FBI spied on radicals at Central

State News Staff Writer The FBI, with the help of officials at Central Michigan University, monitored activities of the Young Socialist Alliance (YSA) from 1971 to 1975, government documents reveal.

The documents, expected to be released at a press conference in Detroit today, were obtained as part of a federal suit filed in July 1973 by the Socialist Workers Party and the YSA against the FBI, the CIA and other agencies.

"The documents show that the YSA at Central was surveyed by the FBI from 1971 to 1975," Howard Simon, executive director of the Michigan American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), said Tuesday.

"The documents also appear to show great collusion between university administrators and the FBI in monitoring the number of members in the organization and the degree of organization among group members," Simon said.

William Boyd, president of CMU from 1968 to 1975, said Tuesday that he found the allegations unbelievable.

Suspect arraigned in murder

By MICHAEL MACKSOOD and DEBBIE WOLFE State News Staff Writers

Steven E. Luplow, 23, of Saginaw, was arraigned on an open charge of murder Tuesday afternoon in East Lansing District Court in connection with the shooting death

Judge Daniel L. Tschirhart remanded Luplow to the Ingham County Jail to be held without bond while awaiting his preliminary examination in East Lansing. The exam was set for 1:30 p.m. March 8.

If at the preliminary examination the prosecutor can show a crime was committed and that there is probable cause to believe Luplow might have committed the crime. then the matter will be sent to the Circuit Court in Lansing.

Luplow is charged with the shooting death of Sheryl A. Luplow, a 22-year-old MSU student who was shot Monday in Olds

E. Germany announces wall fee

BERLIN (AP) - East Germany on Tuesday announced a 10-mark fee, about $4.20 for every car crossing the Wall from West Berlin into the Communist sector, the latest in a series of moves to discourage Western contacts with East Berliners.

Diplomats said the fees are also part of a quickening Communist drive to fully integrate East Berlin into East Germany.

The new toll, along with visa fees and mandatory currency exchanges, raised the price for a foreigner crossing into East Berlin to about $9.

The new move affects all cars except those of military or diplomatic personnel of the Western allies, who cross the 10 checkpoints along the 110-mile barrier around West Berlin for free.

West Berlin spokespersons said the effect of the new toll was immediate and traffic across the line was down by as much as a third at some crossing points.

Copies were mailed to the JMC Student Caucus, ASMSU, the State News and JMC Acting Dean Barbara Ward.

"I have no idea why a group comparable to our Academic Council would take time to be involved in passing such a resolution," Ward said.

"It's obvious that they do not understand the new direction of the college," she said.

March Koenigsberg, the Wayne State Student-Faculty Council chairperson and a Monteith student, said that the elimination of Monteith had pointed to an inevitable fate for JMC.

"We knew when the groundwork was laid out to eliminate Monteith that it was only a matter of time before they got to

Shortly after the passage of the Student-Faculty Council's resolution to support JMC, the Monteith College Student Board drafted an "almost identical" statement, according to board president Colleen Jensen.

"All we're trying to say is that Monteith is in the process of being phased out. We knew that we were only the first. We firmly believe that people have the right to choose the kind of education

Both resolutions were patterned after a resolution adopted at last month's state Democratic convention in Detroit, where the party went on record as reaffirming "its support of quality of general education" and as opposing "the proposed elimination of education designed to promote critical and creative thinking — to develop learning skills which JMC students will use long after their college years become nostalgia," the resolution reads in part. "It is claimed that money will be saved if the present program is

While all three resolutions focus on the possible phasing-out of the undergraduate liberal arts curriculum, none mention the proposal to transform JMC into the administrative unit for the Lifelong Education program.

The resolutions also contrast with the recent resolution of MSU's Student Council, which drafted a statement last week expressing "extreme dismay" over the procedures used to carry out the proposed moratorium on freshman admissions to JMC.

An Alabama-born environmentalist who is personally credited with adding 159 endangered species to the U.S. Department of Interior list told MSU students Monday night that animals not only add beauty to nan's world but are also necessary to the cosystem.

Lewis Regenstein, executive director of the Fund for Animals, cited many instances where the environment was severly disupted after the loss of one species of

One example of this involves the near extinction of the once prevalent crocodile. Regenstein said the areas which once e abundant with crocodile and then lost hem soon experienced excessive numbers predatory fish. As the number of atory fish increased, the number of fish sed for food declined.

He said it was the crocodile that kept the redatory fish in check. The loss of resulted in a reduced number of od fish and the outcome was a serious ampering to the fishing industry.

"No one dreamed this relationship existed until it was too late to do anything about it," Regenstein said.

A similar problem came about in the canals along the Eastern seaboard after the sea cow became extinct.

Regenstein said when these animals disappeared, the canals became overgrown with water hyacinths, a plant considered a weed because of its undesirability.

As a solution, he said, the government chose to bring in poisonous chemicals to kill the water hyacinths - a step which may cause further environmental damage. In some instances, Regenstein said, the loss of particular species may hamper the future disease control of man. It has recently been discovered that some species of mollusks secrete substances which are a source of drugs and medicines for man. Regenstein said there are already many species of extinct mollusks.

"This may deny the human race a future

MODELING MAKES FOR RELAXING PASTIME

oted environmentalist says Hobby scales down frustration

By MICHAEL SAVEL State News Staff Writer

People from diverse professions, from University administrators to Oldsmobile line worshops often on a nightly basis hours on end to toil with delicate plastic kits and airbrushes to recreate vintage cars, aircraft and ships.

Scale modeling, the art of recreating vintage relics to the last intricate detail, is merely a pastime for some, but an obsession for others.

Like any other hobby, it provides a sense of relaxation and accomplishment. In Lansing there is a scale modeler's club. where about 30 members get together monthly to show off their finished works and discuss problems they are having. But for the most part, scale modeling is a private hobby, something to work on alone in the privacy of a workshop down in the corner of a basement.

"It's a change of pace for me after dealing in the office with these graduate students all day," said Ellis Hammond, associate director of foreign and graduate admissions, and president of the Lansing chapter of the scale modelers club. "It's an opportunity to express yourself. It sort of extends my personality."

Scale modeling is a craft that takes long hard hours of delicate work. At times a modeler has worked on a project for weeks and then had to junk it.

"There are control factors involved," Hammond said. "You can put in the necessary devotion and dedication on a project and then see that it will never work out and have to toss it into the waste basket.

The Lansing Scale Modelers Club has 30 members, with only two associated with the University. Many of the members are old war buffs whose main interest is in creating old war craft, and others create perfect replicas of vintage cars and

The mixture in the club comes from all lines," Hammond said. "We have artists, pilots, professors and factory workers all with different pursuits and goals in modeling.

Getting into scale modeling involves a large time and Murray is sponsored by the financial commitment. One has to be willing to spend at least 10 hours on a typical project and make a $100 initial investment.

individual goals, but a typical project would mean at least a 10-hour time investment," Hammond said. "One has to be willing to invest money to get into it like any other hobby. A photographer for example, would not just buy a Brownie. To get serious there is a large

The $100 investment goes to purchase an airbrush for about $30 and a compressor for about $60. The prices of kits range from 49 cents to over $100.

Rider's Hobby Shop on Trowbridge Road has all the equipment necessary to get started, and Michael Allen, manager of the shop, said modeling for the most part does not involve and skilled laborers. students.

"Most students have no money, time or space to work on it," he said. "It is a good way to take a vacation from school and a good way to avoid exams during finals week."

Allen said most of the clientele consists of professionals

The Lansing Scale Modelers Club meets on the first Friday of each month. Any modelers or anyone with an interest in modeling is welcome to join. For more information contact Ellis Hammond in the Administration Building or Rider's

VIEWPOINT: TELEVISION

Form of entertainment

By HERBERT T. SCHULER

I'm mad as hell, too — at John Casey's column on the state of television in Friday's State News. Sure, there are many things wrong in TV land, but Casey makes it sound like the industry is an evil force trying to destroy America.

Sure, the advertising for all cars when divided by the number of cars sold may give a quotient of $100, but because car manufacturers can mass advertise autos on TV, they can sell greater numbers of cars. The more cars sold, the lower the price of the viewing time was over six hours per day. Yes, there are a lot of people doing double time. There are a lot of shut-ins who are all alone with nothing to do, who watch TV 12 to 16 hours per day. As in the bathroom case, these heavy viewers go a long way to cover the light and nonview ers, and make the average time seem high. You might say these people should read books. Well, what about my aunt who is unable to get out of the house without help? In order to read, she needs bright light and a magnifying glass, and then she can only read for short periods of time. I'm happy as hell she has a TV to while away her hours rather than stare at a blank wall and go crazy.

What's so bad about having more TV sets than bathrooms in America? A family of three can get along fine with one bathroom, but if they want to watch three different shows at the same time, they're stuck with only one TV and a fight. Besides, bath rooms are more expensive. Aside from the facetious, CBS' New York studios have more TV sets than most towns in Michigan have bathrooms. With the three big networks and all the other studios in the United States (how about all the TVs at MSU?), that goes a long way to cover the families with only one bathroom.

There is nothing wrong with CBS profiting $1 billion dollars. Exxon and GM made more than that ($2.5 billion and $1.25 billion, respectively) as well as other corporations. However, if Nicholas Johnson had checked more carefully, he would have found CBS profits last year to be $123 million (a far cry from one billion) out of sales of $1.9 billion. CBS profits come not only from television, but also radio, its record company and many other varied investments. Sixty-eight other American corporations made larger profits than CBS last year.

CBS is a corporation owned by several thousand individuals. When that profit is divided among all the shares outstanding, it becomes only a few dollars profit per share. I suppose it is OK for John Casey to earn a billion dollars, but because CBS is an evil force, it is wrong for CBS to make a large profit.

Johnson was wrong when he said no politician has ever made waves against broadcasters. What about Spiro Agnew? Sen. John Pastore, D-R.I. has been an outspoken critic of children's programing and violence. Johnson is an egotistical publicity seeker and his liberal views are not popular with the American public Three years ago, he ran for Congress in my home district in the state of Iowa. He was soundly defeated in the Democrat primary election. You may say, well in Iowa they're all conserva tive hicks, but we're the state which brought you the ultraliberal Sens. Harold Hughes, Dick Clarke and John Culver (the latter two presently serving) and four out of six liberal Democrat House seats at present.

Casey states in his article. "Considering the fact that I don't watch the damn thing. . ." Well, considering this fact, where does Casey get his authority for criticizing something he can't know about? I also saw the movie "Network" and realize that it was an exaggeration to make its point. However, after reading Casey's article, one gets the feeling that he thinks the TV programing of "Network" already exists.

There is nothing wrong with television as a form of entertainment. It doesn't have to be a media for only education and social enlightenment. After all, books are a form of entertainment, too.

No excuse

After reading John Singler's article on the women's gymnastics team in Friday's State News, I felt compelled to write and set him straight on a couple of things.

Although Singler professes to have a great deal of respect for the University's women gymnasts, his reference to them twice as "girls" belies this. Male athletes are not referred to as "boys" in State News articles and there is no excuse for referring to female athletes as "girls."

Secondly, Singler's closing remark that "...the players are better looking than the cheerleaders" is so asinine as to be laughable. He obviously does not realize that a gymnastics meet is just that - not a beauty contest.

I am glad to see that women's athletics are finally receiving some of the coverage that is their due, but in the future I hope that the assignments will be given to writers who have their feminist shit a little

Complaints

Don't get me wrong, I don't have anything against the addition of another locally drawn cartoon strip. But for the past couple of weeks ever since the debut of "Brown's Town," a terrible malady seems to have swept the campus. Wherever I go, I see your patrons huddled over crumpl messes of State News, clutching desperately to avoid dropping the matted wad of newsprint while they struggle with their felt-tip pens.

Natural foods

If the answers to queries about "natural foods" in the Nutrition column of Feb. 21 are representative of the graduate students' academic inquiries, then I would suggest that they and, perhaps, their instructors, are seriously infected by di-seases of intellectual mediocrity and tunnel

Despite repeated misuse of the term "natural" and its continued eluding of definition, the general acceptance of its various meanings demands an answer that is more to the point. That "Vitamin C concentrations have been found higher in the peel of apples than in the cortex" and other such verbiage should suffice as an answer to the question posed, is an insult to the reader's intelligence.

Why not talk about what isn't "natural" in our diets? Why not mention DES fattening hormones developed by Purdue to accelerate meat production that also guarantee many women in this country a chance to have cervical cancer? Why not tell the reader about high salt and sugar additions to foods, about #1 Red food coloring, about carcinogenic nitrite meat additives? The list venience." Perhaps they should go on and speak to the issues of chemical contamina-tion of foods by pesticides, PCB, PBB, DDT and by a whole host of Alice in Wonderland, alphabet-soup compounds. Finally, they might want to tell the reader that a lot of this "progress" has been brought to us with the help of universities like ours, at the expense (both in money and health) of our tax dollars and (often) for the profit of the food industry. Yes, there are such things as "natural foods," but don't look for them at the local grocery store because after you reap what you sow, you may need to process the living shit out of it in order to get USDA Grade A

Plague spreads at MSU

There is a plague that spreads every winter t Not much research has been conducted on the disease and little is known about it.

Most students who are struck by it don't even know what it is or what to take for it. But they know they caught something. I did. It hit me last week during pre-enrollment when I was comparing the closed section sheet with the schedule book to see which had more classes listed.

Ross said the issue was of immense concern to Michigan

"In the four years this lobby has been in existence, no issue have the people been more frightened or anxious of than PBB," he said.
Ross said he felt the state's consumers had to have the choice not to buy food produced in Michigan.

Taylor said much of the beef consumed in Michigan was now produced out of state, particularly in Iowa. He added that Michigan beef had not been selling well since the scandal broke. "Consumers have been reluctant to buy it," he said. "They aren't Ross said industry sources told his group that around 30 per cent of the meat sold in state supermarkets was Michigan beef. Taylor said he was not certain about the exact percentage.

Ross told reporters that the labeling program could be an expensive proposition to the meat industry, but added, "They may have to pay the price. I don't see how you can ask people to blindly consume food, the effects of which may be devastating. He said the citizen's lobby was trying to create a situation in which the meat industry had a choice — do nothing and lose consumer confidence or deal with the issue.

'All the producers who haven't had contact with PBB seem either uninterested or are providing opposition to us," Ross said.

The plaintiffs, Roy and Marilyn Tacoma, opened Michigan's first PBB trial Monday by charging the Michigan Farm Bureau and a chemical company with covering up the livestock feed mix-up that sent tons of PBB into the state's food chain.

McIntyre, attorney for the Farm Bureau, said he told Farm Bureau employes shortly after the contamination was discovered that they should not talk to persons outside the company about the incident.

"I regret that counsel for the plaintiff has suggested that clients that they should not talk to the press and persons outside the company amounts to a coverup," he said.

But attorneys for the Tacomas maintain the chemical mix-up was no accident but an intentional coverup.
"This is one of the most bizarre cases that ever hit this state," said Paul Greer, one of the Tacomas' attorneys. "It has been said that the initial mix-up was an accident.

"But we will prove in this trial that the incident was no accident, but the result of willful, wanton and intentional acts of negligence by both defendents.' Greer and fellow attorney Gary Schenk said they will call witnesses to testify that:

•From 40 to 50 bags of Firemaster was sent to a Farm Bureau plant near Battle Creek, mistaken for Nutrimaster (a feed additive) and mixed with livestock feed:

•Farm Bureau employes who noticed the Firemaster (compound containing PBB) were later told by Farm Bureau officials "to keep their mouths shut," about it;

•After the Tacomas noticed their animals becoming sick, state agriculture and Farm Bureau officials tried to blame the ailments on "parasites and iodine poisoning:

•Farm Bureau officials told a Falmouth feed distributer in 1974 that Farm Bureau feed was "clean" when it still con tained PBB.

Greer said the defendants had several opportunities to tamination when some farmers tainted feed in 1973. The farmers complained that their cattle would not eat the food. When this happened, Greer said, the "Farm bureau added molasses to make it more palatable and resold it at a discount anything not to waste a pound.

to back opposition to rezoning of site

Lansing City Council passed a resolution Monday night supporting the position taken by the city's executive branch which opposes the East Lansing Planning Department's recommendation to rezone property for the proposed Dayton-Hudson mall.

The executive branch, which is made up of Mayor Gerald C. Graves and the city administrative government branch, first voiced its opposition to the rezoning at a public hearing of the East Lansing Planning Commission in early February. The purpose of the hearing was to get citizen input on Dayton Hudson Properties request to rezone 86 acres of the 170 acres it owns in the northwestern area of East Lansing from agricultural to commercial.

Alan Tubbs, Lansing planning director, said Tuesday that the position also states that both cities should take a cooperative approach to the proposed mall. It further states that many factors, including potential growth of the proposed area, public costs and accessibility, must be taken into

"We are thoroughly convinced that the proposed location would be disastrous to Lansing and East Lansing." Tubbs said. "It would cost between $6 and $7 million alone just to widen the streets of the area.

The position also states that the city of Lansing is willing to share with East Lansing the cost of providing services to the mall and to share in the tax benefits, Tubbs said. He added that the Urban Cooperation Act of 1967 would be the basis of Councilmember Richard Baker said Monday night he has always questioned the marketability of that shopping center.

Tubbs said that the area cannot afford to build a new shopping center if it might in any way jeopardize other centers in the region.

'Shenandoah' suffers from forced emotions

State News Reviewer

A large and enthusiastic audience responded favorably Monday to the Gary Geld-Peter Udell musical, "Shenandoah."

The play, an offering of the MSU Lecture-Concert Series, is in its current touring-company production a vehicle primarily for featured actor John Raitt. And audiences never tire, it seems, of Broadway's persistent "singing actor."

The casting of Raitt as the play's protagonist, Charlie Anderson, seems frankly inevita-little more than an aging Billy Bigelow, transported in time to the American Civil War.

That Raitt took the time to announce the similarities, in fact, during his final curtain call, seemed a bit superfluous. One has the feeling that the audience had caught on a swaggering two hours earlier.

The drama itself is a thinly plotted collection of "something for everyone." A close-knit (but war-torn) family survives that is the point of the whole where the fun comes in: the deaths of two brothers: the law, who has just delivered a child; the kidnapping of the youngest son (his name, by the way, is Boy); a young couple night by the war - and all of it in two hours and 19 songs.

Something for everyone. If one objects to this sort of thing, it is in that tears are not induced so much as they are insisted upon. Tears come at the mention of a husband and abandoned — it is sad, after all. Used dramatically, the event might yield effective domestic tragedy. Used as a trick to bring tears to the audience, it is

which "reinforces" plot does so best in the way it matches lack of imagination with lack of imagination.

Simple homespun tunes and rhythms are given big Broadway orchestrations that really make very little sense. Nothing in the score is especially memorable, unless it is the control-ling image of Charlie Anderson's song describing the loss of his daughter to her fiance.

Scenery and lighting, credited only to Associate Theatrical Designs, looked as though the most had been made of what-ever happened to be on hand. If anything of the set deserves mention, it is the cyclorama that lighted red at any mention of the word "war." The war runs the duration of the Consideration of voters' race Court to decide future of 'U' in redistricting OKd by court

WASHINGTON (AP) -State legislatures redrawing political boundaries may consider voters' race in order to give black or other nonwhite voters a greater voice in government, the Supreme Court said Tues-

The high court, with only Chief Justice Warren E. Burger disagreeing with its action, up-held a lower court decision that the New York State Legislature did not violate the Constitution when reapportioning state legislative districts in State officials acknowledged that they used voters' race as the primary consideration in the redistricting plan. The plan was designed to assure non-white voters at least a 65 per cent majority in some districts so nonwhite candidates would have a better chance of win-

Proponents called the redistricting plan a form of "affirmative action gerrymandering" while opponents called it a type of "reverse discrimination."

In his dissent, Burger said that a 1960 court decision found that the Constitution bars drawing political boundaries "with the sole, explicit objective of reaching a predeter-mined racial result."

Burger said the racial quota system employed by New York was an inpermissible form of racial discrimination.

The court's decision was a defeat for Hasidic Jews living in the Williamsburgh section of Brooklyn who protested the redistricting because it divided their community into two state Senate and Assembly districts.

An employer may become involved with affirmative action four different ways, according to the status report.

· An employer may voluntarily develop an affirmative action plan.

• An employer voluntarily accepting a federal contract must develop an affirmative action plan, including numerical goals, as a condition of doing business with the government.

 An employer may undertake affirmative action as part of a conciliation agreement with a federal or state enforcement agency, or as part of a private settlement of a suit or charge.

· Courts may impose affirmative action requirements.

The aim of affirmative action is to eliminate prospective discrimination, including eliminating the effects of past discriminatory practices that still have a negative impact on women and minorities, the status report said.

One of the tools used to end discrimination is

"Goals are an attempt to estimate what the employer's work force would look like if there had been no illegal discrimination," according to the status report, "Goals are aligned with the number of percent of qualified women and

According to Perrin, a goal "is an estimate of the net increase" of women. "Goals do not mean preferential treatment."

The terms "goals" and "quotas" are often "erroneously used interchangeably," according to the status report.

The obligation to meet the goal set by an institution under an affirmative action program is not absolute. However, an employer must demonstrate that a "good faith" effort has been made to attract women and minorities, specific iob-related objective criteria has been set up before the hiring process and equal application of the criteria has been applied.
