mended recently is based upon a serious misunderstanding of how the current system of higher education works in Michigan," Wharton said.

With the growing clamor for a centraliza-tion of authority, Wharton said there would be an "increasing intrusion of rules, guidelines, reports, agency requirements, etc.," interfering with the University planning.

"We would give up the efficiencies and quality responsiveness of competitive, decentralized decision-making and local con-trol — a system which has benefited Michigan taxpayers," Wharton said.

Without the competitive model, Wharton warned, research work would be stifled, fields of study existing at one or more institutions in the state would be limited and competition to provide the highest quality instruction at the lowest student cost would be eliminated. In other words, student interest and demand would not be the deciding factors in determining new programs or expanding existing ones, he

"I believe in the maximum possible freedom of choice by students to choose their fields of study rather than have some faceless bureaucrat making the decisions based upon a computer printout," Wharton

A centralized board for authority over higher education could be dangerous on two counts, Wharton said. These are the stifling of research creativity and the risk of "human engineering."

The dangers with human engineering are in deciding who should and should not attend college and what jobs they should fill, Wharton said.

"We must avoid paths that would lead to a rigidly controlled Orwellian society either before or after 1984," he said.

"Critics (of individual planning) fail to omprehend that an educational program at a college or a university is a living entity. not a static creature that once locked into place, never changes," Wharton said.

At MSU over the last academic year more than 181 new courses were added, but 400 were changed and 77 were dropped

Nearly all seats in Anthony Hall Auditorium were occupied Thursday night for the annual Highest Faculty Awards convocation and the "State of the University address by MSU President Clifton R. Wharton Jr.

The awards were presented to 16 faculty members and six graduate teaching assistants for their outstanding teaching, research and public services.

Broken down, this included the Distinguished Faculty Awards given to 10 senior faculty members who also received checks of $1,000. Six Teacher-Scholar Awards and checks for the same amount were also given to junior faculty members in recognition of devotion and skill in undergraduate teaching. Excellence in Teaching citations and checks for $500 were presented to six graduate students.

Most of the recipients accepted the awards with obvious delight. Senior faculty winners included:

The governor said the budget department had worked out detailed explanations of the proposed formula examining the effects it would have on each of the 14 state-funded colleges and universities in

Milliken said his proposed $46 million increase in higher education appropriations would be apportioned according to the proposal if the legislature approves it.

Retrenchment, inflation hurt 'U'

Classes larger, courses eliminated

By SEAN HICKEY State News Staff Writer

The University retrenchment program that called for an average 2½ percent cutback in the 1976-77 budgets of the 17 colleges at MSU has left few areas of the University unscathed by the effects of the financial crunch.

Larger class sizes, decreasing faculty staffs, elimination of courses, limited services and supplies and severe equipment shortages are the results of a program designed to tighten the budgets of the individual colleges.

Along with the retrenchment program, the spiraling rate of inflation has intensified the budgetary woes of MSU. Last September the MSU Board of Trustees approved a

Critic blasts PBB stance

LANSING (UPI) - Michigan Farm Bureau President Elton R. Smith today accused the state Agriculture Commission of caving in to political pressures to lower the allowable level of PBB in food.

"The Michigan Department of Agriculture has twice considered proposals to lower the tolerance levels of PBB and both times after public hearings and reviewing all scientific evidence, found the present tolerance level to be safe," Smith said.

The commission earlier this week reversed its earlier stand and said it would support legislation to reduce the PBB tolerance level, which currently stands at .3

1976-77 University budget that was $9 million short of the 6.5 per cent inflation

Most colleges are in an "equipment crisis" and some suffer much higher rates of inflation. The inflation rate for equipment that has to be replaced in the College of Engineering is running as high as 8 to 9 per

At the same time increasing enrollments are also burdening the already financially plagued colleges while many of them are experiencing decreasing faculty staffs and administrative help.

The retrenchment program, designed to generate $3 million, achieved the overall 21/2 per cent cutback by administering a variety of cuts to the 17 colleges ranging from one per cent to a maximum of 5 per cent. Generally, the smaller colleges such as James Madison, Urban Development and Lyman Briggs colleges received higher cutbacks while the much larger colleges such as Education and Natural Science received the minimum cutback of one per

Those colleges with a history of increasing enrollment, such as Natural Science, Business, Agriculture and Natural Re sources and Education, experienced lower cuts of one per cent because MSU administrators felt they would have the toughest time adjusting to a budgetary

Though the cuts were varied, the results were often the same. Each college experienced decreasing faculty staffs and battled salary levels that were becoming comparatively less competitive with the salary levels of other schools.

In the College of Agriculture and Natural Resources, 50 faculty positions have been left open because the college did not have the money to fill them after faculty members left last year. In addition, 20 faculty members in the college were lost to other schools who offered higher salaries and better resources.

The College of Education has lost 30 assistant professors and James Madison College has decreased its faculty from 34 to 17 in the past three years.

As a result, numerous classes within the various colleges have continued to grow and the already burdened faculty and adminis trative clerical/technical workers have me with increasing workloads. Many faculty members have been taken from their teaching responsibilities to do clerical/technical work.

The ratio between clerical and technical help and instructors within University College is one of the highest in the University. Right now the college is operating with one typist per 17 faculty Enrollment increases have been drastic for many of the 17 colleges at MSU. The College of Communication Arts and Sciences had to accomodate an additional 1,000 students in the last eight years while the number of full-time faculty members has remained the same.

The College of Business in recent years has become the largest college in the University, with an enrollment of 5,500 students. Meanwhile faculty staffs have also remained stable and the increasing courses show enrollments of 50 students or more in many sections.

The "equipment crisis" spawned by budgetary woes is having a major effect on those colleges that must maintain facilities necessary for instruction.

Many departments of science-related colleges rely heavily upon laboratory exercises for course instruction, but the growing cost for such materials is adversely affect ing the quality of that instruction. A large portion of chemicals that are used in laboratory experiments are made from petroleum bases, and due to the rising costs of gas and oil, chemicals have increased in price by 200 to 300 per cent in recent years.

Last fall term the College of Communication Arts and Sciences had to turn 56 students away from a vital telecommunications course, because the equipment used for the course could only accommodate 48, and 63 had already been accepted.

mum standard deductions for taxpayers who do not itemize deductions would be replaced by a flat deduction. For single persons, the deduction would be $2,400; for couples filing a joint return, $3,000.

The committee rejected Carter's plan for a $2,200 standard deduction for single persons, since that would have resulted in a tax increase averaging $52 for 2.1 million persons.

The committee plan would mean a tax cut of about $90 for 44.6 million returns with vir tually all the benefits going to taxpayers earning $20,000 or less a year.

By raising the standard deduction, the committee would worsen what is called the "marriage penalty." That penalty now is up to $1,300; the bill would raise it to $1,800. Carter has referred to the penalty as an incentive for persons to live together outside marriage.

It works this way: Under the new proposal, two single persons living together could get a total standard deduction of $4,800. But if they married they would be limited to the one $3,000 deduction.

•The key part of the 1975 tax-reduction act, a tax credit of $35 per person or 2 per cent of the first $9,000 of taxable income up to $180, would be extended through Dec. 31, 1978. It is due to expire at the end of 1977. This costs the Treasury about $10 billion a year in revenue.

special earned-income credit for working families who earn less than $8,000 a year also would be extended for another year, through 1978. This allows such families to reduce their taxes by up to $400 a year and goes to many families who pay no tax at all.

Since the rate of assessment is collected through dormitory management and not through registration, RHA does not have the power to raise the amount without the approval of management. Borg said Robert Underwood, director of the Residence Halls Programs Office (RHPO) was "collecting it now because he was told to by his superiors.'

Sharon Pope, RHPO adviser, said RHA should have the power to appropriate the money directly from the students and not through the "back door" as it does now.

This possibility exists through the student tax of $1.50 collected each term. If a revision is possible to provide (continued on page 11)

Indian student organizes group for interaction between cultures

Subhash Durlabhji, an MSU graduate student from India, said there is virtually no interaction between MSU's foreign and American students. So he and about nine others have organized a cross-cultural communications group to transcend

"People don't realize this, but it is very difficult for people of one culture to interact with those of another," he said. There are cultural differences, so people feel insecure and don't really know the correct approach to break the ice."

"We have so much to learn from each other," he said. "There are people here from more than 80 nationalities — and no one seems to be taking advantage of this resource."

The cross-cultural group will involve rap sessions in which students from different nationalities will get a chance to meet each other and discuss the communications problems between

"Durlabhji, who has been a student in the United States for seven years, said sometimes communication problems stemming from customs differences can lead to embarrassing

"Here if you see two guys walking down the street holding hands they may be looked at kind of funny," he said. "But in Arab and Asian cultures that's perfectly normal.

Other varying customs can lead to misunderstandings, he said. "In India, for example, if someone invites you to the movies you automatically think they will pay. That could lead to an awkward situation.

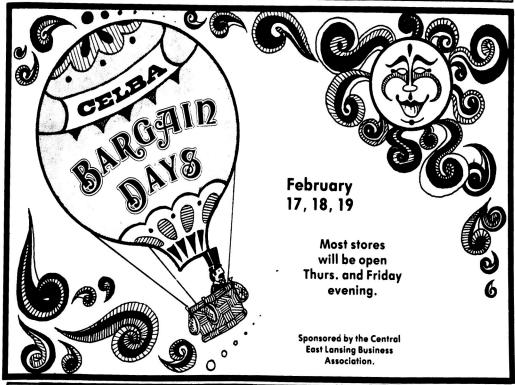

Durlabhji said customs concerning how a host and guest

"When I first came here, whenever I went to someone's house and they were eating and didn't invite me to dinner I would be insulted. You see, in India, not inviting someone to eat with you is considered a grave insult," he said.

"It is problems like these that our group wants to solve. We will discuss cultural differences and in the process meet new

ASMSU board wrong

The ASMSU Student Board outdid its own stupidity Tuesday night when it voted to support the merger between the CATA bus system and the MSU bus system without demanding the buses be made totally accessible.

The decision to support the merger was one of the few commendable moves the board has made in a lifetime, but ironically, it has absolutely no power in the decision-making process.

The Student Board was created to represent the total undergraduate student body at MSU and should support everyone's interests - something it has seldom expected from a backward body.

The ASMSU board rejected a clause demanding total accessibility, inserting in its place one merely expressing support of the idea. This demonstrates a lack of necessary sensitivity for a highly deserving minority on campus handicappers.

The only argument board members needed for approving the deletion was that women and rape are more important than handicappers. Such illogical reasoning is disgustingly pathetic.

Overall, it was a backward move a move that can only be

A bone of contention between the United States and the Soviet Union has been whether to include the American cruise missile and the Russian Backfire bomber in the category of strategic arms (that is, long-range weapons capable of devastating an enemy's homeland). Carter proposes to postpone the resolution of this conflict until SALT III, and the Soviets appear receptive.

In addition, Carter has made salvage his presidency from the several arms-limitations sugges-

Resume Cuban ties

Diplomatic actions conducted on both sides of the Caribbean indicate that the Carter Administration has a golden opportunity that should not be passed up to heal the long-standing rift between the United States

Cuba has shown its willingness to work jointly with the United States to halt a blight of sugar cane in the Caribbean and to work out an extension of an antihijacking pact.

Carter has progressed more toward a diplomatic rapprochement with Cuba than past administrations.

All these diplomatic "soundings out" indicate an optimistic chance toward a resumption of relations. But on Wednesday Carter qualified Vance's statement on "no preconditions" by saying that "I would be willing to move toward normalizing relations . . . if I can be convinced" Cuba will remain low key on the international scene and improve its domestic human rights conditions.

It is all right for him to make United States' wishes known to the Cubans, but if these amount to a return to preconditions it would be a grave error.

There is a major difference between United States and Cuban preconditions. The United States trade embargo is a direct act of hostility against Cuba while Cuban actions opposed by Carter are not hostile acts toward the United States.

Carter should read all the diplomatic impulses and move as swiftly as possible to heal the rift with our southern neighbor. After all, what better sign of Cuba's intentions toward friendship is there than a yet-to-be aired interview between Castro and CBS in which he invites the New York Yankees to Havana to play baseball? If Carter plays it right the cry "Yankee Go Home" may never again be heard in the Caribbean.

Perhaps most importantly, Carter has couched his proposals in moralistic rhetoric, borrowing a technique employed effectively by previous presidents who sought to galvanize public opinion in favor of their programs.

To be sure, public support will be necessary to achieve a new SALT agreement. Society's reactionary elements are already working overtime to sabotage Carter's foreign policy. In the Senate, for example, conservatives are marshaling their forces in an attempt to defeat Carter's nomination of liberal Paul Warnke as the chief U.S. negotiator at the SALT talks.

Under the circumstances, Carter's long-range goal of eliminating nuclear weapons from the earth will be exceedingly difficult to achieve. Besides the obvious problem of inducing the Soviet Union and the United States to junk their massive nuclear arsenal, there is

VIEWPOINT: NCAA INVESTIGATION

State News' coverage unfair

By MSU SELECT COMMITTEE

Although we realize that it is virtually impossible to offset the cumulative errors of fact in news stories, we would like to set forth a few basic facts regarding MSU football coaches' contracts. We do so from the vantage point of our direct involvement in the entire football investigation and because our recommendations led to the actions ultimately taken.

•Until this year, football coaches did not have formal written contracts but rather term appointments set forth by board action. Nor do faculty members have formal contracts, for that matter.) The assistant football coaches were employed for one year at a time based upon action by the board of trustees. The former head football coach had a similar appointment which was to run from Dec. 13, 1976 to Dec. 11, 1978

"Despite the understandable forgetfulness of one or more trustees, the terms of these contracts for the assistant football coaches were discussed with the board on Feb. 20, 1976.

•In January, 1976, when the appointments of the assistant football coaches ended, the administration decided that all assistant football coaches should have formal written contracts with detailed terms and conditions. At the time when these contracts were drawn up, the Select Committee was still conducting its investigation, even though the NCAA findings and penalties had already been assessed. No employment sanctions had been ordered for either the then head coach or seven of his assistants. Therefore, in the interest of protecting the rights of the individuals involved and to straighten out the legal aspects of the situation, formal one-year written contracts were prepared for seven of the nine remaining assistant coaches. It was not then known that there was to be a new head football coach. It was also believed that termination would be easier in the event of future rules violations by individuals

Assistant Coaches Weyers and Butler, upon whom NCAA sanctions had been imposed, had their prior appointments extended for a specified term to allow them to seek other employment, but new written contracts were not signed for these two persons. Despite the understandable forgetfulness of one or more trustees, the terms of these contracts for the assistant football coaches were discussed with the board on Feb. 20, 1976 when action was taken. Contrary to the State News' story, the contracts for Davis and Raye were the same as those of Chismar, Lewis, MacDonald, Underwood and Youngs. Thus, there was no special deal." The only difference was that for the first time the University had the assistant coaches sign formal written contracts. The arrangement was described in an MSU press release dated February 20, 1976.

•While it is difficult to estimate the direct and indirect costs of the MSU football investigation and probation, a glaring error in the table on the front page of the Feb. 8 State News must be corrected. The NCAA and the Big Ten penalties did not involve the loss of television revenue. Moreover, we understand that the State News had been so informed in an interview several months ago and again before the latest article appeared. Furthermore, to ascribe costs to "Michigan taxpayers" ignores the fact that the coaches' salaries are derived from athletic revenues rather than tax dollars.

•The State News' article of Feb. 1, 1977, regarding former head coach Denny Stolz, contains numerous factual errors. The straightforward and simple facts are as follows: On Jan. 17, 1975, the MSU Board of Trustees approved an extension of former head coach Stolz' appointment (due to expire in December, 1976) until Dec. 11, 1978. Although there was no formal written contract, there was an explicit appointment from MSU, the general terms of which followed the University's regular staff manual. However without a written contract, there were no express provisions for termination. The University Select Committee recommended to the president and to the board of trustees that Stolz be relieved of his duties but felt that there was sufficient ambiguity on the terms and conditions for termination due to the absence of a written contract that it recommended the balance of Stolz' contract be honored. It was the opinion of the University attorney, as well that the University was so obligated. There is a personnel action form but not a written contract for Stolz. Thus statements by University officials regarding this are entirely correct.

All trustees saw the exchange of correspondence on this matter between the University and Stolz' lawyer which outlined these terms. Further, the State News chose t the Jan. 21, 1977 board meeting by Trustee John Bruff, D Fraser, who is a member of the Select Committee, that the termination conditions were precisely what he recalled. Certainly one would expect Bruff's memory on this point to be more accurate due to his closer involvement with the issue. The fact that Stolz appointment terms would be honored was contained in an MSU press release dated March 16, 1976.

Again, it is distressing to see how this action has been misinterpreted and sensationalized into a "deal" or "hush payment" as characterized in State News' editorials. A certain degree of healthy cynicism is to be expected and welcomed among journalists, but they must recognize that their inability to get all the "facts" when they want them is not an automatic indicator of a cover up." President Clifton R. Wharton Ir and the Select Committee had to abide by the restrictive rules of the NCAA and the Big Ten regarding public disclosures during the conduct of the investigation. The State News quite justifiably denounces our violation of football rules but it then criticizes us for not violating the rules during the investigation so as to provide them with new stories. A violation is a violation, as the University of Minnesota discovered when it received additional penalties for improper disclosure during its investigation. Accusing us of a "cover up" because we adhered to Conference and NCAA rules and procedures is irresponsible.

"A certain degree of healthy cynicism is to be expected and welcomed among journalists, but they must recognize that their inability to get all the 'facts' when they want them is not an automatic indicator of a 'cover up.'

All the information uncovered by the Select Committee was shared with Commissioner Wayne Duke, as well as the board of trustees. Moreover, the Big Ten commissioner's findings and acceptance of the University's proposed additional remedia actions could hardly have taken place if the University had engaged in a "cover up." To suggest otherwise unfairly impugns our motives and questions our integrity.

This viewpoint was co-outhored by four members of the MSU Select Committee on the NCAA investigation. John B. Bruff, member, MSU Board of Trustees, Jacob A Hoefer, acting dean, College of Agriculture and Natural Resources Charles A Scarborough, associate professor, University College, and Frederick D Williams, professor, History Depart

Football questions remain

While the MSU Select Committee's viewpoint is a sincere attempt to place some ments by MSU to the former football coaching staff and the apparent effect the NCAA probation has had on MSU, the correspondence definitely fails to answer some rather serious questions. In point two of its viewpoint, the committee argues that contracts were drawn up for the seven remaining coaches and that they were the first formal written contracts given to assistant coaches. The ommittee also argues that the contracts were discussed by the trustees.

However, subsequent to the finalization of these contracts, acting Athletic Director Jack Shingleton and Denny Stolz approached the coaches at the direction of President Clifton R. Wharton Jr., and requested that they sign a contractual stipulation providing that their pay would terminate in 60 days if the head coach left and the remainder of the staff were not Former Trustee Warren Huff told the State News that he had no idea such a deal had been attempted with the assistants. Nor, he said, did the board have any knowledge of the pay "regardless" provision in any of the coaches' pacts, referring to the maintenance of severance benefits even when other employment has been procured.

Point four of the committee's viewpoint refers to the circumstances surrounding the departure of Stolz and the agreement struck between him and MSU. The committee acknowledges in this point that Stolz had no written contract prior to the University's request for his resignation. It further states that all trustees saw the exchange of correspondence between MSU and John Collins, Stolz' attorney, which outlined the terms.

However, both trustee Pat Carrigan, D-Farmington Hills, and Don Stevens, D-Bloomfield Hills, responded at the Jan. 21 board meeting they could not recall the pay 'regardless" provision in Stolz' contract.

Also, Collins told the State News that the pay "regardless" was part and parcel of Stolz' letter of resignation, which became a binding contract when the board accepted

The question this raises is simply that when someone is going to fire you, how do you bargain from a position of strength? Stolz received a benefit not normally granted to a departing staff member and never before given to a football coach at MSU. How could he bargain for such a demand, contingent upon his resignation, unless of course he had something to offer?

Shifting back to point three, the State News regrets the error made in the Feb. 8 story which concluded that MSU stood to lose some $480,000 from TV revenue as a result of the investigation. The State News was incorrectly under the impression that a Big Ten school which competes on either national or regional TV receives a double share of the network revenue.

However, the State News must insist, and, it will be shown, correctly, that the entire probation snafu has cost both MSU and the taxpayer a bundle of money.

Even without the consideration of lost TV revenue, MSU stands to lose significantly on the entire affair. For example, if the Spartans were to win the conference crown. and many critics were picking them prior to the 1975 campaign, and had gone on to the Rose Bowl, the net amount gained would be in the neighborhood of $110,000.

In addition, when the board ratified the contracts of the football coaching staff, it theoretically obligated itself to paying more than $400,000.

To explain: the approximate dollar amount of the assistant coaches' contracts comes to $146,000, which, according to the newly signed pacts, obligated MSU to pay them regardless of whether or not they found other jobs.

Also, when Stolz resigned his position, he had 33 months remaining of his three-year pact which paid him $31,125 annually. the University was obligated to pay Stolz $85,000. When that total was added to the assistant coaches' contracts the sum reached $231,000 — appropriated to employes who may not even be here.

Theoretically, the entire coaching staff could have quit, found other jobs, and MSU is out a neat $231,000. This was the commitment made by the board, either knowingly or unknowingly. Staying in the realm of money, it is difficult to put an exact dollar figure on the cost of the investigation itself. When the State News asked Bob Perrin, MSU vice president, if such a ledger existed, he said he would check with Wharton. Perrin has not yet called the State News back.

Yet, when one considers the caliber of individuals seated on the select committee and the salaries they demand, plus the time, travel, legal expenses, etc., which we the investigation, the $100,000 e which appeared in the State News F very low, indeed.

I would tend to believe a figure of $250,000 would be more accurate. A to the salaries of the coaching state the loss of potential bowl revenue amount could be staggering. When the select committee the entire matter did not cost taxpayers anything, it is wrong. Athletic Department had not been to drift into such a chasm of irresp spent. Thus, that would put an $500,000 into the Athletic Dep coffers. The argument that the dep is autonomous from the University accepts no funds from the general b weak at best.

If none of this mess ever happen money could have been used for things, either within the department University.

Finally, the committee's credibi even deeper in the last paragraph states, "All the information uncov the select committee ... was shall the board of trustees. Former board member Warren the State News, "There was a pro in the charges against Stolz. The co didn't tell the board what was except in general terms. The hoard privy to all the information."

Thus, the questions remain: • How can a man about to stipulate extraordinary benefits as tion of his firing?

• Why, at the request of What Shingleton and Stolz request the staff to accept a new provision contracts, terminating their pay days in the event that they retained?

• Why did several members of t question Stolz' contract and "regardless" clause at the Jan. 21 n they knew about it previously?

Centralized power and discontent

By BOB OURLIAN State News Staff Writer

It has been some time since a student or faculty group has said "no" to the MSU administration and backed the statement up with a formal action.

This week, the Elected Student Council (ESC), which is composed of student members of the Academic Council, voted to buck a directive from President Clifton R. Wharton Jr. which concerned its participation in the formation of a new University

What caused the consternation among the elected Student Council members was a Wharton proposal to establish what will be called the University Long-Range Planning Council.

For the student membership on the council, Wharton wanted the ESC to nominate eight candidates for four positions.

But the students recoiled, insisting that there was no reason to offer Wharton a choice and that they will have final say over what students sit on the council. Said at-large representative Denise Gor-

As recently as last night, when Wharton plugged his priority program in the State of the University address, it was clear that MSU is in for one of the most thorough physicals it has ever received.

'The hoped for outcome," Wharton said, "will be an improved focus of our mission. better fiscal health and greater capacity to achieve our educational, research and extension goals."

What may become the issue in all of this concerns what Wharton said immediately before: "The exercise is one in which faculty, staff, administrators, students and trustees will play a vital role."

Students and faculty, but not so much don, "We're capable of choosing four administrators and trustees, have been wondering a bit about just how vital their participation can be. "It's a toothless outfit," said one Academic Council member of that body.

The function of the University Long-Range Planning Council is almost entirely advisory. It takes suggestions, processes and comments on them, and then passes them on to the appropriate unit or administrator, who then does whatever they want with it, or nothing at all. It has no actual power, and so it represents a microcosm of sorts of the Academic Council.

The Academic Council, under bylaws initiated 20 months ago and nursed through the channels by "Wharton people," is restrained in its influence-wielding capability by the prescribed "modes of participa-tion." It is clear that the intended role of the council is advisory and consultative; at its strongest, any decisions it might make are subject to administrative review. And possible rejection.

Thus the student members of that body have in a very small way acknowledged an issue which may grow and eventually mushroom - the centralization of power at

Madison Kuhn's practical history

State News/Laura Lynn Fistler

By MARTHA G. BENEDETTI State News Staff Writer

Madison Kuhn has always been engrossed with recent American history, so when he came to MSU in 1937, he decided to develop and teach such a course.

Forty years later, he continues to inform MSU undergraduate, as well as graduate. students of 20th century developments and occurrences. His ongoing graduate class concentrates on 20th century ethnic/religious voting.

"A part of studying recent history is that it helps one understand the present and future," Kuhn said. "Actually, it takes more competence to teach ancient history and make it relevant to the present."

The professor said that recent history serves a more practical purpose and was needed within the University long before he initiated the course. "Most history teachers going through college often spent too much time getting through school because they lacked basic information on recent history."

Sixty-seven year old Kuhn was born in Madison, S.D., and was named "most unpretentiously, 'he said, after the town. He grew up and was educated in a variety of Midwestern states. He began teaching in 1919 and picked 20th century history because it was the period he found most intriguing.

"If I find something dull," he smiled, "I have a tendency to set it aside and don't seem to Receiving a master's and doctorate degree in history from the University of Chicago, he joined the MSU History and Political Science departments and taught a European survey class. Yet, still maintaining a thirst for recent and current events, he formed the course that has served as a learning process for him in addition to his students.

Kuhn is a great believer in the newspaper media and places a great emphasis on writing

"Newspapers are the best source of public opinion politicians and administrators could have," he said. "In order to find out why we developed the way we did, we should read newspapers. I had students this term read a half dozen newspapers for a week and then evaluate what they read through writing themselves.

Writing is a most important tool for students," Kuhn continued. "I learn a great deal from my students' papers. New evidence flows in from the writing they turn in.

In addition to teaching. Kuhn is responsible for the graduate department within the College of Arts and Letters. He utilizes two offices. An office in Morrill Hall serves as his teaching office while a larger, very meticulous office in Linton Hall allows him to work with graduate student placement and records, distribution of fellowships and historical reading and writing, all of which absorb about 40 per cent of his time.

Kuhn believes that a good graduate program, a great library and an abundance of scholarships are necessary components to a competent and scholarly faculty.

A 1968 recipient of the MSU Distinguished Faculty Award, Kuhn finds working with students the most stimulating part of the job. However, since Recent American History classes contain approximately 100 students, he is often reluctant to take the extra class time that allows students to think through a historical problem or controversy.

"The amount of feedback I can take in is limited in the large undergraduate classes," he said. "There is usually a limited few in the class that have the chance to respond aloud." Kuhn speaks slowly, carefully reflecting on what he says.

And the tall, stately looking distinguished professor says he has seen definite changes in attitudes among students through the years.

"After World War II, many war veterans came into the University. They made excellent students because they took what they were doing very seriously. They were a very mature bunch. But regardless, each new group of students that enters the University is a fascinating one

The dedicated professor's recreational life runs akin to his vocational aspirations. "I connect advocational to vocational, and it is easy because it is what interests me and makes me a better historian.'

He holds an ongoing set of goals for improvements within the graduate department and his proficiency as an instructor.

I would like to generate more money for graduate fellowships," he said, "The present scholarships offered to graduate students require too much hard work and time and that cuts down on the time they can dedicate to academic work.

"We need to find alternative occupations for history graduate students. The job market in history, philosophy. English and foreign language has dried out because high schools and universities are not expanding. Language people could be equipped with a business background.

"Either these alternatives must be implemented or else we should close out graduate programs.

But he added, as though almost forgetting, "I continually strive to become a better

Our zinc deficiency may affect immunity

Madison Kuhn

By MICHAEL MACKSOOD State News Staff Writer

For protecting steel and iron from rust, zine is an important element. It may also be important for protecting people from disease, an MSU researcher says.

Pamela J. Fraker, assistant professor of biochemistry, is studying the effects of a dietary deficiency of zinc on the immune system and disease resistance.

Institute of Health, which has given Fraker

$50,000 per year for three years.

The work is being funded by the National

"There has been very little research into dietary deficiencies and the possible effect on the immune response," Fraker said.
"This is possibly because the work involves two disciplines, nutrition and immunology.

Fraker is using the mouse as a model system for the research because its immune system is similar to that in higher animals

In her experiments, Fraker said, she would be looking at the effect of a short-term deficiency of zinc in mice.

"We are looking to see how permanent is the damage to the immune system and also if a normal diet can correct the damage." Fraker said.

Fraker said she was looking at zinc because it is an essential element but is not stored by the body.

"We are dependent on a daily intake of zine," she said. "Any kind of animal product Fraker's research may be important to underdeveloped nations presently and also the United States in the future. "In the Middle East, Asia and parts of South America, where the diets are high in plant foods, there is a deficiency of zinc," Fraker said.

She said this may be the reason for abnormally high death rates for diseases which are usually nonfatal in other parts of the world.

"Vaccines against diseases are not as effective in these areas," Fraker said. "This indicates the people may have a deficient

Plant foods contain "phytic acid" which binds to zinc and prevents it from crossing the intestinal wall and entering the blood.

"The people may be eating enough zine but the phytic acid in high plant diets prevents them from using it," Fraker said. This will be a growing problem in the future because as the population continues to grow it's assumed we'll eat more plants.

Fraker said her research so far has found that a zine deficiency has a pronounced effect on the thymus.

The thymus is an important part of the immune system which makes lymphocytes. These lymphocytes are important in antibody formation and the destruction of foreign cells.

"A zinc deficiency causes the thymus in mice to atrophy or waste," Fraker said.

An important segment of Fraker's work will be to see if this wasting of the thymus can be reversed if a normal zinc diet is restored.

Fraker emphasized that there is not much known about the interaction of dietary deficiencies and the immune system and this will be a growing research area.

Fraker, who has been at MSU for three years, has been interested in this work for the last year.

Committee works for boycott

By GEORGIA HANSHEW State News Staff Writer

The Southern Africa Libera tion Committee (SALC) will launch a campaign Sunday night to convince the city of East Lansing to boycott nine American corporations with branches in South Africa.

By doing business in South Africa, SALC asserts, the corporations are supporting apartheid — the official policy of racial segregation.

SALC members will try to garner the support of as many area organizations as possible, including various church groups, the African Studies Center, ASMSU and the State News, for a resolution calling for the city to boycott the nine corporations on its list.

There are over 350 American corporations in South Africa, Bill Derman of SALC said, but the group had to narrow them down to those which play the most important role in South Africa.

The nine chosen are Firestone, General Motors, International Business Machines (IBM), International Telephone and Telegraph (ITT), Kennicott, Mobil Oil, Motorola, Union Carbide and Caltex.

Derman spoke before the City Council at its Jan. 18 meeting, urging the council to "selective sanctions" against U.S. corporations in Africa. The council moved to set up a public hearing on the issue, and has since set the hearing for March

The council promised to invite representatives from some of the corporations and from other local governments.

To kick off the effort, SALC is showing a film Sunday at 7:30 p.m. at the Peace Center, 1118 Harrison Road, entitled "Last Grave at Dimbaza," on

From there, SALC will speak before area organizations with the hope of getting their supbringing it to City Council.

Council support for the reso lution would be "additional pressure on the corporations to begin disengagement from South Africa," Derman said.

"If one looks at the history of South Africa, it is evident that these corporations have directly and indirectly supported apartheid in South Africa."

Their indirect support is in the form of investments, vehicles used for military purposes and oil.

They help support apartheid directly, Derman said, by enforcing the laws which oppress South African blacks.

Examples of such laws include those which: • Make it illegal for blacks to

- supervise whites: · Force blacks to carry passes at all times, and live in
- separate areas from whites: · Allow corporations to pay
- lower wages to blacks.

"The corporations have benefited in their profit margins by employing black labor very cheaply," he said.

An exit of U.S. Corporations from South Africa "would be one more important step for helping end the apartheid system." Derman concluded.

City Councilmember Larry Owen said East Lansing could pass the boycott resolution. based on past experience.

Owen was referring to a resolution passed in 1972 which required the city to take a corporation's involvement in Vietnam into account before doing business with it.

When accepting bids from corporations, Mayor George Griffiths said, "If the second lowest bidder was within 10 per cent and had a lower corporate involvement in the war. that bid would be chosen.

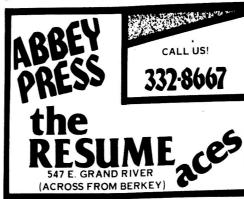

The city used a bulletin which published the names and amounts of Pentagon contracts with corporations to identify the extent of their Vietnam involvement, Griffiths said.

By BYRON BAKER "Network" has a number of things in its favor. First, its screenwriter, the celebrated Paddy Chavefsky ("Marty." "The Bachelor Party," Americanization of Emily," "The Hospital"), receives a rare honor for a writer, a possessive credit (the billing reads, "Network" by Paddy Chayef-Secondly, an actress (Fave Dunaway) is given first billing, another choice accolade these days of few known actresses and fewer parts for them to fill.

The picture is the first M-G-M production in some years that can be referred to as an unqualified hit, and the rave notices and 10 Oscar nominations seem to be cementing its box-office success.

But "Network" is a cynical, calculating and facile motion picture. A lot of this is certainly Chayefsky's point - "Network" is, after all, an attack on the television industry, and TV certainly could do with some cold, sane cynicism. However, more of "Network" is gratuitous and polemic.

Howard Beale (Peter Finch), a respected, if stodgy, anchorman, is fired by the United Broadcasting System for low ratings. Depressed, he begins to brood. Shortly before his notice is due, he announces on his program that he plans to literally "blow his brains out" on the air one week hence.

This horrifies most all the network staff, particularly Beale's old friend and immediate superior, Max Schumacher (William Holden). But a new, ambitious programing executive. Diana Christensen (Faye Dunaway) has cast an eye upon the ratings of Beale's action, and persuades hard-nosed corporate vice president Frank Hackett (Robert Duvall) to retain Beale and put his news program under her auspices.

make love in an unfurnished, barren apartment. This is lit beautifully by Bertolucci in cold, somber tones, underlining the emptiness of it all.

Schneider objects to the anonymity and coldness, and Brando, feeling unable to face yet another wearing relationship, gives in. The inevitably tragic end is powerfully drawn out by Brando's magnificent performance. Many said it was quite autobiographical and, whether this is true or not, it is his best in a long, high-quality career. In fact, it may be the finest film acting by any male.

Bertolucci shows one of the marks of a great director by unobtrusively giving a great actor the setting to perform his magic. In one scene, he simply turns the camera on Brando and lets him address it, thus characterizing himself. He describes incidents such as the time, in his youth on his father's farm, he was forced to finish a forgotten chore before going to the prom in a pick-up truck, with manure on his shoes and an unseen scar. Much of this long soliloquy is said to be improvised and without cuts. It works, or comes close, to unedited filmed reality.

When Brando burst onto the scene with "Streetcar Named Desire" in the late 40s and played Antony in "Julius Caesar," both on stage and film, he was ranked by some critics with Laurence Olivier as one of the two finest English-speaking actors in the world. While Olivier continued on the stage doing the classics and filmed work such as "Richard III."

Brando toiled in "Mutiny on the Bounty," Chaplin's "Countess from Hong Kong" and other fiascos. Finally, with "Tango," Brando renews his promise.

The projected series about the Ecumenical Liberation Army reflects a cock-eyed version of the filming of "Underground" which concerned the Weatherman. Also visible is a thin veneer of racism and sexism when the villainess is a woman and the Communists and anarchists are the only blacks in

Sharply observed details about the way television works and the way people in the business talk and think get vitiated by the grouchy preachments inserted almost randomly against the younger generation's dependence on the tube, their inability to think for themselves and the soulless reaches at the top of the network. Not that these things may not have a basis in fact, but

way that each thing and thought sets in its separate cubicle so as the film does not have total impact. "Network" unfolds as a series of sharp lines, snappy patter and clever observations, displayed as sterilely and individually as a Richard Avedon

Anyone who has seen the way Louise Lasser's emotional state has been exploited on "Mary Hartman, Mary Hartman" or seen people dragged to death behind cars in Beirut on the news can have few illusions about the intrinsic morality of television executives. If works, it airs - unless there is massive public or professional protest. But "Network" manages to make the possible seem improbable, a sad fate from what could be a very funny film.

McLaughlin faces sudden challenge for GOP top post

By MICKI MAYNARD State News Staff Writer

The most intense internal struggle in recent years will come to a head this weekend as Michigan Republicans gather for their spring convention in Detroit.

At stake is the top leadership post of a party that has seen its majorities in both houses of the legislature disappear in the last six years.

Until this week, party leaders scoffed at the challenge for the chairmanship by former state Rep. F. Bob Edwards of Flint.

GOP chairperson William McLaughlin, who has held that post since 1969, seemed certain to wrap up another term, with virtually all party leaders in his corner.

With the backing of both Gov. William G. Milliken and U.S. Sen. Robert Griffin, as well as many of the state's county chairpersons, Mc-Laughlin loomed as formidable to Edwards.

Edwards went around the top bloc of McLaughlin's support by taking his candidacy to the grassroots workers. He sent out questionnaires and letters and visited party meetings in all corners of the state.

The result of his stumping came earlier this week, when Edwards announced that he had 560 of the needed 774 delegates to win the post. Whether his figures hold or are just his own version of the numbers game may hinge on the effects of a letter to delegates by Milliken. The letter, in which Milliken blasted Edwards' leadership abilities and said he had a reputation as a loser, was no surprise to the former lawmaker, as he heard rumors the governor planned such a move.

The Milliken letter prompted a member of the House leadership, Rep. Bill Bryant, R-Grosse Pointe Woods, to come out in favor of Edwards. Bryant said Thursday that he saw a "one-third, one-third and one-third split" among his Republican colleagues.

"About one-third have come out for Bob. one-third support Bill but agree with everything

Analysis

Bob says, and I think one-third honestly haven't made up their minds," he said.

Even with the big names in his corner, McLaughlin supporters seem to be taking no chances for an upset Saturday.

One MSU student said the political maneuvering was not only verbal. Promised a delegate spot from Oakland County as a reward for help in the November election, the student called home for his credentials and found that he had been made an alternate.

He said he was sure his support for Edwards was the cause of the move.

If Edwards comes into Cobo Hall Saturday morning with a large number of delegates, his victory could hinge on whether or not the ballot is a secret one.

There is no requirement in convention rules that the ballot be open or secret. Conventions in the past have gone either way.

But Edwards has made it an issue this year, saying that a secret ballot is necessary in order to assure a vote free from political maneuvering.

McLaughlin said he would press for, and expected to have, an open ballot. His rationale is that since the delegates are representing other Republicans, the convention has a right to know how each delegate votes.

The result of the race will undoubtedly be connected with Milliken. If McLaughlin wins, and wins comfortably, it will show that the governor has a strong hold on the party's loyalty.

If, however, Edwards is able to upset the leadership, his victory will be interpreted as a severe blow to Milliken's own leadership.

Ironically, another hotly contested battle took place at a convention in the late 1960s, when a young senator named William G. Milliken upset the party leadership and won the lieutenant governor's spot with then-Gov. George Romney.

"We're stuck out in the middle of the Atlantic. No one really knows our problems except us," said Joseph E. Sollitto Jr., chairperson of the all-island board of selectmen for Martha's Vineyard.

McCarthy said he may ask the congressman in whose district the island is located, Rep. Gerry Studds, to file federal legislation to make Martha's Vineyard a separate state. On the other hand, he said, "Maybe we should secede from the country. That way we'd get all sorts of foreign aid."

The islands have had their own state representatives since the Martha's Vineyard is within sight of the Cape Cod mainland five miles away. But Nantucket is 25 miles at sea and a two-hour ferryboat ride from Woods Hole, on Cape Cod.

The Vineyard has about 8,000 year-round residents and Nantucket has about 5,500. But in the summer, island populations swell five times over, and local officials want their own state legislator to represent both islands.

Wrestlers meet No. 4 Badgers

By TOM SHANAHAN State News Sports Writer

MSU's wrestling team gets an early look at the site of the Big Ten Tournament March 4 and 5 when it meets No. 4 Wisconsin in an afternoon bout at 2 p.m. Saturday.

The Badgers boast a 10-3 record and are the last powerful dual opponent MSU has to face on the schedule that would have tested any school.

"Wisconsin has a tremendous team and are the only team in history to have beaten Oklahoma and Oklahoma State back-to-back," MSU coach Grady Peninger praised. In mid-January the Badgers defeated both traditional powers in a Friday and Saturday series which shot them up to No. 2 in the national rankings.

But Wisconsin suffered a letdown the next week and lost an upset to Northwestern to settle into the No. 4. rating.

MSU's 118-pounder Terry Etchison (0-12) and 158-pounder Doug Siegert (9-5) face the biggest tests of the meet. Etchison faces Jim Haines, who is 26-1 this season and has recorded 158 takedowns. He also wrestled on the U.S. Olympic team last summer. At 158-pounds the Badgers have the defending national champion in Lee Kemp, who is featured in Sports Illustrated this week. Kemp, 39-0 last season and 27-1 this season, wanted to come to MSU three years ago, but couldn't get a scholarship until his sophomore year, if he made the team. Disappointed, Kemp opted for Wisconsin.

The rest of the Spartan line-up will remain the same, with only two duals left on the slate after Saturday.

Mike Walsh, at 126 pounds, and Don Rodgers, at 134 pounds, hold the most impressive records with 14-7 and 10-4 marks, respectively. Spartans need to accumulate as individual victories as possible in the last three duals to improve their records. The seeding for Big Ten Tournament is dependent upon the wrestler's record.

Peninger said there will be no more changes in the line-up, barring unforeseen circumstances, because of the Big Ten "There will be no more tryouts before the meets to win a position in the line-up," he said. "I want to take pressure off them so they can concentrate on the Big Ten."

Other Spartans currently with winning marks are Bob Pollitt. (150 pounds) who is 6-5; Rick Warner (167 pounds), 11-10; Jim Ellis (177 pounds), 11-8; and Shawn Whitcomb (190 pounds), 8-7.

MSU has one home meet left in the 1976 campaign, which is Monday against Missouri in the Men's IM Building at 3 p.m.

Men gymnasts hope to get well at expense of three Illinois foes

By JOHN SINGLER State News Sports Writer

In what has agonizingly become an all-too familiar outlook for the MSU men's gymnastics team, it is once again faced with the proposition of performing fiawlessly, man for man down the roster, or losing another meet.

Thanks to injuries aplenty, any depth the Spartans had before the season has faded into headaches, plaster casts and red shirts. They travel to Illinois this weekend for a dual meet with Illinois State tonight and a triple-dual with Western Illinois and Illinois Chicago Circle Saturday.

MSU head coach George Szypula said that on a good day, Illinois State is capable of scoring 207 points, a mark the Spartans haven't seriously come close to this season.

MSU all arounder Jeff Rudolph once again faces a quality challenge in Hilnors State's Bob Bassett, who scores around 51.00,

MSU has never faced Western Illinois in dual-meet competition. Szypula said that the worst is behind the Spartans and looks Fetters said. "On paper they are a little bit ahead of us and we'd have to be considered an underdog at this point.

MSU is 6-2 on the season and 3-2 in the conference going into its final dual meet of the season before preparing for the Big Ten meet the first week in March.

Divers Dave Burgering, Marc Stiner and Jesse Griffin are all coming off excellent performances against Wisconsin and will again be looked on to score heavily for the Spartans. John VandeBunte in the short sprints and Shawn Elkins will hold down the distance spots but balanced scoring is a must if the

Those second and thirds will have to come from backstroke ecialists Mike Rado and Mark Outwater along with Barry Griffiths in the breastroke. Jim Dauw is a good bet to place with Elkins in the distance events while sprinter Glenn Disosway will attempt to get back in the scoring column.

Considering the results of the University retrenchment program, many college deans said they feel their colleges have reached a critical point in being able to maintain the instructional quality of their programs.

The University retrenchment program has not been the single and sudden cause of the colleges' financial problems. A slow deterioration of funding over the past few years due to the poor economic situation of a state just beginning to recover from near depression, shares the blame.

For the current fiscal year, the 17 colleges at MSU, in addition to the Graduate School and separately organized instruction, were allocated $79.8 million from the University general operating budget, which was up from the $76.6 million received last year despite the 2½ per cent cutback because of salary increases within the colleges and special funding from the state to the new medical school.

Funding for equipment, how-ever, was down a total of $174,000, with 13 colleges being allocated funding below levels

Funding for labor, which encompasses administrative and secretarial salaries, was down $6,000 from the 1975-76 total of $1,400,000. Salaries for faculty increased $200,000 to $69.5 million and supplies and services rose $190,000 up to $7.3 million.

The University retrench ment program evolved out of the annual self-evaluation report which is made by each of the colleges every year. The self-evaluations made by the colleges are usually assessments of future plans, requests for additional funds, and how the new funds would be used.

In the past two years the University administration has asked the college deans to include in their self-evaluation a section that asks each department or college to pick out items they would eliminate if they had to give up a 5 per cent portion of University general funding.

The result has been an attempt to reassess priorities for the whole academic area of MSU and determine the programs that are least essential to the University - not an easy automatic conclusion is that this constitutes unnecessary or unwarranted duplication

The Michigan system is not highly centralized, but Michigan's public colleges are highly productive and efficient — albeit underfunded. Any argument that millions of taxpayers' dollars could be saved annually in public higher education in Michigan is totally illusory and cannot be supported by fact. Indeed, any further attempts at financial retrenchment would inflict crippling damage to higher education, public access to it and the quality of educational services provided.

What many critics seem to ignore is the fact that the planning and coordination of public higher education in Michigan today is already exercised by several public agencies in a reasonably

To replace this with central control would require that the central body have the power to allocate resources among the educational institutions. In Michigan, this would mean the removal of power from the Legislature and its transfer to the central board. The Legislature would only decide the total amount to be allocated to higher education overall while the central board would decide the division of the fiscal pie among institutions and programs.

A central board would be costly in other ways. It would add another non-productive layer of bureaucracy to drain off limited resources that might better be directed to the delivery of higher education services. Further, we would give up the efficiencies and quality responsiveness of competitive, decentralized decision making and local control - a system which has benefitted the Michigan taxpayers who support the higher education system and the students who participate in it.

I know that my earlier attempt to liken the Michigan higher education system to a "competitive" model may dismay many faculty and students who will argue that a university is much more than an educational factory stamping out students' degrées. completely agree. A university is much, much more. And indeed, I have deliberately used this analogy to highlight the myopia with which our critics approach higher education with all their quantitative and efficiency measures.

A university is not a glorified high school, and a professor's sole productivity is not limited to a classroom lecture.

But what is far more serious is the extent to which all such debates miss the very fundamental point of the true nature of higher education. A college or university is not merely an institution to transmit knowledge, but the very central social vehicle for the creation of new knowledge. It is the one institution in our society whose primary purpose is the expansion of human knowledge in a setting which encourages the pursuit of truth wherever that may lead. To be sure, invention and discovery takes place outside of the university. We certainly do not have a monopoly on creativity. But in the private sector, such pursuits are frequently constrained if not directed toward short-term profit objectives. Whereas, in the college or university, the hallmark of its discovery is the universal sharing of that knowledge.

There does not appear to be a single discipline or professional school on our campus that is not substantially engaged in significant research and other creative efforts; and the great najority of these individual and group efforts have meaning both for the citizens of Michigan and beyond. Continued neglect by the state will place at peril not only the approximately $100 million received for sponsored research by Michigan universities but even more importantly, the much larger gain which comes from deploying much of this information to the benefit of the industries. social services and citizens of the state.

There is an even more disturbing aspect to this entire press toward greater centralization and control of higher education in Michigan: the dangers of Orwellian human engineering.

In 1949, when George Orwell published his classic book "1984," its prophesies were seen as largely allegorical. In the area of higher education, unless we begin to see some changes, I believe that we are likely to reach his prophecy of human engineering before 1984.

There is implicit in all arguments in favor of centralization of higher education an inherent assumption, if not an article of faith, that a centralized plan developed and administered by a central authority is a more accurate reflection of future state needs than those needs as reflected by the individual choices of the people themselves.

On what basis do central planners have such greater omniscience and wisdom? If we had relied upon their manpower projections in engineering in the early 1970s, we would have closed down our College of Engineering! Further, it is unlikely that a central state planning body would have encouraged many of the areas of research and scholarly excellence present at MSU today.

TONIGHT & SATURDAY

Through The Looking Glass is a very ambitious hard-core film with some substance to go along with the pretense. It's a psychological suspense film that appears to have been influenced by Hitchcock, Polanski and Fellini.

The seriousness of Looking Glass is evident in the heavy accent on plot: a wealthy beautiful woman's lapses into erotic and psychotic fantasies. There is an equally heavy emphasis on bizare scenes and special effects, most of which, if not original, do hold the viewer's interest and are considerably better than you would expect in a sexual ly explicit film. And most importantly, the beautiful woman is played by Catherine Burgess, who is indeed a beautiful woman. Burgess is a model and acting student who can act — for a change

As the movie opens, we follow Catherine the heroine of Looking Glass is also named Catherine from the beauty parlor to an opulent estate that reflects the grandeur of a past century setting the stage for the bizarre events to come later that evening, during dinner, Catherine excuses herself from her husband and guests and slithers up to an attic room where she lives her secret life in front of a mirror. "Catherine, you're delicious she narcissistically croons into the glass while masturbating and conjuring up a green-armed wild-eyed demon-lover (Jamie Gillis). He steps out of the mirror, and their coupling is accompanied by suitably eerie music and a phantas magoric collage effect.

As the film progresses, so do Catherines in tasies. Following "an oral encounter" between he chauffeur and maid, Catherine again retires to the attic. This time her mind brings forth a fema lover, and they writhe sensuously on a brillion silver rug. Her fantasy lover then leads her through the mirror and into a garden where a rather un usual luncheon orgy is taking place Catherine who is dressed all in white, looks like a some nambulistic Alice in Wonderland

Through the Looking Glass contains a brilliant erotic flashback scene with Jamie Gillis as Call erine's father and the angel-faced Maile Taylo as Catherine in her adolescence. Using pervers smoothness, Gillis talks his daughter out of i clothes and onto her knees in one of the most erot hard-core scenes of this or any year. Whether not you harbor incestuous fantasies this see is bound to kick over your libido.

Looking Glass is definitely an erotic film of expresses some dramatic values through skill camera work, good production quality and a te well-rendered concepts. The film contains number ous psychological twists, some of which are a scure and confusing. Still, Through The tack Glass is one of the best hard-core tilms to do and it firmly establishes director Middleton front ranks of X-rated film makers.

MSU CATA SERVICE

I THINK I'LL PULL A LITTLE SURPRISE INSPECTION ON "A" COMPANY

Excerpts from Wharton's annual speed

Michigan State University is about to launch a major review of its long-range priorities. The exercise is one in which faculty, staff, administrators, students, and trustees will play a vital role. The hoped for outcome will be an improved focus of our mission, better fiscal health, and greater capacity to achieve our educational, research and extension goals. Given the responsible manner in which similar assignments have been undertaken by the MSU academic community in the past, I am confident that this current venture will be successful and lead to an even stronger and greater Michigan State University.

Will we, internally, have an important role in determining the university's destiny or will it be largely determined externally? Our long-range planning effort is a university wide attempt to influence that destiny. Will external forces frustrate and negate our attempt? What are the current trends and tendencies that are likely to adversely restrict our effort to deal with our future?

As part of a state system of higher education, many of the most serious problems which our university has been experiencing of late are often more a function of the system's condition than our own separate actions. Nowhere is this more evident than in Michigan's underfunding of higher education. State support for higher education is a substantially smaller portion of Michigan's general fund now than it was 10 years ago.

In addition to the underfunding of the system as a whole. Michigan State University is underfunded relative to other comparable institutions. At the request of the Governor, the State Board of Education recently studied relative levels of funding and found that on a per-student basis, MSU received $22 million less per year than Wayne State University and $33 million less than the University of Michigan.

In times of fiscal stress, there is a natural tendency to seek out ways to secure increased efficiency. Michigan State University has repeatedly and successfully secured such efficiencies while constantly striving to protect the quality of our educational enterprise and to minimize any adverse human impact.

We believe that Michigan State University has more than fulfilled its obligation in accommodating to the state's recent fiscal ills. And the long-range planning excercise is another example of our institutional responsibility to the people who support us.

However, the heightened statewide competition for limited resources has led some to assume that there are significant savings to be made by greater centralization and control of the system of higher education. When this growing clamor for centralization of authority is coupled with the increasing external intrusions of rules, guidelines, reports, agency requirements, etc., it is readily apparent why I raised the question of whether we at

Michigan State University will be allowed to affect our own

Few people realize that the current system of public higher education in Michigan is basically a competitive model.

This system of higher education is primarily propelled by demand. Each college and university in Michigan enrolls students and offers courses because there are persons who want to take these courses and who are willing to pay for them.

Universities do compete, however, and students respond to and benefit from such competition.

Each university strives to maintain the highest possible quality rogram at the lowest possible cost to the student. And if more than one college or university is offering the program, the higher quality one per dollar cost will survive. The basic point is that the forces of competition work to move us into areas of high demand and out of those with low student interest, and they also make us strive to keep the quality/cost ratio at its optimal level.

New programs also are viewed by some as a one-way street; always adding and never subtracting. Such critics fail to comprehend that an educational program at a college or university is a living entity, not a static creature that once locked into place, never changes. At MSU we no longer have courses on draft horses,

If you accept the similarities of our current higher ed If you accept the similar reas of our current night elessystem to a competitive model, you can readily appreciate consternation at those citizens, especially from the ball to the same of the control of of th consternation at those criticals, especially from the bacommunity, who argue for central control. (It is irone than these same corporate executives would be horrlist than the same corporate that it would be more efficient if the these same corporate exceeding would be more efficient if there we recommendation that it would be more emeter in there were not automobile dealer in each Michigan town and city Cadillacs, Lincolns, Buicks, Fords, Chryslers, Darts, p. Pintos, etc.; yet they recommend this same solution for higher education.)

igher education., Advocates of centralized planning and administration s have two motives. One relates to a complex power drive have two mouves. One remarks and decision-making into the desire to consolidate authority and decision-making into the entity, believing that thereby the overall operation to the not result would be to remove the control of the con entity, believing that thereby the overall operation improved. The net result would be to remove or red authority and control of the governing boards, the Govern the Legislature and substitute their own. A second not the Legislature and substitute their own. A second non-economic — the belief that there is fat or surplus capacity universities which can somehow be captured to an universities current fiscal plight. The latter argument is frequently couched in terms of course and program duplic a major or program exists at more than one university (continued on page 16)
