MSU asked to conduct study on safety of reflectorization

By RALPH FRAMMOLINO State News Staff Writer

MSU may become embroiled in what some state officials claim is a legislative effort to pad the pockets of the 3M

The University has been contacted by a group of legislators about reviewing dozens reports on the safety factors of fully reflectorized license plates.

So far, the state has doled out $25,000 to study full reflectorization, a proposal that could give 3M (Minnesota Mining and Manufacturing Co.) $9 million over a three year period. The projected MSU study would cost between $3,000 and $4,000.

Full reflectorization of the auto tags has caused dissension between various sections of state government since 1959. Opponents of the concept say that the study MSU is of the concept say that the study also is considering is just another ploy by 3M to push a bill for full reflectorization through the legislature.

Backers of the concept, Rep. Thomas

Anderson, D-Southgate and Sen. Jerome Hart, D-Saginaw, met with MSU personnel two weeks ago and suggested the study.

"It was an informal hearing on doing some research on the research of what has been done on reflectivity," said Jack Breslin, MSU executive vice president.

State officials in the Secretary of State's office, the Purchasing Division, and the State Police say they have been fighting the full reflectorization idea for a long time because it would only increase the money in 3M's coffers and not deliver the extra safety features that sponsors promise. The State Police say that fully reflectorized license plates are harder to read.

'There's no question that it's big dough for 3M," said Jim Wresinski, director of department services at the Secretary of State's office.

The Secretary of State's office claims that if there was a switch to full reflectorization, 3M would take in an extra $9 million over three years. Currently, 3M is the only company which supplies fully reflectorized sheeting nationally. The sheeting is the only material from which such license plates can be made. Roughly 45 states use the 3M material.

When stamped, the background of the plate reflects the beam of another car's headlights. Partially reflectorized plates, such as those Michigan uses now, have only luminous letters and numbers.

Wresinski said that the possible MSU study was not necessary because the state commissioned a $25,000 study from U-M in 1974 which concluded there is no safety basis for full reflectorization. "It's like going to different doctors when you're sick," Wresinski said.

The U-M study said that evidence from three dozen reports was "inconclusive" as to whether fully reflectorized license plate use was safer.

"It was and still is, that simple," said William Pollack, one of the researchers for the U-M report. Anderson, sponsor of House Bill 4240, which would authorize use of reflectorized license plates, admitted that he was not happy with the U-M findings.

"It makes sense to me that there must be some prevention (of accidents by using the son said. "I've been disappointed that the U-M study was inconclusive.

"I hope we don't come to the same conclusion," Anderson added about the MSU report. He characterized the U-M report as "biased," yet admitted that he harbors a strong favor for full-reflectorization himself. He said that he would need some "strong evidence to overturn" his faith in full reflectorization.

Anderson also admitted that lobbyists for 3M have backed the issue of full reflectori-(continued on page 10)

EDUCATION TO RECEIVE BOOST

Ford suggests block grant

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Ford sent Congress plans Monday for a $3.3 billion education grant for the states, mainly to aid poor and handicapped young-

The program for fiscal year 1977 would replace 24 separate education funds now in effect and the President emphasized that no state would get less money than it did

Under Ford's plan, Michigan would receive $140,492,000 in 1977 instead of the estimated $139,967,000 in federal education grants it will receive in 1976.

The aim is to end the heavy burden of regulations and red tape that states now have to cope with and to give them more control over education funds, Ford said.

The main focus would be "on improved ducation opportunities for those with very special needs - the handicapped and the educationally deprived," Ford said, "with a minimum of federal regulation and a maximum of local control

Ford's program would give the states

$3.3 billion to aid elementary and secondary schools and education for the handicapped, adult education and vocational education

Four programs which dealt with higher education and libraries were deleted from the proposed funding. A White House fact sheet said that a later request will be made to Congress for a one - year extension of funding for the college libraries program but that there will be no further request for funds for training and demonstration for librarians or the undergraduate instructional equipment program under the Higher Education Act.

"To assure that students with special needs, such as those in poverty areas, receive proper attention the proposed legislation provides that 75 per cent of a state's allocation be spent on the educationally deprived and handicapped and that vocational education programs continue to be supported," Ford said in a message to

For the next three fiscal years, Ford said, he proposed increasing the block grant by 1980. He proposed that the funds be made available before the start of the school year.

Under the present separate category grants that include aid to the disadvar taged, the handicapped, the deaf and blind, special programs for vocational and adult continued on page 10

hopes for additional ASMSU funding

By IRA ELLIOTT State News Staff Writer

The Student Workers Union (SWU) is currently operating on "a shoestring" having depleted a 1975 ASMSU allocation of $2,050, primarily on legal fees and campaign expenses, according to figures released Monday by SWU interim treasurer John Forslin.

Forslin estimates that SWU now has about $75 to $100 in its treasury, amassed through personal contributions and mem bership dues of varying amounts. However, SWU still hopes for a $1,000 ASMSU allocation. Last week the ASMSU Board rejected such a proposal by a six to four vote, with three members absent. But if certain items regarding SWU's finances have been clarified - including the possibility of receiving money from other sources a second bill stands a good chance of passing at tonight's board meeting.

Another possible source of revenue for SWU may be the American Federation of State, County and Municipal Employee (AFSCME), Council 11, which has handled all legal costs for SWU since last summer. Since the attorney's fees have not yet been assessed, AFSCME could not estimate the costs.

"We as a council, though we are in no way affiliated with SWU at this time, may give them money (for campaigning) and will surely assist in any way. We feel students have a right to organize and we'll help them," Glenn Marshall, organization coordinator for Council 11. said.

Council 11 represents most of Michigan's state, college, school and city employes and is affiliated with the AFL. CIO

The University's legal expenses cannot be determined because all University legal matters are handled by University attorney Leland Carr, who is paid on a yearly salary. But if the University chooses to mail fliers, which is in some doubt at this point, the costs should approximate those of SWU.

Aside from ASMSU and AFSCME, no other organization has contributed sizable amounts to the union and SWU expects none, Forslin said.

Tallies for the 1975 calendar year show SWU spent $335 on postage, telephones, printing, mailing lists and office supplies. Forslin estimates last year SWU received some $200 in direct donations.

This year approximately $285 has gone to campaigning, including $120 for paper and $90 for three sets of mailing labels.

SWU's office space is paid for by ASMSU, a privilege it grants to certain registered student organizations based on a group's need. In addition, SWU maintains a telephone account with the University, usually amounting to $16 or $20 a month and drawn from funds set aside for this

"If we do get the ASMSU allocation we might use it on radio ads or State News display ads," Forslin said.

"In any case, a large part of it (the allocation) will probably go to campaigning. And we could certainly use it," Forslin

SWU has already sent out one mailing to all student employes, and two more are planned. The second mailing, due to be out by this weekend, will concentrate on three of SWU's concerns: safety conditions, job security and the grounds necessary for dismissing student workers. SWU has reserved the third mailing for "responding to charges the University is likely to make

"Finances have been shoestring all the way, from the buying of signature cards to new. There's no real reason to change that and we expect dues to be adjusted as lower possible," Forslin said.

If the union is approved SWU hopes to subsist primarily on monthly membership dues, to be required of all student employes, whether or not they belong to

NEW YORK (AP) — Scientists are arguing over whether to keep or kill any living things spacecraft eventually may bring back from Mars, a new UN report says.

One side wants to keep them at all costs, for study; the other wants to kill them, for fear they will infect the earth and endanger all humanity.

The report, prepared for the UN Committee on the Peaceful Uses of Outer Space, urges that the issue not be left to individual governments but be tackled, before it becomes an actual problem, by scientists in an "international forum.

LONDON, PARIS AREAS SURVEYED

Concorde effects tested

By GRAHAM HEATHCOTE Editor's Note — The British-French Concorde is scheduled to start service on a trial basis to New York and Washington on April 10, and people living in "jet alley" near New York's John F. Kennedy Airport already have started demonstrans against it. Here is a report on the effects of Concorde's landings and takeoffs in London and Paris. LONDON (AP) - Complaints about the noise of the Concorde supersonic airliner have dwin. dled to zero around London's Heathrow Airport since twicea-week commercial flights began on Jan. 21, the British Dept. of Trade says.

And officials at Charles de Gaulle Airport near Paris claim they have received no recent plaints about the Concorde. which has become a thing of French national pride.

People living near the two airports have complained, however, about the noise of all jet aircraft, not just the Concorde, officials say, and in both places some residents describe Concorde's thunder-like noise as short and loud but not so annoying as the prolonged roar of regular jets which take to get into the air.

An AP correspondent recentstood in the village square at Le Mesnil-Amelot, a mile west of Charles de Gaulle Airport, Administrative aides from the Washington office of Rep. Wilbur D. Mills, D-Ark., said Monday that Mills has not ruled out the possibility of seeking a 20th term.

An item in Monday's Focus Nation quoted an Arkansas Gazette article that said Mills would announce his retirement by March 9. While Mills could not be reached for comment, an aide said the reporter was not being accused of misquoting when a French Concorde took off for Brazil. Windows rattled and the sound was like thunder. But it was gone in 12 seconds. A Boeing 707 followed with a deeper roar that lasted two

In the United States, meanwhile, anti-Concorde demonstrators staged a protest Sun-day, ringing New York's Kennedy Airport in a 500-car motorcade. Last Sunday 1,500 cars turned up at Kennedy to protest the scheduled introduction of the Concorde to Kennedy next month.

The British Dept. of Trade has recorded 75 complaints about the Concorde, nearly all on the first day. Last week it had one, it said.

The local Aircraft Noise Council, representing 52 communities around Heathrow, said it received no complaints after the first day.

The tailing off in fault-finding was confirmed by an opponent of the plane, the secretary of Anti-Concorde Project, Richard Wiggs.
"I have heard people around the airport saying they are so fed up with the whole thing they are not going to complain any more," said Wiggs, who attended Concorde hearings in Washington. "People haven't got the time or money to go on indefinitely telephoning and writing."

Wiggs said the number of complaints about all aircraft averages 8,000 a year. When Concorde was doing its endurance flights last summer it drew 3,000 complaints in two months, he added. The maximum decibel recordings at Heathrow have been 117 for a Concorde and a VC10 and 116.5 for a 707. A Heathrow official said aircraft varies according to weather and plane loadings. Jets are noisier in summer because their engines are less efficient in hot weather so they need more power.

The Dept. of Trade said noise monitorings since Jan. 21 fluctuated from 95 to 115. Health officials said pain in the ears can start at 110 Air France's Concorde has

MSN radio show on Klan postponed due to incident

By MARTY SOMMERNESS

State News Staff Writer The Michigan State Network (MSN) has cancelled the Thursday segment of the call in radio talk show "Ellipsis," which would have dealt the subject of the Ku Klux Klan

"We feel the timing of the program in relation to the incident at Wonders Hall is an unfortunate coincidence and would detract from the intended purpose of the program," said Matthew Mills, MSN news director.

The incident referred to was the South Complex appearance on Feb. 16 of three people dressed in the white robes of the Klan who were protesting what they called "white apathy" and "the dangers of affirm ative action programs."

Mills, who said that Thursday would not be the appropriate time to air a discussion between the KKK and listeners who telephone the radio studio, also said no special interest group pressured him into stopping the broadcasting of the program.

"I made the decision on my own. Nobody told me not to have the program," he said.

The Progressive Labor Party (PLP), however, voiced vehe ment opposition to the broadcasting of the program in a viewpoint submitted to the State News Monday.

"You can't stop racists by worrying about their 'right' to push their lies," said the PLP in its viewpoint. "We must have multiracial unity to guarantee that these KKKers or fascists or any other racists don't have the freedom to push racism. Such racists should be chased off campus, period.

"Join us and kick the Klan off campus," said the PLP, in calling for a demonstration Thursday at the Student Services Building.

The program, hosted by Rick Burelle, was scheduled to in-clude a discussion with ex Klansman Ed Reimer of Howell and possibly Klan member Rob ert Tipton of Flint.

Burelle was unavailable for comment Monday, but his roommate, who refused to identify himself, said Burelle had no comment on the indefinite postponement of the "Ellipsis" segment.

"'Ellipsis' is an informational program designed to be an objective interchange of ideas and opinions," Mills said. "When it appears the emotional climate will preclude those objectives, the program becomes contrary to the needs of the students.

"The State News article of Feb. 27 indicated a relationship in the timing of the program, with the incident at Wonders Hall. However, there is no relationship and we feel that the program is not in the best interest of the student body at this particular time." Mills said. However, the article about

Nine local people chosen by corps

State News Staff Writer

Nine people from the Lansing area, four of them MSU students, have been chosen by the Peace Corps to take part in a 2-year program in the Dominican Republic.

The program is being operated in cooperation with Partners of America and the national 4-H organization. Partners of America is a group that matches states in this country with other nations in order to facilitate cultural exchange.

The local people taking part in the Michigan-sponsored Dominican Republic program will be working with 5-D there, an organization similar to 4-H clubs here.

Michael Henley, a 1973 MSU graduate with a degee in social science who will be participating in the program will be working mostly with young people in the Dominican Republic.

"I will be teaching young people about rabbit breeding and home gardening," he explained. "We also want to get them more interested in their diet. People in the Dominican Republic have a problem with nutrition

Henley said he heard about the program through a friend in the MSU Extension Services. He spent a year in Omaha working with the VISTA program and was a Peace Corps recruiter on campus

Kathy Healy, communications manager of the Detroit Peace Corps office, said the Dominican Republic project is unique because many of the people involved do not have college degrees, a usual requirement for participation in the Peace Corps. She said the program sprang from a proposal by Juan Marinez. the regional extension supervisor in the MSU Cooperative

Healy, who is recruiting on campus this week, said Marinez' proposal impressed Peace Corps national recruiting director Velma Lindford so much that it was the only program Lindford did

MSU is one of only four universities in the United States to send people to the Dominican Republic. Healy said this was because of MSU's connection with the 4-H program and because Michigan is committed to the Partners of America program.

While the Dominican Republic program is a volunteer one. Healy said the participants will receive transportation, medical expenses and housing while they are in the island nation.
"They also receive a subsidized living allowance," she added.

"They don't make any money, but they don't spend any either. We keep them on the level of the people they are working with."

The horror of child abuse in America thrives behind undramatic facts and figures; alienated adolescents run away from home, only to be forced by law to return to the same conditions which made them run away in the first place; underfunded drop - in crisis intervention centers and other agencies struggle to reach out to head off physical and psychological tragedies.

In all too many instances, the law itself simply serves to amplify parent/child problems which produce the "juvenile delin-

What demands thorough examination and consideration are the very rights of children as they relate to the child's life. Decisions made for the child by parents, judges and the like in times of adversity are very often simply wrong.

State legislator H. Lynn Jondahl (D-East Lansing) has introduced legislation that would be the critical beginning toward realistic treatment of the actual problems children face and thus would scrap the machinery which writes youths off as "delinquent."

HB 4704, which is a revision of Michigan's 37-year-old juvenile code, would remove status offenses from the jurisdiction of juvenile courts.

Status offenses include such things as truancy, running away, incerrigibility and curfew violations. These types of behavior are clearly not simple crimes. Children are forced into such activity because of intolerable conditions at home and school. It is neither just nor effective to regard them as criminals.

Programs where youths can feel free to go for help and objective counseling to solve problems and deal with parents would be far preferable to the judge's bench and the detention home, which the current juvenile code orders. While helpful programs are not directly provided for in Jondahl's legislation, the atmosphere of constructive problem - solving which could arise might assure their growth and prosperity.

This first step needs to be taken; for we must learn to walk.

Cooperate SIRS

In the next few weeks, MSU students will have a chance to rate their professors — that is, if their professors cooperate by distributing the rating forms.

The Student Instructional Rating System (SIRS) Level III, sponsored by the Student Council. will give students access to the results. Unfortunately, professors must volunteer for the program.

If professors do not take the initiative and distribute the forms, it can only appear that they are afraid of poor ratings.

Once the questionnaires are distributed, students must take the SIRS seriously, since the computer - scored rating forms are potentially helpful to other students only if the forms are filled out accurately.

Students should not regard the SIRS as "just another form to fill

Results will be made public in May and will mark the first time that students will see the results of an official instructor survey.

It must be realized that a representative sample is needed for reliable ratings. Students should urge their professors to participate and professors should urge students to fill out the SIRS honestly and fully.

competition

It was a banality some time before I was born that the Olympic Games do about as much to induce good feeling in the world as summit conferences or world wars. On the whole, individual sportsmen are good losers. Their coaches aren't, nor are their sponsors. The loss of a gold medal is resented less by an athlete who has no answer to the question - "But didn't the other guy in fact swim faster than you did?" than by the structure of coaches and bureaucrats who were counting on him.

If it's the United States you're talking about, other concerns soon crowd out the humiliation of a defeat. If it is the Soviet Union you are talking about, awful things happen, and the shadow of Gulag, already ubiquitous, darkens. The in-between states suffer according as their national pride is, in the sporting event in question, blended with their national economic interests. Austria and Italy are in point. relatively poor showing of their athletes will cost the winter sports industries tens of millions of dollars.

The historian Peter Viereck, many years ago, accounted in part for the instant unpopularity of Nazi Germany among American intellectuals, by contrast with the instant relative popularity of the Soviet Union, by pointing to two symbols. The Nazis enshrined the athlete and the soldier. The Soviet Union, the worker and the intellectual. Myths die hard, though one must suppose that you would have to go all the way over to, say, the Ramparts Magazine crowd to find someone today who believes that the Soviet Union has done anything for the worker or for the

The Soviet Union, on the other hand, does much for the athlete. I would not be surprised if, say three or four Olympics om now, we saw Soviet athletes genetically bred under the purposive auspices of socialism. "Miss Plitoski is the daughter of Ivan Plitoski, who won a gold medal in the 1968 Olympics, and Olga Iskova, who won a gold medal in the 1972 Olympics. Her grandmother won a silver in 1956. . . . Moscow newspaper, Sovietsky, was there last week announcing that "the Soviet medal harvest reaffirms the indisputable advantages of the Socialist system of physical education.'

There are a great many advantages, if your idea is to become, for one day, the fastest skier in the world, to spending 15 years developing your body, your reflexes and your will. Especially if this catapults you into a position among the elite.

In Russia, elitehood is conferred on a kind of barter basis: it isn't money the young athletes get so much as privilege. In Italy, it is money. It is estimated that Mr. Thoeni got paid something on the order of $300,000 last year by a consortium of ski manufacturers to persuade him to remain an amateur so that he might compete in a sport in which professionals are not permitted. It is as if an American consortium paid Zsa Zsa Gabor a half million dollars to present nerself as a virgin.

Nobody is fooling anybody except the Olympic Games Committee, which could not qualify to compete in any contest in which consistency of ruling or concern for morality is required. Meanwhile, in the United States, lovely little Dorothy Hamill, obsessed by figure skating, drains the family reserves — $15,000 per year for tutoring And an American slalom racer comments: Hell, I feel lucky that someone is paying my round trip ticket to Austria."

The pity of it is that sports almost beg to be extra-ideological in let the best man win. Perhaps inevitable. If the Nobel Committee free itself of politics, how can one that the government sponsors international contest can hope to do

Nat Sci-praised

I just read an article in the Feb. 17 issue of the SN that positively made my day. I'm referring to the article by Patricia LaCroix regarding the new NatSci class which will be presenting creation as an alternative theory of the philosophy of origins.

I think it's great that this step is being taken and it's about time! It will be an exciting class! I wish I could turn the clock back about 14 years and take it. The irony of this whole thing is that I took one of my NatSci courses from Dr. John Moore, who at that time was an evolutionist.

In 1962 I sat in his class, fat, dumb and happy, regurgitated all the "right" answers to questions biased toward evolution and collected my B at the end of the term all the time inwardly rejecting the evolutionist line. I wasn't a "dummy" like another guy I knew who voluntarily flunked the course because he would not acknowledge evolutionary "facts" on examinations.

It's thrilling, personally, to see educated and respected scholars such as Dr. Moore take an academic, scientific and truly honest approach to investigating this question which is not a black-white issue as e've learn "educated" to believe during the and decades.

Major problem

Your article examining the very high administrative salaries at MSU is a service to both faculty and students because it identifies one of the major problems we face. When one couples these high salaries with the massive growth of administrators on campus (close to 400 per cent while faculty and student body grew about 45 per cent), one realizes that the allocation of resources within MSU has favored administrative expansion over educational

For example, the $10,000 to $20,000 figures you use identifying the range MSU administrative salaries exceed average administrative salaries would allow increasing the faculty by one to two members in each case. MSUFA identified this problem early and will continue to address it in the future.

The faculty is also intimately aware of the problem Mr. Lockhart poses: that "University salaries, in general have not kept up with the cost of living." It is clear from your fine article, however, that those distribute the funds within the University have suffered less. Many are doing very well.

Abortion rights

Much of the controversy concerning abortion centers around the question of whether an abortion "kills" a human. I have thought in these terms as a male. However, upon intimately knowing and loving a particular woman, I have concluded that this question is irrelevant.

If men could feel the anxiety of possibly or actually being pregnant and the resulting consequences, they would not be insensitive to "women's rights" (as was the Dale Posthumus letter in the State News, Feb.

What are the consequences? First, the woman's physical well - being changes (morning sickness) and for all practical purposes her personality is altered by the hormone imbalance. Second, she must cancel all future plans and hopes if the pregnancy is not terminated.

I am bothered when men argue in terms of "right to life" for the fetus. If it was their hopes for a professional career eliminated because of pregnancy and their bodies and minds that were radically altered, they would have a different perspective. In addition, the women who are anti - abortion either lack an understanding of the concept of equality for women or have been influenced by their religious upbringing. What is needed is a sensitivity to the individual woman and not the philosophical rhetoric of whether abortion is moral or immoral. Jim Disantia

All look alike

Everyone seems to be less concerned with the recent actions of three white hooded fools than they are with the reporting of those actions. I would like to respond to the incident itself and also to the econd article (Feb. 20) rather than the first article (Feb. 18).

ing the incident, the United Blacks of Wonders made a constructive move, requesting a meeting with the three and sympathizers to discuss reverse discrimination and feelings. The three said they and 30 supporters would attend . . . but changed their minds "for fear of physical harm." I suggest that they didn't ow because they don't have 30 supporters and that they are so blinded by their own latent violent feelings that they can't see that the blacks have threatened no such thing! There have been no threats or recriminations, only a request to "deal with the situation on a positive plane." And who turned who down?

It blows me away that the white spokesman actually said. "We just wanted to express a point of view . . . I think this is a way to make society better . . ." It is beyond me how anyone could pull such a stunt as they did - and then claim to be neither racist nor KKK, and then refuse to attend a meeting, and then moan that their actions had "adverse effects" and that they have been "misinterpreted." This is totally illogical! What could they possibly expect?

I also feel that anyone who has a valid complaint he really believes in would not have to hide behind a sheet and the word anonymous." Besides, if they really believe that prejudice against whites is so prevalent, then they have nothing to blacks will never find them, because all whites look alike!

On salaries

I read today with great interest that the State News cites MSU administrators with "bringing home a whole lot of bacon," that is, MSU paying "top median salaries" for its

Now, anyone with a taste for statistics would have to examine the parameters of his survey as to its validity.

What pay classification was used in determining this so called median? (Do you start at $0 or $10,000 for a more accurate

What is the mode of the survey? (The mode is the most frequently cited figure in a survey and can be meaningful in analysis.) But, not only would one have to examine the statistical methods of the survey, but what about the validity threats in the survey, such as comparing the president of Podunk U., enrollment 250, with that of our own dear President Wharton, whose school has approximately 46,000?

Well, if you take the time to read on (or can understand a little of the statistical testing methods course you took) you see the writer has cited a study of comparable institutions which implies that MSU still pays more than median, but much less than the CUPA study so prominent in the first paragraphs. So much for brilliant deduction

Now we see the writer has cited those two bastions of academia, the University of Michigan and Ohio State University, in a comparison of presidential salaries. reader finds out the presidents of these hated arch rivals are receiving more! What are the implications of this statement? Does this mean that we are an inferior school compared to U M or OSU because we don't pay our Prez $65,000 + with expenses?

Clearly, there is a need to examine whether the salaries of our administrators is consummate to the amount of work produced by them. The same can also be said about instructors at our cherished school, and perhaps of college newspaper writers. (An informal study by me has discovered that State News writers receive the near - top wages of any college newspaper staff in the country. They also have one hell of a nice office, with new furnishings and such.)

However, I doubt seriously if any justice can be done to the public or the system unless enough relevant information is disseminated by a media source that attempts to portray the story in a manner leading to wise analysis. In other words, cut the sensationalized crap, stick to valid comparisons.

There is a lot of talk that American unions are seriously considering organizing members of the armed forces. Rumor has it that the unionization of military personnel will begin at the end of the year.

I can't see anything wrong with this, except that if the unions in the military get into job classifications it may be harder for our soldiers, sailors and marines to fight another war.

Had our fighting boys been organized during World War II this is what might have happened.

The scene is aboard a battleship. It has been hit by the Japanese and several sailors have been knocked out of action.

A chaplain realizes the seriousness of the situation and starts passing shells to the gunners as he sings, "Praise the Lord and Pass the Ammunition." The shop steward comes up to him. "I'm concealed "radical liberal." Time magazine gave Carter a cover picture in 1970 as representative of the "New South." Novelist Patrick Anderson recently wrote a sympathetic profile in The New York Times magazine. Are they all fooled; who's right?

Political writer Jack Germond says the liberal assault on Carter is "perhaps unmatched in harshness and intensity in any presidential campaign of the postwar period." It seems to start from the central mystery that after winning the governorship on the ticket with Maddox, Carter declared in his inaugural address that no citizen of Georgia should "ever again be deprived of the opportunity of a job, an education, or simple justice because he is poor, rural, black or not influential" and shortly thereafter hung a portrait of Martin Luther King, Jr. in the state capital. He's been hard to classify every since.

Who is the real Jimmy Carter? I think the press is going to search him out and find that he has been "wrong" on some issues and "right" on others and that his antithetical positions make him a moderate conservative, with surprising iumns into liberalism (like fa voring gun registration). # Mariah and guitarist Kottke put it all together. . . Wow!

By DAVE DIMARTINO State News Reviewer

Leo Kottke is a very unusual entertainer.

He tells very strange jokes, he gives his albums peculiar names and he looks like a perpetual college student. He also plays guitar

Kottke's demonstration of talent took place in what may have been the last Mariah show, held Sunday night in the Erikson Hall kiva. Together with Jawbone, Kottke gave a very memorable performance that was definitely one of Mariah's best moments.

Jawbone, who opened the show, was surprisingly good. Though the group usually can be found playing several sets a night in Lizard's, its performance was by no means on the bar-band level. The group's choice of material, ranging from Merle Haggard and Conway Twitty to Randy Newman, was excellent, as was the singing of the group's lead vocalist. Jawbone's only problem, at least for the 8:00 performance, was an overly long set. Obviously such problems are easily remedied.

Unusual style

Kottke's arrival was greeted with a huge burst of applause that hegan, significantly, before the guitarist even touched his guitars. Sitting down, Kottke smiled, picked up his 12 string and began to Kottke's style is, of course, a very unique one. His music is basically "new" in that very few people-with the exception of Kottke's old friend John Fahey, and Takoma acquaintance Peter Lang-are playing anything that approaches it. What makes Kottke even more unique than either Fahey or Lang is the fusion of popular elements that takes place within his so-called "New American Guitar Music." Thus music by Paul Siebel, Ron Elliot and even Procol Harum appears intermittently with Kottke's own writings and makes the whole of Kottke's repertoire both commercially appealing and certainly artistically valid.

Kottke's records therefore sell very well. His performances are almost always to filled houses, as was the case Sunday night. Diverse Material

As Kottke played Sunday night, he drew material from diverse phases of his career. The most memorable moment was his version of "Tiny Island" from his "Greenhouse" LP. His composition based on sailors stuck in the Sargasso Sea "who knew th going to die" was not only beautiful but quite indicative of Kottke's slightly unusual sense of humor.

Kottke's tales of Manchester lads who stab themselves at the first sign of pubic hair, and of collapsing cottage cheese, were not only great stage patter—they were, in fact, quite hilarious. From what Kottke revealed of himself onstage Sunday night, it's clear that he most definitely found the naming of his "My Feet Are Smiling" album a highly enjoyable affair. Yet Kottke's sense of humor hardly detracts from his musical ability. It merely makes him all the more an eccentric character.

Refreshing guitar works

Kottke's guitar style is continually refreshing and never tiring.
His inclusion of a small phase-shifter, used in conjunction with his 12-string guitar, gave his playing a whirling, fuller sound that added to his set's diversity. Considering that Kottke played Procol Harum's "Power Failure," a classical piece, and both old and new material, diversity can hardly be called his major difficulty.

An encore was no problem. Kottke clearly enjoys a large loyal following, and luckily, what hopefully will not prove to be Mariah's last show was an unqualified success. Both performances were sold out long before Sunday night.

One can only wish that some way will be found to continue bringing Mariah's fine concerts to MSU. The concert series definitely would be missed if it is allowed to be terminated.

The reason was Ilya Stupel. Meistro Stupel, the conductor of the Malmo Opera in Sweden, worked magic with the orchestra. You could tell the musicians loved him. A month of practicing and working with him paid off in dia-

Part of the magic is that Stupel is unassuming. He's young and without a great deal of experience and he knows it. He approaches the music of the great composers with a reliobviously rubbed off on the

Actually, Stupel has a ten-dency to set the orchestra off at an unusually fast tempo and then gradually lose steam. But he's aware of that too, and you can tell he's fighting that tendency while he's on the podium.

The concert opened with Alfven's "Swedish Rhapsody." Was this perhaps a reflection of Stupel's experience in Scandinavia? It's a fairly light work written for a fairly large orchestra - lots of brass, two harps, the works. Actually, it's not one of the great master-pieces though it has some very singable tunes of the Scandinavian folksong variety.

orchestra had a bit of trouble getting together and the sound was not smooth. There wasn't much anyone could do about it. Alfven's music, at least in this piece, isn't highly polished.

But as they got into the work, the members of the orchestra displayed a lot of zest. The "Swedish Rhapsody' is a very popular work and they showed why. The snappy rhy thms and pleasant melodies call up visions of some Swedish village. The first French horn player did spectacularly well made him feel like he was putting his lips through a meat grinder.

Faculty member Walter Verdehr was the soloist in Samuel Barber's "Concerto for Violin and Orchestra." The music of this modern American master is often unapproachably esoteric. However, the concerto catches him in a rather romantic and melodic mood. The work is filled with almost operatic melodies reminiscent of Puccini and lush harmonies. Yet the feeling is always at least vaguely American.

Verdehr gave the work a creditable performance. It is not fiendishly difficult like a for some imaginative playing. Stupel milked the work for

Saxophonists give great conce

By RANDY SAMUELS Special Reviewer

Working in his shop some 120 years ago, a Swiss instrument maker named Adolphe Sax constructed a new, slightly unruly object located on the sound scale somewhere between a clarinet and a tuba. Thus, bearing its creators name, the saxophone was born. Largely banned from symphony orchestras and considered an anathema to chamber groups, this poor slighted musical invention has been relegated mainly to the uptempo world of marching ensembles and jazz organizations.

It has been within the latter context that the saxophone has experienced the great development of its inherent expressive capabilities. Blessed with a wide range of playing techniques, the saxophone virtuoso can guide his listeners through many worlds, worlds of emotion and intellectual inquiry. As he goes he continuously exposes, modifies and expands the nonverbal environment in which music dwells.

This past Sunday in the McDonel Hall kiva, Showcase Jazz presented two men who are as close to being the uncontested masters of the sax as anyone. Anthony Braxton and Roscoe Mitchell, from their initial tuning toot to the final melodic reprise, traversed the entire spectrum of musical manifestation.

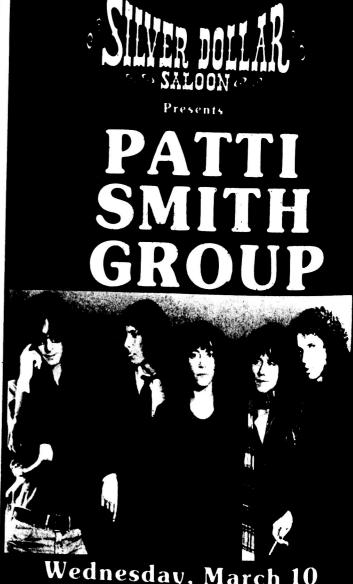

Roscoe divided his time among soprano, alto, tenor, baritone and bass sax and flute. Anthony employed a soprano, alto and the monstrously huge contrabass sax as well as a clarinet and a contrabass clarinet. Both, from time to time, resorted to a large array of percussion ments for punctuation. # Marital strain reflected in conversation

By KAT BROWN

State News Staff Writer What is talked about and how it is discussed is a better measure of the strain in young marriages than the actual amount of talking, according to Edna Rogers, MSU asst. professor of social science.

Rogers studied questionnaires and taped conversations of 65 couples in a Midwest urban-suburban community to determine patterns of family communication. Each couple had at least one child under 12 years old though no information was collected from the children.

Royers said strain was defined as the discrepancy between what the couples would like their marriages to be and how they actually were.

In marriages of short duration. Rogers found low strain was marked by variety and conversations, while high strain involved more competitive and repetitive talk Conversely, longer marriages (11 to 26 years) with high strain drifted toward less interaction and more silences between mates

Ideal roles described

There were two aspects to the study. The first involved having each husband and wife fill out a questionnaire which Rogers called a seif-report data. spouse individually answered questions about the marriage.

"The self-report data gave us our measure of strain," Rogers said. "We got a description of what each of them would like ideally for their marriage to be in terms of role relationships.

That information gets down to the real nitty-gritty, like who should discipline the children or who should cook the meals and then who actually does."

Rogers said she got esti mates of how much time the couples spent at home with the family and how much time was spent talking. Information was gathered on how happy the couples were with the communications with their spouse.

Feelings crucial "We found that the couples with lower strain gave us a profile that was very different from those with high strain." she said. "They did spend more time together, they talked more with one another and they liked what they talked about particularly their feelings about

"The feelings about each other were crucial — those with high-strain marriages don't seem to be dealing with what needs to be dealt with, Rogers

She said that the work done in communication has estab-lished several levels of meaning. One is the content level of the message or what the actual words say; while the meta level is how it is said and how it should be interpreted.

Each message was coded in terms of control - whether it was a one-up control message, a one-down message or a oneacross. If the husband tells his wife to do something and she agrees, he is in the one-up position. If she disagrees, they are both at the same or one-across position. And, if either spouse makes a statement in support of the other, that is a one-down control message.

Competition and high strain She looked at these control patterns over a time and found that high-strain marriages had more of that competitive symmetry than the low strain. Each spouse would continually fight to remain in the one-up while low-strain couples gave in to each other.

"We can look at these patterns of control directions and if you get what is called a one-up symmetrical pattern, you've got trouble," she said.

Low-strain couples gave more supportive states but these statements, along with a variety of one-up and across messages, are a healthy pattern in a marriage.

In the high-strain marriages the wife sent significantly more one-up messages than the wife in a low-strain marriage and vice versa, according to Rogers.

This fits the pattern of maternal dominance which tends to be correlated with so many family problems of wife control.

'Us' vs. 'me, you' "We see this as very useful data for clinicians and counselors who work with families. she said. "If you can recognize these patterns, then you can devise ways of trying to change them into more functional ways communication."

Uses of pronouns also identified the degrees of strain, with more of "we," "us" and "our" in the compatible couples' conversations, and more "I," "me," "mine" and some "you" and "yours" when strain was high.

"The discrepancies strains," Rogers said, "show up most frequently in the areas of child care, as they relate to responsibilities for physical care and disciplining of the children; in the areas of budgeting and financial dealings with esmen, repairmen, landlords and such, and in personal relationships, such as sharing affection and making up after major and minor fights."

Family in U.C. course Rogers and Richard V. Farace, MSU professor of communication will begin a broader study of family communications this week under a $38,000 grant they received from the National Institute of Mental Health. They will study the communications of 150 Midwest couples, also with children, but with the wives more evenly divided between those who work and those who do not work.

Family communications will be included in the content of a University College course on social deprivation bein spring term by Ros Mary Margaret Zaeng ger, associate profess cial science. The cou look at the whole far such problems as con tions, coping with stre abuse, neglect, drugs Woman is Dog's best friend and traveling companion. On this snowy afternoon near Higgins Lake, Mary Traynor hitches up her hounds and hauls across the frozen tundra. Making the Indy 500 look like a Roman chariot race, she leaves the competition sputtering for breath in a shower of snow. Dog Sledding as a team sport collected participants from all over Michigan this winter, many of whom joined up with the Great Lakes Dog Sled Assn. as Traynor did to compete with other teams. They all learned that a close nuzzling relationship boosts team morale.

Great Lakes future offered by academy

By GREGORY LOEWENTHAL

The Great Lakes support the largest freshwater shipping industry in the world, and the officers who command the multi-million dollar freighters that ply the lakes are in positions of tremendous responsibility. Their decisions affect company profits but, in some instances, the very lives of the men aboard their ships.

These officer positions are rapidly being manned not by the weathered old sailor with forty years at sea but by young, highly trained professionals.

And part of this trend can be attributed to the Great Lakes Maritime Academy, a branch of Northwest Michigan College in Traverse City, which trains students specifically for careers as officers aboard the Great Lakes ships.

The 33-month program trains students not only in areas directly related to the operation of a ship but also humanities, social sciences and the physical sciences. Upon completion of the program the graduate receives an associate of science degree and credentials to assume a position as an officer aboard a ship.

In his first year on the job the graduate can expect an average annual income of $25,000.

While this figure is astronomical compared to the average first-year carnings of a college graduate, the prospective student should keep in mind that life aboard a lake freighter is not for

Jim Besaw, director of career planning and placement at the college, pointed out that it takes a certain type of individual to be an officer on a Great Lakes ship.

"The field offers excellent opportunities," he said, "but it has been our experience that the person who is a success is one who truly has a love of the sea.

The person who is best adapted to this life not only loves the sea but is also a loner type," he said. "His outside interests must be activities that do not require large groups of people and can be enjoyed aboard ship, such as photography and music.

Students who choose deck officer training receive training in the handling of cargo, navigation and personnel administration. Graduates of the deck officers program are authorized to work only on the Great Lakes. If they wish to switch to salt water shipping they must complete additional navigational training and Engineering officers are in charge of not only the propulsion system of the ship but must also oversee maintenance of the rest of the ship. Graduates of the academy are schooled in diese mechanics, electrical systems, structural repair and every other facet of ship maintenance.

"The students who graduate as engineering officers can work not only on the Great Lakes but anywhere in the United States shipping industry immediately upon graduation," Besaw said. And if they should decide to give up the sea altogether they can step right into lucrative jobs such as maintenance engineers hospitals and other large institutions.

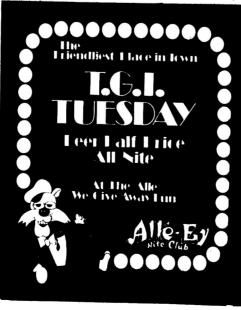

The Traverse City academy is the only one of its kind in the world, Besaw explained, and that, while there are five other schools in the U.S. that train officers in the shipping industry, four rivers system.

The program has been in operation since 1969 and every graduate who has actively sought a position in the industry has found one, according to Besaw. "We recently made a study of the number of positions that will have to be filled on Great Lakes ships in the next ten years," he said. "And we found that the demand calls for almost the exact number of officers that we will train here in that same period of The working conditions on the ships are very good. There is a crew of 28 to 35 men aboard each ship and each of the officers works an eight-hour split shift. Besaw said that while only 13 ships sailed the upper lakes through the winter this year graduates can expect to work year round on all the ships within the next three to five years.

Only 50 new students are admitted to the academy's program each year. While the fall 1976 quota is filled, the academy is accepting applications for the 1977 year.

Each student spends 24 months of the training period in Traverse City and nine months as a cadet aboard a commercial freighter. While at the academy, he receives classroom and laboratory training aboard two former naval vessels owned by the college, a 110-foot ocean-going tug and a 149-foot rescue sh

Beginning this fall there will be two scholarships awards year in memory of two cadets who were lost when the ore Fitzgerald sank last year. The Fitzgerald sank in a No storm on Lake Superior and no survivors were found.

The only requirements for admission to the academy the applicant be 17 years of age, a citizen of the U.S. and pass a Coast Guard physical examination.

And, he added that the academy is open to application both men and women. Though there are only two women e in the program at the present time, additional women app are welcomed, he said.

Food stamp plan delay urge LANSING (UPI) - Gov. Milliken Monday urged the federal government to delay

implementation of proposed new food stamp guidelines he says would cut needy families out of the program.

Milliken said an "administra-tive nightmare" would result if the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture implemented tighter food stamp regulations at the same time the Senate is acting on reform proposals.

advisory proposal Moving on to new business today, the Academic Council will discuss a report of the University Committee on Curriculum and a proposal for an Advisory/Consultative mittee to the dean of International Studies and Programs.

The proposal, which will be presented by Gerald Miller, chairperson of the University Committee on Academic Governance, is designed to "provide for broad based participation by University faculty and students in the policy making of the Office of International Studies and Programs." The proposal calls for 16 faculty members to be cho from the advisory councils of all colleges, with at least two from the Faculty Council, one noncollege faculty member, one reflectorized sheeting. "I don't care who gets the business," he said.

Jerry Koomes, of Public Affairs Associates and one of three lobbyists for 3M, said that his interest in Anderson's bill has waned.

Along with 3M, Koomes and his associates represent such concerns as Detroit Edison Blue Cross and Blue Shield, Meijers, the State Bar of Michi gan and the Michigan Sheriff's Assn.

Koomes said that the reflectorization issue was "caught in a political knee-jerk" and that resented the bad publicity 3M has received from press coverage of the situation. He added that the fact that 3M would be the sole beneficiary of such a bill was "incidental."

Koomes also said he liked the idea of the MSU study because

STEER-WRESTLING EVENT HIGHLIGHTS SHOW

Cowpokes display talents at rode

The photographs were taken by staff photographers Leo Salinas, Bill Goodrich and Bob Kaye. The story was written by Gustavo Amaya.

They were all there - cowboys, cowgirls, clowns, horses, bulls and people with Levis, cowboy hats and long pointed

The people anxiously awaited the start, as did the bulls, horses, goats and calves. Some of the contestants were talking, some keeping an eye on the animals, one or two putting on the latest cowboy attire before the start of the rodeo.

The stage was finally set. Through the loudspeakers, the announcer welcomed the spec-tators to the seventh annual Intercollegiate Rodeo, held this past weekend at the MSU Livestock Pavilion.

The human participants came not only from MSU, but also from the Dakotas, Wisconsin, Iowa, Minnesota and the flat lands of Nebraska. These rodeo contestants competed for point awards to see who would later compete at the National Finals Rodeo held each summer. Who won? Who lost? Check with the record keeper. It was more fun watching the cowboys trying to stay on a bull or a horse for the required eight seconds, as in the saddle bronc riding. Or watching the steer - wrestling event, in which the cowboy drops from a galloping horse onto a steer, and by twisting the steer's head, throws him to the ground. This latter event is exciting as the cowboy and his horse run after the steer, but difficult when the man has to tangle with a beast hundreds of pounds heavier than himself.

And the clowns! Let's not forget these funny - looking and witty remarks, but more importantly they protect the cowboys once they've been "dumped" from a ferocious Brahma bull or a restless horse. Bobby Ruiz, a famous rodeo men dressed in overalls many sizes bigger than necessary.

They entertain the audience with their uproarious mischief

clown, was there along with two other clowns. But Ruiz indisputably was the star among these brave men. His rifle act brought a good laugh from the people who had paid their admission price. 'Ruiz' trained mule also brought cheers and laughter, but not as much as when he appeared on his fa-mous Model "T" Bucking Ford. His car is built in a way to simulate bucking, and buck it

After each event, nouncer would ask the if they had liked that p event. The people w spond with cheers plause. At the end of the the announcer once ago to the audience: "Di His car is built in a way to simulate bucking, and buck it did. It also jerked, smoked and
