA shouldn't have so much power, but then MSU is guilty and should pay a penalty. One year, however, should be sufficient."

"NCAA is cleaning out its own dirty laundry," Hahn added. "They know this corruption has been going on for years, but now they want to appear self-righteous."

Many students agree with Hahn that three years is too harsh a penalty.

"Three years is an awfully long time. We deserve some punishment but not one that harsh," said Maureen Fisher, senior, 933A Cherry Lane. "Schools should now monitor their athletic programs more carefully."

"I think it's too stiff a penalty," said Glenn W. Bowling, freshman, B228 Emmons Hall. "If anything, the NCAA should get down more on the coaches, not the players."

Some individuals felt the penalty was not harsh enough.

bills introduced to help students

By RALPH FRAMMOLINO
State News Staff Writer

A six-bill package, which its sponsor, Perry Bullard, D-Ann Arbor, claims will help students meet the rising costs of education, was introduced into the Michigan Legislature Monday night.

The bills touch on interstate university agreements and the availability of student loans.

One bill requires that the state establish under 1972 law. These changes allow other Michigan universities and those in neighboring states to accept out-of-state students into specific programs without those students paying state tuition.

Students who had previously been required to apply for the state scholarship program an opportunity to do so. Eligible are part-time students, those for whom the screening examination may be inappropriate and recipients of high school equivalency certificates.

•The state treasury to favor banks that participate in the Michigan Guaranteed Student Loan Program for deposits of state funds.

•Tuition-free courses for credit in basic communication skills at public two-year colleges.

•Short-term deferment of tuition payments.

•Lenders of educational loans to disclose to borrowers all possible options involving payment, term and combination of loans.

One of Bullard's bills would allow MSU, U-M and Wayne State to participate in a reciprocal educational exchange program that was set up under 1972 law. Under the existing program, any state two- or four-year institution except the "big three" may participate with other public colleges and universities in Indiana, Ohio, Illinois, Wisconsin and the Canadian province of Ontario. Students would be allowed to transfer across state lines to participate in programs lacking in their respective area and only be charged in state tuition.

Currently, the University of Wisconsin at Marquette is conducting such a program with the Bay De Noc Community College in Escanaba and the Gogebic Community College in Ironwood.

Michigan resident students saved an estimated $82,000 in out-of-state tuition costs last year attending the University of Wisconsin while Bay De Noc lost $2,915 in added charges. Gogebic charges no more for out-of-state students.

A State Board of Education preliminary report made over a year ago said that reciprocity agreements will become more desirable because of the rising cost of supporting higher education, a trend in decline of higher education enrollments and recent court decisions towards more liberal residency policies.

Another bill would extend the availability of state competitive scholarship funds to part-time college students, students who were recommended by college counselors and recipients of high school equivalency certificates.

Currently, only students who have or are about to graduate from high school or are carrying a full load of credits in college are eligible for the state's scholarships.

Bullard said that the "reforms" in his bill were necessary to "remove barriers which arbitrarily deny eligibility to needy groups

Court rejects filmmaker's bid

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Supreme Court declined Monday to review the suppression of the film "Manson" during the selection of a jury in the trial of Lynette "Squeaky" Fromme.

The court rejected without comment a request by makers of the film that their appeal be heard at the same time as a Nebraska "gag order" case the justices have agreed to consider.

The Nebraska case involves a judge's order to the news media to refrain from reporting murder case information until a jury had been sequestered.

U.S. District Judge Thomas J. McBride of Sacramento said the filmmaker's rights under the First Amendment were "irreconcilable" with Fromme's right to a fair trial and must be subordinated.

Coal mining moratorium lifted

DENVER (AP) — Interior Secretary Thomas S. Kelppe announced Monday his decision to end a four-year moratorium on federal coal leases, pledging to allow mining of coal "that is needed; but only when it is needed."

He said federal officials would issue new leases for mining the vast coal reserves held by the federal government when it could be shown that such actions are environmentally and economically sound.

Officials estimate that more than 190,000 square miles of coal deposits are federally owned.

Groups urge relaxation of ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — Consumer groups are calling on the American Bar Assn., which is considering whether its members should be allowed to advertise, to allow members to solicit business.

Two consumer groups have asked the association to drop its ban on advertising and solicitation, claiming the public will benefit from the action. Suits have already been filed in some states challenging state bar associations' prohibitions on advertising prices and specialties.

The proposed relaxation of the ABA ban on advertising was circulated by the lawyer group's Standing Committee on Ethics and Professional Responsibility.

Hinshaw convicted of bribery

SANTA ANA, Calif. (AP) — Rep. Andrew J. Hinshaw, R-Calif., was convicted Monday of two felony counts of bribery for money and goods he allegedly received from the Tandy Corp. in 1972 while serving as Orange County assessor.

At the same time, the first-term lawmaker was found innocent of soliciting a bribe for his congressional campaign from Ronald Steelman, an attorney for Beckman Instruments, Inc. of Orange County.

The eight-woman, four-man jury returned the verdicts after seven hours of deliberation.

Middlemen profit in price hike

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Consumer costs for a theoretical food market basket rose to a record $1,876 last year, with 7.2 percent of the $126 increase over 1974 going to middlemen, Agriculture Dept. figures showed Monday.

The $126 increase, down from the $213 leap in the previous year, was divided into a $35 gain in the average returns to farmers for market basket foods and a $91 gain in the middlemen's spread, which covers all costs and profits in handling and processing the basket foods.

Labor strikers support Peron

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Thousands of workers in the southern resort of Mar del Plata struck Sunday to demand the release of two fellow workers arrested while posting signs calling for President Isabel Peron's re-election.

The 24-hour strike was called by the local branch of the General Labor Confederation (GLC), the backbone of the ruling Peronist movement.

The general election is scheduled for Oct. 17, five months earlier than expected. Political sources say Peron is preparing her re-election campaign.

OPEC reconvenes in Paris

PARIS (AP) — The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries' first ministerial meeting since the bloody terrorist attack on OPEC's Vienna headquarters last month opened here Monday under heavy guard. Finance ministers of the 13 OPEC members met to establish procedures for allotting $1 billion to needy Third World countries this year.

The OPEC countries agreed last year on the $1 billion fund proposed by Iran and Venezuela to help poor nations whose balance of payments and development plans were badly hurt by OPEC's rise in oil prices since 1973.

UN transfers buffer zone

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — The United Nations Emergency Force (UNEF) Monday withdrew from 92 square miles of the Sinai Desert ceasefire zone and handed it over to the Egyptian army, the U.N. Command in Jerusalem announced.

The transfer of the narrow strip of the U.N. buffer zone east of the Suez Canal was the latest step in the September truce pact worked out by Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger.

Under the pact, Israeli troops are to pull back to the east and give 1,900 square miles of desert to the U.N. peace-keeping force in February and the Egyptian army is to move into new positions about five miles forward.

Committee charged with leak

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Ford administration accused the House intelligence committee of violating its oath by disclosing top secret intelligence operations contained in the committee's final report.

The report has not been released publicly. Press reports of covert operations covered in the report amount to "the obvious bursting of the dam protecting many of our secret operations and activities," said Central Intelligence Director William E. Colby.

A ranking member of the House committee, Rep. Robert N. Giamo, D-Conn., said the Ford administration itself might have leaked the report in an effort to discredit Congress' ability to keep secrets and thereby cut off information to Congress in the future.

Te New York Times reported Monday that it had obtained a copy of the still-secret House committee report. Some other news organizations have carried stories based on portions of the report.

The report says U.S. intelligence costs about $10 billion a year and says some covert operations sometimes have been ordered by presidents and their staffs over CIA and State Department opposition.

It says then-President Richard M. Nixon, for example, directed the CIA to support Kurdish rebels in Iraq over objections from the CIA, Secretary of State Henry A. Kissinger and the State Department.

The House committee set to work Monday on proposed recommendations including one to abolish a major Pentagon intelligence agency and another to create a permanent House intelligence committee.

Without expressing criticism of Congress, FBI Director Clarence Kelley told a Senate committee that increased Congressional supervision could jeopardize his agency's investigative ability.

"The establishment of unlimited access of congressmen to FBI secrets could seriously jeopardize the flow of volunteer information, which is the life blood of our investigative organization," Kelley said.

At the White House, Press Secretary Ron Nessen said President Ford has not seen the final report and Nessen declined to comment on it.

But, he said, "the premature release of the preliminary draft of the committee report is in violation of the security agreement which the White House understood it had with the committee for the handling of classified material."

"This unauthorized release raises serious questions about how classified material can be handled by Congress when the national security is at stake," Nessen said.

The bluntest attack came from senior Republican Robert McClory of Illinois as the House committee took up a proposed recommendation to create a permanent House committee to oversee secret intelligence operations.

Staff Director A. Searle Field told the House committee he did not know who was leaking secrets from the committee.

Field told the committee it was possible some administration official had leaked the secrets in an effort to make it appear that Congress should not be trusted in the future with such information.

The proposed recommendation for creating a permanent House committee also proposes severe sanctions even against congressmen for leaking secret information.

It proposes steps for removing congressmen from the intelligence committee and moving to ensure them for releasing such information.

At the same time the permanent House intelligence committee would be empowered to determine on its own that secret information should be released to the public.

If a congressman tried to publicly disclose a secret operation he considered improper and the intelligence committee refused, he would have the right to petition for a secret session of the full 435-member House to consider his request.

Another proposed recommendation would abolish the Defense Intelligence Agency and divide its operations, including the worldwide military attaché network, between the CIA and the secretary of Defense's office.

The National Security Agency would be separated from the military agencies under another proposed recommendation. It would become a civilian agency with instructions to gather primarily diplomatic and economic rather than military intelligence.

There is no proposed recommendation to abolish all U.S. covert operations abroad as some members have suggested—but there is one to require that the entire National Security Council approve such operations.

That recommendation stems from what committee sources say is a theme through the report that presidents and aides, specifically Nixon and Kissinger according to the report, have pressed for covert operations despite objections to agencies.

The report concludes that Operation Stone, spying by U.S. submarines on Soviet missile firings, was highly risky but worth the risk because of the information obtained, some said.

The sources said the operation was highly risky because in at least nine U.S. submarines collided with other vessels.

The report says intelligence gathered by other unspecified operations has not been similar high risks.

Palestinian state blocked by U.S.

N.Y. (AP) — The United States vetoed a resolution Monday night that would have put the Security Council on record in favor of Palestinian statehood.

It was the 18th Security Council veto cast by the United States and the fourth dealing with a Middle East issue.

The United States claimed the resolution would undermine Middle East peace negotiations.

The vote on the resolution was delayed by a last-minute British proposal that would have amended the resolution to declare that nothing in it was meant to supersede two council resolutions adopted in 1967 and 1973 that laid the current framework for Middle East peace efforts.

The amendment got only four votes toward the necessary nine-vote majority.

Before the council meeting, Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin, leaving Jerusalem on an official visit to the United States, said a veto "will bring the Arab extremists to their senses and will allow a sort of advancement toward peace."

Adoption of the resolution, Rabin said, would "prevent the chances for peace." He did not spell out how the veto would help peace.

U.S. sources had been saying privately that there would be a veto of any resolution recognizing any Palestinian "right" or demand for Israeli withdrawal from Arab territories occupied in 1967 war.

The United States had danger of undermining negotiating process in explaining why it tried unsuccessfully to prevent PLO participation in the two-week debate.

Without a veto by one of the five permanent members, the vote of at least 9 of the council members would pass the resolution.

The resolution was worked out in private consultations between nonaligned members and Arab delegates during the debate.

Cuba responds to Zaire

MIAMI (AP) — Cuba claimed Monday that its allies in Angola represent the legitimate government there, and it accused Zaire of attempting to take over the newly independent African nation with the aid of "racist South Africa."

In a letter to Secretary General Kurt Waldheim of the United Nations, as broadcast over Havana radio, the Fidel Castro regime said it was responding to charges made by Zaire before the Security Council.

The Cuban note said its combat troops and military advisers are fighting alongside the Marxist-oriented Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola because the MPLA requested them in its capacity as the legitimate government of Angola.

South Africa and Zaire attempted to prevent "the consolidation of the new republic's independence," with the MPLA as its head, the Cuban note said. It said South Africa attacked the former Portuguese colony in late October and November.

Zaire has supported the National Front for the Liberation of Angola. The FNLA is headed by Holden Roberto, a brother-in-law of President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire.

South Africa supports UNITA, the other Western-oriented faction in the civil war. The South African government has troops fighting in the southern part of Angola with UNITA, the National Union for Total Independence of Angola.

"The government of Zaire will have to explain to world public opinion and in particular to the Africans its complicity in that abhorrent alliance with the racists of South Africa," said Cuba's note to Waldheim.

The Cuban broadcast was monitored in Miami. Cuba is now estimated to have 10,000 troops fighting with the MPLA.

'Enforcer teams' tour Beirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Ceasefire "enforcer teams" toured Beirut on Monday using bullhorns to urge rival gunmen to clear the streets. Despite the aura of impending peace, Christian concern mounted over the growing Palestinian role in Lebanon.

Lootings and sackings were exceptions to a general tightening or order across Lebanon, where about 10,000 persons have died in civil bloodshed since April.

The general feeling in Beirut was that the worst of civil war is over. However, the country remained virtually partitioned between heavily armed Moslem and Christian camps with a political settlement on paper only.

The "enforcer teams" — made up of Palestine Liberation Army troops in Moslem areas and right-wing Christian militias in Christian areas — worked toward a Tuesday evening deadline for restoration of law and order.

The deadline for withdrawal of the gunmen was set Sunday by a committee of Syrian, Palestinian and Lebanese army officers set up to enforce the four-day-old ceasefire worked out by Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam.

Under the truce plan, Lebanon's 60 per cent Moslem majority will receive a larger share of political and economic power in the country. Power is now concentrated in the hands of the Christian minority. So far the truce plan has not been implemented.

The latest ceasefire ended fighting with Palestinian units in effective control of most of Lebanon. But the Christians were not defeated militarily. Their private armies maintained complete control of half of Beirut.

200 Cambodians killed trying to cross border

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP) — Cambodian soldiers on Monday killed more than 200 villagers who tried to flee to Thailand, officials here reported.

The officials said their information came from a survivor, 28-year-old Tue Pley, who escaped across the border with companions.

Tue Pley gave this account, the officials said: He and nearly 300 other people set out on foot from Battambang in northwest Cambodia 10 days ago.

"Before we reached the border this morning a group of Khmer Rouge soldiers suddenly fired at us and killed our friends and companions," the young man said. "We will not return to Cambodia because we were used like animals working in the field, would rather die in Thailand."

NSA Appreciates a Master's Degree

Let's be honest with each other: A master's degree in math has not been opening as many career doors as it once did. That's why, if you are receiving your MS between now and September, you cannot overlook the unique and challenging math applications that can still be found at the National Security Agency today.

Specific assignments for mathematicians at NSA fall into three broad areas: consulting with analysts on current communications problems; providing technical assistance to the communications systems specialists; and conducting long-range mathematical research in communications and computing.

Work with analytic personnel involves the statistical analysis of data for causal significance. Probability theory, statistical design of experiments, and Fourier analysis are employed frequently.

Communications systems of the United States Government require research and application of statistics, modern algebra, and information theory. Among the more important mathematical tools being used are: group theory, Galois theory, matrix theory and stochastic processes.

A research mathematician may investigate the use of existing computer systems or the design of new systems to assist in the solution of long-range communications problems.

As a junior mathematician, you will progress through a three year sequence of job assignments and courses which are carefully tailored to enhance your strength in algebraic modeling, statistical modeling, and analysis. Upon successful completion of the program, you should have a comprehensive knowledge of NSA's technical problems and the mathematically oriented approaches to their solution.

Salaries begin at the GS-9 level and are supplemented by the usual government benefits. NSA offices are located in the suburban corridor between Washington, D.C. and Baltimore, Maryland. U.S. citizenship required.

Intrigued? Good! In fact, we hope that you are sufficiently intrigued to desire more information about NSA career prospects. Make an appointment through your campus placement office to see our representative when he visits your school in the near future. If you miss our recruiter, send a resume to Chief, College Relations Branch, National Security Agency, Fort George G. Meade, Maryland 20755. Attn: M321.

Academic Council to discuss GPA inflation issue

By FRANCES BROWN
State News Staff Writer

After lying dormant before the Academic Council since October, the proposed new standards for graduation with honors and high honors will be the first item of discussion at the council meeting today.

Because of recent grade point inflation, the University Committee on Academic Policy has proposed that the current 3.0 minimum grade point average (GPA) required for graduation with honor be changed to 3.4 and the present 3.4 minimum standard for graduation with high honor be changed to 3.7.

Smith, ex-chairman of the committee, who will present the proposal to the council, said with current graduation practices about 20 per cent of MSU graduates would be honored under the new proposal—14 per cent with honor and 6 per cent with high honor. Our recommendations are designed to restore luster to the tarnished prize," Smith said.

Although in 1965 19.5 per cent of MSU graduates were honored and 12 per cent graduated with high honor in spring 1975, under the same 3.0 and 3.4 requirements. Thus, graduates are now outnumbering those not receiving honors.

Data collected by the Office of the Registrar show that all Michigan universities except Northern Michigan have altered honors recognition to be in step with grade point inflation. The lowest GPA requirement for graduation with honor at any other Michigan university is 3.2, with most requiring a 3.5 GPA.

The Academic Policy Committee considered minimum GPA requirements for graduation with honor of 3.3, 3.35 and 3.5, but threw them out because they were considered either too high or too low.

The committee proposal suggests that the honors requirements be reviewed annually and changed if the proportions of graduates being honored depart significantly from the old 18 to 20 per cent tradition.

The proposal does not contain specifics for implementation of the new requirements. Discussion in the Academic Council today is expected to develop over whether or not it is fair for students already in the University to be held to the new higher GPA standards.

The Student Council will present a proposal that, if the new standards for graduation with honor and high honor are passed, all departments or colleges which have set a minimum GPA for entrance into or retention in programs review their requirements in accordance with the new honors floors.

"The Honors College currently has a retention GPA of 3.2," said Beatrice Lin, undergraduate member of the council steering committee. "This should be changed. Otherwise, we'll have students graduating from the Honors College but not with honors or high honors."

The Academic Council will meet at 3:15 in the Con Con Room of the International Center.

Though light as feathers the flakes fall, once fallen snow creates an aura of weight, weight so immense only one thing can move it—the coming of spring.

Delays could hinder CD funds

By BRAD MARTISUJ
State News Staff Writer

East Lansing may have lost its last chance to use Community Development (CD) money to help solve its housing problems—according to City Councilman Larry Owen.

But then again, plenty of chances may yet remain to somehow, some way get money to study housing. It all depends on whose opinion you value most.

Owen introduced a series of resolutions at last week's city council meeting, hoping the city could get some concrete studies done in time to apply for CD funds for the 1977-78 fiscal year.

However, the resolutions were referred to other commissions for further study. Owen said afterward that referral and the delays which referral will cause are precisely what he was trying to avoid.

Owen's main fear is that the city will have nothing to show the federal government in August when the series of public hearings for funds for the 1977-78 fiscal year must begin again. The Community Development Act expires after that year unless Congress decides to renew the act.

"I think the delay will hurt us," Owen said. "Without tough deadlines for reports, we'll never have anything to show HUD (Housing and Urban Development). And I don't want to be able to say 'I told you so' in a few months."

Owen's resolution, the one he said was the most important, would have set up an Office of Housing Policy and Program Development. Furthermore, the resolution would have required the office to make periodic reports, beginning 30 days after its creation.

City Planner Scott Radway said it may still be possible to complete the housing studies, which are to be done by the Housing and Planning Commissions, in time for the CD hearings beginning again in August.

"That is especially true now that we have the money to hire another person as housing coordinator," Radway said.

Before the funds were allocated for the housing coordinator, Radway had said, in essence, that members of the planning department were spread thin over several projects that had been given high priority by the city council.

If the housing study is completed, the city would be able to include the study's results in its applications for CD funds, increasing the chances of getting money for further housing study.

Owen's resolution was referred to the housing and planning commissions after a motion by Councilmember Mary Sharp. The motion was then carried with the support of Sharp, Councilman John Polomsky and Mayor George Griffiths.

"I voted in favor of the motion to refer because I didn't think the council should pass a resolution like Owen's until after full consideration," Griffiths said.

He added that his concerns over Owen's resolution were about the roles of the housing and planning commissions possibly overlapping those of Owen's proposed Office of Housing Policy and Program Development.

"In any case, I don't think it will take more than 30 days to refer Owen's resolution through the housing and planning commissions and back to the city council," Griffiths said.

However, Owen doesn't believe things will move that quickly. "Under normal events, we're talking of a period of from two to three months," he said.

He added that it would be impossible for the referred resolutions to make it through the commissions in time to be considered at the next city council meeting. He also said tough deadlines are needed to ensure that reports are made.

"And that's a shame because that is the resolution that had teeth in it," Owen said. "That is the one I really wanted to get passed."

Views on economy differ

By FRED NEWTON
State News Staff Writer

Though it is generally agreed that the Michigan economy is in the doldrums, the reasons behind that conclusion are a matter of debate.

The cause of Michigan's poor business climate—especially new businesses and expansion—is a matter of disagreement between Michigan Chamber of Commerce President Harry Hall and MSU Professor of Economics Milton Taylor. One says that the state liberalism and workers are the problems, while the other says it is a profit motivated, planned economic move.

Only last week General Motors indefinitely postponed the opening of its Adrian, Mich., manufacturing plant because of the uncertainty of the Michigan business climate, especially pending legislative increases in workman's compensation benefits.

According to GM and Hall, Michigan is a bad state to locate or expand.

"There is a high cost of doing business in the state because of high taxes and high labor costs," said Hall, pointing to the legislature looking at raising unemployment benefits, which are among the highest in the country.

But others, like the United Auto Workers (UAW) and an MSU economist, see the issue in an entirely different light. Last week, after GM's Adrian notice, the UAW denounced as "arrogant" and a shame that the auto giant could not locate in Michigan "after the hundreds of millions of dollars they have made in the state over the years."

For the most part, the firms that are leaving the state or expanding elsewhere are relocating in the South or West or even internationally, which according to MSU Economist Milton Taylor is solely in their self-interest.

While Taylor says that the minor reasons the companies are moving are to get closer to natural resources such as natural gas and oil and to become closer to customers, the main reasons are labor.

"Labor costs and more tractable (submissive) labor forces are the main reasons these firms are leaving the state," Taylor said.

He said complaints about taxes and higher workman compensation benefits are just excuses to leave the state.

"It's a ploy that works, but the real name of the game is profits," Taylor said. "The consumer is always going to get the price passed on to him anyway."

In the South and West, according to Taylor, wages are lower and worker militancy is not as high as it is in heavily unionized Michigan. Thus costs are lower and profits are higher.

"What it all boils down to is 'heads I win, tails you lose,'" he said. "They already know what they're going to do."

While both Taylor and Hall viewed the movement of business from the state as a bad thing, Taylor said that the Chamber of Commerce claim of the workers and high costs as the reason was a typically "class issue."

As far as the future goes Hall said the tide will have to be turned with some economic agreement between state, business and unions before any change can be seen.

Taylor, on the other hand, says that the state is, and will become, industrialized, with more and more jobs being in state and local governments and service orientated areas.

Swainson's sentence reduced, ordered to 60 days in prison

DETROIT (UPI) — Former Gov. John B. Swainson was sentenced Monday to concurrent prison terms of one year and one day on each of three perjury convictions last November.

Federal Judge Carl B. Rubin of Dayton, Ohio, ordered the World War II hero, resigned state Supreme Court Justice and last Democratic governor in Michigan, to spend 60 days in a minimum security prison facility and suspended the rest of the sentence.

Asked if he understood the sentence, Swainson replied in a low voice, "Yes, your honor."

Swainson's attorney said he would appeal to the U.S. 6th Circuit Court of Appeals in Cincinnati. Swainson was freed on a continued recognizance bond.

The sentence came nine weeks after Swainson resigned from the state Supreme Court because of his conviction on three counts of lying to a federal grand jury probing bribery conspiracy allegations against him.

Swainson could have received a maximum sentence of 15 years behind bars and a $15,000 fine.

Rubin also sentenced a fellow defendant, former bail bondsman Harvey Wish of Detroit, to two years in prison but suspended all but 60 days of the sentence. Wish was convicted of bribery conspiracy. Swainson was acquitted on the bribery conspiracy charge.

Rubin, who heard the case after all federal judges in Detroit disqualified themselves, recommended Swainson serve his term in the Community Treatment Center in Detroit.

Swainson, 50, and Wish were found guilty by a federal jury after a convicted burglar, John J. Whalen, claimed Swainson, Wish and bail bondsman Charles Goldfarb conspired to win him a new trial on a 1969 Adrian burglary.

Rubin said before sentencing that he had denied without oral arguments nine post-trial motions filed on Swainson's behalf by attorney Konrad Kohl.

The motions included one seeking a directed verdict of acquittal and another asking for a new trial.

'Public interest' cited in dye ban

By JEAN MOORE

The recent Food and Drug Administration (FDA) ban on Red Dye No. 2 because of new research that it might be a carcinogenic agent is considered a move taken in "the best interests of the public" by one researcher, even though the results of tests conducted so far have been inconclusive.

The FDA's ban on the dye, widely used in foods, drugs and cosmetics, came after tests conducted by Dr. D. W. Gaylor of the FDA's National Center for Toxicological Research indicated that high doses of the dye caused a significant increase in neoplasms (cancerous tumors) in female rats.

Commenting on the tests, James F. Kirk, associate professor of Food Sciences and Human Nutrition, said that although there was a difference in the number of malignant tumors, there was no difference in the amount of overall tumors, either benign or malignant.

He also stressed the fact that the dye was fed to the rats in unusually high doses, much higher than would ever be used in products distributed to the public.

Kirk's opinion was echoed by Al Hafner, a food technician at the Michigan Dept. of Agriculture (MDA), who said that "even salt in large doses can kill babies."

He said that the ban, which ends a 15-year controversy over the dye, is being imposed because the FDA is unable to prove either that it is either completely safe or that it is a definite health hazard.

Hafner said that the ban would not affect products already on the market, but that the MDA would be inspecting bakeries and any dye being used after the ban is final would be seized and dumped.

He said that many manufacturers will probably switch to Red Dye No. 40, a dye that is considered safe by the FDA.

A check with PIRGIM's information director Phil Lienhart revealed that there was probably nothing that consumer protection agencies could do about recalling Red Dye No. 2 products already on the market unless it was proven conclusively that the dye was unsafe.

It may or may not be a matter of law whether Gerald Ford has the right to use public funds to hire Rogers Morton for political aid and comfort in a campaign year.

It certainly is not against the law for him to keep on the White House payroll Richard Ober, the former deputy director of the CIA's "Operation Chaos," which was rightly described by the New York Times as a "massive illegal domestic surveillance program."

It's just a question of taste in both cases. With Morton, the President probably thought nobody would complain. With Ober, he thought nobody would find out. He was wrong both times.

Two strange appointments from Ford

White House Press Secretary Ronald Nessen tried to calm the waters rolling over the Morton appointment by insisting that Morton's political duties — he's obviously being brought in to straighten out this year's political "Operation Chaos" — the President Ford Committee — would be "incidental."

Morton, who wasn't born yesterday, promptly contradicted him. The former interior and commerce secretary went on to Des Moines to say defiantly that "The President is just as much entitled to political advice as he is to natural resources advice." He declares he also will give the President advice on energy and the economy, but few will believe — in the light of the number of people already employed in those areas — that his counsel on those matters will be anything more than "incidental."

The first person to complain was Tom Curtis, chairman of the Federal Elections Commission. Unexpectedly — he has been quite indulgent with the President up to now — he bared his teeth and said that in this new era of spending limits, Morton's purely political activities should be charged against the President's political account.

Strictly speaking, the law already prohibits public payment to people "for the purpose of influencing the nomination or election of any person to federal office."

If it were to be enforced with regard to congressional staff members, who blatantly do everything from speech-writing to baby-sitting for the cause, the entire membership of Congress would be packed off to jail.

What he is trying to tell Ford, and probably shouldn't have to, is that something called post-Watergate morality requires men in high office to behave with special circumspection. Nobody should have had to tell Ford, on the other hand, that what he needed least, as Ronald Reagan nips at his heels on federal spending, was another issue, which Morton's $44,800 job has swiftly become.

The other controversial employee, Richard Ober, went to the White House amid no public notice whatever in March 1974, after "Operation Chaos" was terminated. He came to be intelligence director of the National Security Council.

Through examination of CIA documents obtained under the Freedom of Information Act, the Washington Star discovered his presence. It discovered something more: that Ober, along with former CIA Director Richard Helms, is under investigation by the Justice Department for his part in the 1971 break-in of a Fairfax City (Va.) photo shop run by a CIA employee and her boyfriend.

When Nessen was asked if Ford would keep Ober on, he replied that the President would, because he subscribes to the principle that a man is innocent until proven guilty. It was a declaration that did much credit to the President as a civil libertarian, but somewhat less to his sense of propriety as an employer.

The point is not whether Ober is innocent or guilty in the break-in, which may have been among the lesser offenses committed under "Operation Chaos." The point is whether a man of proven, indeed aggressive indifference to the constitutional rights of American citizens has the right to a job in the White House.

Nessen thinks it reflects well — in contrast, he noted delicately, to the previous administration — that the President is not interfering in the Justice Department investigation. But it reflects less well on him that he thinks it is a matter of no consequence that one of his staff members engaged in activities that are generally considered reprehensible.

Keeping Ober on shows that Ford doesn't panic, which is a good thing. It also shows that he is not sensitive to public opinion, which is a bad thing. It will take a great deal more than the appointment of Rogers Morton, who doesn't seem particularly sensitive himself, to teach him that the public is a little fussy about how he spends its taxes for his help.

Angola coverage

A professional Black media workers at U and WKAR-TV, we were appalled and disgusted by your Jan. 19 editorial from the L.A. Times which depicted black freedom-fighters as gorillas. The cartoon was racist and showed the arrogant disregard for the Angolan struggle and the daily sacrifices the Angolan people. The thought which urged was that the Angolans, who have been fighting for over 14 years for independence, are just mindless monkeys manipulated by white outsiders.

The inability of the State News to understand and respect the struggle in Angola as a noble yet serious and difficult fight of an oppressed people shows up instantly in the AP and UPI stories run out any editing or consideration for the truth. The State News seems able to screen out falsehoods and slander it comes to oppressed people.

This is a sign of immaturity, arrogance and white chauvinism. It is "flexible" as the State News is supposed to be "flexible" in the coverage of "falsehood" or "slander."

As to the cartoon, the caricaturing of Angolan soldiers (incidentally, they do not look like gorillas to us) is no more racist than the caricaturing of, say, Ronald Reagan. In fact, it would be patronizing — a particularly insidious form of racism — to exempt black Africans from caricature because of their race. — Ed.

Which Chou?

On Jan. 21, you printed two articles portraying Chou En Lai. One article was by William F. Buckley and the other article was by Bruce Lannes Smith. Mr. Smith compared Chou to the likes of Thomas Jefferson, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Nehru, while observing that he was no less dedicated to humane politics than these three.

Mr. Buckley's portrayal was just the opposite. He compared Chou to Hitler while commenting that he presided over policies that in the first ten years of Maoist rule, resulted in the death of at least eighteen million people. He also charges that an equal number died under the reign of Chou in forced labor camps.

To anyone who is qualified to answer, I ask the question, whose portrayal is the most correct?

Perspectives in Black staff: Robert Burke Paula Whitley Because the State News does not have a foreign correspondent in Angola, we are forced to rely on the professional reporting of Associated Press. We do not know what, if anything, in the coverage is "falsehood" or "slander."

VIEWPOINT: ENGINEERING WOES

Metallurgy should not be sacrificed

The statement made by Dr. Lawrence Von Tersch, Dean of the College of Engineering, appeared in the State News on January 20 with regard to the accreditation problem of all the engineering programs in general, and specifically, the metallurgy program, was misleading and most unfortunate.

On various occasions Dean Von Tersch has used the pretense that in his mind the metallurgy program would have problems in obtaining accreditation as an excuse for his intention of phasing out our metallurgy program. After all, accreditation is, as Trustee Huff said, not a trivial thing.

For instance, I would not advise my own son to enroll in a program which is not accredited or substandard. In that respect, our metallurgy program fared no better and no worse than the other engineering programs in the college (agricultural engineering is academically not a part of the engineering college).

In all fairness, why should the metallurgy program be singled out and punished? If a single person is in trouble the faculty and the department chairman involved should be responsible. Who should be responsible if all the programs in a college are in trouble?

Dean Von Tersch had no choice but to play down the importance of the accreditation. He even seemed to be happy that all the engineering programs got two-year provisional accreditation (State Journal, January 20).

For years, retired metallurgy faculty members have not been replaced; those without tenure have been fired. Potential students have been advised by the dean's office to enroll in other programs. Resources have been channeled to other departments. Or to say, the metallurgy program has been cannibalized to feed the blood thirsty ones in the college.

On one occasion when the current chairman of the Metallurgy Dept. was on leave, I volunteered to defend the metallurgy program in front of the so called administrative group of the College of Engineering. The dean told me that I was to throw myself to the wolves.

While the problem of sustaining the metallurgy program is still being discussed in the All University Committee on Curriculum, which, according to the Bylaws for Academic Governance, has the sole authority delegated by the faculty to approve or reject all changes in undergraduate courses and curricula proposed by academic units it is my duty to point out that the defacto actions taken by the dean to have many metallurgy courses suspended and to have potential students turned away are a clear violation of the bylaws.

Sincerely,
Chuan-Tsung Wei, Professor of Metallurgy

Summary of NCAA violations released

Here is a summary of the NCAA violations that MSU has been found guilty of by the NCAA Infractions Committee. The University's position follows each infraction listed.

A special committee heard appeals regarding athletic financial aid instead of the University's regular disciplinary and/or scholarship awards authorities. This constitutes a questionable practice.

MSU did not concede this violation, saying that a committee was in existence but it was only an appeal panel, not a special committee for action. MSU also pointed out that similar approaches are practiced by at least three other Big Ten schools.

An MSU athlete charged air fare to his home over summer break to an assistant coach and did not repay the loan until the beginning of fall term.

MSU concedes this violation but notes that the player made the charge without the coach's knowledge and paid the coach back when confronted by the coach. The violation was the delay in repayment and this appears to be an isolated incident.

An assistant coach gave two athletes a ride to Cleveland, Ohio, from East Lansing without charge.

MSU concedes this charge stating that the ride did take place but that the coach was headed in that direction on business anyway and players were only given rides as far as Cleveland and from there traveled the rest of the way by bus at their own expense.

An MSU assistant coach occasionally let athletes use his car. MSU concedes this and states that the assistant coach's ignorance of NCAA rules cannot be excused.

A travel agency credit fund was set up for various athletes and families of athletes. No other students were eligible for this fund.

MSU does not concede this and says there was no special account. The travel agency also denies any special arrangements for athletes and states that some athletes were even turned down when they applied for credit.

A promissory note guaranteeing the repayment of a car loan by an athlete was signed by an MSU representative. (An MSU representative is construed by the NCAA, to be any person who assists the University or has an interest in the University's athletic program. Therefore a representative could include alumni, athletic program contributors or anyone working for the University. It even includes persons who "think" they are assisting the University.)

MSU concedes this but notes that it was the University that discovered the violation and took immediate action to correct it. The car was returned at a personal monetary loss to the player (Charlie Baggett) of $259.

An MSU assistant coach gave a car to an athlete to entertain a prospective athlete. MSU concedes this infraction, saying the car was in use for approximately three hours.

Two MSU athletes obtained record albums and clothing through use of an MSU representative's credit card.

MSU does not concede this violation because the credit card was used without the owner's knowledge or the knowledge of the coach to whom the credit card had been loaned. MSU does concede that the incident could not have taken place if the athletes had not improperly been given the use of the coach's car.

An MSU representative let an assistant coach use his credit card to make purchases at the representative's expense.

MSU concedes the use of the credit card but believes the matter is a personal rather than job-related matter.

MSU did not use proper control over two university representatives.

MSU did not concede guilt and notes that the term 'representative' is difficult to define. The University did concede that errors had been made and will be remedied to prevent similar instances in the future.

Two assistant football coaches acted unethically and one demonstrated little attempt to conform to NCAA regulations.

MSU does not concede this infraction and states that there is no conclusive evidence that the allegations are true. The coaches took polygraph tests denying improper assistance and the polygraph results indicated the coaches were telling the truth.

MSU played an ineligible athlete in five football games.

MSU does not concede this point and says that the athlete involved (the same athlete involved in the promissory note/car violation, Baggett) was not ineligible as far as the University was concerned. Baggett had been ineligible but was reinstated before playing.

Two assistant coaches gave MSU athletes equipment to use for a high school all-star game. MSU agrees with this charge and lists the cause as an error in the coaches' thinking.

Three assistant coaches gave athletic equipment to three prospective student-athletes. MSU admits this charge.

An assistant coach and representative of MSU promised a prospective player spending money, a car, an apartment for his girlfriend, financial aid for his girlfriend and transportation between East Lansing and his home during vacations.

MSU did not concede guilt, saying that polygraph tests confirmed the coach's innocence. The representative did admit suggesting the athlete ask for extra benefits for enrolling.

On several occasions an assistant football coach gave cash to prospective players to spend on themselves.

An assistant coach gave a prospective player a ring.

An assistant coach gave cash to a prospective player twice for the personal use of the athlete.

An assistant coach arranged for a prospective player to be given a sport coat.

MSU denied these charges, citing inconclusive evidence and a polygraph test that supported the coach's denial of charges.

An assistant coach took a prospective player to a clothing store, bought clothes for the player and billed them to an MSU representative.

MSU did not concede guilt and said the coach had bought the clothes for himself, a statement supported by polygraph tests.

Two prospective athletes were given two expense-paid visits to MSU.

MSU conceded this violation as far as the two visits were concerned but denied that the visits were made with the school's sanction or were paid for by MSU. The visits were to attend football games. An MSU representative did loan money to one of the prospective players to stay overnight but MSU coaches were unaware of this.

Two high school coaches were given free meals and lodging in East Lansing and were reimbursed for travel expenses by an MSU assistant coach while accompanying a prospective recruit on an official paid visit to MSU.

MSU admits partial guilt in that the coaches did make the trip, but the high school coaches came in the place of the student's parents. This was the high school's policy when parents were unable to accompany players. The high school coaches were not aware of any infraction and had followed the same practice at other universities.

An expense-paid trip was arranged to MSU for the brother and sister-in-law of a prospective player.

MSU did not concede this infraction since the student's older brother had, since 1971, exercised de facto parental responsibility for the player, including total financial support. MSU maintains that this was the official paid visit by the student-athlete's guardians and no infraction was committed.

An MSU representative gave a meal to a prospective player and a friend.

MSU admits this occurred.

An assistant coach on separate occasions drove two prospective players in the coach's automobile round-trip between the young men's homes and the hometown of another prospective player.

MSU admitted this occurred.

An MSU assistant coach loaned his car to a prospective player and the player's host at no charge while the player was on an official paid visit to MSU.

MSU admits this occurred.

An assistant coach bought meals for a prospective player several times and purchased a meal for the prospect's girlfriend on one occasion.

MSU does not concede guilt and notes that no proof has been obtained to support this charge. One Ohio restaurant owner said he had never seen the coach with the player in question.

An assistant coach gave a prospective player cash to buy a topcoat.

MSU denies this charge as does the coach. The denial was confirmed by polygraph.

An assistant coach and a representative of MSU's athletic interests arranged for transportation of three prospective players by private plane at the expense of the representative for their official paid trips to East Lansing from their homes.

The representative did not accompany the aircraft during a portion of the flight.

MSU does not concede this in that the representative did not make the return trip to Ohio with the prospective players. This resulted in a technical violation because NCAA rules require that the representative "accompany the prospective student-athlete on his visit." The representative was not aware that he had to return to Ohio with the players.

An assistant coach bought clothes for one representative and billed them to another representative of MSU's athletic interests. The clothing was a reward to the representative for aid in recruiting.

MSU did not concede this violation and maintains that the clothing was a personal gift, not reimbursement for recruiting aid.

With the full knowledge of two assistant football coaches that some practices of the MSU football program conflicted with NCAA legislation, President Wharton erroneously certified on May 30, 1974, that MSU was in compliance with NCAA legislation.

MSU does not concede this violation which derived from the findings that other violations had occurred. Further, the bylaw in question took effect Aug. 1, 1974, two months after the certification.

MSU authorized an assistant coach to aid in the investigation of the charges against MSU. MSU admits no guilt but believes there is nothing with an accused person, giving the charges against MSU did not fully comply with the NCAA investigation and information requested by the NCAA. MSU does not concede infraction and faults the for not providing all information on which the charges made. Without this information, the University was to determine what evidence relevant and should be occasions, giving another prospective student-athlete cash to spend for his own personal reasons, and an assistant coach arranging for a prospective student-athlete to be given a sport coat.

Wharton stated the University appealed these allegations because of conflicting testimony between the claims of the recruited players and the MSU coaches. The coaches involved, Weyers and Butler, submitted to a polygraph test to solidify their testimony.

"Ultimately, the validity of the charges revolved around the credibility of the two assistant coaches and the four student-athletes, all of whom are or were players at Ohio State University," Wharton said.

"Because of the direct conflict between their statements, we asked our coaches to submit to polygraph examinations with the stipulation that the results would be used. The results of the tests fully supported the coaches' denials of the allegations. Yet, the NCAA apparently has chosen to accept the statements of the Ohio State players," he said.

The Big Ten had notified Wharton, he added, that the players in question had agreed to take a polygraph exam, but they never actually did so. He also said that the University's Select Committee investigating the allegation, never requested a polygraph test for the players.

It is the NCAA's refusal to recognize the polygraph results that puzzles Wharton and may be the basis for subsequent appeal by the University.

"We understand that such a test has been regarded in Federal Court as direct evidence of a respondent's truthfulness," Wharton commented.

Other violations included the gift or loan of equipment to prospective student-athletes. Wharton cited four instances where assistant football coaches lent equipment to players in connection with the Ohio North - South All Star Game. Asst. coach Jimmy Raye was reprimanded by the NCAA for such activity.

Head coach Danny Stolz remarked, "We didn't realize such a thing was illegal. The players had signed a letter of intent and were enrolled at Michigan State. We issued the equipment to the players during the summer and they subsequently took it to Ohio for the All-Star game.

"I didn't even know about it, or that it was illegal, until I attended a Big Ten meeting," Stolz continued. "When I did discover the violation I ordered it stopped immediately."

Wharton added, "This violation resulted from a lack of familiarity of the rules by our coaches, who believed that the loan was proper since the players had signed their letters of intent to attend Michigan State University."

Ironically, a rules violation discovered by the University and not included in the original allegations was also included in the NCAA's final charges.

MSU quarterback Charlie Baggett had secured the signature of his former employer to secure a loan for a new car. The rule violation occurred because Baggett's former employer is defined as "a representative of the University's athletic interests."

When the transaction came to light, MSU disclosed all it knew to the NCAA. The governing body then ruled that MSU had allowed Baggett to participate in five intercollegiate football contests while ineligible because of the purchase.

Wharton said that Baggett was forced to sell the car, taking a monetary loss. The University then made Baggett ineligible, informed the NCAA of such action, and the Spartan senior was then immediately reinstated as eligible.

"The University could have evidence then, nor does it now, that any deliberate violation was committed," Wharton declared.

Another charge appealed by MSU concerned alleged treatment by a local agency for student-athletes which was not available to University's student body general.

Specifically, the NCAA charged that Harrington Travel established special credit accounts for certain elite football coaches, elite student athletes and the mother of a student athlete.

MSU appealed the charge on the grounds that, "... while correct that the agency established special credit accounts for certain elite football coaches, elite student athletes and the mother of a student athlete, the agency was not a representative of the University's athletic interests," Wharton stated.

Among other charges by the NCAA were the reporting of members of a football team by an MSU coach to Cleveland. The coach, reportedly, gave athlete a ride in the coach's car to Cleveland, where athlete paid his own fare home in Ohio.

Also, the NCAA charged MSU did not adequately operate with the Committee on Infractions in that the University failed to provide material and other information in its initial response to NCAA official inquiry and several notices and requests.

Bills to help meet rising education costs

of students, such as mature women who return to finish their degrees on a half-time basis.

The bill would let students who have received the equivalent of a high school diploma, have been recommended by the student's college or university financial aid office on the basis of academic achievement or have demonstrated academic potential be eligible. The bill also requires the Michigan Higher Education Assistance Authority to report to the legislature the number of eligible students who did not receive awards.

Bullard also said that the qualification examinations are unfairly discriminatory against "the older student who may have left high school years ago."

"If this instrument is supposed to predict college success for scholarship applicants, it seems to unreasonably discriminate against older students," Bullard said.

He added that students 25 years - old and older scored lower in the competitive tests last year than younger students but accumulated higher grade points.

Another of Bullard's bills would require banks to show participation in the Michigan Guaranteed Student Loan Program in order to become eligible to receive deposits of state funds. Bullard pointed out that such a system is working in Illinois and is not impractical. He said that if the bill is implemented, it would loosen up the flow of loans to students. Chief Deputy Treasurer Carol Newton said that such a measure would discourage banks from seeking deposits of state money and thus cause some state cash flow. "I think he's way off," Newton said of Bullard.

Rulings vex administrators

athletes' grades to keep them eligible for participation, though she would not give any specific examples.

"The number of the charges against Michigan State do not fall in that ballpark at all," she said. "I find it very hard to understand where the NCAA came out on that one. I am very disappointed."

Trustee John Bruff, D-Frasier, and a member of the Select Committee appointed by Wharton to investigate the NCAA's allegations, said much of the evidence against MSU was based on hearsay by persons whom University legal representatives did not have the chance to question.

"I don't think the findings were supported by the facts," Bruff said, referring to polygraph evidence ignored by the NCAA. The polygraphs, according to University representatives, supported the coaches' denials of ill-doings.

Board Chairman Blanche Martin, D-East Lansing, expressed skepticism concerning the hearings and the way the NCAA conducted its investigation.

"It didn't seem to be along legal lines. They'd present an accusation and ask you to prove your innocence—you're not," Martin said.

Students spoke out against the NCAA's decision. "It's too bad that we caught, but we deserve a penalty. I'm in favor of it, but that's the breaks," Harold Petrimoux, senior, Phillips Hall.

Kresge hosts multi-media design exhibition

By JOAN M. SUDOL
Special Reviewer

Walk into a modular chapel and undergo a multi-bombardment of the senses — listen to a Gregorian chant, smell the incense, experience the tactile sensation of the lush carpeting, gaze at the beauty of the stained glass windows, let the darkness surround you and the flashing lights hypnotize you.

Or, make your way through the tight maze of a city street — cardboard people bump into you, lights flash, the stench of an overflowing garbage can reaches your nose, a beer billboard fills your gaze.

Not Notre Dame Cathedral or Times Square, it is "Design Perspectives" being presented at Kresge Art Center by students in the Human Environment and Design Dept. and the Dept. of Art.

This multi-media presentation has two themes — design as a problem-solving discipline and awareness of design to get rid of misconceptions that sometimes surround it. In both of these goals, the presentation succeeds. Imaginative and innovative, "Design Perspectives" is both fun and informative.

Rather than using a wall-hanging display format, the students used modular steel forms and bolted them together to make varying and maze-like compartments. The forms are actually hog carrels — borrowed from a hog farmer near the Michigan-Indiana border — that were scraped, painted and arranged to break up space in an unusual manner.

One section of the presentation, "Nature's Perspective," has the four seasons represented in four different modular units. Crafts, photographs, scenery, plants, colors and lights portray each season to create a whole environment based on design. The carpet collages are exquisite and clearly outshine any other part of these environments, if not the whole show, in craftsmanship.

Another part of the presentation, "Present Emphasis," shows what students of design are doing today and where design is going. Plans for supermarkets, shoe stores and residential areas are displayed in a gallery fashion and design ideas are presented in a slide show. While it lacks the "fun" quality of other parts of the presentation, it nonetheless demonstrates the exciting and innovative nature of the present emphasis in design.

The chapel and street corner environments already mentioned are part of the "Experimentation" section. The senses are literally bombarded to reveal that one's senses are being manipulated by variables that in many cases one can't control.

Dark and aesthetic, the chapel environment produces a safe and soothing stimulus response. This relaxing effect is a startling contrast to the claustrophobic, busy city street environment.

Murals of the city cover the walls and free-floating cardboard people and cotton clouds give a crowded, trapped feeling. As imaginative as the street corner environment is, getting out of the maze is a relief. The awareness invoked by these environments is so overwhelming that this part of the presentation succeeds to a fantastic degree.

Another section of "Experimentation" is a solution to the problems encountered in the environment. A model of a self-sustaining environment which uses solar and wind energy is displayed with explanations as to how it works. This should clear up any misconceptions of what a designer can be involved in. It shows that the designer deals with more than just aesthetics, but with utilitarian motivations as well — motivations that include survival itself.

Along with this, a slide show delves into future product designs, as well as product critiques and alternative solutions. Slide shows can sometimes be dull, and while this one is unimaginative in presentation, content-wise it is intriguing. Last part of the presentation, "Metamorphosis," tries to show a progression from the synthetic to the natural. In this progression, geometric plant forms are broken down to the elements and end with the plants themselves. The blue and green lights of the synthetic lead to the yellow light of the natural. Somehow, this reverse of nature's perspective doesn't come off as well as other parts of the presentation. It is somewhat confusing and somewhat boring to the layer-

son. Nonetheless, all of the students who worked on the presentation, especially the organizers Patricia Smolen and Marlynn Fraser, should be praised for turning out such a unique design display. "Design Perspectives" succeeds at making one more aware of design as an mental, aesthetic and cal discipline. The presentation which runs till Feb. 16, is recommended.

Students work to complete one of the many multi-media displays being exhibited in Kresge Art Center. The display is being presented by students from the Dept. of Human Environment and Design and Dept. of Art.

Boarshead Players begin season with fine 'Savages'

By DARRYL GRANT
State News Reviewer

The Boarshead Players have begun 1976 with a marvelously intelligent and well-acted production of "Savages" by Christopher Hampton.

It was especially fitting for the new year's inauguration of the attractive Lansing Center for the Arts. Located on the corner of Grand Avenue and Lenawee Street in downtown Lansing, the center contains a 250-seat auditorium. When completed, the center will also have office space and an art gallery. The auditorium's stage is a large thrust-type with comfortable seating and nice acoustics. It made an attractive play doubly satisfying.

Christopher Hampton's play is actually a series of related vignettes employing the flashback technique. Together they form a smashing social statement. That statement says that western man has evolved a system of government and policy that is essentially wrong in our dealings with the less fortunate members of world society.

"Savages" attempts to show that this is true. The vignette form, followed by a blackout, is interesting for dramatic contrast, but it has its drawbacks. It is very awkward for set changes. It was quite annoying to have sets pulled and jerked about during the blackouts. But it is a minor point when contrasted with the overall excellence of the show. Directed and staged with a fierce and professional hand by John Peakes, its pace is smooth and elegant.

The highlight of the cast is the wonderful refined presence of Richard Thomsen as Alan West. West is a British diplomat, kidnapped by the local revolutionaries in demand for freedom of political prisoners. Thomsen gives the part his all — which is superb! He is careful, dignified, elegant and charismatic.

Thomsen handles the beauty of the interludes with simple force. The interludes consist of relating the myths of the South American Indian. They cover everything from the origin of music, the stars and reincarnation, to the patterns of life itself.

Pat Victor plays Mrs. West with a noticeable weakness that is disappointing. Revolutionary Carlos Esquerdo is played with verve and talent by Phil Heald. It is a difficult role, because like the other major roles, it is a caricature. Heald handles this aspect and the other satirical and humorous levels of his character with a startling grace.

Doug James plays the young and fervent anthropologist. James gives the audience a sparkling performance fraught with intelligence and sensitivity. He handles his British accent and difficult lines with effortless grace. He has potential to be an actor of great power and charisma.

Robert Miller and Richard Riehle also shined in their respective roles. Miller was quite striking in his double job of playing both the attorney general and Ataide Pereira. It is the role of Pereira where he is most ebullient. Sharp and effective, he colored this role with a wealth of minute mannerisms that subtly reinforce the character.

Riehle is marvelous in his portrayal of the American missionary, Elmer Penn. He captures perfectly that particular American brand of energy and zest. His timing and comic flair prove to be a delight.

Last but not least is the highly arresting portrayal of the "savages" themselves, — the Indians. At ease with their near nakedness, their language and their choreographic gestures, they are an integral asset to the production.

Glen Clements is suitably terse as the unseen American investigator.

There are attractive costumes by Barbara Thomsen and nice lighting by Ken Larsen. There is also some very interesting original music written and performed by Kira Thomsen.

"Savages" is a brilliant play that deals not only with the capitalist system, but also with the question of racial prejudice.

The Harman Kardon $100 Challenge

We've got $100 waiting for you. Bring in any commercially available receiver, regardless of price (except for another Harman Kardon product). If that receiver surpasses the square wave response of the HK 430 or 730 at 20Hz and 20,000Hz, we'll give you the $100.

Why are we making this challenge?

Square wave response is profoundly useful because it is a precise measurement of musical quality. It can be said that an instrument which fails to produce an excellent square wave response is limited in musical authenticity.

So come on in and match your receiver's square wave response against the 430 and 730. If it's better you get $100 — cash. If not, listen to the 430 and 730. You'll find that in all but absolute power levels, they're the sonic equivalents of any individual component system. The implication of a comparison with conventional receivers is obvious.

bound depots across the West and Midwest vary so much that each stop can provide a new experience for the travel-minded passenger. Some restrooms are too unpleasant to describe, others are large and clean with shower stalls (50 cents) and dressing rooms (25 cents).

Some bathrooms have vending machines which sell funny things. In permissive Oregon, men's restrooms feature condom machines. In the men's and women's johns in Nevada, one can buy a "special surprise" for a quarter from a metal box plastered with a lewd advertisement of a buxom lady wearing a see-through negligee. Is the surprise a two-bit negligee — plastic, perhaps? Something for ladies who wear negligees? Or is it a coy disguise for the Oregon business? I never found anyone who knew.

Taking a walk outside a bus terminal can be an adventure, too. It has frequently been observed that bus stations tend to be located in the grittiest sections of town. Sociologists may debate which came first in an area: the depot or the winos. In any case, the Lansing depot sports a sign near a ticket window warning passengers of "panhandlers and /or other undesirables."

In some large cities, like Chicago and Detroit, women and children sit in a guarded, roped-off area. You can step outside the Sacramento, Calif. terminal and see a switchblade or fistfight erupting from one of the dilapidated bars on a side street. There are notable exceptions, however, like the Portland, Ore. station set in the heart of a clean, safe and attractive city. (Portland was recently rated the best city in the nation by the Environmental Protection Agency. Sacramento placed second among its criteria though, so the EPA obviously did not include bus depots among its criteria.)

Single women with a yen to see the country should not be discouraged, however. Depots are safe enough inside, most passengers are friendly and helpful and traveling alone can spur feelings of self-reliance and self-confidence.

Hikers, skiers and biking enthusiasts are using Ameripasses to their advantage too. Bicycles, packed compactly in a standard bike box, can be checked and unloaded at stopping points.

Those who are finicky about personal comfort will probably want to pass up Ameripasses. So should parents traveling with small children.

But if you're short of cash, and long on time and patience, an Ameripass cross-country tour may be your cup of tea.

An adventurous spirit and dislike of restricting schedules may be important qualities in a successful Ameripass traveler too.

In a strange way, Art, the Salt Lake City mechanic, exemplified that spirit as he lurched down the aisle protesting his brother-in-law's imposition on his freedom: "I'll be independent. Piss on 'em."

Food is often overpriced and generally awful at the greasy spoons next to most small terminals. In a city like Portland, Post Houses, usually located in larger cities, is at least consistent — consistently bland. Tastelessness, however, can be a blessing. If you've ever had a grilled cheese sandwich and chili at Tom and Em's Cafe in Moses Lake, Washington, you rest stop. Every four or five hours, buses stop at a terminal (usually a Post House) for a stretch of small towns. Passengers stretch their legs, eat a snack or a meal if there is time and use the restroom. (Buses have restrooms inside, but the noise and cramped conditions along with the bus's lurching

...City by Monday... to bury my brother-in-law." The entire bus turned quiet.
Then, resignedly: "I guess it doesn't make much difference if I do. (Pause) They'll bury the son-of-a-bitch anyway."
Most people break up long trips by stopping at hotels or staying with friends and relatives along the way. Once, to reach California as quickly as possible, I stayed on a bus for more than 56 hours — straight. Like most passengers, I learned to sleep on the bus. Some have trouble, though. Seat backs recline a foot or so from upright but do not come close to the horizontal ideally sought by snoozers. Leg room is as expansive as that in the back seat of a standard automobile and seats are well padded. But no amount of padding will keep you happy when confined to a 2½-foot by 3-foot by 5-foot space over a long trip.

By the first evening, my ankles were swollen to the size of grapefruit. They shrank back to normal only after a night's bed rest at the end of the trip. A few passengers related similar problems with feet and ankles swelling on long trips, but the reaction is not universal. One pair of little old ladies who had been on the bus nearly a week without seeing a bed or changing clothes seemed to thrive on it.

"We sure stink," one of them laughed once. The other replied, "Yeah, but we don't mind."

Worse than obese ankles or cramped muscles on a 3-day ride is the mental agony of waiting... waiting... waiting for it to end. People try reading, knitting, writing letters and conversing with neighbors — but boredom, like death and taxes, catches up eventually.

Hazel Park Race Course is closed for the winter. It won't be open for business again until February 27. When it was open it was the only place in Michigan where you could watch the thoroughbreds run and bet any amount of money on the outcome. And that's no small claim to fame.

Oh, there are still places where you can watch a horse race, if you have a mind. Northville and Windsor are open in the winter. But those are harness tracks, and though some people prefer trotters to runners, this reporter can think of nothing to compare with watching the thoroughbreds pound flat-out through the stretch.

The aficionados call it "The Track." It means a lot of things to a lot of people. It means standing at the outside rail, watching big, beautiful, finely-tuned animals parade onto the track, high-stepping to the fanfare. It means a bowl of spicy track chili and an over-priced hotdog. It means standing in a long line at the partitioned windows, one eye on the tote board and the other on your program, listening for the voice of the track announcer informing the crowd how many minutes remain until post time. Above all, it means a chance to make money in such a way that it hardly seems like work.

But it's work, nevertheless. For the dedicated handicapper, it means hours spent studying the Daily Racing Form, memorizing the names of horses, trainers, and jockies, their respective win-loss records, changes in class, best times, favorite distances and surfaces. It means visiting the track every day, watching the horses run — even when you don't have a bet down — keeping an eye out for that sudden burst of speed, that drop in class, or that indefinable something that means the horse is ready to win its next race, then going back

Frenchmen.

Scenery on this trip ranged from the mind-numbing and endless Nebraska and Wyoming hinterlands (no wonder the early prairie settlers went mad) to Oregon and Washington's breathtaking Cascade mountains.

Sometimes, fellow passengers are more memorable than the scenery. A wild and wide variety of regional and foreign accents emerged from the chatter inside where 70-year-old widows from South Dakota may find themselves seated for a week next to 20-year-old student radicals from the University of California at Berkeley. One very odd couple was thrown together at a midnight stop in Missoula, Montana. A ragged-looking middle-aged man staggered on board and began shouting drunkenly, "Who do I get to sit next to?" Startled passengers tried to hide in their seats, but it was the cowboy preacher from Cedar Rapids, Iowa, who won the honor.

The cowboy preacher was 21 years old, boyish-faced and tall. He wore boots and a ten-gallon hat with his double-breasted Western clothes. He read the Bible exclusively and prayed before every meal.

The drunk, named Art, was a garage mechanic from Salt Lake City. For half an hour until his seatmates drew him into a religious discussion, Art had most of the passengers in stitches. Despite, or because of, his condition, Art had a flair for Mention long-distance transportation and most Americans think of Amtrak, the airlines or a family piled into a station wagon.

In the last three years, however, a little known but growing traveler's "underground" has sprung up, made up largely of students, little old ladies and foreigners.

These bold pioneers and non-conformists scorn the expensive luxury of commercial trains and planes. They brave rotten food, dirty restrooms, and painful sleeping conditions. They mingle with drunks, panhandlers and the poverty-stricken.

But in return for their stoicism they may see more of the United States in a month than most Americans see in a lifetime. Despite the Spartan conditions, they sometimes have fun. And for a fraction of the cost of comparable air or train fare, they can go almost anywhere in North America — on their own schedule.

They are the more than 250,000 travelers who have used a Greyhound Ameripass since the discount fare began in September 1972.

An Ameripass lets the traveler take a Greyhound bus wherever Greyhound buses go — and sometimes where they don't — for up to two months. Ameripass users can stop anywhere the bus stops, take extended stopovers and side trips and revisit their favorite spots," as the Greyhound blurb says.

Greyhound kicked off the program with "one and two month Ameripasses" — now priced at $175 and $250 respectively — to attract passengers during the off (non-holiday, non-summer) season, says Public Relations Director Barbara Gardner.

"But it was so popular we decided to use it year round," she said.

Now that the one and two-month passes are institutions, Greyhound is experimenting with 7-day ($76) and 15-day ($125) Ameripasses.

Before Ameripass, Gardner says, "most (bus) traveling was on short haul trips from one city to another in a day."

"Since we introduced this, bus users are going coast to coast just to see the country," Greyhound realizes the Ameripass appeal is not universal.

"The kind of people who use Ameripasses are the kinds of people who have the time to use them: students during their summer break and older people who have retired. Working people don't really have the time it takes," Gardner said.

Ameripass holders get discounts on lodging, food, tourist attractions and food at Greyhound-run Post House restaurants. Passes are good on more than 100 bus lines where routes are not served by Greyhound. Only Indian Trails has a comparable discount plan, but it is more limited.

The recession may be biting deeply into transportation industry profits as a whole, but Greyhound, the giant of the bus lines, is merely being nipped.

The only bus company that operates in every state, it has a parent corporation that sells products like soap and toothpaste. Ameripass sales have not hurt Greyhound, either.

again and again, waiting for the horse to break out of the card under the right circumstances, at the right distance, with the right jockey. It means making the crucial bet, then waiting long anxious minutes for the race to start, watching the odds change, peering at the horses through field glasses while they work out, watching for a tell-tale sign of improper physical condition. It can be a grueling occupation for the more serious horseplayers, whose concentration is often so great that they walk into walls while studying their forms.

But is all that concentration really worth it? Is horse racing the Sport of Kings and horse playing a proper and respectable way to make a living? Or is "The Track" — as many people believe — merely a lair for ruffians and degenerates and born losers?

Mostly those questions are too much involved with personal prejudices to lend themselves to easy answers. But we should take a crack at the economic question. After all, you can only watch a bunch of horses gallop around the same track a few hundred times before the excitement begins to wear thin — and your attention turns to the parimutuel windows. Many people, in fact, spend an entire day at the track and never see a horse except on closed-circuit television.

Is it really possible to make money at the track?

According to most authorities, about five percent of all handicappers consistently make money betting the ponies. That figure doesn't include the people who run the track — who take their cut of the top and the ends regardless of which horse wins — and the State of Michigan, which has taken in almost a hundred million bucks in taxes from Hazel Park since it opened in 1949. But, unlike blackjack or roulette, the horseplayer isn't really betting against the house in a mostly mechanical game in which the odds are against the individual; the horseplayer is instead matching wits with a thousand other horseplayers, each with his own system and his own sources of information. And his is a game in which a fairly large number of factors are predictable.

For example, it is true that there is no such thing as a horse that can't lose, not with alacrity requirements and claiming prices and weights. But there are a lot of horses that come awfully close to that ideal of perfection. Royal Flash, the Hazel Park Stakes was a show in, as was Father Leonard in just about any four furlong race. And a hell of a lot of people bet against those horses.

The trick is to save your money for a rare like that — the put it all on the nose. That's the only really workable system.

Of course there are lots of other systems. There are long shot systems and systems for betting favorites. There are systems based on comparative speed ratings, drops in class, loss of weight, changes in breeding, place and show pools. You can buy complicated slide rules that will tell you with mathematical precision which horse has the crucial 1/5 second edge over all the others. There are systems based on numerology, astrology, and voodoo. And there are systems for beating the gimmicks.

Ah, the gimmicks! The daily doubles, perfectas, trifectas, and superfectas, where a two or three dollar bet can bring a return of hundreds or even thousands. A correct bet in the Superfecta race — in which one attempts to name the four top horses in order of finish — can often bring the lucky bettor a payoff in live figures. A year's wages won in seconds! Think of it.

But the Superfectas are usually won by lucky grandmothers who bet their apartment numbers, or by people who somehow make good on that single, daring, breath-taking leap of faith, people who either don't know or don't care that the odds against any random four-horse Superfecta combination in a nine-horse field are over 3,000-1.

The Daily Double pays less, but it's easier to beat. There are complicated systems for betting the Double and covering your bet in case you lose, but they never seem to work quite right. Your First Race pick wins, but your Second Race pick throws his rider and your covering bets get boxed in or drift out in the turn or just can't get up to catch the winner, who comes out of nowhere at forty-to-one and gives somebody else a huge Daily Double payoff, somebody who didn't know enough to ignore the biggest longshots.

Better to stay with the smart money, in the final analysis. And the smart money usually bets only to win. Up in the Clubhouse at Hazel, where the royalty of horseplayers look out over the track from tables where they eat steak and drink champagne, there are people betting a hundred on the nose without a shudder, people whose casual bets do more to change the odds than the carefully considered two dollar wagers of a hundred peons in the grandstands.

And the grandstanders — the snoopers, the cowboys, the college students, the pimps, the middle-aged businessmen, the little old ladies who stop you at the payoff windows and ask for quarters — just keep on losing, but they keep on coming back. Maybe it's the drama that gets them; or maybe they win just often enough to make them think it's all worthwhile.

And maybe it is. Hazel Park starts its Spring Meet on February 27. If you'll take this reporter's advice, you'll keep an eye out for a three-year-old named Nowata Pride. And the first time it shows up in a four furlong race...

There was a time when America's number one spectator sport was not baseball or football or tennis.

It was harness racing. That's right, folks, and if you haven't seen a harness race, you probably don't understand that at all. But the excitement of the trotters is not to be denied.

The harness horses are running at Northville at this very moment. You owe it to yourself to make the trip. Even if you've seen a thoroughbred race or two, you can't ignore the trotters.

An evening at Northville Downs is slightly different from a day at Hazel Park. The track at Northville is enclosed, for one thing, providing shelter from the weather. The crowd is younger, and the pools are smaller, but there's still enough action if you know how to manage your money.

It helps to know the peculiarities of the sport.

For one thing, harness drivers are more important than jockeys. The top drivers at Northville - McClellan, Sullivan, Konesky, Crawford - win far more than their share of races, and win with mugs that might not even finish the race with poorer drivers.

Post position is extremely important. Don't even bother to bet a horse in the last couple of positions unless it is an exceptional animal with a top driver running against an undistinguished field. It is an even greater factor at Detroit Race Course (DRC), where - unlike Northville - the fields are often larger than eight horses.

A huge percentage of favorites win at Northville, so it's no place for longshot freuds. During the first ten days at Northville this season, favorites won 47 per cent of the races (compared with around 30 per cent at most thoroughbred tracks). Whether this is because the horses are more predictable than most or because the crowds are smarter is a mystery that remains to be solved.

But it's still "The Track." Whether harness or thoroughbred, mile or half mile, open or enclosed, it means the same thing to the people in the know. And you gotta go to know.
