lawyers fail in 11th hour appeals

By the ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mark Gilmore, convicted Utah murderer, will be executed before a firing squad, as he had wanted to, at 9:49 a.m. Sunday in Utah, about 9:49 a.m. local time.

Gilmore prepared for death calmly — writing letters, talking to family members with relatives and trying to comfort his attorneys Sunday night.

"I've received a gift, in that I know when I'm going and that I can make plans," lawyer Ronald Stanger quoted Gilmore as saying just hours before he was to face a firing squad in the first execution in the United States in nearly 10 years.

Hours before Gilmore was to die, lawyers for two other condemned prisoners tried to get the Supreme Court to intervene and halt Gilmore's execution by a Utah firing squad. The lawyers were turned down Sunday night by Justices Byron R. White, and Harry Blackmun. Each refused to halt the execution, scheduled for sunrise Monday at Point of the Mountain, Utah.

The lawyers also tried to submit their plea to Justice Thurgood Marshall, but were told by the clerk of the court that Marshall was not available.

Marshall had appeared to be the best possibility for granting a stay of execution. He has said the death penalty is unconstitutional because it is cruel and unusual punishment.

A single justice could grant a stay of execution.

The lawyers said Gilmore's death would prejudice their challenges of the state's death penalty law.

White, who represents the high court in urgent matters from the 10th U.S. circuit which includes Utah, said in a two-sentence denial of the request that he was authorized to say that a majority of the court's other eight justices agreed with his decision.

Gilmore, 36, was sentenced for killing Bennie Bushnell, 26, a Provo, Utah, motel clerk in July. He also admitted killing an Orem service station attendant, Max David Jensen, 24, the night before. Both murders were during robberies and both victims left a young widow and child.

Attorney Stanger, one of the condemned man's designated witnesses, said Gilmore was happy that two U.S. Supreme Court justices had rejected 11th-hour appeals to stay the execution.

Stanger said Gilmore placed a call to a member of his family on Sunday night, but he declined to say who Gilmore called, calling it a private matter.

Stanger said Gilmore discussed "family matters" with his uncle, Vern D'Amico, and D'Amico's wife and daughter, who also visited the prisoner Sunday night.

D'Amico, Stanger and another Gilmore attorney, Robert Moody, planned to stay with Gilmore until sunrise, when the execution is to be carried out.

Gilmore, as allowed by law, asked five people to witness his death — his lawyers, his uncle Vern D'Amico, his girlfriend Nicole Barrett and Lawrence Schiller, a Hollywood promoter who bought book and film rights to Gilmore's life story. Warden Smith said it was assumed the hospital would not allow Barrett to attend.

As lawyers debated their options, opponents to capital punishment decried the pending death. One termed the sunrise — 7:49 a.m. MST — shooting a "Super Bowl of violence."

Student found dead in South Complex

An MSU student was found dead in his Holden Hall room Sunday night. The cause of death has not been disclosed.

The Ingham County Medical Examiner has ordered an autopsy for sometime today, but campus police would not divulge the identity of the student until next of kin are notified.

Sergeant George Groll said that campus police received a call that a body had been found at 7:25 p.m. Sunday evening. Groll did not know who discovered the body, which he said was male.

Police refused to verify reports that the student was found hanging in the Holden Hall room, but say they are investigating. "We're not going to speculate at this point on the cause of death," Groll said.

Holden Hall Head Advisor James Fielder refused to comment on the death.

MSU students entitled to grade depicting instructors' good faith

This is part of a State News series examining the Student Handbook and the Academic Freedom Report governing MSU students.

By SUZIE ROLLINS

State News Staff Writer

Academic rights and responsibilities of both students and faculty provide for an effective educational process on the MSU campus, according to Article 2 of the Academic Freedom report in the Student Handbook.

The Freedom Report also states that the primary intellectual purpose of the University, its intellectual content and integrity, is the responsibility of the faculty.

Article 2 of the report is devoted to the academic rights and responsibilities of students and the professional rights of the faculty. It discusses in depth the relationship between students and faculty.

According to the report, the student is responsible for learning the content of a course abiding by the standards set by faculty members. The student is entitled to a course grade that represents his instructor's good faith judgment of his performance in the class.

A lack of good faith on the instructor's part may be proven by the fact that the student's grade was based either partly or entirely on considerations irrelevant to the student's performance in the course.

MSU students are also protected under the report against improper disclosure of information concerning their grades, views, beliefs, political associations, health or character which an instructor acquires during the course.

academic freedom FOR STUDENTS AT MICHIGAN STATE UNIVERSITY

For example, if a student contends that he has received an unfair or bad-faith grade in a course he should first file a complaint in the department where the course is offered. If he is still discontent with the decision he may request a hearing on the college level. If the college level fails to rule a decision that is satisfactory to the student he may appeal his case to the Student-Faculty Judiciary which is the highest judiciary on campus.

However, even if the Student-Faculty Judiciary rules that a grade was given to a student under the bad-faith judgment of an instructor, the faculty member does not have to retract the grade given to the student, the reason being under the guidelines that are standing in the report a faculty member does not have to abide by the judicial decision.

Currently, the University Committee on Student Affairs has proposed amendments for Article 2 that would enable the Student-Faculty Judiciary's decision would be implemented regardless of the faculty member's choice.

"The article needs to be amended," Eldon Nonnamaker, vice president of student affairs, said. "It spells out the rights and responsibilities but it doesn't state ways to implement the decisions."

The amendments are now being discussed in the elected Faculty Council and the elected Student Council.

"The amendments have a high chance of being passed," Nonnamaker said.

The reason the original document never contained a clause for implementation is due to the fact that the authors never dreamed that a faculty member wouldn't abide by the decision of the Student-Faculty Judiciary, Michelle Matel, student council member said.

Since the report was written, the ombudsman's office has had several cases where the faculty member refused to adhere to the judiciary's decision. Therefore, students and faculty decided that an amendment must be added to provide for implementation of judicial rulings.

"It is important that we have a defined course of implementation," Matel said.

Both Nonnamaker and Matel agree that the amendments will be passed to give the Student-Faculty Judiciary the highest authority in decision-making, which would allot it power to overrule the faculty member's judgment if necessary.

U. S. citizens charged with espionage

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two U.S. citizens have been charged with conspiring to commit espionage by passing secret documents, film and other material to a Soviet agent in Mexico.

FBI Director Clarence M. Kelley said Sunday that Christopher John Boyce, 23, of Rancho Palos Verdes, Calif., was arrested on Sunday at his home. Kelley said the second man, Andrew Dalton Lee, 25, also of Palos Verdes, is in the custody of Mexican authorities.

Boyce had been a clerk at TRW Inc., a computer firm in Redondo Beach, Calif., where he had top security clearance.

The FBI said Lee, an unemployed cabinet-maker, was arrested in Mexico City on Jan. 6 and at the time of his arrest had three roles of microfilm containing U.S. defense information classified top secret.

GROUP TO INSURE NO MORTGAGE REDLINING

committee to review loan denials

By SUE STEWARD

State News Staff Writer

Loan denials from area lenders that are not practiced in the Lansing area are not practiced in the Lansing area, nine mortgage-lending institutions agreed Friday they will form a committee to review loan denials.

The committee was formed just days after the release of Governor's Task Force report which called for a crackdown on redlining.

Redlining, as defined by the task force, is the denial of a mortgage to an individual because of the area in which the property to be built or is located. Areas are redlined if they are deemed a poor credit risk by lenders.

The committee will review mortgage denials of owner-occupied single-family residential properties where a loan has been denied and the applicant believes the denial was based on the property location, Michael Hofmann, vice president of American Bank and Trust, said.

"We don't think there is a problem," Hoffman said, "but we want to make sure."

"The committee will be a primary vehicle to insure that redlining will not exist in the greater Lansing area," Charles M. Hopkins, loan committee chairperson for Capitol Savings and Loan, said. Hopkins will head the new Lansing Area Mortgage Lenders Review Committee.

The committee has proposed that when any home buyer believes his mortgage was denied due to property location, he may ask the committee to review the application.

If the committee determines the reason for denial was property location, it will tell the lending institution of its decision and force the lending institution to review the application.

If the institution again declines to process a loan, the committee will try to get a loan with another lending institution.

"Terms and conditions for loans differ among institutions, and we will attempt to find an institution which will accept the loan," Charles W. Shane, vice president of American Bank and Trust, said. Shane is vice chairperson of the mortgage review committee.

"Participation on the committee is totally voluntary, but we will also review the mortgages of institutions which do not participate," Hofmann said.

Institutions supporting the committee are: American Bank and Trust, Bank of Commerce of Lansing, Bank of Lansing, Capitol Savings and Loan, East Lansing State Bank, First Savings Association of East Lansing, Edward G. Hacker Co., Michigan National Bank and Union Savings and Loan Association.

A representative of the Lansing Coalition on Redlining and Reinvestments will be on the committee in an advisory capacity, Hopkins said.

A task force from the lenders' committee is finalizing administrative details for the committee and obtaining approval from the Michigan Department of Justice for the committee's functions before any application can be reviewed.

"We expect the committee to be fully functional within 45 to 60 days, which will be well in advance of the traditionally active spring buying period for homes," Hopkins said.

Animal deaths at 'U' fuel dispute

Protection groups, researchers clash over use of vivisection in classroom

By MICHAEL MACKSOOD

State News Staff Writer

The State University Medical School sacrifices 140 dogs in the classroom to teach students learn physiology and surgery each week.

Animal protection agencies and some medical students are upset over the use of dogs.

U's College of Veterinary Medicine uses dogs for teaching and researchers in other departments in the University use them in their work.

Animal protection groups on campus and the area are, at times, in conflict with the University over the use of the dogs.

A controversy over the ethics of killing animals to advance science is not new. The issue is as old as research.

Proper to cause the academic death of animals in the classroom or research lab in order to contribute to scientific knowledge?

There are compelling arguments on both sides of the issue.

E. Howe, lab animal care assistant, said MSU uses 3,000 dogs a year and about 800 cats, as well as a large number of rats and mice.

"About 90 per cent of the dogs are used for acute experiments where the dog is given anesthetic, the procedure is done and the dog never wakes up," Howe said.

The majority of dogs and cats used by MSU are purchased from area dog pounds. "These are unwanted dogs, they're going to be killed anyway," Howe said.

Howe, who is in charge of caring for animals and delivering them to different departments, said that MSU's care facilities are much better than the pounds.

Most dogs here are kept in floor pens 6 feet wide and 12 feet long. Howe said there are federal regulations governing the care of research animals.

"Federal inspectors visit us regularly. We are well within the federal regulations," he said.

One of the biggest users of dogs for teaching purposes on campus is the Small Animal Surgery and Medicine Department within the College of Veterinary Medicine.

Robert G. Schirmer, associate chairperson of the department, said the department is interested in teaching students surgery.

"There is really no substitute for actually practicing the techniques," Schirmer said. He said the department uses films when it can but veterinary students must practice the actual surgery sometime.

The choice, Schirmer said, is to use these dogs from the pound or privately owned animals brought to the clinic.

Schirmer stressed that dogs from the pound are going to be killed anyway so if the school uses them at least something positive will be accomplished by their death.

He said the discomfort of the animals used in the classroom is small. They are put under anesthetic and never re-awaken.

However Rick Doyle, chairperson of the MSU branch of the Fund for Animals, said a lot of vivisection (operation on a live animal) is unnecessary.

"In many cases films could be used or when necessary the professor could do one vivisection for the whole class," Doyle said.

Doyle said his group is opposed to any unnecessary cruelty to animals.

"The only reason people can get away with doing unnecessary vivisection is because there is such an overpopulation of dogs and cats," Doyle said.

The Fund for Animals, he said, would prefer to solve the overpopulation problem by educating the public to pet birth control methods.

Doyle is not impressed with the fact that MSU is within federal guidelines regulating the care and use of research animals.

He said he is not satisfied that animals are treated with proper respect just because a given institution follows federal laws.

"You have to understand that in many cases these rules are minimum requirements and nothing more," Doyle said.

Students are not required to take part in any vivisection in classes, Doyle said, and he is trying to let them know that.

"We called up the departments on campus last year which are involved in vivisection," Doyle said. "We found that students do not have to do the procedure if they don't want. They can observe without participating and their grade will not be affected."

PLO sets conditions for Daoud trial

ALGIERS, Algeria (AP) — The Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO) has laid down conditions for a trial in West Germany of Palestinian leader Abu Daoud for allegedly masterminding the Munich Olympic massacre.

The PLO bureau in Algiers said in order for such a trial to take place, the court involved must be a "political tribunal" and the procedure must be "based on justice."

In addition, the PLO said, German judicial authorities must present "real material proof" of Daoud's participation in the 1972 Munich raid, and the proofs offered must not come from Zionist propaganda campaigns, the Zionist Intelligence services or the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

Daoud said he "would take the first plane" to Germany to face trial if the West German government would guarantee protection for him and make all arrangements through the PLO. Observers said that would imply some measure of recognition for the organization from Bonn and thus would make such a trial unlikely.

Floods deluge northern Argentina

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina (AP) — Week-long floods along the Parana River have inundated scores of small farming communities in northern Argentina and forced the evacuation of more than 1,000 residents, police said Sunday.

No casualties or major damage have been reported, they said. About 5,000 head of cattle have been shipped from the flooded areas to drier pastures.

A series of storms a week ago swelled many rivers in northern Argentina, including a 1,000-mile stretch of the Parana from the Paraguay-Brazil border to Santa Fe Province, 400 miles north of Buenos Aires.

Farmlands in the provinces of Misiones, Chaco, Corrientes and Santa Fe were flooded.

Chinese official may resume activities

TOKYO (AP) — A Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson says ousted Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping can resume government activities if he corrects his errors, the Japanese newspaper Asahi said Sunday.

The spokesperson's remarks were seen as the latest in a series of signals that the 72-year-old heir to the pragmatic policies of the late Premier Chou En-lai may be making a second comeback.

Teng was ousted in disgrace as general secretary of the Chinese Communist party by radical leaders during the 1967 Cultural Revolution. Chou brought him back into favor in 1973 and he was made vice premier, but after Chou's death a year ago the radicals brought Teng down again.

Foreign journalists said crowds that flocked to Peking's giant Tian An Men Square over the past week to mark the anniversary of Chou's death reacted favorably to wall posters calling for Teng's rehabilitation and even his promotion to premier.

Quick conclusion of canal treaty urged

WASHINGTON (AP) — At least seven Latin American presidents have addressed a personal message to President-elect Carter urging quick conclusion of a new Panama Canal treaty yielding substantial U.S. control of the waterway and its zone to Panama.

A special emissary bearing their letter was due in Washington late Sunday. Foreign Minister Gonzalo Fazio of Costa Rica was to meet Secretary of State-designate Cyrus D. Vance on Tuesday to hand over the document for transmission to Carter.

He then planned to fly back to Panama City to report on the results of his talk to Brig. Gen. Omas Torrijos Herrera, the country's ruler.

Latin American diplomats, reporting this development Sunday, said up to five or six other heads of governments in the region also have agreed to back up the initiative in exchanges with the new Carter Administration in the next few weeks.

Sorensen attacks unfair, Carter says

PLAINS, Ga. (AP) — President-elect Carter said Sunday that attacks on the qualifications of Theodore Sorensen to serve as director of the Central Intelligence Agency are "groundless and unfair."

Carter reaffirmed his confidence and support for Sorensen in the wake of reports that his nomination is in serious trouble in the Senate and that several members of the Senate Intelligence Committee have asked him to withdraw Sorensen's name.

"There have been personal attacks on Sorensen's judgment and loyalty that are groundless and unfair," Carter said.

He said Sorensen's actions concerning confidential government documents "are consistent with what I understand to have been common practice in administrations of both parties."

Sorensen is scheduled to appear before the Senate Intelligence Committee today.

Amtrak train derailed in Alabama

BIRMINGHAM, Ala. (AP) — Ten cars of an Amtrak train derailed in the predawn hours Sunday, spilling some of its passenger cars down a steep embankment and sending 149 persons to hospitals for treatment of injuries, most of which were called minor.

A spokesperson for Amtrak said the injured were taken to 11 hospitals in the Birmingham area.

Four of the cars slid down the embankment and others which derailed remained on the right-of-way.

A spokesperson for Amtrak in Washington said the Louisville and Nashville Railroad reported that the 20-car Florida was moving at 43 miles an hour in a 45-mile-an-hour zone at the time of the derailment.

Amtrak officials went to the scene in the Fultondale community, about 15 miles north of Birmingham, but the cause of the accident was not determined immediately, the spokesperson said.

Crew abandons freighter in Pacific

HONOLULU (AP) — The Swiss merchant ship Romandie picked up the 25-man crew of a sinking Panamanian freighter in the mid-Pacific on Sunday, the Coast Guard said.

The crew of the 400-foot Crown Pearl took to lifeboats and life rafts in heavy seas, a spokesperson said. The Romandie had been standing by for rescue operation and picked up the crewmen within two hours, according to Lt. Robert

V. Renaud, Coast Guard information officer.

The Romandie will continue its voyage to Kobe, Japan, with the Crown Pearl crewmen aboard, Renaud said.

The captain of the Crown Pearl radioed Saturday night that he and his crew were leaving the sinking ship, but they apparently waited for daylight, Renaud said.

COUNTRIES FOLLOW CARTER POSITION

Nuclear policies toughening

As Jimmy Carter prepares to take office, several key countries already are moving toward the kind of tough policy advocated by the President-elect to deter the spread of nuclear weapons.

Both France and West Germany, under strong pressure from the United States, last month announced tighter restrictions affecting the export of sensitive nuclear technology to Third World countries.

Earlier last year, the British government said it would "exercise restraint" over exports of facilities to produce plutonium, enriched uranium or heavy water — crucial materials for making nuclear bombs. Despite the tougher stance on nuclear nonproliferation by Western supplier nations, however, Pakistan and Brazil so far have shown no interest in cancelling already signed deals to purchase nuclear fuel reprocessing plants.

Joseph S. Nye Jr., a Harvard professor of government who is to be the Carter Administration's chief official on nuclear nonproliferation, said recent developments in Paris and Bonn indicated "very impressive movement" toward the firm policy favored by the United States.

"In the last couple of months we've been moving in the right direction," he said. "But it's a long, hard road."

Carter told a San Diego audience last Sept. 25 that U.S. policy on nonproliferation had amounted to "a constant yielding to the manufacturers of atomic products and to those who very cynically say there is no way to control the spread of nuclear capabilities. We have failed miserably."

Many nuclear specialists have contended that the sale of reprocessing plants to Third World countries is particularly dangerous because the plutonium extracted by such plants from spent atomic reactor fuel could be diverted readily to production of nuclear weapons.

In a communique Dec. 16, the French government said it "has decided, until further notice, not to authorize the signature of any further bilateral contracts for the sale to other countries of industrial plants for the reprocessing of radioactive fuel."

Earlier, France had yielded to U.S. pressure to bar the pending sale of a reprocessing plant to South Korea. But the French policy change last month did not nullify the reprocessing plant deal with Pakistan because that contract had already been formally signed.

The United States reported to have won a deal with Pakistan that going ahead with the reprocessing plant might jeopardize pending sales of U.S. arms to Pakistan, including an order of 110 A7 fighter planes.

However, Pakistan's defense and foreign minister, Aziz Ahmed, reiterated Jan. 3 that the country intends to proceed with the nuclear deal despite opposition from the United States as well as Canada. "No third country has any right to demand that Pakistan should abandon the reprocessing plant," Ahmed declared.

Man pleads guilty in reporter's death

Phoenix, Ariz. (AP) — The state attorney general said Sunday the investigation into the car bombing death of reporter Don Bolles will continue following the guilty plea of one person and the arrest of two others in the alleged conspiracy.

Millionaire wholesale liquor dealer, Kemper S. Marley Sr., remained a mysterious figure in the case.

An affidavit filed in Superior Court Saturday said John Harvey Adamson, who pleaded guilty to the Bolles murder, Max Anderson Dunlap and James Robinson plotted to kill Bolles, state Atty. Gen. Bruce Babbitt and a former Marley employee, Al Lisanez, at the behest of Marley.

Marley has not been located for comment and state officials have refused to say whether he will be charged in the case.

On Saturday, Adamson, a racing dog breeder, pleaded guilty to a reduced charge of second-degree murder in turn for his testimony against others in the case.

Jury selection was under way when Adamson agreed to plead guilty. In addition to the promise to testify, Adamson will accept a 48- to 49-year prison term under which he will not be eligible for parole until he serves 20 years and two months in jail. Formal sentencing will await conclusion of his testimony.

Three hours before announcement of the agreement, contractor and developer Dunlap, 47, and Robinson, 54, a plumber, were arrested on charges of first-degree murder of the reporter and conspiracy to commit first-degree murder.

They are being held in bond in Maricopa County pending a Jan. 24 preliminary hearing.

Dunlap previously had been charged with plotting the bombing but he was charged with the money and delivery of the bomb. He was given the same charge as Robinson, who was charged with the money and delivery of the bomb.

Robinson, while in friendship with Adamson, denied any involvement in the case.

According to the affidavit, police detective Jon S. Bolles was one of Adamson and Robinson's contacts. Bolles, who was acting for Marley, was investigating reporter stories while Marley was considered for a position as State Racing Commission official.

Bolles said Marley had accused of nepotism a member of the state legislature in the 1960s. An action resulted.

African coast socialist state withstands 'imperialist' attack

NIAMEY, Niger (AP) — "Imperialist mercenaries" attacked the major city in neighboring Benin on Sunday but were routed by Government troops, Benin's president said in broadcasts monitored here.

Benin is an impoverished socialist state on Africa's west coast, and the fighting erupted in the port city and administrative center of Cotonou.

A U.S. Embassy official, reached by telephone in Cotonou, said a curfew had been imposed. He described the fighting as "scattered at best."

Benin President Mathieu Kerekou said in broadcast statements that the attackers were being driven out of Cotonou and he appealed to citizens to help capture them. In another broadcast, Kerekou said combat units were defending Cotonou "with revolutionary relentlessness."

According to a Benin government statement, "white and African mercenaries paid by international imperialism" landed early Sunday morning at the airport just outside Cotonou.

They attacked various districts around the city, including the main road to Togo and Ghana, but Benin armed forces drove them out and forced the aircraft in which they had landed to take off, the statement said.

The U.S. Embassy spokesperson said a curfew for everyone except military personnel was imposed at 7:30 p.m., 1:30 p.m. EST, with no time set for it to be lifted.

He said the embassy had received no reports of casualties, "certainly not to Americans."

Cotonou was "awakened by small-arms fire from the direction of the airport" early Sunday but the city was "completely calm" throughout the day, he said.

There was no indication how many "mercenaries" were involved, where they came from or what they hoped to achieve, the embassy official said.

Cotonou radio called on "revolutionary committees" to barricade roads leading out of the city, especially those heading toward Togo, and to seize any suspects, "black or white."

The United States marks the 17th day of the search for a missing person, a 19-year-old MSU student who has been listed as a missing person since Jan. 8.

babysitting at a nearby home. She and her fiancé, MSU student Don G. Miller, 22, left the babysitting job and went over to Miller's house at nearby 580 Gainsborough Drive, where he lives with his parents.

According to Miller, the two stayed there until about 11:30 p.m. and then went for a drive around the east end of East Lansing until he took her home at 2 a.m. Police have not released any detailed information of that drive.

Miller said that when he took Young home neither of them went into the house, and when he drove away, Young was sitting on the front steps.

Young's mother, who had arrived home that night between 1 and 1:30 a.m., she said, was upstairs in bed but did not hear her daughter come in, her house dogs bark, or any cars in the driveway. She said she might have dozed off, but claims she usually wakes up when Young comes home.

Young was reported missing by her mother at about 7:30 a.m. New Year's Day when her mother woke up and realized Young was not home.

Young's family, friends and fiancé said she is not the type to go off without telling someone. Police spokesmen agreed that it does not seem that likely that Young is a runaway, but they haven't discounted it as a possibility, they said.

Young had registered and paid her fees for winter term at MSU and was to start a part-time job Jan. 8.

According to her mother, Young had made plans for the coming week and had little money with her. There was $125 in cash, a gift from her father, in Young's room, her mother said, and there were no clothes missing.

Police have been checking with former friends in Texas, where Young lived and went to college for two years after leaving East Lansing High School, but have turned up nothing.

She had a heavy school schedule and few close friends except Miller, to whom she has been engaged for about two months and has spent most of her time with since returning to Michigan last spring, her mother said.

Though Young's parents are divorced, her mother said there were no unusual family problems. Young was a member of a local church and a religious campus organization.

Miller said Young had discussed possible family problems with him, but said it would be improper for him to talk about such things with the press. Her father has since come up from Texas to help in the search.

Young's mother said her daughter often wondered about her upcoming marriage.

The police have not completely discounted the possibility that she ran away, but have said that as more time goes by, other possibilities must be more seriously considered. As of yet, however, they said there is little indication of foul play.

A party of off-duty police officers across the street from the Young home were leaving at about 2 a.m. when Miller said he brought her home. A few reportedly cut across the Young's yard to get home, though no specific time has been given. None of the officers reported hearing or seeing anything unusual.

There are few bushes around the house to hide in, neighbors reported nothing unusual, and there were no signs of a scuffle, police said. Helicopter and foot patrol searches have turned up little in the way of clues. Footprints and car tracks around the area were badly affected by drifting snows, police said.

Police are now asking for the help of anyone with any information to contact them. At the time of her disappearance, Young was wearing a blue ski jacket with a grey fur collar, rust-orange colored plaid slacks, tan shoes (Earth Shoe type), a green and blue woven scarf, brown rimmed glasses, a pouch-type purse, a bracelet-type watch and an engagement ring.

She is about 5 feet 2 inches tall, 120 pounds, with blonde hair and blue eyes.

New slush fund revelations discouraging

More discouraging revelations about slush funds for Michigan politicians have been uncovered.

It seems that both Gov. William G. Milliken and Lt. Gov. James Damman will be holding expensive dinners and fund-raisers soon, where state employees not protected by civil service will be expected to either shell out money for tickets, talk friends into attending or be in fear of losing their jobs.

These came on top of disclosures last week of an alleged slush fund operated by aides of new U.S. Sen. Donald Riegle, D-Mich.

The charges against Riegle arose after a perhaps confused new aide began offering favors to labor, business and political leaders in return for help in reducing his campaign debt from this past fall. Riegle claims that the aide was supposed to be only soliciting for "service accounts," which supposedly exist to provide constituent services.

Many politicians have gone along with the lucrative traditional kickback system in the past, though not all by any means. Sen. Robert Griffin from Michigan has avoided the use of slush funds, and the late Sen. Phil Hart discontinued his slush fund long ago when it caused an uproar.

It is time to take a new look at an old system. Even Secretary of State Richard Austin, who was forced to abandon his traditional patronage kickback set-up during a losing campaign for the U.S. Senate, called the system "a relic of a bygone era."

The basic problem is that slush funds are not illegal, though they are more and more being considered unethical at best, and not far from being actually illegal.

Two facts still remain: the money can be used for personal purposes and state employees not protected by civil service almost have to donate large amounts of money to campaigns, whether they want to or not.

This is routine, this is the way things are in the world of politics. But it does not have to be and the changes of the U.S. political system over the past few years have put the slush fund system way out of date.

We need new laws restricting the connection between patronage jobs and "voluntary" contributions, even though they would be difficult to enforce. There also must be a clearer distinction made between soliciting help to erase campaign debts and soliciting for "service accounts." Campaign reform, where candidates are not forced to depend on contributions from people and organizations who want to have a heavy influence, would provide the clearest answer to this problem.

Manager starts term

Jerry Coffman officially starts his term as East Lansing's new city manager today, and along with the title Coffman will inherit a lot of important decisions.

Coffman, former assistant city manager in Charlotte, N.C., will replace 28-year veteran City Manager Jack Patriarche.

Coffman comes to East Lansing with an extensive background in Community Development functions, which could explain his administrative style. He said earlier that he will call for greater involvement with the community and direct input from the city's employees.

Our new city manager has many big items facing him on the city's agenda. One of his biggest decisions will center on the allotment of the city's funds and what areas will get what.

One of the largest amounts of funds, $100,000, has been set aside for housing rehabilitation. It will take some careful planning to decide how the money will be distributed.

Another large issue facing Coffman is the proposal to allow the construction of a huge shopping center on Lake Lansing Road. If this plan is OK'd by city government, it will set up development at the north end of the city. This could have serious effects on the already established business districts in central East Lansing.

We can only hope that Coffman does his best to help keep the ties between the University and East Lansing strong. This will have to include a sharing of our valuable resources.

In the past, East Grand River Avenue, the physical dividing line between East Lansing and MSU, has also been a mental division in the minds of many people. Our new city manager should be a leader in establishing that the city and the University make up the whole community together.

I've caught two colds already this term and it's getting me down. Should I take Vitamin C?

There is some evidence that very large doses of Vitamin C can have detrimental effects for some people (more than 6,000 milligrams), so large doses cannot be recommended. Studies of Vitamin C and colds have yielded mixed results because it is so difficult to control all factors in human colds. It is possible that some people have a higher than normal requirement for Vitamin C and there is some evidence that the requirement for Vitamin C may be higher during times of stress, but these needs can still be met easily by a well chosen diet. More commonly it is found that people are neglecting to eat the foods which do contain Vitamin C. Some good sources of Vitamin C are (in order of Vitamin C content per serving): oranges, broccoli, brussels sprouts, sweet peppers, strawberries, grapefruit, collards, tomatoes, cabbage and potatoes. Apple cider, green beans and corn are poor sources.

If you are letting yourself get run down from lack of sleep and careless eating under the pressure of school work, you may be a good candidate for a bothersome cold.

Can you tell me how nutrition affects my teeth?

Many tissues of the body are dependent on adequate nutrition for normal development, structural integrity, metabolism and function. Certain diseases, dental caries and periodontal disorders arise from complex interactions within the oral environment which are affected by the quality, quantity and physical consistency of foods.

Vitamins and minerals have been shown to be necessary for proper teeth development. Calcium, phosphorus and Vitamin D are needed for proper maintenance of normal oral tissues, however, it is unlikely that you will develop a deficiency with proper nutrition. Carbohydrates or sugars affect teeth the most and the frequency of intake, rather than the amount ingested, is more critical. Sugars serve as an excellent substrate in plaque for acid formation by oral microorganisms. These plaques also have been implicated in inflammatory, periodontal disease which is so prevalent these days although the mechanism is still unclear.

We recommend regular check-ups and a well balanced diet. If you have a sweet tooth or teeth, perhaps you should become a dentist.

I heard drinking milk contributes to atherosclerosis due to some XO factor. What's the scoop?

Xanthine oxidase is the XO factor to which you are referring; it is an enzyme found in the milk of several animal species. It was thought that XO could be absorbed from the intestine into the blood where it would cause lesions in arterial and capillary walls, setting the stage for the development of atherosclerosis. This is no longer believed to be true in the light of recent research results. Once the active form of XO has been inactivated it is no longer hazardous to humans and cannot be reactivated. About 75 per cent of the XO is destroyed during pasteurization, homogenization and digestion in the stomach's gastric juices. The remaining 25 per cent of the XO entering the small intestine presents no problem because the XO molecules are so large they are not absorbed by the intestinal wall. As a result only about .000008 per cent or virtually none of the XO is absorbed into the blood and it may be concluded that it is not a contributing factor to atherosclerosis in humans.

I love my beer and it is getting hard to see my belt. What do you suggest?

Well, I could tell you to stop drinking your beer, but that would be unlikely. Your drinking and growing waistline may be related to other foods which we can not predict, however, a few comments on alcohol and nutrition may be in order.

Malnutrition is very common among alcoholics because alcohol, high in caloric value, displaces other food in the diet. Each gram of ethanol provides 7.1 calories. Twenty ounces of an 86 proof beverage contains about 1,500 calories or approximately one-half to two-thirds of the daily recommended allowance (RDA) for calories. However, the calories provided by alcohol do not fully count because one of the pathways of ethanol metabolism is wasteful.

Though the alcoholic has a reduced demand for food to fulfill his caloric needs, alcoholic beverages contain few, if any, vitamins, minerals, protein or other nutrients. The alcoholic's intake of foods containing these nutrients may readily become insufficient. If you are a chronic alcoholic consumption can also result in malnutrition by interfering with normal food digestion and absorption.

Are milk allergy and lactose intolerance the same thing?

No. Milk allergy is really milk protein allergy. This is a rare condition found in less than one per cent of the population. Lactose intolerance, a condition which manifests itself in gastric distress, is a more common problem. However, estimates on its prevalence vary widely. Lactose intolerance means the individual has difficulty tolerating milk sugar or lactose. The condition is caused by a low level of the enzyme, lactase, which is necessary for the digestion of milk sugar.

Racial and ethnic factors are related to lactase deficiency. In all infants however, the level of lactase is high to accommodate a milk diet. After weaning, the lactase enzyme begins to decline. In spite of the lower levels of lactase, most individuals continue to tolerate milk well in normal amounts in their diets.

The answers to these questions have been prepared by George F. Collings, Kris Johnson and Dave Gruszmeyer, graduate students in nutrition fields. Students with questions should mail them to the Opinion Page, State News, 343 Student Services Bldg.

Oil spills - who's liable

WASHINGTON — With one oil tanker after another bleeding oil upon our sea-coasts, the American people not only are stuck with the environmental blight but must also pay most of the clean-up costs.

The secret papers of the shipowners reveal how they bamboozled Congress in the late 1960s to absolve them from financial liability. They anticipated the nasty oil spillages which have now polluted our shores. They lobbied behind the scenes, therefore, to make sure they wouldn't have to pay the damages.

In fact, they foresaw an environmental catastrophe, which hasn't yet happened. Some day, they expect a giant, 200,000-ton supertanker to break up and belch 50 million to 80 million gallons of oil into our coastal waters. This would be enough to stain the surf and blacken the beaches for hundreds of miles.

We began to investigate the oil industry's awesome power to pollute after the tanker Argo Merchant broke apart on a shoal off Nantucket and gushed more than seven million gallons of oil into a pounding sea.

We made trips out of state and out of the country to question oil insiders. We obtained documents in both English and Greek, proving that the international petroleum and shipping industries blocked the laws, which might have saved our coasts from the oil blight.

In Athens, Brussels, Lisbon, London, New York and Rome, according to these documents, international oil men, shippers and insurance moguls conspired privately as early as 1967 to thwart the U.S. antipollution bills.

They were worried about the inevitability of oil spills. The huge supertankers carried enough oil to contaminate an entire seacoast. These long, whale-shaped sea monsters were constructed of such thin steel for their size, warned the experts, that they would rip apart if they should ever run aground.

Members of Congress, foreseeing the danger, began drafting some tough liability laws. This U.S. move could set a worldwide standard, which could raise insurance rates sky high or even make the supertankers uninsurable, the shipowners feared.

From their viewpoint, the most dangerous measures were introduced by Sen. Edmund Muskie, D-Me., and Rep. Paul Rogers, D-Fla. The bills would have assessed the clean-up costs to the industries that make a profit from oil.

The shipowners tracked these bills more carefully than they had ever monitored a storm at sea. "Prospects of the (Muskie) bill's passage..." warned one lobbyist gloomily, "are considered to be very good."

The shipping lobbyists were joined by the oil lobbyists. "The American Petroleum Institute will lobby to limit the liability of a shipowner," happily reported one agent to his Athens-based bosses.

Meanwhile, shippers and insurers met privately in Rome in late 1967 to consider the problem. This was followed four months later by another secret meeting in Lisbon.

JACK ANDERSON

and LES WHITTEN

They finally agreed, according to a by one of the participants, to oppose liability on shipowners for damages by the escape of oil.

They hoped to limit the liability shipowners merely to a polite explanation. Representatives of the world oil and shipping industries shipped to Capitol Hill in July, 1968, to sell their House Public Works Committee, paid a quiet call on Richard Sullivan, chief counsel, who was processing antipollution legislation.

"We were pleased to learn," wrote back to his superiors, that Sullivan would "abandon" the idea of holding shipowners and oil companies totally responsible for their oil accidents. The lobbyists "argued strenuously against" liability for removal costs "of spilled oil," Sullivan and his staff finally agreed, memo reported triumphantly.

According to the document, Sullivan "met separately with representatives of the American Petroleum Institute..." after, another revision of the bill prepared. This contained additional concessions.

Crowded one shipping representative "We believe (the concessions) would accomplish as good a result as the shipowners and their (insurance) clubs could achieve in any oil pollution bill which United States Congress might pass should not, the memo added, "have serious effect on the (insurance) miums."

Yet even this limited antipollution sure was kept off the law books for more years. It provided for a modest boost in liability, with no real money collecting on oil disasters.

In the last Congress, environmentalists tried once more to place more liability oil spillages on the oil industry and tanker fleets. But once again it was up by the special interests.

Footnote: The able Sullivan, who merely carrying out orders, told me he remembered the 1968 meetings. He told me the memos made him "look like somebody's pocket." But he insisted he acted in what he thought was the interest. "Maybe I should have tougher," he said, sighing. United Feature Syndicate, Inc.

Graph

Tuesday's issue of the State News featured a front-page article on the job outlook for college graduates. Accompanying the article was a bar graph which was not only inaccurate but also unintelligible. Such a poorly constructed and inefficiently designed graphic presentation of this simple data constitutes a sad reflection upon the staff of the State News. Good graphics are self-explanatory and enable easy comprehension of the information presented. Graphics are communication channels between author and audience; if the transmission is poor, the reception is garbled and the basic concept of communication is destroyed.

As geographers, our extensive use of graphics encourages an appreciation of the cartographic element. The type of statistical data presented in the article could have been easily portrayed in a concise and comprehensible manner by even beginning students in cartography. We congratulate the State News in its continuing efforts to waste space and obscure the news it encounters.

Editor's Note: The graph's confusion resulted from an error in composing.

Traversity

Once again the French government has forgotten the value of human life, as they released Abou Daoud, a mastermind of the 1972 Munich Olympics massacre. In 1976, the French government was seriously considering the idea of letting all terrorists held in French prisons go free, after one of its commercial airliners had been hijacked to Entebbe, Uganda. The only thing that saved the lives of the passengers and crew of that aircraft was the assault on Entebbe by Israeli commandos.

The French government has shown the world that political threats by the Palestine Liberation Organization are more frightening than the brutal murders of innocent civilians. Only when more school children, athletes and tourists are massacred will the French government, as well as other governments that stress democracy and humanitarianism, realize that capitulation to outrageous demands by terrorist groups will only lead to more death and bloodshed.

Genesis

The most artistic, tasteful, timeless, original and beautiful music and presentation available today can be contracted by ASMSU Pop Entertainment and I'll bet four to one that it will not be seen in this area. Why? Because most of the people at Pop Entertainment, MSU, this area and the United States have no concept of art, taste, time, originality or beauty.

Why won't Genesis be seen at MSU? The answer is half our school colors — green. Dollars. Supposedly they wouldn't sell out here. If that's the case (and I doubt if it is), it's a sad commentary for the people here. How, then could smaller universities and colleges in the area have presented Genesis? I've seen them at Toledo University and Grand Valley State College (an amazing show in a cafeteria), and found out too late that they played at Eastern Michigan University a few years ago.

Years from now, when Genesis receives the acclaim they deserve, I'd like to think back with pride that the University I graduated from had the foresight to present them when they had the chance. I understand they (we?) have that chance. I've already got my tickets to see Genesis in Chicago, so I will again be fortunate enough to see them. Will you be?

The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea

by Yukio Mishima
Translated from the Japanese
by E. V. Rieu
Penguin Books, 144 pages, $1.50

Editorial Beauty

JAMES HAMILTON

Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea is a unique story of a love between Fusako, an atypical woman who manages a style luxury shop in Tokyo, and Ryuji, a career marine officer. This is a devastating effect on a 13-year-old son, Noboru observes their relationship through a peephole, his action to himself in the of "absolute dispassion" and "clear confrontation with reality" is already alienated and disenchanted with the adult world. Ryuji's life is with a gang of boys who are convinced the world is empty and courage is permitting the impossible things to be. The hardness of their and to prove that they anything, no matter how Noboru and his gang small animals. It is affair with his mother completes Noboru's isolation. He meets him on a homicidal is a traditional Japanese officer. He was born to serve in the war, but he with the men who served the war, the values of traditional Japan. Behind Ryuji is the fading tradition of the samurai warriors, service to the emperor, and, as Ryuji so often dreams, a longing for a moment of crisis when honor, glory and death combine to give death an exquisite momentary beauty. Ryuji has spent his whole life in preparation for his moment of divine calling. For Ryuji danger is not the time when one's life is threatened, it is the moment when the opportunity to surrender life to a glorious end calls on man.

Ryuji has all the longings of a sailor. He sees himself as being married to the sea. The sea rewards him for his solitude and his samurai hardheartedness by showing him pleasure in hardness itself. Ryuji even finds the tears shed in parting from his shore-leave loves to be sweet and pleasurable.

It is Ryuji's self-sufficient manliness that attracts both Fusako and Noboru. The sailor becomes Noboru's hero. Noboru aspires to have a heart "as cold and hard as anchor iron." In Ryuji he sees a glimpse of that hardness. Unfortunately for Noboru he has encountered Ryuji just at the moment when the sailor is about to forsake the sea. The sailor is 34, his longing for glory and death have gone unfulfilled and Ryuji is about to settle down and take a wife. There were moments when the perfect relationship between his ship and the sea — a sexual feminine-masculine relationship — shone through to Ryuji. Yet Ryuji had come to the point where he no longer found comfort in the sea and instead sought it ashore amongst the landlubbers whom he had always regarded as surrealistic images rather than men.

In this atmosphere Fusako and Ryuji meet; old East meets new West. Like a maritime Adam, Ryuji falls from his special relationship with the sea, seduced by woman.

For Noboru the fall of his hero in leaving the hard life of the sea is a disappointing burden too great to be born. Noboru is a perversion of Ryuji's fascination with death and the sea. Noboru has gone beyond Ryuji's acceptance and longing for the end. Noboru sees the momentary beauty of death, he has witnessed it in the small animals he has seen die. But witnessing Ryuji's fall into the entanglements of marriage to his mother leads Noboru on a macabre path toward homicide.

Mishima is a man as unique as his books. The power of his language is amazing. His descriptions are more like stanzas of Japanese poetry than any prose. The conversations, dreams, thoughts and actions of his characters are terrifyingly real. They carry the novel forward with inextricable driving force. Mishima has died. His longing for classical samurai hardness led him to form a private army which attempted a coup in Japan. Its failure led Mishima to commit hari-kiri. The Sailor Who Fell from Grace with the Sea was his last novel and a classic in Japanese literature. It is a story which leads to the heart of the Japanese tradition and to the unique character of Mishima himself.

Prisoner of Mao

By Bao Ru-Wang (Jean Pasqualini) and Rudolph Chelminski

Penguin Books: New York
326 pages, $2.50

Snake in the grass

By DONNA BAKUN

Western knowledge of the Soviet forced labor camps has, for the most part, been enhanced by the writings of Aleksander Solzhenitsyn. It was not until Bao-Ruo Wang crossed the Lo Wu Bridge to freedom in Hong Kong that a similar spokesperson could account for the Chinese system of thought reform.

Bao's book, written with former Life correspondent Ralph Chelminski, is a valuable addition to the masterful insights of American journalist and friend of Mao, Edgar Snow, in that Bao experienced what Snow was never allowed to see. The Chinese call it Lao Gai, short for Lao Dong Gai-Zao — Reform through Labor.

'Crimes' against the government, easily detected by widely propagated "mutual surveillance," were punishable by up to a lifetime sentence in labor camps from Manchuria to Peking. Bao admits he worked in the fields of Branch Farm #3 of the Ching Ho State Farm outside Tientsin to grow the rice served on Mao's table.

Referred to by his interrogators as a "snake in the grass," Bao's Asiatic appearance and fluency in Mandarin defied his French citizenship and his Corsican given name. A member of what he calls the clan of the metis, the foreigners born in China, Bao vacillated between two societies, never actually a part of either. It was his parentage and his work for the American Marines that led to his encounter with Lao Gai in 1957.

This was the year of sweeping mass criticism of the Communist Party hierarchy, the year of Mao's "Hundred Flowers" decree that was eventually blotted by a furious Rectification Campaign.

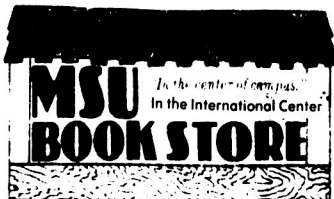

Bao writes:

"There is still debate as to whether the Hundred Flowers was an error on Mao's part or a coldly calculated ruse to make the regime's enemies speak up and thereby entrap themselves, but whatever the original planning, Mao reacted swiftly."

Though Bao was freed when the Chinese resumed relations with the French in 1964, he does not seek to exorcise his Communist captors, but instead verses one in the virtue-driven core around which Chinese Communism was fostered in the caves at Yenan.

Auldridge sets dobro loose; 'Gents' try on-stage humor

By JOHN CASEY
State News Reviewer

Mariah kicked off the winter term schedule and began its fifth year of musical diversity Friday and Saturday nights by presenting the combined talents of dobro player-extraordinaire Mike Auldridge accompanying the entertaining Country Gentlemen.

The concert marked the first time Auldridge and the Country Gentlemen performed together in concert, though they have played extensively on each other's respective albums. Musically, the joining of the two proved to be highly effective, but in terms of overall presentation, there seems to be no compromise.

The comfortable atmosphere of the McDonell Hall kiva was a proper setting to listen to strains of bluegrass music. Auldridge's strong dobro playing filled the kiva with a sweet perfection, as the Gentlemen blended well on rhythm guitar (Charlie Waller), mandolin (Doyle Lawson), upright bass (Bill Yates), and new member, Jim Bailer, on banjo. Because of their previous work together, a tight set of original material and old bluegrass standbys was not unexpected. Pure bluegrass has been around since the days of Bill Monroe and the Blue Mountain Boys and Auldridge and the Country Gentlemen refreshingly captured that unique bluegrass sound.

What was evident throughout the concert was the differing style of presentation — Auldridge is an intense and silent person who lets the instrument do the talking. The Country Gentlemen are "good-old boys" bent on having a good time, telling some jokes in attempts to be humorous, and bouncing about the stage enjoying every minute of it. Seemingly the two would supplement each other, and at times they did, but there were moments of awkwardness that distracted from the essential musical aspect.

Though the kiva was a pleasant venue for the music of bluegrass, it does not lend itself to the hell-raising, country-spirited, honky-tonk atmosphere that the Country Gentlemen are probably more at home in. The sheepish grin Jim Bailer proudly wore during the concert conveyed the sense that though they are billed as country gentlemen, these four Southern musicians from Washington, D.C., have the potential to create a memorable wild time. Despite eliciting some audience response, they never had a chance to realize this potential.

In concert, the music is the major focus of attention, thus this Mariah presentation scores high marks. The mere fact the audience was treated to a first, the coming together of Auldridge's dobro and the Country Gentlemen's smoothness in concert, reflects a fine quality in Mariah.

Opening the concert was guitarist Jeff Hollingsworth, later joined on stage by Paul Winder on fiddle. Combining fine musicianship and good stage presence, the two produced a better-than-average opening act.

Foghat misses turn off one-tempo track

By MARC P. DIMERCURIO
State News Reviewer

FOGHAT: Night Shift (BEARSVILLE — BR6962)

Foghat, those rock and roll outlaws of the last few years, have shot another record at the hard-rock music market. "Night Shift" is the product of their efforts.

Roger Earl, Rod Price, Craig MacGregor and Lonesome Dave basically comprise Foghat. In the previous statement lies the all too real description of the group — basic. While at times interesting, it remains a one-tempo band.

"Night Shift" is an extension of this style, with little change in format. The title cut, "Night Shift," is one of the few bright spots on the record. It is quick and driving, with a talk-back vocal/guitar segment that brings back memories of Edgar Winter and "Roadwork." Unfortunately, the tracks "Hot Shot Love" and "Take Me To The River" are so similar to cuts off previous LPs they quickly become boring. The last cut "I'll Be Standing By," is worthy of recognition for its notable difference from most, if not all, of Foghat's previous material. The guitar wails and strains with a blues melody that breaks from its usual piercing beat. It is simple and slower, with a good job on lyrics by Dave and a fine performance on the sax by Rod Price.

Side two shifts back to the repetition that is becoming so familiar to Foghat. "Drivin' Wheel" is fair, but not exceptional. "Don't Run Me Down" and "Burnin' the Midnight Oil" close out this side with equally blasé presentations.

Foghat continues to sound strong and sharp as its original driving beat, but seemingly fail to surpass this point. Perhaps this is the turning point, a point where Foghat is no longer a rising new group, but just another band.

Furniture firm makes 'nut' sofa

CHICAGO (AP) — Like something different for your living room? Try a Peanut love seat.

The Peanut, with its cushions that look like peanuts in a shell, is 89 inches long, with a back rest on each side so people can sit facing one another.

The Peanut, produced by a 76-year-old Berne, Ind., firm, was an idea that grew out of last fall's face-to-face presidential debates and President-elect Carter's peanut business, said Jay Yager, a Berne official.

Yager says the sofa's fabric is 100 per cent nylon and flame retardant in case political discussions get too hot. They retail for $929.80 and there is a month's wait for delivery.

SIGN LANGUAGE SPECIALIST SPEAKS

Workshop held for interpreters

By JULIE MARTINSON

The Michigan Registry of Interpreters for the Deaf (MIRID) held a day-long workshop for interpreters, teachers and students this weekend in North Case Hall.

The workshop, entitled "American Sign Language in Interpreting and Education," was sponsored by MIRID and the MSU Deaf Education Senior Students hosted the event.

Guest speaker at the videotaped workshop was linguist Dennis Cokely, a sign language specialist from Kendall School for the Deaf in Washington, D.C.

In the morning sessions, some 80 persons listened to Cokely's presentations on American Sign Language, and other types of manual communication for the deaf.

Cokely discussed several communication models and the philosophy he calls "total communication."

In his final presentation, Cokely dealt with the importance of The Registry of Deaf Interpreters (R.I.D.) and MIRID, one of its chapters.

R.I.D. is a national organization of about 1,600 members whose major purpose is to provide translating and interpreting services for the deaf in the United States.

There are more than 40 chapters of R.I.D., some in other countries. MIRID is the Michigan chapter of R.I.D. and has about 130 members.

Kenneth O. Rust, president of MIRID, said that the organization works in conjunction with the national organization by disseminating relevant information to its members and by feeding back information to R.I.D.

"In MIRID we work to improve our members' skills so they may become certified translators or interpreters according to the national standards set by the R.I.D.," he said.

MSU's own Deaf Education program, in the Elementary and Special Education Department, is the only teacher training program for the deaf in Michigan which requires students to develop basic signing skills, said Vivian M. Stevenson, associate professor in elementary and special education.

African holiday celebrated here

By JUDY PUTNAM
State News Staff Writer

The room was adorned in red, black and green. Red was for the struggle and blood of the ancestors; black was to represent the faces of the people and their unity and green was a symbol of youth and the struggles to come.

A group of about 40 Afro-Americans came together Sunday in Wilson Hall to celebrate Kwanzaa, a traditional African celebration of the new year. Mostly students, it was a time for the group to reflect on its heritage and express the feeling of unity among them.

"Kwanzaa is believing that black people all over the world, no matter where they are, share the same struggles," Keith Stallworth, minority aide, said.

Translated, Kwanzaa means "Holiday of the First Fruits." The tradition is rooted in the African harvest celebration of the first fruits of the year. While this is the first time the Black New Year has been celebrated on campus, a California-based group is working to promote the celebration in America to help create new black images.

The ceremony began by the group, which was separated with males on one side of the room and females on the other, forming a circle and crossing hands.

Stallworth said the separation of the sexes was a traditional way to show respect for the women.

A wooden bowl containing wine to represent ancestral blood was passed around, each person drinking from the "cup of unity."

In front of the room there was a large basket of fruit and a candelabra with seven candles, representing the seven virtues of Umoja (unity), Kujichagulia (self-determination), Ujima (collective work and responsibility), Ujamaa (cooperative economics), Nia (purpose), Kuumba (creativity) and Imani (faith).

A speaker talked on each of these principles. John Allen, president of Wilson Hall, described the ceremony as a "learning process."

Speaking on self-determination, Peggy Jones said the struggles of black ancestors through slavery and civil rights must be appreciated and not forgotten.

"We must become aware of who we really are," she said. "We, as a people must come together as one . . . We will define, create and develop our own definition of self-determination."

HEALTH CENTER RESEMBLES 'HOLIDAY INN'

Atmosphere of psychiatric ward casual

By MICHAEL SAVEL
State News Staff Writer

In contrast to the cold, sterile atmosphere of the psychiatric ward of the hospital in "One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest," the St. Lawrence Community Mental Health Center in Lansing looks more like a Holiday Inn.

There is a large yellow carpeted lobby flanked by two corridors of double rooms with 40 beds in the psychiatric ward. The nurses and therapists, unlike the hard-nosed Nurse Ratched, were playing pool and chatting with the patients.

Most of the patients in the psychiatric ward of St. Lawrence are voluntarily committed. Their ages range from young adolescents to senior citizens.

In the basement of the center there is a workshop, ceramics room and work areas where the patients work on individual projects. Currently there are 37 MSU students doing volunteer work in the ward and about 30 more are needed.

The volunteers bring the outside world into the ward. Their job is primarily to establish a rapport with the patients, not counsel them.

"The patients know we are there because we want to be there and that is important to them," said Glen Johnson, coordinator of the volunteers at St. Lawrence. "If I miss a day when I should be there, they know it and I know that they missed me."

The typical stereotype of a mental ward does not apply to St. Lawrence. The average stay for a patient is less than one month and the average person is there just to get away.

"There are mostly people there who just cannot cope with the pressures of day-to-day existence," Johnson said. "People who want to volunteer should not be afraid that they will be dealing with dangerous people because it just is not like that."

Volunteers take their own initiative in what they want to accomplish at the center. They are there mostly to listen and pass time by being recreation partners.

"A real camaraderie develops between the volunteer and the patient," said Ken Wright, a volunteer who has been with the center five months. "Most of the people there have intense pressures and really need a friend to talk to."

Anne DeRose, a program coordinator for community services at St. Lawrence, said interested volunteers must be willing to make a firm commitment and be genuinely interested in the helping profession.

"We need someone who can make a six month commitment and be here when they say they will be here," DeRose said. "We need mature people who really want to help people, not look for a shortcut into the therapy profession."

NUMBER OF MSU VOLUNTEERS INCREASES

Peace Corps programs grows

By KRISTIN VANVORST
State News Staff Writer

"The stereotype of the Peace Corps volunteer living in mud huts with dirt floors is not the typical lifestyle," said James Kielbaso, director of the MSU Peace Corps intern program. "Living conditions run the spectrum from hard living to plush."

Kielbaso recently returned from a five-week trip to the Southeast Asian countries of Nepal, Thailand, the Philippines and Malaysia where he visited some 50 volunteers who have been placed in those countries by the MSU intern program.

Though the number of volunteers nationwide has dropped since 1962 when the program was born under the Kennedy Administration, the number of volunteers for the MSU intern program has increased since it began here six years ago.

Today there are more than 7,000 Peace Corps volunteers working in 69 countries. Six years ago the MSU intern program started out with eight volunteers. This year Kielbaso hopes to "identify" at least 50. MSU is only one of three colleges in the United States that offers a Peace Corps intern program.

Historically, the Peace Corps volunteer had an agricultural, natural resources or forestry background but now there is a new emphasis on recruiting students in human ecology, civil engineering and nutrition to help develop health care delivery programs overseas.

"The intern program provides job entry with international experience," Kielbaso said. "The Peace Corps used to be a cultural exchange program, now we're teaching people more technical skills."

A cultural evening was held this weekend to introduce prospective Peace Corps volunteers to the Southeast Asian way of life. Area national hosts set up displays of handicrafts made in their home countries, brought food to be tasted and provided entertainment.

At the end of the evening one prospective volunteer said the volunteers' desire to help people and learn about another culture seemed genuine. "They don't have a Messiah-complex — like here we are from the progressive United States serving a poor country."

According to most of the prospective volunteers, the present unemployment situation had little influence on their looking into the intern program as an alternative after graduation. Some want the chance to experience a developing country. Others want the adventure of working outside the United States. Still others want to experience the satisfaction of helping people help themselves.

If the unemployment situation was a major factor in their decision to look into the program, "The Peace Corps is more of a commitment than someone would want to tackle," said John Severer, a coordinator for the MSU intern program.

One coordinator of the program said a reason he opted for the Peace Corps was that when he saw a picture of a starving child he could not relate to it.

Only single men and women families without dependents under the age of 18 are eligible for the intern program. The program is designed primarily for students with a bachelor's degree, though others will be considered. Graduate credit may be earned if a student is enrolled in a graduate program prior to leaving and arrangements are approved by the school.

Counterforce names candidates

By ANNE S. CROWLEY
State News Staff Writer

The first signs of the annual ASMSU elections appeared Sunday as members of Counterforce met to nominate candidates for Student Board president and each of the college representatives.

Mary Cloud, current College of Education representative to the Student Board, will run for president on the Counterforce slate.

Though no one was chosen to run in the Colleges of Education or Engineering, candidates were nominated for all the other seats:

•Greg Kimbell, an agriculture major who transferred to MSU fall term from Ferris State College, for the College of Agriculture and Natural Resources.

•Scott Schreiber, a junior in Justin Morrill college and a staff member of the ASMSU Legal Services Cabinet, for the College of Arts and Letters.

•Larry Kestenberg, economics junior who ran on the Counterforce slate for the College of Arts and Letters last year, for the College of Business.

•Wayne Pratt, a junior in communications, for the College of Communication Arts and Sciences.

•Debbie Schmidt, a junior in human ecology who is also a member of the Academic Council, for the College of Human Ecology.

•Stuart Carter, president of the Inter-Cooperative Council and chairperson of the Student Housing Corporation, for the College of Natural Sciences.

•Kirk Messmer, a justice in the All-University Student Judiciary, for University College.

Slate members will meet Sunday at 4 p.m. in the Union to plan the campaign, decide whether to endorse candidates, and to nominate candidates for the engineering and education seats.

Amnesty group to hold meeting

CAGERS TRAVEL TO INDIANA TONIGHT

U-M streaks by MSU, 83-70

By GEOFF ETNYRE
State News Sports Writer

Michigan Wolverines coach Jim Coughlin and his team of Spartans men's basketball players had some of the best of the Wolverines 83-70 victory over MSU before a crowd of 9,772 at the Jon Fieldhouse Saturday night.

prevailed as they rattled off 23 points in seven minutes while the Spartans could manage just two field goals. The Wolverines turned an 18-17 deficit into a 42-22 lead.

Much of the reason for U-M's outburst, or the Spartans' breakdown, could be attributed to MSU starters Greg Kelsier, Jim Coutre and Bob Chapman all receiving three fouls during that first half.

"We just seemed to have lost our poise in the first half," Kelsier said after the game. "When we got those weird fouls called against us it made our kids absolutely stoney for about five or six minutes.

"When we got a couple of our key kids in foul trouble we had to take them right out of the game. But then at halftime we decided we would just come back out and try to play our game."

For the first 14 minutes of the second half nothing much changed, except that U-M extended its 52-30 halftime lead to 81-57.

But that was about it for the Wolverines as the Spartans took their turn at a hot streak. The Spartans ran together 13 unanswered points in the final six minutes before the Wolverines' Tom Staton tipped in the final basket of the game.

Fouls again proved to be the impetus as Tanya Webb, Ron Charles and Bob Chapman converted one-and-one situations on two fouls by Rickey Green and one by Alan Hardy.

Kelsier then moved inside to lead for two layups and a slam dunk while Chapman added a free throw after Green collected his fifth foul before time ran out on the Spartans.

The Wolverines' Phil Hubbard and Kelsier hooked up in their expected duel with Hubbard garnering game-high honors of 20 points and nine rebounds while Kelsier hauled down a game-high 14 rebounds and added 19 points.

Each team had four men in double figures. Joel Thompson pumped in 18 on mostly long jumpers, Green had 16 and Staton 11 for U-M.

Chapman matched Kelsier for Spartan scoring honors with 19, Terry Donnelly added 14 and Coutre scored 10 points and grabbed nine rebounds.

U-M now trails first-place Purdue by one victory in conference play at 3-0, dropping the Spartans to a tie for seventh at 1-2.

The Spartans have little time to regroup their forces since they take on defending NCAA and Big Ten champion Indiana at Bloomington, Ind., tonight. The Hoosiers are led by All-American Kent Benson and coached by Bobby Knight.

U-M's John Robinson pushes by MSU's center Jim Coutre in Saturday night's rivalry at Jenison Fieldhouse.

Irish boot icers twice

By MIKE LITAKER
State News Sports Writer

Patrick's Day is still two months away but that didn't stop Irish from celebrating at Munn Arena over the weekend, as the Spartans took a 5-2 hockey win Friday night and came back Saturday afternoon to club the Spartans 10-3.

Fielding the big shillelagh — er, stick — for Notre Dame was little Irishman, Brian Walsh. The 5-foot-8 Notre Dame captain led the Spartans why he's leading the WCHA in scoring, by scoring in six goals and four assists in the weekend series, leading a four-goal matinee performance Saturday to push his point total to 45.

U-M showed little both offensively and defensively throughout the series as the Spartans' league record fell to 12-12-1 and 10-13-1 all.

MSU swimmer beats records

By CATHY CHOWN
State News Sports Writer

Breaking team swim records was the order of business for Spartan Karen Heath this weekend, as the freshman standout broke four records on the way to MSU victories Friday night and Saturday afternoon.

Friday's 102-20 win over Illinois, Heath won the 100 individual medley in a 1:03.4 record time, and went on to win the freestyle in 54.6. Teammate Becky Hastings picked up second both those events. Heath switched events in Saturday's 78-53 due win, as she won the 200 individual medley in 2:15.0 and the freestyle in 5:17, both MSU team records.

Defending butterfly champ Sue Tilden also registered wins Friday, as she won the 50 and 100 butterfly, and also won the winning 200 medley relay team, which set a record of 17.

LeFevre broke two minutes for her first time, as she won 200 freestyle in 1:59.5. She went on to win the 500 freestyle, by Brown won both the 50 backstroke and the 100 backstroke Friday's meet.

"Our passing hurt us all the way, you can't throw the puck away as much as we did and win," said Spartan coach Amo Bessone, propping his feet on the desk in front of him and folding his hands across his lap in assuming his customary postgame pose.

Bessone promised that more changes are in store for the up again down again Spartans, who instead of moving into fourth place over the weekend, found themselves fighting for the final play-off spot with Michigan Tech.

One of the planned changes involves going back to the exclusive use of three lines with the fourth line relegated to penalty killing only.

"Revamp it, reshape it, I don't know what but we're going to do something with it," said Bessone who plans on experimenting with more line changes this week.

"I'll try some defensive combinations until we find two guys who can play together," continued Bessone. "When our three top defensemen aren't playing we're hurting, especially without the righthand shots (Pat Betterly and Doug Counter) on the point."

Notre Dame hammered eight powerplay goals past MSU goalie Mark Mazzoleni and Dave Versical in the series including four in the second period of Saturday's game.

Walsh and Greg Meredith, who wound up with a hat trick, scored three of those goals on a single powerplay after the Spartans' Kevin Coughlin was waved to the penalty box for five minutes. Coughlin drew blood when he hooked the Irish's Don Fairholm, who was breaking in on Versical during what was supposed to be a Spartan powerplay.

Though the score wasn't as lopsided Friday night, the results were the same. It took Walsh 19 seconds to score off the opening face-off. Coughlin added a late first period goal and Ed Lubanski notched his second goal of the season in the final stanza after taking a pass from Marty McLaughlin who had deked Irish goalie Len Moher to the side of the net.

"We got three goals behind and panicked," observed Bessone, whose team missed several scoring opportunities in the contest. "We just got flustered and didn't put it together."

Panic wasn't the word for Saturday as Notre Dame posted an 8-0 lead before Russ Welch scored his 16th goal of the year and Mark DeCenzo flipped in another to get MSU on the scoreboard in the second period. The Spartans put only five shots on goal in that stanza. Jim Johnson finished the MSU scoring in the series by getting the Spartans' second powerplay goal of the weekend in the third period.

SUFFER TWO SOUND DEFEATS

Grapplers find road trip tough

By TOM SHANAHAN
State News Sports Writer

Andy Peninger's grapplers went into the heart of Big Eight territory and saw how big wrestling can be at some schools, as Iowa State blanked MSU 40-0 Thursday night and Oklahoma another whipping Friday night, 30-6.

Iowa State is ranked No. 1 in the nation and Oklahoma No. 2. It isn't unusual for those schools to force its opponent to stop before a partisan crowd of 8,000 to 10,000.

"I think our kids were a little overwhelmed by the whole situation of the team's strength and the crowd," Peninger said. "They found out Thursday night when they took a super drubbing much of wrestling is in the head."

But I told the kids 'You're always better the second night' and

Women gymnasts in four-way meet

Skillman and Pam Steckrodt each won two events and placed first in another to lead the MSU women's gymnastics team to victory in a four-way meet this weekend in Muncie, Ind. The Spartans accumulated 133.15 points in the meet at Ball State University Saturday. Central Michigan finished second with 131.85, Ball State totaled 102.95 and Eastern Kentucky was at the bottom with 91.2.

MSU took one-two-three in each event, with the exception of a place CMU finish in the floor exercise.

In addition to tying Steckrodt for first place in the vault, Skillman won the all-around competition and was victorious on the uneven bars. She added a third-place finish on the uneven bars (continued on page 10)

I'm proud of the way they came back, because we could have won Friday night."

Despite the lopsided score MSU lost some tight matches. The two wins came on two MSU upsets at 142 pounds in an 8-4 decision by Bruce Harrington and a 5-3 decision by 155-pound Doug Siegert.

Two of the closer matches that slipped away were at 150-pounds when a winning takedown by Bob Pollitt came one second after the bell and a takedown by Oklahoma heavyweight Don McCullough came two seconds before the bell to decision MSU's John Gurka. Peninger also said that the referees left a little to be desired, but said it didn't make a big enough difference to lose a 40-0 match.

But MSU's schedule doesn't really have a breather in it after the Oklahoma trip, as the Spartans face Northwestern and Iowa State at home Friday and Saturday.

Peninger said he feels that Big Ten foe Iowa is a better team than No. 1 Oklahoma State and Saturday's opponent, Iowa State, has already beaten Iowa 18-16.

"Northwestern is a tough team, also," Peninger said. "They upset us last year so we've got some getting even to do."

"We're a young team and what we're doing is building our program back to what it used to be when we had the interest these other schools have now."

MSU is now 2-3 in dual competition.

Swim team captures two

Sandy Sarhatt grabbed a second-place finish in the 200- and 500-yard freestyle events, while freshman Jane MacLaren took second in the 50- and 100-yard breaststrokes.

Freshman Jeannie Mickle won the one-meter diving event against Illinois, and took both the one- and three-meter diving against Purdue, followed by Barb Harding, taking the 200 individual medley in 1:58.9, and sprinting to a .28.1 winning time in the 50-yard butterfly.

Brown won the 50 backstroke in :30.0, while LeFevre captured the 100 freestyle in :56.7.

MSU had several strong second-place finishes Saturday, as MacLaren finished second in the 50- and 100-yard breaststrokes. Karen Waite was runner-up in both the 50-yard freestyle and the 100-yard butterfly. Hastings was second in the 500-yard freestyle.

The weekend's wins pleased MSU coach Jennifer Parks, as she is anxiously awaiting a meeting with Spartan rival U-M, and has been gearing the squad toward next weekend's meeting with the Wolverines.

"Everyone is swimming fast for themselves, and are doing it earlier than they were able to last year," Parks said. She added, however, that the team needs more work on speed at the end of races, and on push-offs.

This week's practices will be aiming at a win over U-M, as the Wolverines beat the Spartans twice last year, most importantly in the Big Ten meet.

Parks will be taking a well balanced but young team to the meet that will be at 2 p.m. in the Men's IM Building pool next Saturday, and after that the Spartans will begin a six-meet road trip, beginning with Eastern Michigan on Jan. 28.

MSU has only three seniors, Barb Harding, Vicky Riebling and Judy Colmer, but have 11 freshmen, several of whom have already shown more than just potential. Sarhatt, MacLaren, Lynn Lagerkvist, Karen Heath and Debbie Alberts, all freshmen, have already made a place for themselves on the Spartan squad.

Racing participation urged

and a second in the floor exercise.

Steckrodt hit two of the best scores of the meet, winning on the uneven bars with a sparkling 9.5 and topping the field in the floor exercise with 8.8. She added a second-place finish in the all-around.

Sara Skillman captured second on the balance beam, third in the all-around, fourth in the vault and sixth in the floor exercise.

Diane Lovato took third place on the balance beam and sixth on the uneven bars. Ann Weaver had a second-place finish on the uneven bars and a third in the vault. Pam Harris added to the Spartan coffers with a sixth-place effort on the balance beam.

MSU head coach Barb McKenzie was very happy with the Spartans' performance, despite the early hour of the meet.

"The early morning hour made it hard to perform well and as a result performances on the beam and on the bars suffered," she said.

The Spartans open the home portion of their schedule Tuesday night at Jenison Fieldhouse against Eastern Michigan. The meet begins at 7.

SLAPSHOTS — Injuries slowed the Spartans again this week when defenseman John Muscarelli suffered a bruised shoulder in the Friday tilt and was replaced by Lubanski, who was shifted back from the fourth line. Jim Ron Heaslip registered his 100th penalty minute of the season Friday when he scored a one-round knockdown of Irish winger Clark Hamilton and a clear decision in picking up a double roughing penalty. Heaslip was back in form on Saturday, this time delivering a forearm to the chops of 6-5 Kevin Nugent who pleaded nolo contendere by skating away with neither player drawing a penalty.

best, finishing in third with 8.15.

Beyond Sturrock's sterling performance on the horizontal bar, MSU settled for two men tied for fifth, Shepherd and Spartan assistant coach Glenn Hime.

Szypula was obviously quite pleased with the total Spartan performance this weekend and the progress made up to the point of the season. "I'm pleased with the amount of work done and have a real good attitude," he beamed.

Who are you, telling us how to run our business?

It takes a lot of confidence to come fresh out of school and begin telling us how to do things.

On the other hand, it takes an unusual company to provide the kind of environment where that can happen, but that is exactly the environment you'll find at Scott Paper.

We constantly search for people who have the ability to respond to challenge and think for themselves, those with the initiative and desire to seek alternatives, the skill and courage to convince others that there are better ways and who aren't afraid to express their ideas.

At Scott, we admire an aggressive stance because we are an aggressive company. You can make your own opportunities with us... and we'll prove it.

Contact your placement office for information.
