Carter winning in Florida

MIAMI (AP) - President Ford won Florida's Republican primary election Tuesday night, beating Ronald Reagan the conservative challenger once seemed strong. And Georgia's Jimmy Carter vaulted back to the vanguard of the Democratic presidential field with a victory over Alabama Gov. George C. Wallace.

Ford's campaign manager, Howard H. Callaway, said in Washington that he would not speculate on Reagan's political future after primary wins for the President in New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts and now Florida. Reagan campaigned only in New Hampshire and Florida.

"It's not up to me to say what Mr. Reagan will do," Callaway said. "We intend to go right on through every primary.'

Callaway also said he wasn't ruling out the possibility Reagan might ultimately become the vice presidential nominee of a

Ford ticket. But he said vice presidential decisions won't be made until convention

Darell Tennis, staff representative for the Michigan's AFL-CIO in Lansing, was in partial agreement with Emerick's analysis and said that even if the union won the

"The union's only recourse in terms of legality would be to file unfair labor practices with MERC. The problem is in MERC enforcing its decision. Then when it gets to court there are always delays,"

Questions and discussion from the audience will follow a short presentation by an SWU spokesman and one by a SWU opponent.

The forum is free to the public and will begin at 8 p.m. in 109 Anthony Hall.

In Tennis' view, the major problem is with the MERC procedure as it relates to enforcing any of its decisions. Procedural problems could later be compounded by the courts' slow wheels of justice.

Economic profs give union opinions

By MICHAEL ROUSE

State News Staff Writer The majority opinion of several MSU economics professors queried for their impressions of the Student Workers Union is that any increased monetary benefits received by student employes would come about at the expense of the University as a

Although SWU contends that a push for higher wages is not among the group's primary objectives, the instructors in the Dept. of Economics maintain that the attractive function of unions among lowwage workers is to try to improve pay

Bruce Allen, associate professor of economics, said that, in general, unions are not able to raise wages above competitive levels, but if students assisting faculty members on work-study projects receive higher wages, they may have to be replaced with a different class of employe - one willing to work for a lower income because of a limited work-study budget. "I say flatly and unequivocally that in no way can the University benefit from the union," Allen said.

"SWU will benefit workers at the expense of the rest of the students," said Paul Ginsberg, asst. professor of economics, who added that the most benefits will go to students working in residence halls.

Charles C. Killingsworth, professor of labor and industrial relations, said that the only alternatives left to the University to pay for the workers' wage increases in the University in the future. residence halls, for instance, would be to generate more money or to decrease the number of workers employed. "The biggest contribution of unions in an academic setting is improving working conditions, grievance procedures and a more systematic handling of personnel," Killingsworth said.

One of the difficulties in a union's attempt to fairly represent college students is the lack of continuity in the labor force, said

John Hunter, professor of economics. "The campus population has a complete turnover about every four years," Hunter said. "The danger is that the union's power may get into the hands of those interested only in their own benefit, not the benefit of Mordechai Kreinin, professor of economics, said that SWU's initial endeavor would be to raise wages, but since the University would not sufficiently transfer monetary resources to compensate for the higher payroll, unemployment will result.

Students who are out of the present work system and who might want to work in the future would not be able to get a job,"Kreinin said. He did mention, however, that SWU would not be a detriment to the University if it was concerned only with improving things like greivance procedures, and not wage levels. Daniel Suits, professor of economics, is an instructor who sees an advantage to SWU. He sees the union as being able to protect sudents from being "shafted by arbitrary decisions from foremen and other super iors." However, it would not be fair for part-time students, who are frequently replaced and retrained, to push for the same high wages given to veteran employ-

"Any student not currently employed will lose," said Danial Hamermesh, associate professor of economics. He said that since the University budget is fixed by the state legislature, tuition increases may be implemented to cover the cost of higher paid employes but that in low-wage labor markets, such as student workers, there is little organization in the union and wages are raised very little.

SWU received favorable comments from professors Herbert Kisch and Charles Kisch said that there is no reason why students should not be able to bargain for better conditions and saw no detracting effects on the University.

Larrowe said that many MSU students come from middle income families and that any increase in workers' wages - amounting to no more than a 6 per cent boost could be absorbed by making the students pay more for tuition and fees.

Aside from any monetary amenities, Larrowe said that student workers would have the strength they deserve with SWU.

"Any time a group of workers is under the authority of another group, there is a tendency to treat the employes arbitrarily, and the only way to counteract this is by collective action," Larrowe said. In an effort to counteract the lack of continuity from the high student turnover, Larrowe suggested an agency shop pro Under that plan, he said, "if SWU is voted in, any employe covered by the contract with the University could join the union after so many days, or opt to pay a pro-rated share of the costs of union representation. This union fee would be equal to the membership dues.' "However, the University would want the union fee to be less than the cost of dues because dues-paying members would get more benefits through membership in the Committee finds 200 documents

WASHINGTON (AP) - Chairman Otis G. Pike, D-N.Y., said Tuesday his House Intelligence Committee staff has accounted for 200 of 232 documents the CIA describes as lost. He accused the CIA and State Dept. of conducting "a media event" to discredit the committee

He accused the State Dept. of leaking to the media last week the contents of a letter to the chairman from CIA counsel Mitchell Rogovin contending that the documents could not be accounted for.

Pike said the CIA has no receipts to show that 95 of the documents ever were turned over to the committee. He said the CIA knew it when Rogovin wrote the letter.

In addition to the 95, Pike said, his staff was able to account for 88 documents CIA officials cited one by one as Pike said the staff found that an additional 17 of the so-called missing papers were only letters regarding delivery of documents, not documents themselves.

Bill may raise budget ceiling

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate Finance Committee approved a bill Tuesday raising the limit of the national debt and requiring that a 4 per cent minimum interest be paid on Series E U.S. Savings Bonds held for at least two months.

The bill would raise the limit to $627 billion through June 30. The debt already has passed the $594-billion mark and unless the ceiling is raised the federal government, presumably, would be unable to pay its bills.

The Senate is expected to complete congressional action on the House-passed bill before the current $595-billion ceiling on the national debt expires on March 15. The bill also would:

Raise from $10 billion to $12 billion the amount of g term bonds that may be sold at interest rates above •Raise from the present seven years to 10 years the term of agvernment notes.

At 11:30 a.m. EST, the Dow average of 30 industrial stocks stood at 997.56, a gain of 8.82.

The widely watched market indicator had been up 11 points to about 1,001 in the first 45 minutes of Tuesday's trading. Gainers held a 3-1 lead over losers among the New York Stock Exchange-listed issues in active trading.
Only twice before has the average broken 1,000 — briefly

Cancer death rate increases

WASHINGTON (AP) -- Preliminary figures show the nation's cancer death rate last year may have increased by 2.8 per cent over 1974, which would be the largest yearly rise since World War II, a government health agency said.

The National Center for Health Statistics said the preliminary cancer death rate for the first 11 months of 1975, calculated from a sampling of death certificates, was 2.8 per cent higher than final figures for the first 11 months of 1974, which were based on a complete tally of death certificates.

The U.S. cancer death rate has been increasing at an annual average of about 1 per cent for years, and has not increased more than 2 per cent a year since 1945, according to the center. The increase between 1973 and 1974 was 1.9

Gunman seizes 2 hostages

FRANKFURT, West Germany (AP) — A gunman seeking freedom for an accused bank robber seized two hostages in a Frankfurt courthouse Tuesday and demanded $3.2 million and passage on a jetliner to Cuba, police reported.

The gunman also demanded a helicopter or automobile with bullet-proof windows to ferry him and the robber suspect to Frankfurt airport, nine miles from the downtown courthouse, which was sealed off by heavily armed police.

The hostages were believed to be a court employe and a member of the jury trying Gerhard Linden for an $800,000 bank vehicle holdup in Frankfurt two years ago.

In addition to $2 million, the gunman demanded the equivalent of $400,000 dollars each in German marks, French francs and Swiss francs, police said.

Soldiers to remain in Thailand

 ${\tt BANGKOK, Thailand (UPI) - The \ government \ indicated}$ Tuesday it has agreed in principle to permit a residual force of about 3,000 U.S. servicemen to remain in Thailand indefinitely. Also provided will be two large bases and a string of smaller ones.

But a two-page statement from the foreign affairs ministry said that if details were not worked out within the next 11 days, all American forces would have to leave

A deadline of March 20 was set last year for withdrawal of all U.S. forces except a 270-man advisory detachment to oversee U.S. military aid to Bangkok.

"Recently, however, the United States government proposed to the Thai government certain projects of cooperation which would require the continued presence of a number of American technicians after the March 20 deadline," the foreign ministry statement said.

Guerillas infiltrate Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Rhodesia on Tuesday reported scalating infiltration by Soviet-trained guerillas along the entire length of its 800-mile border with Mozambique and said it was strengthening its counterinsurgency forces.

The white minority government has beefed up antiguerilla units by 60 per cent since January and settled nearly 200,000 African tribesmen along the frontier to resist infiltration, said Ted Sutton-Pryce, deputy minister in Prime Minister Ian Smith's

He told a news conference guerilla operations have spread in the last two months from Rhodesia's northeast corner to the entire length of the Mozambique frontier and the government now gets daily reports of guerilla activity.

Mozambique, a former Portugese colony with a Marxist government, declared last week that a "state of war" exists with Rhodesia and ordered a border blockade.

In South Africa, meanwhile, informed sources reported that the immediate threat of war at Angola's border with South African-ruled Namibia, or South-West Africa, had faded. Troops of the Angolan Marxist regime and supporting Cuban forces have stopped their southward march toward the border, the sources

Rhodesia's Sutton-Pryce predicted that Soviet-armed guerilla attacks against his country would continue even if a settlement is reached in constitutional talks resuming Thursday between the white minority government and moderate black nationalist leader Joshua Nkomo.

Violence threatens truce in Lebanon

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) -Street gangs in Beirut and northern Lebanon kidnaped 24 persons and killed six others Tuesday, police reported as the new violence threatened the country's seven-week-old civil war truce.

Army deserters seized a southern Lebanese garrison, and President Suleiman Franjieh cautioned that the recurrent mutinies might touch off an Israeli invasion and perhaps even a new Mideast war

At Franjieh's request, Syrian Foreign Minister Abdul Halim Khaddam and the Syrian air force commander, Lt. Gen. Naji Jamil, came to Beirut to resume mediation among squabbling Lebanese politicians. Syria ar ranged the current cease-fire between Christian and Moslem factions on Jan. 22.

Premier Rashid Karami told a parliament session the street violence and army dissension were sparked by a "trivial nese town of Kobayyat that mushroomed into four days of fighting in which 11 persons were killed last week.

"The situation is extremely serious, and I shall not conceal that," Karami said.

Police said unidentified gunmen set up roadblocks in six Beirut suburbs and abducted 24 pedestrians, 10 of whom were released hours later.

"It really gets ridiculous in a meeting like that," she said. o'clock, the tempers were flaring and people were ready to call it quits."

Dunlop said that both sides felt Sunday night was the last time HB 4957 would be dis-cussed, but a landlord provision on attorney fees broke up the meeting.

The dispute centers around a clause of the bill that would make landlords liable for up to $250 of the tenant's attorney's fees if the landlord lost a suit orges thinks of blindness against the tenant. The landlords wanted to add language that would make the tenant pay the same amount in attorney fees for the landlord if the tenant's suit is judged as "frivolous and harassing" in court.
"To concede that one would be to defeat the purpose of the bill," said Ryan. He added that if such a "reciprocity" agree-ment on attorney fees was added, tenants would be scared to bring a suit against their landlords.

"There's always a chance that some judge who is land-lord-oriented to assert frivolousness when it may not have been the intent of the tenant.

"As far as I'm concerned." said landlord negotiator Gloria Fleming, "all the times we've been giving. I'm discouraged that the tenants were not going Elliott also complained that the Counterforce slate is in violation of the ASMSU Elections Code because of slate posters appearing on doors, walls and windows of campus buildings. The Student Handbook states that it is "unlawful for any person to attach any sign or poster to any property other than a bulletin "I have pointed out to Michael (Lenz, Counterforce candidate for ASMSU President) that the posters are illegally posted," Elliott

Another violation being charged against Counterforce concerns the listing on posters of College of Business candidate Frank Lessa as an incumbent.

Lessa presently is the representative for the College of Natural Science but is running for election as business representative. Tim Beard, candidate for College of Business on the Students For Better Government slate, raised the question about these posters.

"I think it's misleading," Beard said. "If you check any dictionary you'd see that he's not an incumbent. Frank did say that incumbent wouldn't appear on the next set of posters though."

The ASMSU representative from the Interfraternity Council (IFC) has raised a complaint about Elliott's campaign posters. One of the points Elliott makes on his posters is that he has a perfect attendance record for ASMSU meetings.

However, Elliott added that "no other member of the board.

"I called Elliott and asked him to either take down the posters or scratch that out," Barry said. "But he refused. He said it was a question of semantics."

Barry does not plan to take the appeal through the AUSJ until he has spoken with the elections commissioner to determine what can be done. The ASMSU Code of Elections does not have any provision for false information or implications of campaign material.

Most of the candidates seem to be having trouble keeping the posters up. "They don't last a day in some places," Lenz said.

There is a University ordinance prohibiting students from removing signs and posters from bulletin boards. One Counterforce member said that the high rate of tearing down in campus

Up with SWU, down with its leaders

The vote by student workers on the Student Workers Union is the most important decision they will make this term. Formation of a campus-wide union to represent students working at a university is history-setting: it has never been done successfully anywhere, ever before.

Thus, it leaves many questions. Without past experience as a guide, it is difficult to predict precisely the effects of unionization. Present evidence, however, would support a "yes" vote.

The character of the persons spearheading the union drive causes still more question. Anyone who has dealt with them over the last two years - as the State News has - can testify to their extreme lack of moderation and the spirit of compromise. They can be difficult, they can be obnoxious, they can be tyrannical. It is legitimate to question whether the Student Workers Union, if voted in, would reflect their seeming attitude of confrontation for confrontation's sake.

But in answering these questions, students must try to separate emotions and personalities from facts. As union supporters point out, after the election, no one can predict who the union leadership will be, or what policies the union will pursue.

If student workers take the union seriously, and insist that it be run democratically - that is, reflecting their interests and not the highly politicized interest of the organizers - there is no reason that the union may not be an excellent thing.

The University is not a bad employer, by and large. However, it is not so benevolent that no improvement can be made. If student workers had an independent voice in the decisions on their conditions and pay, there can be little doubt that most will be better off. Codification of the good in current practice would protect against any deterioration of the University's attitude.

Specific areas of improvement are: Safety — worker-oriented safety committees could guarantee against the negligence or laziness of managers, who have not been as vigilant as they should be in correcting potential hazards.

•Grievances — workers would have a grievance procedure by right, and not by privilege. Kind as the University may sometimes be, there is no substitute for grievances adjudicated on a footing of equal power. There is evidence that many workers are afraid to pursue just grievances against persons who have the power to fire them.

•Pay - though the present leadership disavows major interest in pay, it is clear that union pressure, applied peaceably, will make it more likely that wages are increased if the membership so desires. In the face of budget cuts, it would be easy for the University to force students to bear the brunt unless they have a union to stand up for them. Moreover, the union could help revent increases from coming from tuition or fees.

 Fairness — regularized procedures of hiring, firing and pay-setting would help to eliminate incidents of favoritism and discrimination.

Thus, it appears that student workers have a sufficient interest that they should vote "yes" on the union. However, their responsibility does not stop

All workers must strive to insure that the good that could flow from unionization is not destroyed by the irresponsible policies of the present organizers. Doyle O'Connor, Tim Cain and their comrades must be replaced as leaders of the union. If they are not, the union can be expected to fail.

The SWU interim organizing committee claims to understand that the leadership must change, and profess willingness to relinquish control to democratically selected and operating leaders. They must be taken at their word. Student workers, therefore, should vote "yes" on the union, and then get out and participate, fight for control and demand responsible leadership. There is a risk in supporting the enterprise of the likes of O'Connor and Cain, but the risk is worth it.

Abstracting from the present leadership, the Student Workers Union could bring great improvement in the conditions of student employment

On creation

I find myself in partial agreement with Burton Stanley's approval of the natural science class comparing evolution and the Judaeo-Christian creation myth. Since the second half of the 19th century, science, to some narrow and enthusiastic minds, became a secular religion. And like their narrow, enthusiastic brothers in revealed religion, they began to believe that they alone had the whole truth.

But as a teacher I am more than a little concerned to see a revealed religion's myths being present on equal footing with science as a credible explanation of physical reality.

If the Bible is to be read as a science book (a claim never made by the Bible's authors. only by some of its readers) those teachers using it must come to grips with some of the other "science" it teaches and explain to their students not only the discrepancies, but why the Bible should be believed over observation and experimentation.

For example, in astronomy the Bible teaches that the sun goes around the earth. Had the editors shown maturity and In animal husbandry it teaches that you can geology it tea Usher's calculations are correct, that the earth is only 6,000 years old. In mathematics, the Bible calculates that pi is exactly 3.00.

If the instructors are interested in giving a balanced view of creation myths, they should add those from other religions. Vedantic traditions, for example, are of special interest to scholars of play. And they might also consider adding Christian theology which accepts evolution as fact and builds

For learning about the operations of the physical world, there isn't much of a debate between science and revealed religion. For learning about how various cultures, lacking science, have attempted to answer some challenging scientific questions, a literal reading of certain parts of the Biblious it the only source.

Bar hopping

Is Brad Lang a snob? ("Drink, drink and be merry," State News, Tuesday, Feb. 24). He says all small town bars are full of degenerates.

Where is he coming from, Disneyland? He sounds like someone who has managed to look outside his own backyard for the first time. He mentions the local character who "might have stepped out of an absurdist play." I think he has things reversed. Does he think absurdist plays are science fiction? sophomore dilettante who gives a damn. Have him work all day at Oldsmobile, at a steel mill, or at any of the depressing jobs that these people cling to for survival and see if he cares what the drink is called.

How are these bars different from Lizard's, Dooley's and Beggar's? For one thing they tolerate students who come in to sneer at them. Brad was looking for differences and he found them. But he had to separate himself from the people to do it. He finds them to be "painfully unattractive, obese, and very average." What's his beef? He should open his eyes in any dormor classroom. He just described the whole human race. The point is we don't need to be put down, whether we're students, work-

Good conditions

I work in the cafeteria at Holmes Hall, and the working conditions here are good. Our (the student workers) relations with the supervisors and management are as good or better than relations between most employers and employes.

The management does not expect the students to do more than should be expected of any employe. The pay is not excellent, but it is adequate and is at least the minimum wage. Most students are satisfied because the increases proposed would in turn lead to increases in room and board rates.

If the Student Workers Union through on the ballot, where are the dorms going to get enough money to raise salaries and hire more people also?

Maybe other dorms need more safety improvements, but our dorm seems to be adequate and any accidents are usually due to carelessness by the students. Another matter is dues.

Why will non-union members be required to pay dues if they don't want to belong to the union?

In summary, many Holmes Hall cafeteria workers do not want a student workers union. I suggest that if other dorms relations between employers and employes are not as good as ours - they can have their union, pay their own dues and whatever else they want, but please don't require us to belong to the union. Some of us prefer the way it is

Campus cops

This letter is directed to that valiant campus police officer driving car #08 Feb. 8. and the administration that makes the rules he enforces

We think that everyone should be made aware of your noble deeds in ticketing all of those cars in front of East Wilson Hall. Do you have nothing better to do on a Sunday afternoon than issue violations to cars parked in an area that is used primarily as a parking area for students returning from ome and their drivers?

These drivers are usually parents who have parked the car and are helping carry things up to the room. Then along comes this wonderful officer enforcing this idiotic law.

Where is someone to park on a Sunday afternoon? Unless you walk at least a block over the poorly maintained and slippery sidewalks, there is no other place. Coinfeed ing those meters is ridiculous!

Parents of students support this University and the campus police through tuition and taxes. Then to add insult to injury, they must pop their coins in the meter with arms full of care packages and clean clothes.

Finally, when the meter runs out 30 minutes later, our boy in blue zeros in on the hapless car and adds a $4 gift for the ride What is it with this University? Every

Old-fashioned

In a world where kindness and consideration are considered "old-fashioned," I witnessed an event I would like you to know

At a recent Michigan State hockey game, a state senator and his party arrived at the game and were passed through the gates with no tickets. Evidently, there had been a mix-up as to what night his tickets were for; but the fact remains that he was inside the Munn Ice Arena with no place to sit.

Was there any action taken by acting MSU athletic director Jack Shingleton? No. Nor did anyone else come to the aid of this personage who is one of the men responsible for funding our University.

It was Burt Smith, a man humiliated by the University he sacrificed everything for over a 20-year period, who gladly gave up his seats for the senator. Mr. Smith's friends, Dr. and Mrs. Shnider, also gave up their seats to accommodate this man.

There have been few things said about Mr. Smith since the University dismissed him; but I, for one, feel he is probably the only human being in a University of computer-like human printouts. His concern has always been for MSU and its betterment, and he put this into action when he sacrificed his own comfort for someone who could benefit the University.

What a shame that the University show an equal amount of compassion dealings with this man.

Contempt for eristic cowards

On Dec. 9, very nearly three months ago, Marshall Ky rose to speak at Bailey Hall in Cornell University. Not quite on schedule, because an unannounced speaker, at the appointer hour, materialized, occupied the dium and harangued the crowded hall on the theme of Ky as a mass murderer, assassin and fascist — who jailed, tortured and killed tens of thousands of people. The self-invited speaker was not a student, but one Michael Parenti, a visiting professor of government. Perhans he is l e chair left vacant five years ago when the distinguished professor Walter Berns left Cornell in protest against the University's failure to discipline students who occupied critical parts of the University using only rifles. So far, no disciplinary action has been concluded.

Most of the crowd — Mr. Jim Myers account in the Ithaca Journal is exemplary in the detail of the evening - loved it. So that when Marshall Ky walked on stage he was greeted with derision, abuse and obscenities. He announced that in deference to the temper of the audience he would suspend his prepared speech and devote the evening to answering questions. But — he asked would the audience please give him just two minutes in which to make a statement? He proceeded, but two minutes proved too great a tax on the patience of the Ku Kluxers. "Nothing Ky said could appease the protesters in the slightest," reported the Journal, "and, in the end, as missiles and, it appeared, eggs and rotten fruit began to fly towards the stage, Ky stepped back from the podium, waited as the disruption grew, and finally left the hall, escorted by Cornell. Safety Division officers."

During the question period Ky was not so much asked as informed that he was: a) a fervent admirer of Adolph Hitler (Ky said he wasn't — his legendary reference had been only to Hitler's skills as a leader in the early 30s. In the same breath he had named Nasser); b) a dope smuggler (Ky denied it); and c) a land-thief (Ky explained that the land he "took" was undeveloped land, available to any Vietnamese who undertook to develop it).

A typical question from the floor was, "How do you sleep at night?" — no doubt asked by a young member of the revolutionary nobility in America whose scars date back to when he was sent to sleep by his mother without a Popsicle. The presumed hero of the evening was not a student, but an assistant professor of philosophy, Mr. Richard Miller. He spoke from the floor, referring to Marshall Ky only as "the creep." Mr. Miller wanted to know what Ky was doing there. The philosopher's impatience with the audience was, one gathers, in its failure to accept the role for which it was clearly qualified by temperament. "The

We feel that the Student Workers Union voted down.

The editorial commits the common fallacy mparing present conditions, with all its oblems, to the dream of future bliss, without any of those problems yet coming to light.

We need to realize that no system can possibly be perfect. Expecting some problems, the question that must be asked is: Are things so bad that a union is justified?

Some workers admittedly have complaints, but there is no evidence that there widespread discontent with University jobs. As a matter of fact, the University is a more considerate, flexible and convenient employer than most that we will find in the outside world.

Defenders of the Student Workers Union

cite problems in the areas of safety, grievance procedures, end-of-term layoffs and fairness of hiring and firing. They used to demand more pay. (They have eliminated the wage demands from SWU literature, presumably because students realized that increased pay would come out of their pockets in the form of tuition and dorm rate increases and lost jobs).

In the area of safety, they cite 796 injuries among student and regular workers in 1974. How many of these were students? Is the rate rising or declining? More important, have any of the other unions on campus succeeded in decreasing the number of injuries?

The University claims, and has not been refuted, that MSU has one of the best safety rates of any school in Michigan, and that injuries have declined recently, even though student employment has increased.

Moreover, since most injuries are cuts and burns caused by the workers' own negligence, it is not clear what the union could do to remedy it.

We agree that a grievance procedure less under the control of the University is desirable. However, it is not clear that a union is necessary to such a revision. Moreover, it is not clear that the advantage of a more red-taped procedure would be necessarily better than the present common-sense approach.

The files of grievances are open to inspection, and the Student Employment Office staff seems proud of its record in protecting students. Perhaps there would not be much improvement for most students in a new procedure.

SWU supporters claim that workers are laid off at the end of the term, and treated unfairly because of race or sex. However, the evidence is contrary. The retention rate is about 80 per cent, and minorities are employed in proportionately greater numbers at higher pay than are whites. (For a variety of good reasons).

Many of us feel that pay scales are too low. But we realize that major increases would have to be paid for by the University laying off students, and dorm rates increasing. Tuition might also rise.

Moreover, the union leaders have abandoned their early claim that they could raise So, what are the potential gains from the union? Some small safety improvements, at most; a more unwieldly grievance procedure; and NOTHING ELSE.

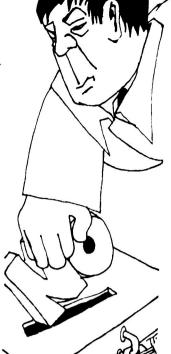

Balance against that the fact that the leaders of SWU — as the pro-SWU editorial recognized — are terribly irresponsible. If they remain the leaders - as they probably will, given their superior knowledge about the workings of the union - they could endanger the jobs of many of the students.

In addition, the extremity of their support for the union, and the scarcity of their respect for the truth, casts into doubt the validity of their arguments in favor of SWU, and the reliability of their professed devotion to democratic procedures.

Don't vote for the Union unless there is a good reason to do so. For almost all workers, this .neans vote "No."

And some raise the question of whether the drain can ever be improved enough to handle East Lansing's present problems, let alone problems that could come with more building. And if the drain can be improved, how much will it cost?

"I wouldn't put a figure on it," Quackenbush said. "Not enough is known.

One thing that is painfully obvious to residents is that water is not going anywhere. Several times last year water ocked streets, filled private yards and flooded parking lots. In many cases that flooding was by design. City policy dictates continued development is going to destroy that quality.

"Is it safe to have four-foot ponds in our backyards or anywhere in a neighborhood? Would any parent of young children want

Martens maintains that the city probably should not have allowed any development in the Remy-Chandler drainage district. He is opposed to any further development until studies are done to see if the area can support development.

I would at least like the city to make an attempt to prove to me that my conclusions are wrong," he said. "East Lansing should be concerned with protecting those people who already live here.'

However, East Lansing was one of two communities which initiated a petition to study Remy-Chandler improvement costs. Two communities are required in any action involving drains which overlap into several areas. Lansing was the other signer of that Patriarche believes a building moratorium could eventually lose about $29 million in assessed property value for East Lansing. In his report he also mentioned the possibility of lawsuits by developers in case the city does try to enforce a moratorium.

"Besides, there is a question of whether we should stop all building on the basis of storms that occur only a few times in 25 years," Patriarche said. "Would the benefits of a moratorium outweigh the costs?" Martens counters that nobody has ever asked that all building be stopped, just that building which would contribute to the George Merva, professor of agricultural engineering, believes building should be stopped at least until some study is completed on how building affects the problem. That type of study is not presently being done. "In any case, the present remedial work on the drain will take a minimum of three and more likely 10 years," Merva said. "I think we ought to have a moratorium because of the time lag between the initiation and the completion of a solution." Merva said that no matter how one looks at it, solutions will cost money and that the city has to face up to the costs. And he said in the district will cause problems too late to be solved. "My analysis as a hydrologist is that the Beechtree subdivision will cause flooding in Whitehills and other adjacent areas, closing the only street into the area.

"Perhaps we can live with the present problems but we can't keep compounding them. In my opinion, a moratorium should be imposed immediately and stuck to." However, the problem is not as obvious to others. "Sure, ponds are an inconvenience," city engineer Robert Bruce said. "But they disappear shortly after a rain. I think this whole Remy-Chandler drainage issue has been blown out of proportion. "It is not that much different from other drainage problems. Additional development will not make it significantly worse."

Bruce also said it is inevitable that most Remy Chandler land will someday be developed.

City Councilwoman Mary Sharp agrees with Bruce for the most part and says that new development is necessary to ease some of the city's housing problems.

"I believe a point is reached where development adds to the costs a city must think we have reached that point yet.

Sharp said many people are unduly alarmed abut the drainage problems. She said the reason for that is probably because of the storms that buffeted East Lansing in 1975, making the problems more obvious.

And city planner Scott Radway said it ould be impossible to predict the effects of a building moratorium because the drain is clogged. He also said that Clinton County does not want to spend money on improving the drain if the only reason for that would be to solve problems in East Lansing.

Quackenbush said many years remain before the drain will be improved and that building should at least be held up until the preliminary report is completed in July.

At least two other considerations affect development. Much of the land is always sinking and a high water table causes seasonal flooding in other areas.

"Soils in northern East Lansing are generally intermixed," Bob Roller of the Tri-County Regional Planning Commission said. "Between the organic soils (which are constantly shifting and sinking) and a high water table, about one third of the area is severely limited in development possitheoretically at least, that water should not be in streets or yards very often. But Roller guessed that the nature of the ground would cause water accumulation in the springtime and after heavy rains.

"However, the developers seems to have done a good job so far," he said. "Aerial photos show that most of the houses have been put in the areas with the least

And yet, angry residents point to waterlogged streets, basements and yards. They complain of unsafe conditions for their children. They believe developers are getting rich while their taxes and damage expenses increase. Martens and others object to further development because they believe it will worsen the problems of their neighborhoods. They question the wisdom of the city for allowing the original developments north of the Saginaw Highway.

"Give the builders two or three years and they'll develop all of East Lansing."
Martens said. "East Lansing should provide closer supervision of builders."

The idea is to ease the runoff into the drain by slowing it down. The rate of water movement is the important factor in drainage. However, though city policy has been firm on making developers provide on-site retention, it has been less firm on dictating the location of the retention

Consequently, they are scattered hap-hazardly in the newer developments north of Saginaw Road. Residents show photographs of two feet of water on residential streets, of large shallow puddles on chil-dren's playgrounds and of planned flooding in the parking lot of Villa Montee apart-

"We need a policy on those retention basins," Czarnecki said. "The city council has not yet put its foot down on that."

Czarnecki said one possible solution to that problem would be for the city to buy several lots which would then be fenced off and used solely as king-sized retention basins.

Dr. Richard Martens, an East Lansing said he will make a motion at the next M.D. who has devoted 10 months of his spare time to studying the problem, believes the number and size of the many retention ponds chips away at the quality of life in East Lansing.

"Many of us homeowners are here because we were attracted by the quality of life offered in East Lansing," he said. "But

Stories by staff writer Brad Martisius Photos by Dr. Richard Marten

An open ditch choked with weeds, a concrete culvert and miles of underground piping all qualify as storm drains in East Lansing.

They function as branches of a temporary river system, carrying away excess water that accumulates during severe storms.

That water is collected by several tributary drains which feed to the Remy-Chandler drain. From there it flows north to the Looking Glass River and into the Grand River. It is finally disgorged in a huge, muddy stream into Lake Michigan.

Unfortunately, the water does not move quickly enough in some areas and the temporary rivers turn into temporary lakes.

Part of the problem is that water does not soak through concrete. Added development means that more water runs off into other areas and that less total area must absorb an increasing volume of water. Drains should cope with that but the Remy-Chandler drain does not seem to do its job. The effectiveness of that system has turned East Lansing politics into a battleground.

Lines are sharply drawn. Homeowners who believe they are being trampled by greedy developers and apathetic city officials are on one side. On the other side are those same developers and city officials who feel the extent of the problem was exaggerated by a rainy 1975 and that the city is acting as effectively as it can under the circumstances.

The fact that the Remy-Chandler drain affects two counties and at least five municipalities complicates the issue and adds stumbling blocks that must be hurdled before

The drain is particularly important in East Lansing politics because almost all of East Lansing's vacant land lies in the 2.5 miles of the city served by the drain. That creates a philosophical and practical problem while somebody tries to decide if the problems of building there are offset by the benefits.

Should East Lansing or any other city expand indefinitely? Should the city halt building and ignore the housing pressures caused by a lack of cheap, available apartments?

John Patriarche, East Lansing's city manager, says that to cut back building would erode the city's tax base and eventually lead to fewer services provided by the city with Others are not so sure, citing the fact that extra homes and apartments mean more than added income. They point to the added expenses of maintaining those neighborhoods and of providing necessary services like schools or garbage pickup for the residents of them. They also point out that the benefits of expansion have never been properly weighed against

And they fear that they will have to put up with water in their basements, streets and yards several times every year at unreasonable personal expense.

ASMSU slates announce plans

Students for Better Govt.

The Students for Better Government (SBG) slate in the upcoming ASMSU election plans to bring the student dents through involvement and participation.

"The current ASMSU administration has difficulty filling committees and making appointments with students who are willing to make a commitment and put forth time and effort," the slate's spokeman

"Before any student government can be really effective that kind of an attitude must be changed." SBG believes in participation. The 20-member organization has a representative on the Academic Council and the Radio Board as well as on the ASMSU Board.

The major push of Students for Better Government is that ASMSU should be an active and accomplishing organization. Slate members feel that the current administration has failed in this aspect.

A slate spokesman pointed out that this year the ASMSU Board passed a bill to establish a housing commission. "They never filled it," he said, "and it never got off the ground. There was little publication of it so a lot of students didn't know it existed.'

Another area where SBG feels the ASMSU Board has been lax is dealing with the security provided for Pop Entertainment concerts.

"The board has not moved strongly to convert the security to the students," a slate member said. The group questions the necessity of paying Dept. of Public Safety officers $17.50 per man hour for each concert.

"I think that's a lot of money out the window. Students could probably do just as effective a job," a spokesman said.

The SBG are very much in favor of a restructuring of the ASMSU Board, though not necessarily through the recent All-University Council propo-

"There's definitely an imbalance," a slate member said. "The Intercooperative Council has 300 members and a vote, while some councils that don't have votes have many more members. The members of SBG profess

"The major problem with SWU is that it now seems more bent on confrontation than on accomplishing anything," late member said.

The SBG characterize themselves as "a personality-oriented organization, rather than an issue-oriented group."

New notion: Counterforce

The Counterforce slate wants to try something new. Ten candidates — one for the office of president and nine for the college representative board seats — are running together under the banner of "Counterforce: ASMSU as student advocate.

"student advocate" the slate means a group or body that works collectively for the student body in pursuing interests than an individual student would find insurmountable.

Examples of such issues as presented by Counterforce members include a federal court suit against the University to void the requirement that freshmen and sophomores live on campus and the publicizing of unfair tactics by area landlords and business people.

Another objective of Counterforce for a unified student body is to aid the organization of off-campus student workers in need of better working conditions and job security.

Counterforce was the brainchild of self-proclaimed political activist Mark Grebner, who maintains that he is only involved in the campaigning end. "I want to see people who I agree with in office. I'm no going to run the thing when it's Grebner said that he feels ASMSU is important enough to put "good people in there." However, he feels that the body has been plagued by "do-no-thing" administrations for several years.

The main problem with the current ASMSU structure as seen by Counterforce is the idea that ASMSU is a student government. Slate members maintain that in order to be a governing body the group must have some power. Counterforce says that

'ASMSU was created by the University administration and doesn't have — and can't get — any power." The slate maintains that ASMSU should serve as a student advocate, "for the rights and interests of students in relation to the large institutions that live off students."

"Counterforce would like to put ASMSU spending priorities in places where they'd do most good," one slate member said. Then we can see if something can really be made out of ASMSU.

Another slate member said that ASMSU should spend more money on legal services for the students and should consider a full-time attorney for student consultation. On the issue of the Student

Worker's Union (SWU) Counterforce has failed to take a firm position. "Most of us are sympathetic to the idea of a union on campus," Grebner said. "We just wish the para noids were out of control of it (SWU)."

Grebner did say that the slate would most likely be in favor of voting in the union as it is and then instituting a new administration. "They (SWU) are interested in a way to build a revolution," Grebner said.
"The union's sights should be a

Progressive Action slate

The Progressive Action slate believes that ASMSU is underused. One of the two largest slates running for ASMSU Board seats and president, Progressive Action has ten candidates in the upcoming election.

"ASMSU has a lot of potential as a student organization," one slate member said, "but the present board and president don't seem to be really concerned with student interests."

Among those issues Progressive Action feels ASMSU should deal with is the problem with the pedestrian crosswalks on campus. "Students are supposed to have the right of way, a slate member said, "But that's not enforced."

Another concern of the Progressive Action slate is what they see as "general harass-ment of students" by campus police. "They wake up students in the middle of the night for traffic violations," a Progressive Action candidate said. "They wouldn't do that to a middle class man."

Though one slate member said that the group had not taken an official stance on the Worker's Union (SWU), several Progressive Action candidates vocalized "complete support" for the

The slate that calls themselves advocates of "an active student government" also expressed concern about the quality of the services offered by the present Legal Services and Pop Entertainment cabinets.

"heavy" playing.

Much of the press that the Californian band has received described Journey's music as "space-rock." While that term might be a shade off the mark, critics can't be blamed for having difficulty in pinning down the group's style. The combination of Aynsley Dunbar's overpowering drumming Gregg Rolie's droning organ is a completely unique one. Neal Schon's guitar playing - and the very dynamics of the group's own compositions — combine with Dunbar and Rolie to establish a sound for Journey that often approaches Santana at its early best (and of course, with Rolie and Schon that can't be helped), combined with some of the tastier el-these days, Journey is fated to go ill-described for at least two more albums.

Monday night, Journey played the better parts of both of its albums. "On A Saturday Night," the album's opener, is slated for single release in three weeks and could very easily make the band nationally known. That and "Of A Lifetime" were superb in concert, and the latter song particularly made clear that the group's musicianship is faultless — and quite sophisticated.

Journey received an encore and doubtlessly would have played much longer - the group members seemed keyed for it - was it not the "warm-up band."

The main attraction - the Electric Light Orchestra next took to the stage. After a cute opener - two illuminated genie-types crouched and pointed in wonderment at an electric light bulb — E.L.O. broke into the intruduction of "Face the Music," taped segments and all. In an interesting choice of material, vocalist/guitarist Jeff Lynne went back and forth through all of the group's five albums and played bits of each including a few verses of "Do Ya," from Lynne's Move days.

Two things were apparent in E.L.O.'s show. One, the whole of its repertoire consists of some very fine material - at times Beatlish, perhaps - but Lynne is a songwriting talent in his own right and the group spends most of its time onstage trying to replicate its recorded sound. However, there is nothing wrong with this in itself, as arrangements have always been Lynne's forte -

E.L.O.'s very formation was to do such

Secondly, the members of the group, particularly cellist Hugh MacDowell, drummer Bev Bevan and guitarist Lynne himself, are all outstanding musicians and can improvise at leisure.

Thus, the E.L.O. has the best of two worlds at its disposal. It made the best of both of them Monday night.

One surprising change in the group's lineup has made things little easier for Jeff Lynne. As the group's lead vocalist, he undoubtedly has a difficult time reaching all the highs he manages to put down on vinyl. With the addition of bassist/vocalist Kelly Groucutt, vocals are no longer a strain or a problem for Lynne. Groucutt's voice is almost identical to Lynne's though Lynne's preference for distorted, echoed vocals is obvious. Because of his higher range, Groucutt can gracefully finish off any phrase Lynne has trouble reaching.

With an excellent cello solo by madcap cellist Hugh Mac-Dowell, and a not-so-good-buthumorous violin solo by Mik Kaminski, there were enough diversions in the E.L.O.'s performance to complete a perfectly rounded-out show. The group's performance made clear that Jeff Lynne's orchestral dreams have been satisfied once and for all and his rockand-roll talents have hardly been obscured. Lynne is one of a handful of musicians who are capable of writing both a tune as beautiful as "Eldorado" and the rocking "Do Ya."

With Journey, the Electric Light Orchestra completed an night of exceptionally good music. Both bands have more skill, collectively and individually, than most other rock and-

End near for five icers

That's what the five seniors on the MSU varsity hockey team (Tom Ross, Daryl Rice, Steve Colp, Brendan Moroney and John Sturges) wish they had left to play at MSU. Colp has mixed feelings about his last year at MSU.

"In a way I'm sad," Colp said,

"I don't know about the other guys, but I can't concentrate on classes on the day of a game."

The five do manage to get psyched up though, and they say they will be ready for Wisconsin tonight.

It'll be one big weekend of gymnastics when coach George Szypula and the Spartans host the Big Ten Championships at Jenison Fieldhouse March 26 and 27. All eight Big Ten gymnastics teams will be battling for a bid at the NCAA Championships held April 1 through 3 at Philadelphia, Pa. To do that, however, a team must win the Big Ten crown plus score no less than 400 points in the compulsories and optionals competition of the Big Ten Meet. In addition, the team finishing second at the Big Ten meet, if it scores 400 points, may also have a chance at making the trip to Philadelphia.

The meet will open with the compulsories competition at 10

U-M is the defending Big Ten Champion and will probably repeat as champions this year. The Wolverines totaled 419.80 points in last year's Big Ten, in addition to claiming first place in four of the six individual events. U-M ended this year's season with a 9-1 record and a against the Spartans.

however, how the remaining six teams will finish is any body's guess. Szypula said that he feels the Spartans, who ended the season with a 9-6 mark, are the favored team to take the third-place spot.

But of the Big Ten teams that the Spartans have faced this year who will also be looking for a third-place spot, only Illinois fell victim to MSE with State all handing that parties a loss. Illinois ended the season with a 5-8 record and team high of 205.10, Indiana 5-4 with a high of 199.20, Wisconsin 5-7 with a high of 196.30 and Ohio State 9-3 with a high of 191.90 points. Iowa finished third in the Big ten last year with 388.30 points, but the Hawkeyes have had their share of troubles this season, finishing with a 3-9 record and a team high of 197.60 points.

"We've got to hit excellent compulsories and improve a little on our optionals, and if we do that, I think we can pull into third," Szypula said. "It's not going to be easy but I think we ASMSU slates state plans plagues underclassmen in campus residence halls. They feel that as a possible alleviation of the problem the University requirement that freshmen and sophomores live on campus should be abolished.

Concern about the care and services offered by the University Health Center is a prime issue the Better Way candidates want to address.

"I've heard countless complaints from students, not only about the waiting, but about the quality of health care offered," a slate member said.

"I've also been told that they really need a full-time woman gynecologist. We'd like to look into the health center as a whole and see if something can be done," he said.

Better Way candidates he-lieve that the racial tensions on campus could be overcome by a more unified student body with better formal and informal communication between all groups.

The slate is not in favor of giving the human relations councils a vote on the board because they feel each student is amply represented through his college and his residence. The campus parking problem is a high priority item with the Better Way slate. Though they regard the complete ban of traffic on campus as unrealistic, the slate members feel that a moratorium on automobiles in the North Circle area might alleviate some problems. They also feel that if the commuter parking lots were closer to the main buildings there would be less traffic during the rush hours. "So many people now are dropped off and picked up every day. That contributes quite a bit to the traffic." Better Way also objects to the ticketing policy of the Dept. of Public Safety (DPS). "I just wish they'd be consistent." a slate member said. "I parked my car in the same place for two months and now suddenly it's illegal.'

The widow of the late civil rights leader Martin Luther King, Jr., said at MSU Tuesday that she was glad that the existence of an FBI file on her husband has come to light.

"It's heartwarming to find out officially that all these things (surveillance tactics) had been happening." Coretta Scott King said in an appearance at

"I had heard the rumor that there was an effort to discredit him. I think these revelations have helped to vindicate my husband.

King's appearance on campus was sponsored by the College of Urban Development. She spoke to a crowd of about 400 persons at the Union, as well as a student group at Hubbard Hall.

She was asked at her Union appearance whether she felt ousing was an effective tool to help black children gain a better education.

"The busing issue is not busing - it's whether or not we're going to invest enough in our educational system," King said. "If we were concentrating enough on the right thing, busing would not be an issue.

"But it is an issue. If we made all schools better schools it would not be a problem. People wouldn't mind having their children bused — in fact they would welcome it."

During her appearance at the Union, King reminisced about her early life growing up in Marion, Ala.

"One of the things that marked my childhood was that we were a very religious fami-ly," King said. "We felt we were the children of God, and that God loved his children Therefore we could walk with

After eating lunch in the Hubbard Hall cafeteria, King told a group of students that she was alarmed at the dropping level of student interest in political issues "I think it's terribly important for young people to be involved," she said. "I think it's time for a good student movement to emerge." The soft-spoken woman said she felt young people today were more serious minded than they had been in previous years. King said that instead of civil rights, many people were worried about finding jobs.

She spoke about the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Social Change in Atlanta, which she heads. The center works with interns, several from MSU, on social issues and helps them find jobs after they

King said she does not feel the civil rights movement which her husband led has disappeared. Rather, she said it has turned to different kinds of involvement in political issues.

Much of our leadership has moved to another level of political involvement," she explained. "I think we must now try to work through state legislatures for action.
