NCAA linked with credit card conspiracy

By EDWARD L. RONDERS
State News Sports Writer

The State News

This is the second of a series dealing with investigative procedures and practices of the NCAA.

The NCAA had charged that Doyle had given his card to asst. football coach Howard Weyers, who in turn had given it to Investigator David Berst was able to obtain information about several hundred purchases attributed to a Master Charge Card belonging to Spartan booster T. Michael Doyle of East Lansing.

Berst also violated the credit policy of one East Lansing clothing store and failed in another attempt to gather information on Doyle's credit record with a second credit card firm.

Spartan players Joe Hunt and Mike Cobb. Hunt and Cobb subsequently made several purchases with the plate but insisted they had stolen it from Coach Weyers' car.

A high-ranking source with another national credit firm revealed to the State News that Berst had obtained this information concerning Doyle's account from the security manager of the Charge Card Association (CCA) in Detroit. The association oversees Master Charge accounts with several banks in a three-state area.

The source, who asked to remain unidentified, revealed that "Berst came to my company seeking information about Mr. Doyle. I told him 'No way!' But, part of his argument was that he had obtained the same thing about Doyle's account with Master Charge from Jim Gardner, their security manager," he revealed.

Doyle agreed with the source's findings, saying "That same person informed me that Berst had information about several hundred purchases involving thousands of dollars attributed to my Master Charge and that he did receive them from Jim Gardner. I know the source, and he's telling the truth."

Doyle, a Lansing attorney, continued, "The record Berst had was a very thorough one. They weren't just the ones (of purchases) made by the MSU football players the NCAA was investigating. The majority of them were purchases made by me or members of my family."

"I've thoroughly and comprehensively checked with our organization and I can assure you that Berst did not obtain his information from Charge Card Association," said Leo Cooney, the president of CCA.

"It's not the policy of the Charge Card Association to release any information about a customer's account to anyone," he emphasized.

"Jim Gardner, our security manager, did receive a visit from Berst and he recalled that Mr. Berst had two receipts from Mr. Doyle's card with him. However, when Berst asked for specific information about the account we referred him to the Bank of Lansing which issued the card to Mr. Doyle," Cooney explained.

A spokesman for Bank of Lansing corroborated Cooney's statement, "Yes, Mr. Berst was referred to us and he did inquire about Mr. Doyle's account. It's not our policy to reveal any information of this nature and I can assure you unequivocally that he gained no such data from the Bank of Lansing," the spokesman commented. However, the bank official added that Berst did indeed have in his possession two receipts for items charged at Marty's men's store.

Bill Busch, manager of Marty's East Lansing store, refused to answer State News queries about how Berst obtained the receipts of charges to Doyle's account.

However, Martin Busch, president of the clothing firm and Bill's father related Thursday that "It's definitely against our policy to give out any information of any kind about our customers."

President Wharton told the State News that he could not comment on Bill Busch's testimony to the University's investigative task force.

Contacted at the NCAA's headquarters in Shawnee Mission, Kan. on Wednesday, Berst refused statement on the matter. "I can't comment on any specific investigation. It's the organization's policy not to do this."

NCAA President and MSU faculty member John Fuzak had this opinion of the gathering of private credit data: "At times people's privacy has to be violated. But, I feel the responsibility is with the credit card companies in this case."

Doyle is of a different opinion, blasting the NCAA tactics. "In light of the facts this is a conspiracy on part of the NCAA in influencing a high-ranking official, Jim Gardner, of Master Charge to give out information."

Wharton to MSU: keep hopes up

By CAROL KLOSE
STATE NEWS STAFF WRITER

President Wharton expressed pride and in MSU Thursday in his sixth annual of the University Address that was by a low-key but optimistic tone.

"We cannot allow ourselves to be by negativism in this current time," Wharton said in his 30-minute to an Anthony Hall auditorium of predominantly administrators and faculty members.

Wharton called his tenure at MSU "CHALLENGING" AS HE RECOUNTED PROBLEMS AND CONTROVERSIES University has faced recently.

Wharton said that the NCAA investigation over athletic problems had taken up a proportion of concern than they had at an educational institution, Wharton reminded the audience of about 450 the scandal affected public opinion of Despite how students and professors feel, the fact of the matter is that the nation's image of integrity suffers from the serious problems within the college program," he said.

Wharton added that the University's own investigation into the football program is ongoing and would continue until the time was "beyond challenge."

Wharton also touched on the recent five accreditation report on the College Engineering, saying that the report has the college's reputation.

Wharton stressed the academic integrity of the college is solid, and it is in no danger of losing accreditation," he said.

There is no doubt, however, that some areas can and should be strengthened," Wharton said he anticipates a "most difficult" year financially, calling the budget recommendation "unfathomable."

The budget recommendation will place a heavy economic burden on students and faculty, he noted, but added that the University will continue to press the issue for more money.

Wharton said the primary concern was with the problems, he said, but with the spirit and spirit at MSU.

Wharton said he dwells on this as our winter of "anational death wish," he said and "who seems ready to believe and propagate the worst at MSU," Wharton said to answer his rhetorical questions a list of MSU's past and current accomplishments.

Wharton pointed out past achievements, Wharton said MSU has set in the fields of cultural programs, educational broadcasting, continuing education and technical assistance abroad, in one of the moments of his speech tinged with firm basis.

All is not lost, cried President Wharton Thursday night from the wilderness. Wharton, in his annual State of the University message, told a small but attentive crowd at Anthony Hall that MSU is still a great place to learn your ABCs.

"Passing headlines about the NCAA, engineering accreditation, remedial courses and other exigencies of the moment cannot obscure the tremendous assets and accomplishments of our University," he stressed.

MSU has produced more Rhodes Scholars than any other public university in the past five years, has enrolled more National Merit Scholars than any other university in the last decade, and is the only university in the nation with three distinct medical colleges, he said, as he itemized MSU's most eminent accomplishments.

"Do these examples of genuine accomplishment suggest that we are a decaying, moribund institution," Wharton asked with a hint of sarcasm.

Wharton looked to MSU's future as one in which the University will make major strides in helping to solve the world's problems. In order for MSU to succeed, however, the entire University community must work together, he said.

By the year 2000, he predicted, MSU will have helped to solve the gap between food and population, contributed to energy research and tamed pollution, as well as helped to meet the social problems of racism and violence.

"MSU alone cannot provide the answers, but we will surely play our part, hopefully a leading part," he said.

FORD CALLS VOTE 'COMMENDABLE' Work bill fails in Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford's veto of a $6.1 billion public works jobs bill was upheld Thursday when the Senate failed to muster the two-thirds margin needed to override.

The vote in the Senate was 63 to 35 to override, three short of the necessary margin.

The Senate voted less than three hours after the House overrode the veto by a 319-98 margin, 41 votes more than the necessary two-thirds.

The failure of the Senate to override was a victory for the President, whose lobbyists had been pessimistic about chances of sustaining a veto.

Ford picked up nine Republican votes while losing two Democrats, compared to the vote when the bill originally passed the Senate last July 29.

The margin then was 65 to 28.

The bill was intended to create a great number of jobs at a time of high unemployment.

But the unemployment rate has dropped since the bill's original passage, and the White House has argued that public works jobs take far too long to become a reality. These were thought to be factors in the vote to sustain the veto.

White House lobbyists never held out much hope of success in the House, which had passed the bill by a 4-1 margin.

They concentrated their efforts on the Senate.

After the vote, Ford issued a statement calling the Senate's vote "commendable."

"Those members of the Congress who stood firm against enormous political pressures in favor of this bill deserve the appreciation and gratitude of all Americans," he said.

In Miami Beach, Fla., an AFL-CIO spokesman said: "The White House may consider it a victory but we consider it a tragic loss for the people and intend to report the results of this vote to the members of the AFL-CIO for their guidance in the November elections."

The spokesman called it "a tragic loss for the unemployed workers," their communities and the economy.

The Democratic congressional leadership contended the measure would create up to 800,000 public works jobs.

In his veto message last Friday, Ford disputed that claim.

"The truth is that this bill would do little to create jobs for the unemployed," the President said.

"Moreover, this bill has so many deficiencies and undesirable provisions that it would do more harm than good," he added. "While it is represented as the solution to our unemployment problems, in fact, it is little more than an election year pork barrel."

Ford also contended that it would cost $25,000 for every job created by the bill.

Alternative measures were filed by Republicans in the House and Senate. The sponsors contended they would create more jobs faster and at a lower cost.

D-Detroit. They were distributed by hand to 12 media concerns Monday. Inside the envelopes were notices, written on UFW stationery, of a UFW press conference that took place Wednesday.

Elliott denied that she or her staff ever gave the UFW the envelopes and said that she suspects they were stolen by somebody from their boxes outside her office.

UFW Lansing coordinator Dan Benavides said that he used the envelopes because they were in his office. He denied ever using the mailing privileges stamped on the envelopes and pointed out that he had delivered these particular letters to the media.

"I've been the coordinator here since the middle of November and I don't know where they came from," Benavides said. He also added that the UFW has outdated envelopes from other groups such as Michigan Labor for McGovern/Shriver, churches and labor organizations.

"I resent the fact that he (Benavides) can secure my envelopes without my knowledge," Elliott said.

Elliott, who is the chairman of the House Labor committee, added that because of shortage of office space, she and other representatives have been forced to keep boxes of their envelopes in the hall. She also said that anyone could conceivably take them.

Roger Tilles, executive secretary to House Speaker Bobby Crim, D-Davison, said that Crim's office sets the rule on mail usage for the Democrats. He said that a representative giving envelopes out "unless it happens to be part of their legislative business" is acting against the rules and could be punished at Crim's discretion. He also added that any theft of envelopes could be treated in court as theft of state property.

Benavides said that he "regrets" using the envelopes, even if he did not send them through the mails. He said that he thinks perhaps another of those organizations which donate stationery to the UFW may have handed them over to the UFW instead of Elliott.

The Speaker-Hines and Thomas, Inc. printing company was contracted by the state to print Elliott's envelopes, along with other stationery for the government. The company salesman responsible for the state sales, Douglas Bartrem, said that he does not think any of Elliott's envelopes could have been lost, stolen or given away by the company.

Taggling fills SWU, 'U' decision endeavors

By IRA ELLIOTT
State News Staff Writer

The story of the Student Workers Union (SWU) — often smoldering with conflict, as complex — continues its already long plot as SWU and the University toward establishing an election date.

Monday conference between both the Michigan Employment Relations Commission (MERC) ended with compromise reached concerning the place and method for the upcoming election.

SWU and the University maintain the fairest election would be one in which the most students participate, but have conflicting views as to how this can best be reached.

In order to become the official bargaining agent of some 7,000 student employees, SWU needs only a simple majority of votes from those student workers who vote.

Therefore, SWU is undoubtedly working for that election format which believes will result in a pro-union election.

Although the University's official position is one of objectivity, it would seem reasonable to assume that it is opposed to SWU's original petition asking C to authorize a student election was challenged by the University. Moreover, if the union were voted in, MSU would then be legally bound to bargain with SWU on an equal footing.

Thus pursuing their own interests each has asked for a different election procedure. Do both believe that their method would actually guarantee the largest possible turnout, as they say? Or do one or both believe that their election proposal would result in a small turnout? Each obviously believes that its proposal would best advance its cause.

A random survey of student employees — both on and off campus — conducted

Analysis

Thursday by the State News indicated that the overwhelming majority of students would be more inclined to vote in an election held at and during spring registration. Those polled said that an election during registration would simply be more convenient than at any other time.

Still no clear-cut, definitive answer can be offered to the question of who would actually benefit most from a large turnout. But staunch SWU supporters and strong SWU detractors will surely vote regardless of the election time and place. So that election which draws the largest turnout will bring with it many students unconcerned with the entire SWU debate. These employees would most likely be unsympathetic to the possible benefits of a union or would not care about a union either way.

Such persons would logically cast an anti-union vote. So the larger the turnout the better the chances are for an anti-union decision. And since SWU merely needs a simple majority of pro-union votes from those who vote, it wants only those students who are deeply interested in a union. It may be, then, that SWU is attempting to pare down the number of voters.

The University first proposed that the election take place during early and regular registration with voting booths set up in Demonstration Hall. The rationale behind such a procedure is that since all students must pass through registration, all student employees will have an opportunity to vote. However, SWU objected, saying that the often agonizing process of registration would not allow for serious voting, that two other elections will be held then (ASMSU and Student Council) and that registration time is a "controlled" atmosphere with no free exchange of ideas since the State News does not publish during registration week.

Instead, SWU asked that the election be held early in spring term over a two-week period, with six voting locations distributed geographically across campus. In a counter-proposal, the University suggested that Demonstration Hall be the place of voting during early registration while five election sites be established around campus for either the first days of classes (which would include two days of regular registration) or the first full week of classes.

SWU rejected this proposal, too, saying that it was nothing more than a restatement of MSU's original suggestion.

What appears to be illuminated under the light of past election statistics is the fact that elections held at registration draw the most student participation. Both SWU and the University probably know this.

weather

Today's forecast calls for mostly cloudy skies with the high reaching the upper 30s. Tonight's skies again will be cloudy with a 30 per cent chance of measurable precipitation. The temperature should dip down into the low to middle 20s. The rest of the weekend foresees periods of mixed snow and rain with highs reaching the mid-30s and lows in the mid-20s. Winter seeks to prove that it is not over yet despite the nice weather last weekend.

Dept. drops Helms charge

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Justice Dept. has decided not to bring charges against former CIA Director Richard Helms and other intelligence officials for their alleged roles in approving a 1971 domestic break-in, Atty. Gen. Edward H. Levi announced Thursday.

The department concluded that the evidence did not meet the standards set by a 1945 Supreme Court decision to establish a criminal violation of the civil rights statutes. Helms was believed to have considered he had a right to approve the break-in as part of his authority to protect CIA secrets, though the CIA is forbidden by law to conduct domestic surveillance.

EPA sets mercury ban

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Environmental Protection Agency, citing the potential health hazards of mercury, has banned its use in most pesticides and in paints, a spokesman said Wednesday.

Wednesday's EPA order also bans use of mercury for treating turf to combat fungus, an application that is widespread on golf greens.

The EPA said no more of the mercury compound may be produced for the banned uses, but that remaining on shelves may be sold.

The EPA's "preventive measure" was sparked by a case in Alamogordo, N.M., where members of a family became blind and suffered damage to the nervous system after eating meat from pigs which had eaten seed contaminated by a mercury-treated pesticide.

The EPA spokesman also cited deaths in Japan and Iraq of people who ate food contaminated by mercury.

Internment formally nullified

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Ford Thursday signed a proclamation that he said should have been enacted years ago, nullifying the World War II order under which 112,000 Japanese-Americans were interned.

The internment order was signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt 34 years ago Thursday and was never really lifted.

On Dec. 31, 1946, President Harry S. Truman declared the end of World War II hostilities, which effectively nullified the order. But some Japanese-Americans were concerned that the internment order technically remains in effect.

Pardon investigation defeated

WASHINGTON (AP) — A proposal to further investigate President Ford's pardon of Richard M. Nixon was defeated 4-3 Thursday by a House Judiciary subcommittee.

The motion, offered by Rep. Elizabeth Holtzman, D-N.Y., would have permitted the panel's staff to interview White House counsel Philip W. Buchen and former White House chief-of-staff Alexander Haig.

Rep. Holtzman said recent articles by The Washington Post raised questions whether Ford's testimony to the subcommittee on Oct. 17, 1974, was completely candid.

Rep. Holtzman said the newspaper information was not given to the subcommittee when Ford appeared before it to recount the events surrounding the pardon.

Birth pill for men on its way

LONDON (AP) — A birth control pill for men is almost certainly on the way but may not be ready for general use for some years, an Australian doctor on Thursday told the Royal Society, Britain's top scientific organization.

Dr. David de Kretser, of Prince Henry's Hospital in Melbourne, said medical groups in West Germany, the United States, Austria and Brazil were all investigating the possibilities of a pill which would combine progesterone, a component of the female pill, and androgen, the male sex hormone. The combination would stop male fertility without interfering with sex drive, Dr. de Kretser said.

Already trials made for short periods on men of ages 15 and 50 have shown fertility returned about three months after the subjects stopped taking the pill, he said.

Early trials have indicated no side effects, he said.

Peron won't seek re-election

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Argentina's embattled president, Isabel Peron, said Wednesday night she won't seek a new term but will finish her current one.

Her announcement on national television came after weeks of pressure from national leaders for her to resign or take an extended leave — making way for a more dynamic leader to wrestle with the economic disorder and violence gripping Argentina.

Peron, 45, said elections would be held before the end of this year. Her term does not expire until May 25, 1977, and there was no immediate explanation of how the interim would be handled.

"I'm not interested in re-election and for that reason will not accept nomination," Peron said in the television statement.

In another development, Peron further restricted constitutional rights of political prisoners in an effort to intensify the fight against leftist guerrillas.

'Cod War' severs relations

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (UPI) — Iceland broke off diplomatic relations Thursday with Britain in their "cod war" over fishing rights off the Icelandic coast. It was the first such break between two NATO members and threatened to touch off a crisis in the North Atlantic Alliance.

The break climaxed a series of skirmishes between British vessels and Icelandic gunboats trying to prevent British ships from fishing within Iceland's self-proclaimed 200-mile limit.

Sources said the decision would not necessarily mean an immediate break in relations, but instead could give Britain an opportunity to withdraw their warships from Icelandic waters.

House approves probe order

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House voted Thursday to order its Ethics Committee to investigate the leak of its secret Intelligence committee report and to determine whether to take action against CBS correspondent Daniel Schorr for his role in its publication.

The chamber approved 269-115 a resolution ordering the probe and saying it appears the "alleged actions of the said Daniel Schorr may be in contempt of or a breach of the privileges of this house." The resolution suggests no specific action against the correspondent.

But Rep. Samuel S. Stratton, D-N.Y., who introduced the resolution, suggested Schorr's press card could be voided or that he could be cited for contempt of Congress. The resolution leaves any recommendation up to members of the Ethics Committee.

Democratic Leader Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. opposed the investigation, saying the media should be allowed to handle their own affairs. Other members expressed opposition as well, including Rep. Bob Eckhardt, D-Tex., who declared: "I'm willing to join in an inquiry, but I'm not willing to join in an inquisition."

Schorr has acknowledged he is responsible for publication of the Intelligence committee report in two parts over the last two weeks by a New York weekly newspaper, the Village Voice. The report is still classified as secret.

Much of what was in the report already had been reported by Schorr and others.

"I decided," Schorr said in a public statement, "that with much of the contents already known I could not be the one responsible for suppressing the report."

The House resolution cites that statement by Schorr in ordering the investigation of circumstances surrounding its publication.

Stratton said the resolution focuses on Schorr because "we know he was involved" — the congressman added that it was possible the investigation also would involve who applied Schorr with the report. It might take a long time to determine who that was, Stratton said, adding that the investigation should go ahead with the fact in contempt of Congress and whether he should be punished.

Schorr has said he obtained a copy of the report on assumption it would be made public. But when the House voted 246-124 to keep it secret, he said, he realized he had become the only person who had government to have a copy. He said he felt obliged to have it published.

Schorr said publication of the report by the Village Voice was arranged through an intermediary and that he does not know whether the newspaper is paying any money for the report.

If any money is to be paid, Schorr said, he understands that a "gentleman's agreement" has been made to turn over a reporters' legal defense organization here.

Officials of the organization, the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press, said they do not know what they will get any money.

MPLA orders troops removal

By ASSOCIATED PRESS
The Soviet-backed Popular Movement MPLA demanded Thursday the "immediate and total withdrawal" of South African troops from Angola to prevent further bloodshed.

Japan said, meanwhile, it is ready to recognize the MPLA as the legal Angolan government.

The MPLA, in a Radio Luanda broadcast monitored in Johannesburg, also said that it agrees not to attack neighboring countries and has called for guarantees that there will be no attacks on Angola.

The MPLA statement appeared to outline official policy and possibly the basis of an accord with South Africa, Zaire and Zambia, which have all supported Western-backed factions in Angola against the MPLA.

The MPLA broadcast also warned unnamed countries against promoting subversive activities against the MPLA.

and said such actions would undermine the MPLA's respect for international agreements.

South Africa has said in the past it would be willing to sign a nonaggression treaty with any black African state.

The MPLA's promise not to attack neighboring countries also would ease tensions with Zaire. This country fears rebellious Katangese troops from eastern Zaire now fighting with the MPLA might seek to return home and subvert the copper-rich Shaba area, with MPLA backing.

A similar agreement was reached between South Africa and the Marxist leadership of newly independent Mozambique over the giant Cabora Bassa dam project.

The MPLA broadcast also clearly was an appeal for a halt in aid to Western-backed factions still fighting a rear-guard guerrilla war action in parts of northern and east central Angola.

In related developments: David Ennals, Britain's minister of state for foreign affairs, assailed both the South Africans and Cubans for sending thousands of regular troops into Angola to fight for rival factions in the civil war. There are estimated 12,000 Cubans with the MPLA. Ennals, in an address in London, said the interventionists have created perils for the rest of southern Africa which could "develop into a terrible war, the repercussions of which are unfathomable."

The Soviet news agency Tass quoted the newspaper Journal di Angola in Luanda as saying the territory controlled by the MPLA is "expanding with every day" and that "everyone of us is called upon to become an active participant in the battle to rehabilitate the economy."

Tass also stepped up charges that the Chinese are actively aiding the rival National Front FNLA in Angola.

Surrender of Namibia urged

LONDON (AP) — Britain urged South Africa on Thursday to surrender the disputed land of Namibia, or South West Africa, within a year or face another Angola-type conflict. A Namibian guerrilla leader raised the same prospect, saying his people "reserve the right" to call for Cuban intervention.

David Ennals, minister of state for foreign affairs, enunciating British government policy, also pressed Rhodesia's white minority rulers to seize "their last chance" of averting a racial "bloodbath" that could draw Cuban and other Communist forces into the struggle.

Ennals, in a policy speech to the Royal Commonwealth and African Societies, said South Africa's occupation of Namibia, a former German protectorate, "is unlawful and she should withdraw within a year to permit the election of a government under UN supervision."

Ennals said the Soviet press has served notice that the Cuban-Soviet role in Angola is only a stepping-stone toward the development of "liberation struggles" for the black majorities in Namibia, Rhodesia and South Africa itself.

Ennals also said "it would be madness" for any British government to commit troops to protect the whites of Africa against the black majority. But he left open the door for a limited British "policing operation" in Rhodesia, provided it swiftly ends its decade-long breakaway from Britain and in the event of Cuban or Soviet intervention.

Almost immediately after Ennals spoke, the visiting secretary of the South-West African People's Organization (SWAPO) told reporters the Namibian people "reserve the right to invite Cuban troops" to help free themselves from South Africa's hold on the mineral-rich land.

Grand River beautification gets no action

By BRAD MARTISUS
State News Staff Writer

Members of East Lansing's Planning Commission are tired of looking at Grand River Avenue.

They may have to look for several years, because the city council took no action Tuesday night on the commission's recommendation to proceed with the beautification of the heavily traveled road.

The commission recommended that the city spend money budgeted two years ago to plant trees along Grand River Avenue between the People's Church to Collingwood Avenue.

However, City Manager John Palmer recommended that the council postpone the money.

Several things have to be considered,"

he said. "Not only does the street need beautification, it also needs new street lights and curbs."

He recommended that the council do everything at once so the streets and sidewalks would not have to be torn up too often, which would create extra expense. But the catch came when he reminded the council of the consequences of doing that.

"The expense of putting in a new curb and new conduits (needed for the new streetlights) commits us to the present north boundary of Grand River," he said.

It means that beautifying Grand River Avenue now could interfere with widening it in the future.

But not everybody thinks so.

James Meulendyke, chairman of the planning commission, said citizens have already waited at least four years for the road to be beautified. Plans for beautification were put in limbo in 1971 when the proposed cross-campus highway was canceled. Then it became clear that Grand River Avenue was inadequate to handle the volume of traffic that would be created by the lack of a cross-campus highway.

Since then, officials everywhere have felt the street would have to be widened someday.

"But that widening won't come for at least five or 10 years," Meulendyke said. "And in the meantime, we're stuck with an unpleasant environment on Grand River."

"We can't keep making excuses while waiting for the state Highway Dept. to make up its mind."

City councilman John Polomsky blamed the state Highway Dept. for dragging its feet on the project.

"We need some direction from the Highway Dept.," he said. "We have to know if and when they plan on widening the street. To put in new curbs, we have to know how high the state will require those curbs to be."

And, he says, that information has not been forthcoming.

But City Planner Scott Radway said it is important that pedestrians strolling down the sidewalk have more than cars and concrete to keep them company.

Plans drawn up several years ago would place trees every 25 to 30 feet along the street. They would also call for improved lighting. Radway says that the present lighting makes the downtown area look dead at night and is dangerous for pedestrians and automobiles.

"The present lights are decorative," he said. "But that's about all."

Finally, he said the cost of beautifying Grand River Avenue would not be high when considered over a five or ten year period (the amount of time probably necessary before any work is done to widen the road).

He figured the cost of the tree planting would not be much higher than the $55,000 budgeted two years ago. He said the cost of new street lights would not be high, either, because the city would rent them from the Lansing Board of Water and Light.

"The expense for new curbing is the biggest question mark," he said.

However, a 1973 State Highway Dept.

survey placed the price of new curbing from Harrison Road to Bogue Street at $168,000. That means the price of curbing from the People's Church to Collingwood Road would be considerably less. In addition, the state would pick up part of the tab.

In the meantime, the planning commission is impatient.

"This beautification began life as an interim project," Meulendyke said. "But when you consider that it will be years yet before the Highway Dept. decides whether to widen Grand River Avenue, it becomes a long interim."

"And people should not have to put up with the shortcomings of that street for that long."

Refund policy proposed to boost tuition returns

By CAROLE LEIGH HUTTON
State News Staff Writer

A new tuition refund policy that would ease the amount of money returned to students who drop classes at the beginning of the term has been drafted and will be presented to the MSU Board of Trustees Tuesday afternoon.

Dow, a member of the Legal Services Unit of ASMSU, recently completed the proposal to replace the present University policy of refunding only 50 per cent of the tuition for a class dropped during the first class days.

During the 1974-75 academic year MSU received over $1.5 million in tuition for its subsequently dropped. Less than 10 per cent of that was refunded to the students through the current policy, and the remaining $1,289,56 went into the University's general fund.

Now worked with Steve Terry, vice president of finances for MSU, in collecting data and other figures that are part of the ASMSU President Brian Raymond's presentation to the trustees after this week's formal meeting.

The first part of the proposed policy would require that the University refund 75 per cent of the in-state portion and all of the out-of-state portion during the first five days, and nothing after that period. The second proposal would simply extend the guidelines explained in the first to 10 days instead of five.

The most detailed, and ultimately most costly to the University, is the third proposal. This would require the return of 75 per cent of the in-state portion and all of the out-of-state portion for the first five class days. It also would require 25 per cent of the in-state and all of the out-of-state portions to be refunded during the sixth day of classes until midterms.

Now has also calculated the estimated tuition losses to the University that would result from the institution of each part of the proposed policy.

Based on estimated revenue losses for 1975, the first proposal would necessitate a loss of $92,400 or five cents per credit hour. The second proposal would increase losses to $203,650 or 11 cents per credit hour.

The third proposal, again based on 1975 figures, would cost the University $12 or 15 cents per credit hour.

It is important to note, however, that the estimates are based on the actual number of drop and add activity for the 1973-74 academic year, Dow told the State News.

There is a possibility that a more liberal policy would result in a higher rate of drop and adds during the stipulated period.

If this happened, the costs to the University would be proportionately higher, he said. Costs also would be higher for the present and the future due to the fees that have been instituted since the figures were recorded, he said.

Now maintains that even the third proposal could not in itself cause a tuition hike, though it could be a factor in raising a hike.

He feels that the tuition refund proposal is regarded as a low-priority item by administrators and trustees in the past because of the "budgetary squeeze," and said that it is being met "with apathy toward any change at all."

A major discovery of Dow's investigation is that the U.S. Dept. of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), which controls the Guaranteed Student Loan program MSU participates in, reserves the right to determine whether or not the refund policy is "fair and equitable."

Though Dow has considered contacting the Commissioner of the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, he has decided against it at this time.

"We would like to work through the systems of the board of trustees," he said. "If they don't act we'll write him (the commissioner)."

LCC cable TV produces first original 'soap' serial

By ELLEN SPONSELLER
State News Staff Writer

In the conference room at the Lansing Community College (LCC) Instructional Media Center in Lansing, the lights were bright and the room was crowded. People, mostly high school-aged girls, milled around outside, filling out little cards with their names, phone numbers and acting experience. Only a few looked relaxed. Most were nervous as they waited to audition for parts in "The Glass House," Lansing's first attempt at a regular television series.

Inside the conference room, a video camera was focused on a woman and a young girl. They said their names into a microphone and then went into the audition.

"Honey, what's wrong?" crooned the "mother" in syrupy tones to the prettily sniveling youngster.

"Mmm num dumm num," mumbled the girl, hair in her face.

"Your fish died? Oh, honey, I'm so sorry!"

And so on.

After a few minutes, a long-haired young woman said, "Cut — thank you very much. We'll let you know."

The girl and woman, relieved, left the room to make way for the next auditions.

Auditions were held for over 75 would-be actors and actresses to cast parts for "The Glass House," a "situation drama" dealing with life in a Lansing duplex. The show will be aired on cable television in East Lansing and Lansing. It will be in color and paid for by the Instructional Media department at

LCC.

No air date has been set yet, but taping for a one-hour pilot begins at the Lansing Center for the Arts on March 8. Thereafter, a half-hour show will be shown every two weeks.

Director-Creator J. Alison said she hopes the show will eventually be syndicated state and nationwide. Alison, 22, is a graduate of MSU in Radio and Television, and is now taking film classes at LCC.

Alison and Anne Batchelder, an instructor in the film department at LCC, compose the program committee for the show. Along with volunteers, they compiled the list of characters and wrote the outline of the pilot script.

Basically, "The Glass House" will be serious, showing the conflicts between the main characters. The show is about two older people, Henry and Gladys Glass, who live in a duplex and rent half of it to a young couple who are, as the Glasses find out in the first show, living with each other.

According to the character synopsis, the young people are cynical, honest and anarchistic. Both of them have had some education at MSU and LCC. The young woman works for a small local paper and the young man has a job splicing films.

The Glasses are an older couple who met at a ballroom dancing class at a Fred Astaire dance school. They both have children from previous marriages in which their spouses died. They were married for practical reasons.

BLACKS SEEK PARLEY

'KKK' group nixes meet

By STEVE ORR
State News Staff Writer

The appearance on campus Monday by three students dressed in white robes of the Ku Klux Klan who cried reverse discrimination has sparked controversy and caused the three to reconsider plans for further publicity for fear of violence.

The United Blacks of Wonders had originally requested that the three white students and any sympathizers attend a meeting in the African Room of Wonders Hall, to "try to deal with the situation on a 'positive plane.'"

The three students, who remain anonymous to the State News, originally said they and a group of 30 supporters would attend the meeting. That group, however, altered its plans because of fears that they would come to "physical harm" and that the meeting was set up as a "confrontation."

Black students from Wonders said Thursday night they wished no harm to the white students, however, and said that in fact they had encouraged the three to bring supporters to protect the anonymity of the original protesters.

The black students, though, remained firm in their condemnation of the figures that appeared outside Wonders Hall Monday night clad in the white robes of the KKK.

Keith Stallworth, Wonders' minority aide, said Thursday night that the hooded figures' actions were precipitated by "insecurity on the part of the white middle-class students who feel they are not 'marketable.'"

One of the three told the State News by phone Thursday night that he and his cohorts "don't regret what we did." He said they regretted only that their views had been "misinterpreted" and that they have had "adverse effects."

Those "effects" include a tremendous fear on the whites' part that they will be harmed. "I'm afraid of being blown because of this," the one said Thursday. "Too many people know who we are."

Several of the black students assembled in the Wonders Africa Room Thursday night said that they knew the identity of the three, and that if recriminations were in fact planned, they already would have taken place.

The University interceded in the affair Thursday night, dreading a flaring of tempers.

David Palmer, Residence Halls Programs South Campus area director, told the State News late Thursday that he was putting the three students under "pressure not to continue... in their cloak and dagger manner."

Palmer said he wanted the students to come out in the open and meet with black students and University officials to "talk face-to-face" about the allegations of reverse discrimination and the feelings that have grown from those allegations.

The original charges include alleged discrimination against whites by affirmative action programs, the admittance to professional schools of blacks who are not as qualified as whites some, and the atmosphere of "favoritism" toward minorities on campus.

We just wanted to express a point of view," the white group spokesman said Thursday. "I think this is a way to make society better, and make everybody more equal." He stressed his belief in the protest tactics of nonviolence.

Blacks at Wonders stressed similar confident beliefs also, but advanced opinions that the white groups' ideas about conception of reverse discrimination were wrong.

Sen. Brown's trial date set...finally

Swift justice does not seem to be in vogue... especially when it deals with state Senator Basil Brown, D-Highland Park. The hairy-faced, dapper-dressing legislator was charged with possession of marijuana and hashish Jan. 8, 1975, after police found those substances in his automobile the night before. But an overture of legalistic motions of a highly technical nature have put off the jury trial until April 7. The last motion by Brown was instigated late last month. The trial will take place in Eaton County District Court with Chester Sugierski of the Eaton County Prosecutor's Office arguing for the people. Attorney Stewart Dunning will be giving his pitch for Brown.

Coupon campaign made annual event

"Morton Salt" may once again be your passport to happiness since the East Lansing Jaycees plan to make their "Golden Checkbook" telephone solicitation campaign an annual event.

For the past two fall terms, the Jaycees have hired a private soliciting firm to temporarily locate in East Lansing and call every MSU student to ask "What is the product which uses as its slogan 'when it rains it pours'?"

Those who could answer this brain-teaser, or even those who have suggested some rather bizarre products, had the opportunity to spend $14.95 for a book of coupons good at local stores.

The fund-raising has been lucrative so far, according to Jaycee Gary Glazier, but the format may be changed because the routine has become a little outworn. In the meantime, stand by your telephone.

Cat's nocturnal wailing bothers student

It isn't every day that you would complain about having a private concert by a famous folksinger playing in the next hotel room. But at 3 a.m.?

Jayne Marsh, an MSU senior, recently attended a convention in Chicago where she stayed in the suite adjoining that of Cat Stevens and his crew of musicians. Being in a rowdy mood on the last night of Marsh's Chicago stay, Stevens and his band decided to be their own moonshadows and played a jam session that most fans would pay $12 to hear.

But Marsh and her roommates soon tired of hearing "Heat Wave" over and over, and called the hotel desk in an effort to get the musicians to quiet down. All attempts were futile.

"If it had been anyone else, I'm sure the hotel would have more firmly enforced that the noise be kept down," Marsh said. "I didn't think I could stand one more minute of it."

Grog could be hazardous to your health

The Ingham County Health Dept. is asking anyone who ate at The Grog Shop in East Lansing within the past month to come to the health department for a hepatitis test. Two employees of the restaurant kitchen crew have been found to have hepatitis. The disease is frequently transmitted through food.

Wharton being sought for TV spot

President Wharton has one more person after him.

Sen. Earl Nelson, D-Lansing, wants to get in touch with the MSU president to invite him under the hot lights of WJIM Channel 6 television studio. Nelson, along with Sen. Richard Allen, R-Alma, hosts an area program entitled "Capital Connections" which is aired every other Sunday night from 6 to 6:30 p.m. Dick McKeon, Nelson's aide, said that Nelson wants to ask Wharton about the effect of Milliken's skimpy budget on MSU, prospects for the law school and the education scene in general. Nelson hopefully wants to keep the NCAA brouhaha out of the mainstream of conversation.

ITU refuses to represent State News

The International Typographical Union (ITU) has decided that it will not represent the State News editor and photographer departments in its bid for unionization.

Although 75 per cent of the State News writers and photographers are employed by the State News, the ITU would not be expanding its membership to include the State News, and that the State News would not be an asset to ITU.

All student employees of the State News will now be included in the Student Workers' Union bargaining on campus, according to a representative of the Michigan Employment Relations Commission.

Fear for State News autonomy

There have been smatterings of information lately in the State News and various other media regarding our struggles to obtain the means to produce a quality newspaper for the MSU community.

Recent events, however, have made it necessary to inform our readership directly about the controversy.

At issue may be the autonomy of the State News newsroom itself. You may rest assured that today's paper is uncensored. How far in the future we could forecast an uncensored paper, however, is a large question.

Policy for the State News, Inc., is set by a board of directors, composed of two faculty, four students and two professional journalists. When a new board member is needed, it is the old members who pick the new; thus our board is a self-perpetuating body.

Early this week, the board revised our corporate bylaws.

We feel that the manner in which revisions were made was reprehensible. Little or no effort was made by the directors to solicit or seriously consider staff input on the revisions. When the revisions were being discussed at this week's meeting, our editor was denied the usual courtesy of addressing the board regarding them.

This quite deliberate denial of staff expression, according to Board President Michael Orr (a student in the College of Education), was due to the trend toward more "formalized" board meetings. The input of staff members may tend to trivialize and lead discussion astray, he inferred.

The entire procedure was, at very best, uncivil.

Thus we respectfully demand that the State News Board of Directors formally adopt the past practice of including the editor and the advertising manager as ex officio members of the board.

The entire revision procedure was prompted in the first place by grievances initiated last spring concerning the role of the general manager. We asked for a definition of his role.

The General Manager has now been given the right to recommend the removal of any employee thus usurping the power which has been in the past implicitly delegated to the Editor. In addition, he is installed as adviser. Under any other circumstances this might seem relatively harmless; but given our present circumstances, we can view this with little less than suspicion.

We therefore request that authority for hiring and firing of editorial personnel be explicitly vested in the Editor.

We are also subject to the caprice of the State News management with regard to our departmental budget. Directors indulge regularly in making assertions about the conditions of the corporation's budget, yet feel under little or no compulsion to prove what they assert.

Thus we insist that the State News management accept the burden of proof and allow State News staff and readers to examine, with financial consultation, the books and records of the State News.

We recognize, however, that the substantial portion of the threats to your student newspaper result not necessarily from the personalities within management, but from the structure of the board.

Thus, as a long-range solution to these continual threats, we propose a restructuring of the board which would end its self-perpetuating nature and make it representative of the university community.

Unless the present board of directors moves swiftly to act on these and related proposals, we can only forecast a grim future for the daily newspaper of MSU.

Why not bicycles?

What can you get for about $5,000?

About enough tuition to put students through MSU for a term; about one third of a professor's annual salary; about enough funds to markedly improve the food service at any of the dormitory cafeterias.

The MSU Board of Trustees has found something more constructive to do with that kingly sum—buy Oldsmobile Cutlass Supreme for its deserving members.

Trustees have the option of requesting cars which are to be used strictly for University business. The contention is that providing board members with cars will be more economical than reimbursing them for transportation costs incurred as a result of University-related travel.

This, in itself, is doubtful. At the conservative price of $4,000 for an automobile, a trustee would have to drive 26,666 miles just to purchase of an MSU car.

Moreover, if the car policy is truly based on frugality, why buy Oldsmobiles rather than less pretentious, but more economical Toyotas? Or bicycles?

and everywhere else I look. This is not limited just to the men. There are many women who aggressively try to engage in conversation with the members of the club. It is a two way street that is unavoidable in any group situation.

The purpose of the M.S.U. Karate is to provide quality instruction. The club meets this function. We turn out good karate people that are respected in the state. Many students are pleased with the club and its so. We, (the instructors) expect a high turnover rate of students. This weeds out the non-karate people from the karate people. By looking at our students the continue training with the club we see the people use this instruction to the best of their ability.

Having received my black belt from another club before I came to this university, I looked for the club that would suit my criteria for a good karate club. The M.S.U. Karate Club because I believe is the best in the area. If I didn't feel this way I wouldn't be here.

Karate sexism

I am writing this letter in reply to Ann Dunn's recent attack of sexism against the M.S.U. Karate Club.

Yes, sexism does exist within the club. This is not uncommon in any group where both sexes interact. This kind of behavior takes place everywhere that there are men and women. I've seen the same thing occurring in my classes, on Grand River Ave.

their identity and because they believed in what they were advocating were somehow killed without any justice being done.

As far as minorities being unqualified through the affirmative action programs, where do you get your statistics? Further, you claim that you are not racist, but there is no other word befitting of your statements and actions.

White racism has made black people separate. We have different cultures, different struggles, your laws do not protect us, and the Declaration of Independence is a very humorous joke. So why do you protest a little windowless room in the basement of a dorm where blacks can relate to each other in our differentness and separate-ness?

So take stock, sit back and relax until you really have been discriminated against because if black discrimination and white discrimination were graphed, black discrimination would show astounding highs, while white discrimination would keep steady at the zero point.

For our lifestyle

I, as a trapper, realize that many of you do not relate to the many things you use everyday as being a result of some form of pain and torture subjected to creatures which inhabit the earth. However, there are great amounts of suffering and torture occurring to which the Fund for Animals seems to be oblivious.

Each year millions of animals in the United States are killed in one way or another, to "satisfy" man's requirements for his present lifestyle. The products derived from animal use are vast, and to the uninformed public I offer the following suggestions: (Think of the pain and torture suffered in relation to the origin of the following items.) Down filled goods, pork, beef and poultry foodstuffs, shearing goods, leather coats, shoes, belts, upholstered products, pet foods, soap, gloves, mittens and more products.

Now that I have projected such a grim situation, I believe it is time for all kind and humane-minded persons to cease and desist from using any products derived from our

KKK protestors

In response to the article concerning the mock KKK protestors, I would like to express to their incognito leader that you do not know what discrimination is if you think it comes in the form of black culture rooms when whites have the entire university, except these rooms in which to relate to whites.

You do not know what discrimination is if you think it comes in the form of "unequal distribution of hall government funds," when the entire dorm councils, throughout campus are made up almost entirely of whites, and this is due to the fact that blacks are the minority in total university enrollment and dorm population. Further the hall governments decide how much from their funds they allot blacks, thereby having us at their mercy for these funds. Affirmative action programs are our way of dealing with white prejudice to insure jobs for blacks so we may live rather than subsist in this white society.

I would like to empathize with your charge of white discrimination, coming from a heritage of people who have suffered discrimination, oppression and depression for three hundred years, but I cannot. Being white you were born with rights due you as a citizen of the United States. But Blacks have had to fight for every right they have obtained, and we are still fighting. The black culture rooms and affirmative action programs are representative of the small gains blacks have made in a white society.

And you have the gall to protest white discrimination, when if it were not for black discrimination you would have nothing to protest, for we would be equal.

Why are you afraid to reveal your identity if what you are protesting you in fact believe in? Our black leaders revealed

Drivers 'punish' students

I have had several chances to see some students who had forgotten to bring their bus passes or tickets and were refused rides on the campus bus. They must walk in the chilly wind even though they might have waited for the bus over 15 minutes already. Sure they would miss their classes.

And worse, the face of the bus driver was much colder than the open air! (Some drivers were considerate and kind enough to let the student take the bus and said, "Don't forget next time.")

I doubt that it is humane to "punish" students who do not have bus passes or tickets in despair in the cold weather.

I suggest the campus buses be equipped with a box like those in CATA buses so that students can drop in coins in lieu of tickets.

Please note that this method will surely attract more passengers for its convenience. As a fact, many students have no idea how to take campus buses and they do not feel it is convenient to try it - at least they must buy tickets beforehand!

SWU membership

On Wednesday we received at my house a Student Workers Union newsletter — a card enabling one to send union dues — in a business reply envelope.

Initially I felt this very amusing, but upon realizing the impact of this move I adopted a dim view. Although the legality of a student vote for the SWU has been established, the election has not as yet taken place.

I fail to see the advantage of jumping ahead of the student vote. In light of the past SWU setbacks, how could this time saved be critical? The SWU organizers should instead be concerned with obtaining an unbiased vote from the student workers regardless of outcome. How can this be done with a pre-election membership drive?

I resent SWU prematurely assuming the election result. I resent the same group treating my vote as a rubber stamp rather than an unbiased appraisal of the warrant of such a union.

However this move is not surprising. It is only in concert with past SWU practices. Therefore, the issue for the upcoming vote is not whether student workers should adopt a union, but should we let that particular group of people run it. In my eyes they're doing bad business, and their mailings should be read but tossed with the rest of the trash.

VIEWPOINT: MEMORIES

Florida vacation is what life's all about

By JOHN R. SPENCER

Recently a letter appeared in the State News addressing students in the promotion of socialist doctrine, ie. state control of capital goods, the triumph of the proletariat, class elimination and above all the elimination of our exploitative capitalist system. Another appeared applauding Chou En Lai, bless his soul, and his wonderful socialist revolution that has brought joy to the hearts and tears to the eyes of the masses. And so the scene repeats itself. May I respond to this.

Pretty soon many of us will be cruising down the highway to Florida in our Chevrolets, buying gas at Clark stations for 55.9. When we get there we'll check into a Holiday Inn, slick on some Coppertone, buy a Playboy, and hit the beach to case each other out.

We'll eat at McDonalds and IHOP's, and we'll sip tall cold Budweisers all night long. Some of us will call our folks on Bell telephones and go to the bar afterward. At the end of the night many of us will not be sleeping where we thought we would, or better yet not sleeping at all.

After several tiring days of this we'll need a change of pace. Maybe we'll drive to Marathon or to Key West and whip out our Garcia fishing rods and our AMC masks for a little pier fishing and snorkeling. For a few bucks we can rent Bobie Cats or even drive north for Disneyworld. But in any event, our tans can only commence to get darker and darker.

But alas, the time comes to leave and we reluctantly depart for MSU. When we finally get back some of us will charge to the bathroom to admire our tans. Some of us will go the mailbox to look for foot massages, bills and other vital stuff. Some of us will flick on the cable TV, and other will check their wallets to find a few of the $100 is still left.

Throughout the course of the next few days we can turn on Walter Cronkite, pick up a State News, or sit in class and quite expectedly observe some pompous, self-proclaimed expert expound on the evils of capitalism. He peers over the podium through thick glasses, takes a drag off his pipe, and quietly announces that socialism is better. Acknowledgably we nod at each other, sneering with bursts of cynicism. And so the scene repeats itself.

But class wears on and ironically we twitch and compare tans. By hour end, confirmed with an envious glance, it occurs to some of us that sneers and rhetoric don't really count; that only good memories and telltale tans remain.

VIEWPOINT: ATHLETICS

The amateur morass let's dump hypocrisy

By MIKE MURRAY

Sunday's Free Press offered the thoughts of George Mikan, late of the Minneapolis Lakers and "Old 99" fame. Mikan, who says he was paid $16 a month to play basketball at DePaul in the 1940's, thinks collegiate athletes should receive monthly checks computed to reflect the cash value of their current scholarships.

Since Mikan has the wit and intelligence to agree with my thoughts on this matter, perhaps I can suggest a rationale for adopting this proposal. Briefly, it appears to me that such an approach would aid administrators, coaches, players, and fans in understanding and analyzing the problems of modern amateur athletics.

The irrationality of the current scene is apparent. Were one to have played so much as one game for the late great Lansing All-Stars football team, one was a professional because perhaps $75 changed hands. Yet many of the All-Stars had been openly and legally paid thousands in tuition, room, board, and books while "amateurs" at MSU, Modern amateurism has room for Gustavo Toerni, the Italian Olympic star, whom ABS Sports identified as the recipient of some $250,000 in annual income from his skiing endeavors. The excesses of the Russian amateur hockey team are well documented.

Far be it from me to ridicule this morass; the purpose here is only to note the total absence of any practical definition of an amateur athlete.

We are told by no lesser authorities on morality than Joe Falls and the NCAA that MSU acted without principle in countenancing the gift of a leather coat to a defensive back. Yet other members of the Spartan secondary have been known to wear coats in the wintertime. The lesson is only too clear. One must not accept a coat, or $500 buy a coat, but one can accept $50 to buy books which amazingly frees $50 of one's own funds to buy the same coat. The economic benefit is the same: each is $50 ahead. By restricting these benefits to certain denominations (books, but not coats; the distinction suggests one is a student but not a professional), the university is saved from a confrontation with the reality that it maintains a stable of salaried athletes.

I'm certainly not questioning the decision to maintain such a staff of athletes. The determination was made long ago by those who owned many more suits than I. All I'm suggesting is that the current scholarship hocus-pocus serves only to obscure the issues.

Along with all the other institutions which support amateur athletics, MSU has some critical decisions to face in the coming years. To solve difficult problems, clear thinking and careful analysis are required. To "call things by their right name" is the crucial first step. Athletes are paid thousands of dollars to compete on the playing fields of this and numerous other universities. Paying them a monthly wage, open and above board, would lay to rest many of the petty concerns of the NCAA and AIAA. Further, it would force universities to locate and reexamine the underlying principles of amateur athletics.

Were the NCAA to allow this approach nothing would change economically. All we stand to lose is a little hypocrisy.

Mike Murray is an East Lansing resident and alumnus of MSU.

A new supersonic Kickback

Lockheed Aircraft has just developed a new supersonic Bribe that can fly two times the speed of sound. The Bribe, which took 10 years to get off the drawing board, is called the Kickback 1100. Lockheed salespeople are claiming it is the most modern, versatile Bribe vehicle of its kind.

One of the people involved in the project told me in strictest confidence the Kickback 1100 can carry a payload of up to $10 million to any corrupt official in the world.

"Northrop Corp. doesn't have anything to compare with it," he said proudly.

"How does it differ from the Bribe vehicles of the past?"

"Speed for one thing," he said. "We can now Bribe an Italian general in three and a half hours, whereas it took us seven hours to get the bag to him in the past."

"Boy, what will you space people think of next?" I said.

"The Kickback also has special navigational equipment which is so accurate it can land $1 million on a Swiss bank vault with less than a 10-foot ceiling."

"You say it, but can you do it?"

"We did the other day. An African high government official asked us for $1 million to okay a contract for several of our air bases. He gave us the name and the number of a Swiss bank account. The Kickback 1100 took off from Nassau and landed in Geneva in a safe at three o'clock the next morning. The African official was so pleased he ordered another Kickback for his brother."

My informant who had too many drinks or he never would have talked so much said, "The old defense Bribes were too noisy. Everyone heard about them. We told our engineers to completely redesign the Bribe so no one would recognize it. We wanted a model that would be smooth, fast, safe and so quiet that nobody in Congress would complain about the sound. It also had no odor. The worst thing about a Bribe is that it eventually smells fishy."

"That must have been a tall order for the research and development people."

"We underestimated the cost of what it would take to develop a new Kickback by $40 million."

"How did you get the money to make up for the overrun?"

"We took several people from the Pentagon to our duck hunting club and explained the problem."

"That was good thinking. It's hard for a guy in a duck blind to say no to someone who has an overrun."

"Anyhow, we now have all the bugs out of the Kickback 1100 and we predict it will be the Bribe of the future. Everyone wants one. We have an order for three from a Japanese war criminal in Tokyo. He wants his painted gold. A South American president has asked for one decorated in German marks, and a member of a European royal family wants his covered with Dutch guilders."

"Some senators have complained about the dangers of the Kickback particularly as it's related to the ozone level. Are you certain the new Lockheed Bribe can stand an environmental study?" I asked.

"I'm certain of it. We tested our Bribes against those of France and England and many other foreign aviation companies. Not only were our Kickbacks larger and more comfortable but we have a five-year guarantee behind them. You don't have to take my word for it. Ask any Arab prince in the Middle East."

WPOINT: FRISBEE TEAM

Let those discs fly

By ERIC SIMON

editor: MSU Ultimate Frisbee team deserves recognition. The team was started September and has already been named as one of the best teams in the state. Yet how many people realize that the Frisbee team was two weeks old when they played its first game and upset number one team in the state (Kalamazoo College) only to lose its only game of the season in a rematch at K. College by one point.

The team, at that point, had only three freshmen (22 per cent female) and had named itself as "the team to beat" in the upcoming spring season, yet has gone down by virtually everyone on campus.

Included in our roster (of less than 18 players) is a member of the world champion team, a World Class Frisbee Master named by the International Frisbee Association, an alumnus from the high school that invented the game, and a starter on the U.S. High School Champion team. We've developed some excellent talent, but being less than 18 players, we could use plenty more. (We're also one of the smallest teams in the state).

The biggest insult came when members of the Mid-American Frisbee Conference decided which college would have the honor of hosting the regional championships. The vote ended in a tie between MSU and Kalamazoo College, but then it was pointed out that MSU received almost no media coverage while not only did campus papers at Kalamazoo cover that team, but so did their local papers.

In the meantime, with no coverage, little support, and an undersized team (from the second largest school in the country), we're still favored to win the regional championships (at Kalamazoo College, April 9-11) and qualify for the national championship, to be held in Amherst, Mass. We practice every Monday night, 10 to 12 p.m. in the Men's IM (the only time available to us), and we'll be testing out our new members next month with two exhibition games against Grand Valley State College.

Eric Simon is captain of the MSU Frisbee Team and president of the Mid-American Frisbee Conference. He has informed the State News that the team plays a match tomorrow.

LETTERS To the Editor

'Misalliance'

"For my part," wrote the critic, Corno di Bassetto, "I have struck too many blows at the well-made play without immediate effect, to suppose that it is my strength and not its own weaknesses that has enabled me to double it up this time."

My concern, however, is for theatergoers who, having read Darryl Grant's review of the Boarshead Players' production of "The Misalliance," might decide not to see it. Though it is not the best of Shaw's plays, it is still worth any two of Simon's.

As to the production, I found the acting skillful, convincing and well-balanced, the timing superb and the rich dialogue delivered with such élan that one believed in the characters even when they chose to sit still and listen to one another's lines.

By the close of the play I would willingly have repaid the admission in order to hear the entire three hours of it once more.

Press freedom

The First Amendment to the United States Constitution states: "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

It seems that while the capitalist class and their Bicentennial spokespersons and politicians render lip-service to the Constitution, professing reverence and admiration for this great document, in reality many of them hold it in contempt, except of course those parts which directly secure their property rights.

In their secret hearts they fear and distrust the Constitution. This was perhaps never more forcefully demonstrated locally than when the "sign ordinance" was introduced some time ago. The "sign ordinance," as applied to newspapers, is nothing but a euphemism for censorship.

The First Amendment to the Constitution expressly and unqualifiedly forbids "abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press."

Supreme Court decisions have repeatedly confirmed the provisions of the First Amendment whenever attempts were made to circumvent them through ambiguously phrased legalistic proposals.

The Weekly People's staff produces a newspaper that is a little different. The Weekly People presents political and socioeconomic material which the "important" news sources would probably not allow you to be exposed to. Let's hope that at least a majority of the city council will decide in favor of the Constitution — both the First and Fourteenth Amendments are being violated now — so that all points of view may be distributed freely to the public during these crucial times.

Perhaps the words of James Madison would be appropriate here:

"I believe there are more instances of the abridgment of the freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachments of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpation."

If you only see one play this year 'Camelot' is definitely not the one

By DARRYL GRANT
State News Reviewer

The Players Gallery production of "Camelot" is a joyless and totally amateurish effort that is so hackneyed that it is embarrassing to watch. The production tries ever so pathetically to maintain a professional and theatrical front. The results of this attempt, however, are sad.

How can the production succeed considering the following:
A) There is no direction. Carol Rosenblum seems merely to have tacked her name on the program and left all attempts at careful and intelligent direction fly to the wind.

B) The acting is quite atrocious. There is a wealth of bad acting, with only two good performances. But more about that later.

C) Wretched sets look false and sickly in their frail attempts to provide the appropriate atmosphere. The audience is exposed to cardboard walls and towers sprayed with the cheapest of metallic blue and silver paint. Tacky banners and shields are hung with the fleurs-de-lis upside down. Trees that are so obviously made of cardboard are embarrassing to see on stage.

One realizes that the Players Gallery does not have the budget for elaborate sets, but why not use a simpler set, rather than trying too hard with gaudy materials.

D) The costumes are garish and ill-made, some of them appearing to be made out of old curtains.

E) Finally, there is uninspired and strange choreography, poorly danced by Leslie Page and a band of awkward nymphets wearing deer antlers!

Luckily, two excellent performances somewhat mollify the absurdity. Stan Gill as Arthur displays a surprising wealth of sensitivity and professionalism.

Mark Kidzus as King Pellinore proves to be a comic delight with his role, showing flair and talent for comedy as well as dramatic nuance.

Susan Checkaway as Guinevere has the requisite golden-haired beauty that the role calls for, but she can't act her way out of a paper bag. Her movements are heavy and strained. Checkaway's performance is a perfect example of method acting. This is a pity because she really has a nice voice.

Timothy Thatcher is nervous and technically ill-equipped for his role as Lancelot. He does, however, have the right air of noble humility for the part. Thatcher's weak warbling of the song "If Ever I Would Leave You" was feeble and flat.

Leslie Page as Morgan Le Fey was trite and unprofessional. Why must Page attempt to dance in every Players Gallery production? Her dancing is technically and aesthetically displeasing and formless.

Paul Kanter as Merlin and Matthew Isbell as Sir Dinadan are totally useless. They don't act. They simply move around on stage and deliver their lines without emotion.

The less said about the other actors and actresses, the better. The orchestra was equally off-key and untalented.

The audience, as usual with these formula productions, just loved every tacky minute. Isn't this what middle-class Americans seem to be trained for? Their narrow education, closed minds and anti-intellectual attitudes are ripe for the theatrical insult that the Player's Gallery production of "Camelot" gleefully produces for them.

"Camelot" continues its run at 8:15 in the Union Ballroom Feb. 19, 20 and 21. Admission is $2.50 for general admission and $1.50 for students.

Oregon, the very talented quartet that plays indescribable music, will appear tonight and tomorrow at 8 and 10:30 p.m. in the Erikson Hall kiva as a part of Showcase Jazz Productions.

The group, which features from left to right, Collin Walcott, Glen Moore, Paul McCandless and Ralph Towner, has recorded four albums for Vanguard records, including their latest, "Oregon In Concert."

The group's music is a peculiar fusion of Western and Eastern music that approaches jazz, with hints of the Euro-classical tradition. The quartet began more or less within the confines of the Paul Winter Consort, and has since become highly regarded both in America and Europe. Both Towner and Walcott have released albums on Manfred Eicher's ECM label, both of which have been highly successful.

Also appearing with Oregon will be Horizon recording artist Dave Liebman and Richard Beirach. Tickets for the show cost $3 for MSU students and are being sold at the MSU Union ticket office. Tickets will also be sold at the door.

'Hamlet' is visually striking but dramatically inconsistent

By DARRYL GRANT
State News Reviewer

The Performing Arts Company production of Shakespeare's "Hamlet" is a visually striking show, but one that is dramatically inconsistent. The production has its successful moments, but they are infrequently seen amidst a maze of problems.

The direction by Jon Baisch is solid and traditional, strong at times but weak at others. The pace of the play is the most notably inconsistent aspect of the play. It begins slowly, then gets faster, then it slows down again, only to get slow towards the end again.

Then there is the problem of the acting. Out of the six main roles only half of them are enjoyable. Joseph Shaw, guest artist from the Stratford Shakespeare Festival, is excellent as Claudius. Forceful, dramatic and smooth, Shaw brings great skill and polish to his role of the evil king.

William Hutson as Hamlet offers the audience a younger, more sensitive Hamlet than has generally been seen before. In Hutson's hands Hamlet is vulnerable and humane. This is an interpretation that is quite refreshing. Yet Hutson's portrayal is not as successful as it should be. The important soliquies are underplayed to the point of obviousness. One can tell something important is about to happen when Hutson begins to lower his voice. This is a problem of technique, but one that is incongruous with the rest of Hutson's performance which is less fussy.

Hutson also colors his performance with too many mannerisms, too much saving of the air, as Hamlet says at the beginning of Act III, Scene II. These flowery gestures are unnecessary and superfluous.

Laertes is given a sharp and clear portrayal by J. Lockwood Beam. His performance is bright and mercurial. He is also noteworthy for his clear diction. Clear diction is important in performing Shakespeare. Unfortunately, Earl J. Fisher as Horatio pays no heed to it, for he mumbles his lines from the moment he steps on stage.

Nan Burling as Queen Gertrude is surprisingly weak, with no obvious efforts to strengthen her portrayal. The bedroom scene where Polonius is killed (Act III, Scene IV) is particularly awful. Where is the strength that Burling has displayed in the past?

Tom Case as Polonius is weak and artificial, bringing a rather unnecessary element of farce, rather than humor into the play. Case also has an unavoidable problem with his Midwestern accent, which sticks out like a sore thumb amidst the splendor of Elsinore.

Jack Wele and David Kropp as Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are effective but not memorable. David C. Palmer is amusing as Osric. He displays a fine comic flair. Stephen Chapelle as Fortinbras is too rushed to be effective.

Katherine Arrington as Ophelia is rather awful. The lovely spirit of Ophelia due to her insensitive portrayal. Martin Schulman, Cooke, Charles Rickett, Jr., Dallas McCricket, Jr., however brief, portray the Players.

An absolutely marvelous all harsh angles and just bars, is provided by the ented Donna Annink. The lighting is also to her credit. There are exquisitely signed and colored costumes. Gretel Geist and costume sound by Richard Thomas.

Leo Kottke scheduled for next Mariah show

Leo Kottke, one of this country's finest guitarists, will appear at 8 and 10:30 p.m., Sunday, Feb. 29, at Erikson Hall kiva in a special Mariah concert production.

Tickets are $4 and are on sale at the MSU Union ticket office.

Kottke's newest album, "Chewing Pine," is his latest in a series of superb releases for Capitol Records. Since signing with the company several years ago, the guitarist has risen in status from a talented but commercially minor artist to one of that label's top sellers.

Kottke tours fairly consistently and in his travels has struck an unlikely alliance with Procol Harum. Kottke appeared with the group on stage more than once and has, in fact, recorded "Power Failure" on his newest album.

With that kinship about his only concession to rock and roll, Kottke is one of the few American performers who has managed to reach the large-scale masses without losing the slightest bit of artistic integrity.

With such an excellent track record, Kottke's performance on campus next Sunday should be one of the more inspiring musical events of the school year.

State of 'U': beset by trials...

Following is an abridged version of President Wharton's address to the University community, entitled "MSU: Yesterday and Tomorrow." It is the sixth time that I have delivered my "State of the University" address to members of the Michigan State University community. Each of these occasions, I attempted to give a candid assessment of where the University stood at the time — its strengths, assets and future challenges.

From a personal point of view, these years have been, to put it mildly, challenging. It is only appropriate that university administrators continue to be educated, along with others in the academic community. Unquestionably, we have all learned a great deal as we grapple with matters that not long before were totally alien to us.

University continues to be personally rewarding. I am proud to be a part of Michigan State University. I am proud of our past and current educational, research and public service accomplishments in Michigan and nationally and internationally. I am proud of the faculty and staff who have helped us meet every challenge and who have contributed so much to the basic strength and integrity of the University. Each of you should be equally proud.

I would be remiss if I did not comment on some of the specific difficulties that have been plaguing the University in recent months.

The athletic investigation has been, of course, a matter commanding considerable time and preoccupation.

Yet, we must deal with both reality and perceptions, even if these are an exaggeration. Of this I am certain: If athletics did not assume a somewhat larger than life eminence in the minds of many, we would not need a 281-page NCAA rulebook defining amateur sports. It is interesting to note that even at the national level President Ford has called for a commission to look at the general subject. And how "amateur" were the just-concluded Olympic Games, for example, a competition supposed to be the epitome of non-professionalism?

In recent weeks, public attention also has been called, in adverse fashion, to an important academic area of the University, focusing on an undergraduate accreditation report on the College of engineering. The result, unfortunately, has been to sully the reputation of a very fine college.

On the financial side, it must come as no shock to anyone that we again anticipate a most difficult year. The Governor has given his budget recommendation to the State Legislature. His proposal for MSU is at a level we find totally unsatisfactory and insufficient to maintain and upgrade quality education.

As I noted when the recommendation was announced, it seems calculated to place a greater economic burden on students and their parents — a prospect that is as much an anathema to our board of trustees and to me as I am sure it is to the students and their families.

We are, however, in the earliest stages of the budget process. We will carry our story to the legislature and do everything we can in the years ahead to restore equity and to curb the fiscal deterioration that threatens our economic viability.

As previously announced, the short- and long-run budgetary planning process for the re-shaping of our academic goals and priorities is underway. It is building from the unit level back to central administration and the board of trustees — a process which lodges the critical decisions where the professional academic competence lies.

The dialogue on the adequacy of our academic mission and its methods is continuing in the Academic Council — the issues of grade inflation, course duplication, teaching responsibility, remedial course credit, adequacy of course information and curriculum balance are all matters within the purview of this central academic policy body and its standing committees. And while their deliberations may seem too slow for some, I am confident that their recommendations will strengthen the primary mission of our University.

Thus, there are seemingly continuous, serious problems facing the University — today as in the past. A full address might be devoted to each topic. But my primary concern this evening is one of attitude and spirit within the University.

What should be our attitude toward these problems? Do we dwell on this as our winter of discontent? Or do we focus on our strengths and continue to build our future?

Too often we let ourselves be mired in the morass of problems to the point where we lose sight of the countless assets that represent the real strengths of Michigan State University.

I would add that the pace with which Michigan State University has moved into the front ranks of American education is not just a matter of local pride or bias. Those of you who attended fall term commencement in December heard Dr. Clark Kerr, certainly one of the nation's foremost educators, tell our graduates that in his judgment, MSU and UCLA had moved the farthest and the fastest as research universities since World War II.

Dr. Kerr added that he considered MSU to be the most dynamic university in the nation and the most open to change.

It is this ability to establish tradition without becoming traditional that is a basic strength of Michigan State University.

Any objective view and evaluation of our extensive and varied academic accomplishments portrays a vital campus, filled not only with past accomplishment, but successful current performance and great promise for the future.

Prof. Madison Kuhn recently observed that when he completed his history of MSU for our Centennial in 1955, little did he dream of where MSU would be in 1976, some twenty years later.

"When the book was published, there was a promise that MSU would become a major university, but it hadn't happened yet. I really never thought it would get to the state it is at today." (MSU Alumni Bulletin, Jan./Feb. 1976, p. 17)

The self-same comment might be made by today's institutional historian. Do we dare indulge in speculation on where MSU will be twenty or twenty-five years hence? What will MSU be like in the year 2000? Who will write our future history?

The true fact of the matter is that you will — no, we will. All of us will determine the future course of Michigan State University. Not the president alone, nor the provost alone, nor the deans alone, nor the department chairman and directors alone, nor the faculty alone, nor the students and alumni alone, nor our publications and research alone — nor the board of trustees alone — but all of us and everything together. For it is the collectivity that provides the thrust and flavor of our progress.

There is so much to do and we have so much to offer. Let's speculate a bit and have bold visions:

•By the year 2000 we will have helped to answer the continuing race between food and population.

•We will have contributed toward solving the problems of energy dependence.

We will have tamed our technologies so they no longer deliver pollutants and other undesirable side effects to our environment.

•We will have pioneered new techniques for meeting the lifelong educational needs of our citizens — those caught in the grinding gears of changing occupational and personal needs in our ever-dynamic society.

•We will have found new patterns for accommodating to ethnic and racial divisions while respecting and appreciating our differences — all the while remembering our essential unity as human beings.

•We will have discovered better methods for meeting the needs for all citizens — rich and poor — domestic and foreign — in a world of limited resources, a world where the division of the world's riches lies at the root of so many controversies.

•We will have found new ways of widening the appreciation of the arts and letters by all citizens.

•We will have helped to conquer once and for all the cancer of random violence which strains the fabric of human society.

The list of goals is far easier to make than the answers are to formulate, but the search for the answers is open to us, challenging us. Michigan State University alone cannot provide the answers, but we will surely play our part, hopefully a leading part. Judging by our demonstrated capabilities, each of us alone can make some contribution, but together we can be a major force for progress. But we cannot do so if we allow ourselves to be trapped by negativism in this current time of testing.

Dr. Kerr, in his commencement address, predicted to the graduates that when they return to the campus in the year 2000, they will find Michigan State University even more eminent than it is today. But if we are to fulfill that prediction and our proper role, we must hold fast to a positive view, a clear-eyed recognition of our accomplishments to date and a steadfast belief in our abilities to achieve even greater heights in the future. Together we can do it. Together we shall do it.

WJIM continues battle in court for license

MICHAEL ROUSE
State News Staff Writer

WJIM's troubles began in the summer of 1973 when a local group called Citizens United for Better Broadcasting complained about the station's lack of children's shows, the quality of news and public affairs presentations, sexist advertising and inadequate minority hiring practices.

In November of that year, the FCC delayed the renewal of Gross's broadcasting license until an investigation could be conducted. This investigation was ordered on Feb. 1, 1974 and the ACLU stepped in with an informal complaint to the FCC two weeks later.

Harvey Shulman, an attorney with the Media Access Project in Washington, D.C., has been asserting the ACLU's allegations that certain public officials were denied coverage (blackout), the station's public broadcast license was used for Gross's personal gain and free color televisions were offered to some Lansing City Council members to persuade them to vote for Gross Telecasting Inc. as the recipient of Lansing's cable television franchise.

Clarification

article in Wednesday's News incorrectly stated ASMSU Legal Service director Jon Botsford is a member of the Birch and Law Firm.

Botsford works in the office of a credited MSU class, a paid position.

This last charge involved Lansing Councilman Harold Moore who in 1968 worked for the National Cable Co. This was in itself a conflict of interest, since his company's parent firm was competing with Gross for the cable franchise.

At the reopened hearings on Monday, Gross will respond to allegations made by ex-reporters that he first offered Moore a job at WJIM, but then barred coverage of Moore and the rest of the city councilmen because they opposed granting Gross the franchise.

"He indicated to me that certain members of the council were opposing him, and he didn't want to see them on the air," William Applegate, a former WJIM reporter, said.

A memo from Gross to Bradley Bate, news director in 1969-70, said: "Why is it you persist in putting Harold Moore on our six o'clock news when he is our enemy?"

Nevertheless, the council awarded the Lansing city cable franchise to Continental Cablevision of Boston, Mass.

Another allegation to be investigated at the upcoming hearings is the blackout Gross supposedly ordered against Robert Green, dean of the MSU College of Urban Development. Green was nevertheless covered by reporters during a controversy involving black students at Wilson Hall and when Green attacked the Big Ten on grounds of racism.

Gross labeled Green a radical and a troublemaker, but said that he only questioned Green's appearance in news broadcasts and did not order a blackout.

Miscellaneous other charges include an order to the WJIM staff not to do stories on certain businesses that had overdue advertising accounts. Companies which paid large bills, Meijer's Thrifty Acres for instance, received frequent coverage.

The case against WJIM calls into question one of the basic tenets of the FCC. Since there is a limited number of channels possible on the crowded airwaves, stations are granted licenses with the restriction that they serve the public interest.

"Gross has an obligation to serve the public," Shulman said. "The public owns the station and Gross just operates it for the network."

The WJIM hearings will continue through March 19. They will investigate the blackouts and the subordination of public interest to Gross' personal gain. The hearings will continue in Lansing between April 26 and May 21 before moving to Washington, D.C. Clipping is the practice of substituting local commercials for those dictated by the network and pocketing the money received from both.

"It will be a hear and one-half before we can expect a decision from the judge," Shulman said, "but we are confident that we will eventually win this case."

"This means that Gross will lose his license and there will be a new station in Lansing. Lansing will never be without a TV station, but if worst comes to worst, Gross will be allowed to operate one temporarily," Shulman said.

The talk is being sponsored by the Southern African Liberation Committee.

BSPA now open to undergrads

The Black Student Psychology Assn., formerly an all-graduate student organization, is opening its ranks to undergraduate blacks who are interested in psychology.

According to Gregory Price, a graduate coordinator of the BSPA, the membership drive at MSU is part of a national campaign to recruit new members.

As part of its services, the group offers help with course selections as well as self-help tutorial programs. One of the main concerns of the BSPA is to get more black students interested in psychology.

A meeting will be held Monday at 7 p.m. in 304 Olds Hall for any students who are interested in joining BSPA.

Some 7,000 documented instances of "clipping" in the past six years and other technical charges will be discussed in June when the case moves to Washington, D.C. Clipping is the practice of substituting local commercials for those dictated by the network and pocketing the money received from both.

You may have dined at The Grapevine before, but now it's time to return for a second look, or perhaps your first. Because the Grapevine, at 2758 E. Gr. River, is under all new management, and the changes that have been made, and are still being planned, just have to be experienced first hand.

The pleasant French country atmosphere is still prevalent, complete with a crackling fireplace, antique wooden beams, stained glass windows, and a lush color scheme of french blue, red and ivory. But here the similarities end, and the new Grapevine takes over with an all new menu, at prices everyone can afford.

The French theme is still maintained, but somewhat Americanized now, for easier menu reading, and ordering. Sixteen entrees are offered, among them such dishes as Chicken Kiev, Almond Fried Shrimp, Cordon Bleu, Prime Ribs, Roast Pork Loin. Specialties of the house include: Steak Diane, Peppered Steak, (both prepared at your table) or Tournedos a la Rossini. You will delight in the dinners for two, either Rack of Lamb, or Chateaubriand, served with appetizer, five different vegetables, a full bottle of wine, and dessert.

If a lighter dinner is to your liking, The Grapevine offers Prime Rib sandwich, Strip Steak sandwich, or Frog Legs, in smaller portions. Daily specials are also offered Monday thru Thursday, which are regular menu items at reduced prices. To complete your meal, you must try "French Fried Ice Cream", a treat your sweet tooth won't believe.

Complimenting an elegant dinner with the right wine is not a difficult task at The Grapevine. Just ask for the wine book, which offers a wine listing complete with labels, phonetic spelling, story of the wine, flavor explanation, and even the bin number, to simplify your wine ordering and enhance your meal. In the near future, there will be a wine of the day at special prices. To end a perfect meal, each customer receives a home made chocolate covered cherry with the check!

Besides delicious dinners, lunches are all new too, being served 11:30 - 2:30, Monday - Friday. Try the Olde English Crab Grill for something different.

In the cocktail lounge, Happy Hour from 4 - 7 Mon. - Fri. serves all cocktails at reduced prices. Live entertainment currently by Dennis Byrum is offered Tues. - Sat., from 9 - 1 a.m., and also Thurs. and Fri. from 5 - 7. There is a new late night supper menu, and don't forget The Sunday Buffet, from 3 - 9 p.m.

Ghandi resister slated to speak

By KATHY CHOWN
State News Staff Writer
Subramanian Swamy, a member of the Upper House of the Indian Parliament, will be speaking on the current situation in India, Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at the United Ministries of Higher Education, 1118 Harrison Road.

Indians for Democracy, a Lansing organization, is sponsoring Swamy who is visiting Canada and the United States to try and give Indians here a correct picture of the present political climate in India.

Swamy is a member of the Jan Sangh party in India, working toward democratic resistance movement. He is Minister Indira Ghandi's major party in India, one called the People's Party.

The committee was formed June 1975, when Ghandi declared an emergency in India. Since then, her party reportedly arrested 150,000 people without reason.

Shrikumar Poddar, a man for the Indians for Democracy, said people have disappeared off the streets of India without even notice of their families, and the press has been inhibited. Swamy is a noted mathematician scholar and an expert on Indian economics. He has written a book on economic growth in India.

Batchelder said not too many older people had tried out for the Glass party, but even people from as far away as St. Johns had come to seek to "break into the business."

"I am absolutely, phenomenally amazed," Alison said of the number of auditors.

Alison and Batchelder hope the show will prompt social change.

"We are trying to avoid stereotypes," Alison said. "This is not going to be like anything you have seen on television."

"It is an excellent method of social change," she said. Out in the waiting room, 7-year-old Becky Cobb from St. Johns had just tried out for a part. She did not have much to say but her aunt, standing next to her, prompted.

"She can twirl baton and dance. And what are you going to do next week at the basketball game?" she asked.

Becky shrugged her shoulders. She said she wouldn't be sad if she did not get a part and she was not scared in the auditions.

"I just thought it up," she said.

Swamy's sponsor, was after the emergency declaration by Ghandi; this sumo is dedicated to the restoration of fundamental rights in India and freedom of the press. The organization has members in 25 major cities in U.S.

The Sunday meeting is to the public.

Moments after this picture was snapped Wednesday these happy mariners swept on down the cold Red Cedar River to a minor disaster. The trio had just shot the rapids beyond the dam and were near Beal Entrance when they hit a tree and the raft flipped. The three students, who wished to be known only by their first names — Bill, Tim and George — because they "felt like a bunch of turkeys," were thrown into the freezing water. "The way we went down, it wasn't supposed to happen," Tim recalled. "The current was damn strong and it swept my pants away." Bill and George grabbed the overturned raft and paddled to shore. Two Williams Hall residents, Rowan Rickard and Bruce Jeffries, helped to pull Tim from the rushing river. Later they donated towels, a quilt and some blended sippin' whisky to warm the three.

The sight of a tipsy MSU student assaulting the side-view mirror of a 1967 Chevy must have provided some amusing entertainment for policemen late Tuesday evening.

The student was arrested for malicious destruction after police observed him attempting to kick the outside mirror of a car parked on South Brody Road near Bailey Hall. Damages to the broken mirror were estimated at $15.

The student wasn't quite able to give an account for his otherwise inexplicable action, telling police he had consumed only a few beers before the incident.

A female student was walking back from Kellogg Center to her dorm at 9:15 Tuesday evening when she encountered a mysterious man walking in the opposite direction.

As the man approached he took a step toward her mumbling something unintelligible and then walked on. She then heard an unusual stir behind her and was almost certain that the man was indecently exposing himself. According to the police report, however, the student never was quite sure just what happened because she didn't dare look back.

With the aid of two students, campus police were able to arrest a 32-year-old Lansing man for window peeping in University Village at 11:15 Wednesday night.

The two students witnessed the man peeking into the bedroom window of an apartment and eventually apprehended and held him for police after a brief chase. The man was released on $100 bond after a complaint warrant was issued from the East Lansing prosecutor's office Thursday morning.

Thieves got away with 73 gallons of gas, valued at $29.12, from a gas pump outside the Plant Pathology Building sometime early Wednesday morning. Police said the thieves broke into the building to turn on the gas pump switch which was located just inside the door and then proceeded to draw 73 gallons of gas. The thieves

Citizen group aims to save historically valuable house

By NANCY ROBERTS
State News Staff Writer

A part of Darius Moon is acquiring some house-sized "medical" bills these days, even though Moon has been dead since 1939.

The ailing part of Moon is his historically valuable home, which the famed turn-of-the-century architect built in Lansing.

According to Bert Lee of the Michigan Building Trades Commission, estimations to move the house and its electrical wires and plumbing pipes have reached $17,000.

It all started nearly a year ago when the Lansing City Planning Dept. decided to widen S. Logan Street. For awhile, the Moon house faced a gloomy future.

Then Karen Burrell, a graduate student and research assistant at MSU, spotted the house and, knowing of the plans to widen the street, decided to try to save it. She rounded up as many interested people as possible to fight to have the house restored and moved to a new site.

Burrell did her work well. Now, a myriad of concerned citizens are working toward restoration of the house.

One of these people is Bert Lee, who is in charge of collecting a labor force and researching restoration costs. He says it will cost $6,000 to move the home to its new site. Another $8,000 will go to the Board of Water and Light for new plumbing. And Michigan Bell estimates $3,000 to rewire the old home.

Lee, co-chairman of the labor sector on the Lansing Bicentennial Commission, said that he has an "unconfirmed commitment" from various labor groups to donate their efforts in restoration work. These groups want to restore the house as a Bicentennial project.

Walter Dembowski, business manager of a carpenters local; Aldine Guy, business manager of a labor local and several others have told me they are interested in donating their labor," Lee said. "This will save us thousands of dollars."

Lee and his co-workers met Wednesday night to discuss possible fund-raising activities. A raffle or a beer and hot dog lunch may be scheduled to cover the cost of materials.

Bette Downs, who has previously worked on restoration projects, said that she has made up a brochure telling about the Moon house. Attached to the brochure is a form for interested people to pledge funds.

"This will give us an idea of how many donations we can depend on," Downs said. "I distributed them at the art festival at the Civic Center and at the Lansing Fund Festival. So far, the donations are impressive."

But unfortunately for the Moon house, funds are not the only obstacle facing it. Plans are progressing to widen Logan Street.

The Lansing City Council has granted two extensions on removing the home from its present location. It now has until May.

The proposed new site is on the LCC campus, between two other restored homes. But the LCC Board of Trustees has not yet approved the plan.

Philip Gannon, president of LCC, is in favor of the home being moved to the campus. "I like the idea," he said.

"Many times we overestimated the possibility of keeping the thing from the past."

But, Gannon said, the final decision will depend on the board of trustees. He said he has a meeting scheduled for the third Monday in March. "I don't want to put this in a bad position," Gannon said. "I am sympathetic to their problems, but I should take a serious look at the proposal."

If the Moon house is moved to the LCC campus, it will be used as a space, like the other restored homes that are there.

Recital features modern quartet

A string quartet usually consists of several violins, a cello and perhaps a viola. But that won't be the case Sunday when four MSU bassists perform Gunter Schuller's "Quartet for the Double Bass."

The 20th century piece will be performed as part of Marc Satterwhite's recital at 8:15 p.m. at Hart Recital Hall in the Music Bldg.

"Until 1960 it was thought that the piece was impossible to play," Satterwhite said, "but not anymore."

Also at Sunday's recital, Satterwhite will perform "In G" by Sammartini and "Pieces, Op. 9" by Chopin.

An introductory lecture on Surat Shabd yoga (yoga of celestial light and sound current) will be held on Saturday evening, Feb. 21, 1976, 7 p.m. at All Saints Episcopal Church, 800 Abbott Rd., East Lansing. The topics of the lecture will be: self and God realization, meditation and true living, mystery of life and death, man's true purpose on Earth, unity of Mankind and service. There is no charge, no collection and no donation.

1. Yogic or Livedhood: Closely associated with diet are the means of livelihood. There are no shortcuts in spirituality. The end here does not justify the means, as it may be construed to do anywhere else. Ignorance means to earn one's living by contaminating one's diet, the very source of life itself. So an honest living by the sweat of one's brow is essential in this line. The life plant has therefore to be nurtured with pure water to make it sound, healthy, a fit instrument for the advancement of spirituality.

2. Achar or Conduct: The above remarks apply equally to one's conduct in life. Every thought, every word and every deed, good or bad, leaves an indelible imprint on the mind and has to be accounted for. Hence the necessity for right thoughts, right aspirations and right conduct, all of which constitute the hedge around the tender sapling of spirituality. The devotee in this behalf has been dealt with under the five virtues discussed above.
