WENT TO ROSEBOWL ON OSU EXPENSE

prospect given trip

By EDWARD L. RONDERS State News Sports Writer copyright, 1977

Former University of Michigan middle guard Steve Anderson was the beneficiary of possibly illegal inducements while being recruited by Ohio State University football coaches and representatives, the State News has learned.

Anderson, who recently quit the Wolverine squad, received an expense-paid trip to the 1973 Rose Bowl with an OSU booster. He was also transported to and from the Columbus campus in apparent violation of National Collegiate Athletic Association

A source close to Anderson during his prep career at Toledo Scott High School, stated, "Both Steve and hisfather (Rodney) went to the 1973 Rose Bowl with Phil Scannell in his company's plane."

Scannell, head of Scannell Electrical Construction in Toledo, acknowledged that he knew Anderson but denied transporting the prep star to Pasadena.
"I remember seeing him on a couple of occasions," Scannell said. "But, it's not true that he went to the Rose Bowl with me. I went to several Rose Bowls from 1972-75 since my son was on the team. But the only people who went with me were my wife and Scannell, in response to questioning, continued, "Yes, our company has a private plane, but it's never been farther west than Minneapolis. You can check the flight log. We're required to keep a log of where we go and the names of who's on the plane. You won't find Steve Anderson's name on the log for a 10-day trip to California."

But Hampton Burkes, operation inspect or for the Federal Aviation Administration (FAA) in Columbus said the names of passengers are not required entries into Scannell, meanwhile, stated that he had been contacted by NCAA investigator Ron Stratton about the alleged trip to Pasadena. Stratton and Big Ten Commissioner Wayne Duke are currentyly conducting an inquiry into alleged OSU recruiting violations which appeared in published accounts last summer. The group of MSU Christian students said they were marching not aganist something, but for God.

Besides being a display of MSU Christian unity, the march and rally were the Christian students' expressions of the month-long Here's Life Lansing campaign, which is part of a nationwide evangelistic effort called Here's Life America.

The Beaumont Tower rally, held under a tree resplendent with "I Found It" signs, consisted of two students, an MSU professor, and a Lansing businessman sharing how they each had found a personal relationship with Jesus Christ.

MSU senior John Haddix, who is in charge of campus publicity for the Lansing campaign, said Here's Life is administered through Campus Crusade for Christ

Residence hall rates likely to increase

"The residence hall operation is only funded by those who live in the halls and we have to pass the increases along," he explained. "This is also the sixth year in a row that our costs have gone up.

The recommendation will be delayed as long as possible so costs can be determined accurately, he added, but the residence hall policy is to let returning students know the next year's rates before they leave for the

"Our intent is to keep the rates as low as possible," he said. "We've done a good job in comparison with other Big Ten and state schools that offer the 20 meal (per week) plan. We're careful with student housing

After Underwood's office makes a recom mendation, it must be approved by several other administrators before going into

Vice President for Business and Finance Roger Wilkinson said Underwood would consult the Residence Halls Association before submitting his recommendation to Lyle Thorburn, assistant vice president for housing and food services.

Thorburn would approve the recommendation and forward it to Wilkinson, who would send it to MSU President Clifton R. Wharton Jr., he said. Final approval must be made by the board of trustees.

Wilkinson said he hoped to present the recommendation to the board at its May 20 year and there is "every likelihood" that he meeting, but the process may not be

Last year, the trustees approved a $20 ncrease from $1,395 for the three-term academic year. The year before that, term rates were increased from $425.

Underwood said the rates were hiked a total of 22 per cent since 1971-72, an average of 3.7 per cent each year.

"That's not too bad when you consider what the economy's done," he added.

The rates have gone up every year since 1972-73, when dramatic increases in the number of dormitory residents offset cost increases, he said.

This year's rate hikes are a result of expected cost increases of 10 to 15 per cent of utilities, 8 to 10 per cent for food and an unknown amount for labor, he said.

Negotiations begin today on new contracts for service and skilled trade workers. The last increase was about 6 per cent, the figure Underwood said he expects to use as an estimate of labor costs in setting next year's dormitory rates.

He added that the lower figures will be used in estimating increases in food and utility costs in hopes that actual increases are minimal.

"If they're higher, we'll have to figure out a way to absorb the extra," he said.

Organizer's resignation puts halt to competition

The Brandywine Superstars 1977 competition for charity scheduled for June 25 and 26 at Brandywine Creek Club Apartments in East Lansing has been scrapped. the State News has learned.

Don Bolhuis, former manager of Brandy-property manager, said.

"We felt that without Don it would be impossible to put on Superstars," Martyniek said

Bolhuis, when contacted, said, "All I can say is that the reason I resigned is because of a failure on Brandywine's part to honor a Brandywine Superstars 1977 had already collected over $1,200 which was to be donated to Beekman Center in Lansing for physical handicapper children.

The possibility still exists that Super-stars could be held in some form, perhaps at MSU, though athletic Director Joe Kearney has not been contacted officially, he said.

"I have been sounded out about the possibility" Kearney said. "I don't know if it fits in with our criteria; that would be up to the facilities director as to what is available. I am looking forward to meeting with the people to see if something can be worked

Saboteurs blow up train in Rhodesia

SALISBURY, Rhodesia (AP) — Saboteurs, believed to be black nationalist guerillas, blew up a train on the main Rhodesia-to-South Africa railroad near the Botswana border, Rhodesian security chiefs said Wednesday.

A black railroad worker was killed and another black employe injured in the blast which threw two locomotives and a number of freight cars off the tracks, a security force communique said.

The bold sabotage of one of Rhodesia's two transport links with the South African coast was reported as the government disclosed that March saw the second biggest exodus of whites from the embattled territory since the break from British rule in 1965.

Halt of escalated oil prices urged

VIENNÁ, Austria (AP) — Venezuelan President Carlos Andres Perez proposed an international agreement Wednesday to stop what he called the escalation of raw material prices, including that of oil.

Perez, whose country is the third largest producer of oil in the 13-nation Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) made the proposal at a news conference at the end of a two-day official visit to Vienna, where OPEC is headquartered.

Perez disclosed no details of his suggestion except to say that progress toward such an accord would depend on the current dialog between developing and industrialized countries.

Officials warn of oil-related problems

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Jimmy Carter's secretaries of state and defense told Congress on Wednesday that the United States faces serious military and diplomatic problems unless it quickly reduces its reliance on Middle Eastern oil.

Earlier, Carter told members of gress at the White House that his energy package includes 113 legislative proposals and that he expects Congress to share the heat with him on the unpopular sections.

The President defended his proposed tax on gasoline and said the American people want to make a patriotic effort to help the United States out of its energy problems.

Carter approves sugar subsidies

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Jimmy Carter approved sugar subsidies of up to two cents a pound to help the ailing domestic sugar industry but vetoed a lower import quota, the White House announced Wednesday.

The decision will have no effect on consumer prices because the money will be paid by the Treasury Department instead of the consumer, the White House said.

The subsidy would be given to growers whenever the market price of sugar falls below 13.5 cents a pound. It is designed to aid financially stricken domestic growers who have seen sugar prices tumble during the last year.

But he stressed that any settlement must be worked out between the parties, and not imposed by the United States. On other topics, Vance made these points:

•The United States will pay no reparations to Vietnam but will not oppose its member-ship in the United Nations. This was announced by U.S. and Vietnamese negotiators in Paris shortly before Vance began his news conference.

There will be further discus sions with Cuba on unspecified topics now that a fishing agreement has been reached.

Prime Minister John Vorster intends to find out how fast South Africa plans to move away from racial separation. "We are unalterably opposed to apartheid," Vance said

•Rejecting the notion that the administration is retreating on the issue of human rights, Vance said concern for human rights "is absolutely central to our foreign policy and must be carried forward." •It is "a difficult problem" to move toward a normalization of relations with China and he intends to explore the subject in depth on a visit to Peking late in the year.

Discussing weapons negotiations, Vance said, "We have put no new proposals on the table, nor have they."

But in regard to his meeting in Geneva with Gromyko the secretary studiously avoided any hint of optimism. The Soviets on March 30 rejected two U.S. proposals for a new treaty to limit nuclear weapons. The U.S. "preferred option" would have made deep cuts in existing arsenals, while the second alternative would have ratified a 1974 tentative understanding to hold both powers to 2,400 long-range mbers and missiles.

Bills favor work-study, scholarship revisions

By PATRICIA LaCROIX State News Staff Writer

Campus employment recruiters who emphasize work-related experience will have a larger field of qualified applicants if a package of five education bills proposed by Rep. Perry Bullard, D. Ann Arbor, is passed by the state legislature.

The bills, proposed by Bullard prior to the legislators' Easter recess, call for a variety of measures to be taken concerning financial aid for higher education. One of the most important calls for a work-study program which will match the student's major with job possibilities.

The program calls for the work-study opportunities to be made available to students from low- and middle-income families. Maureen Kavanaugh, Bullard's administrative assistant, said that under the provisions of the Guaranteed Student Loan Program, "middle class" extends through families with an annual income of $26,000. For this reason, she said, not many people would be restricted from the program.

Bullard said this type of program is needed in Michigan due to employers' emphasis on pre-graduation-related work experience, calling this the "single most attractive credential a graduate can offer a prospective employer.'

He added that at least seven other states have successfully operating programs of this nature. Other proposals made by Bullard include:

•Removing laws prohibiting MSU, University of Michigan and Wayne State University from participating in reciprocity programs with other •Establishing a fund to assist public colleges in permitting installment tuition payment plans; •Removing age discrimination restrictions from state scholarship and merit award pro-

 Establishing a state advisory board for trade and technical schools and providing for centralized licensing and regulation of private vocational and home-study schools.

All of the bills have been referred to the House Committee on Colleges and Universities, headed by Rep. Jackie Vaughn III, D.-Detroit.

There is a "good chance" that those bills involving tuition installment payments, interstate reciprocity agreements and scholarship age discrimination provisions may be reported out of committee on May 18, Kavanaugh said.

Reciprocity programs involving the three main universities in Michigan have been rejected in the past. The proposal made by Bullard calls for agreements by the universities with out-of-state institutions.

Installment tuition payment plans have been opposed in the past, especially by community colleges, Bullard said. He explained that these institutions especially need the cash on hand at the beginning of each semester and that the "cash lull" problem could not be tolerated by them for this reason.

The bill proposed by Bullard would establish a fund from which community colleges could borrow money for operational costs. The cost estimate for establishing this fund is $32,000, Bullard said.

At MSU, the only payment that students may defer are housing charges from University housing facilities, assistant Manager of Fees and Scholarships, Bruce Smith, said.

Aaron Hall, Education Consultant for the Michigan Department of Education, said he "was not aware" of any age discrimination restrictions in Michigan's state scholarship programs. Bullard, however, said there is a degree of discrimination in several areas. The first of these is that the necessary exams to qualify for state funding must be taken while the student is still in high school. People who have already entered college are not eligible to take the tests. In addition, Bullard said the exams improperly reflect the qualifications of older applicants, since these people tend to perform better in college than on the tests.

Morals outweigh MSU-Iran film contract

Recent protests over MSU's and Ethiopia today. involvement in a project to produce films about Iranian history are grounded in one solid principle: sometimes the economic benefits of such contracts are overpowered by a moral obligation to the principles of freedom and democracy.

Obviously, the MSU brass does not adhere to this principle. This has been proven true with the revelations about MSU involvement in South Vietnam in the 1960s and in Brazil, South Korea

The Iranian Student Association on campus has correctly pointed out Iran's leader, the Shah, as torturing political prisoners. These students cannot divulge their names for fear of reprisal.

They object strenuously to MSU making films for Iran because they fear the project would obscure the Shah's political evil. MSU is contracted to produce a series of "educational" films for $247,953. The films are only to be shown in the United States and Iranian students point to this as a concerted propaganda effort in favor of the Shah.

If these allegations are only one-tenth true, MSU should get out of the contract, and preclude plans for similar contracts with other repressive regimes.

It is clear that the films are being paid for by the Iranian government through its National Iranian Radio and Television arm. To support such a repressive regime even tacitly - the Shah overthrew a popularly elected government with a military coup in 1953 — is a blatant display of moral duality.

Another objection to the films is that they span the history of Iran

Nonsense. The longer a person stays in prison, the more hardened he becomes toward society. Parole is an excellent incentive to change social behavior, a goal for which a prisoner can strive.

We must stop building prisons and start building stronger rehabilitation efforts, and we should work to understand and correct the social mire which spawns criminal behavior.

Equus

I was dismayed by Robert Novak's letter regarding Frank Rutledge's action in the Equus affair. First of all, one questions how much of a "coup" it would have been even if Equus had gone on as scheduled.

After all, Equus, put on by the National Touring Company, has already been on campus this year and the Broadway version has been playing for quite awhile.

Besides, is MSU a horsetrack or an educational institution? It was unconscionable for Rutledge to "gamble" when so many other fine plays were available to be legitimately produced.

Actually I doubt if Rutledge was even of this in any of the publicity. I think Rutledge was simply trying to do what he has gotten away with before — put a play on without gaining permission. For a representative of one of the nation's largest universities to attempt to put on a show without going through the proper legal channels is not a "noble risk."

Let's call Rutledge's behavior in this matter what it really was: careless, inconsiderate, inexcusable and illegal.

It is easy for Mr. Novak to encourage Rutledge to take even more risks — he does not rehearse every night and suffer academic decline for a production that just question of whether the Ingham Special Jail Committee will spend up to $500 for a study of past jail trends (State Journal, April 22) has raised some interesting questions that I would like to comment on.

This was during the period early in Nixon's "war on crime" when it was believed that you had to lock everybody up in order to rehabilitate them. Many Republican sheriffs jumped on the band-wagon and received the free-flowing monies from Washington to buy radio and police equipment and a few, to build jail programs.

It didn't take long to discover that the worst, most damaging thing you can do in order to rehabilitate someone is imprison them, that is to separate families, and take people from the positive influences of their jobs, their friends and the community.

Many counties in Michigan (Genesee, Kalamazoo, Jackson, Washtenaw, to name a few) were aware of this problem and began diverting resources and offenders from jails, which quickly become overcrowded and in turn directly contributed to overcrowded state prisons

In the professional literature this process of sending someone first to county jail and then to prison is known as "criminaliza-

Corporate barons battle consumer agency

WASHINGTON - During the Republican years, the Big Business barons killed, embalmed and buried the Consumer Protection Agency, which would have become a statutory Ralph Nader to plague them. But the Carter Administration has produced new signs of life in the agency. This has brought business lobbyists swarming over Capitol Hill in great alarm. They have been dispatched to Washington by the Chamber of Commerce, the Business Roundtable and the National Association of Manufacturers. This time they intend to make sure the corpse is dead.

The great corporate plot against the consumer agency has also brought together ex-President Richard Nixon's loyal aide Bryce Harlow and special prosecutor Leon Jaworski in an awkward union. Harlow is now a trouble-shooter for Proctor and Gamble, the soapmakers. Jaworski, back in private practice, represents the Business

The two men from the opposite sides of the Watergate drama have now joined forces against the consumers. Harlow has resumed his familiar role as the man behind the scenes, pulling the legislative strings from the shadows. Jaworski has written a personal letter to House Government Operations Chairman Jack Brooks, D-Tex., a power in the House.

The Consumer Protection Agency, wrote Jaworski, "would be vested with authority so broad that it could easily be turned to the political advantage of those who control it."
He warned that "there are no checks

The proposed agency would simply be an advocate for the consumers inside the government, with the right to seek judicial review of agency decisions. Ralph Nader's

Congress Watch has prepared a letter to congressmen, citing the kind of intervention that could be expected from the consumer agency. Here are excerpts from the letter, which will be put in the mails this week:

• The 1972 Soviet wheat deal cost the American consumers an estimated $1 billion. "The direct cost of unnecessary subsidies was $300 million," the letter charges. "In addition, consumers enormous indirect costs including higher prices for bread and flour-based products, increased prices for beef, pork, poultry, eggs and dairy products due to higher costs for feed grains." The Consumer Protection Agency, if it had existed, could have participated in the decision and "perhaps averted the losses suffered by consumers and farmers.

• The Civil Aeronautics Board has turned down an application by a private British airline to fly regular flights between New York and London for a bargain $125 each way. "The consumer advocate could have intervened in the application proceeding and sought judicial review of the agency rejection," the letter suggests.

• In 1974, the Federal Energy Administration set the price of unleaded gas about equal to the price of premium gas. Yet the available evidence indicated that the cost of refining unleaded gas was about the same as for regular gas, lower than premium. It took the agency six weeks to discover that its ruling was wrong. This error cost the consumers an estimated $20 million before

Herman Koenig talks about energy choices

A recent Harris Poll indicated that fully 80 per cent of the American people feel that the energy situation is a serious fact of life today. Yet, recent statistics show that U.S. oil imports have risen to an alarming 40 per Clearly, the contradictions between what Americans believe about the energy situation and what they are ready to do about it are serious.

Herman Koenig, director of MSU's Center for Environmental Quality, agreed to answer some technical questions about the energy situation.

The root of the problem begins in the kinds of fuels we use.

"The thing you don't realize," Koenig said, "is that the whole Industrial Revolution as we know it, particularly as it has developed over the last 50 to 100 years, is critically dependent on fluid fossil fuels, natural gas and petroleum. Generally speaking, about 60 per cent of our energy currently comes from natural gas and oil. They're both fluid fuels.

"About 16 per cent of our energy comes from coal at the present time; overall we import about 20 per cent of our energy. Most of those imports, of course, are in the form of oil."

If there was a never-ending supply of these fossil fuels, the energy situation would not be as critical as it is today. We could evolve an energy policy based on gearing up our exploration and processing of fossil fuels. However, there are problems with this solution.

"The most important characteristic of the utilization of finite stock is that you always mine the simple resources first. The longer you go, the more difficult the remaining resources are to recover. And what eventually happens is that you reach a point where the energy required to recover the remaining resources exceeds the energy that you derive from it. And at that point you have effectively run out," Koenig said. Like it or not, the earth itself will limit the availability of fossil fuel. What is needed is a change in the way we view our standard

"The first question that you raise in my mind when you talk about standard of living is the question, 'How do we really measure the standard of living? Many people would equate driving a smaller, more efficient automobile with a reduction in the standard of living. That's in part an attitudinal problem, a value problem, but nonetheless there is a considerable latitude and opportunity for using what we have more efficiently but still maintaining our standard of living," Koenig said.

Fortunately, there are major opportunities for utilizing our existing fuels more effectively without seriously reducing our standard of living. The way to understanding how this can be done lies within the framework of what scientists call the laws of thermodynamics.

The first law is quite simply a measure of the amount of fuel we use versus what we get out of it.

"There are so many Btus per cubic foot of natural gas that come in by way of the pipe in your home. And if you burn that fuel effectively, you can recover again about 70 or 80 per cent of that energy actually captured inside your home to heat your me," Koenig said. What the first law does not tell us, however, is how efficient is the way we are doing the job. This is where the second law of thermodynamics comes in; it is concerned with the process of using energy, or

The second law of thermodynamics is considerably more subtle. It is a measure of how effective you are in converting heat forms of energy into work forms of energy," Koenig said. "For example, in your automo-bile — you burn the gasoline in the cylinders of the automobile and the heat of combusion through expansion of the gas transforms that heat into work. We have to create relatively high temperatures in order to convert heat to work. Under the best of conditions we can't convert more than about 30 or 45 per cent of that heat to

Barry Commoner likes to tell the story of the fly in the lecture hall. The fly is buzzing about making a nuisance of itself. One way to get rid of the fly is with a fly swatter. Considering the problem, it is a pretty efficient way of solving it. Another way to kill the fly would be with a cannon. The cannon would also kill the fly, but would be expending a lot of extra energy to get the job done. How does this apply to electricity, hot water and space heaters?

"Let's stay with the water heating. If you were to heat your water with electricity, the second law of efficiency would give you a measure of about one-tenth or one-hundredth. Whereas, if you heated the water with natural gas, it would give you a measure of about 30 per cent. If you heated your water with solar energy, or with the residual heat from the power plant, it would be almost 100 percent. Now, what that is reflecting is that if you heat the water with electricity, you have foregone the opportunity to do work with that high-grade energy. And if you heat it with natural gas, you have foregone some of the oppor-tunity to do work because through a heat engine you could have converted the heat in that natural gas - about 30 per cent of it to mechanical work. In the case of solar heating or using residual heat from a power plant, you couldn't have converted any of that heat to work anyhow, you see," Koenig

Of course, we do not always have control of our energy sources, but these principles can be used to help us understand where waste is occurring on a large scale and where irreversible energy losses are associated with common activities. They can give us valuable insights into not only how to change the quantity of energy we use but also how to use it in such a way as to maximize its use — which is another way of saying making energy resources go a longer

A further possibility for major energy savings in our society lies in the spatial organization of our production facilities and places to live.
"One major factor in reducing our energy requirements for transportation is to be careful about where we live in relationship to where we work and where our cities are located in relationship to our recreation, and in relationship to our agriculture, so that we don't have to travel so much. To reduce our overall energy requirements for transportation, one perceives of relatively medium-sized cities that are fairly compacted, but interdispersed with agriculture and recreation. These cities, in turn, would be interconnected by mass transit with the cities serving as a terminal point.

"The other factor is that with mediu sized cities we can, in principle, integrate electrical power generation with space heating requirements. Or in short, use the residual heat that is now dissipated in the residual near that is now absorbed as the large power plants; use that for space heating. This would greatly increase the efficiency of the use of what fossil fuels we have left. But to use the residual heat from electrical power generation, we have to cluster our commercial, residential and industrial activities close to the power plant - because you can't transmit the low-grade neat very far and have anything left," Keenig said.

Furthermore, we must begin to pay more attention to the durability of the goods we produce.

"We have come to think or measure our state of economic health by gross national product, which, in the final analysis, is a measure of the flow rate of goods and services. But, when it comes to housing and obiles and so on, we should be talking about the gross national stocks of houses and automobiles. So, if we can increase durability — which we can in many cases — we can retain our standard of living and cut down on energy requirements. So, for example, if you build a house and build a car to last 150 to 200 years, that's one thing; if you build it to last 25, 30 or 40 years, that's quite something else," Keenig said.

Obviously, this would have significant implications for our labor force.

"We're still depending upon our ability to expand production as a mechanism for providing employment. Eventually we'll have to accept the proposition of working more for the same. Now, this means that the price of energy will, and must, go up relative to the price of labor. That will gradually bring about a transition to a more intensive society - which is not all bad. See, you put more people to work...,

What we must begin to realize is that everything is connected. Unfortunately, in both our private and public decisions, we have come to look on questions like unemployment, housing, fuel shortages, nuclear waste and environmental contamination as isolated crises. The fact is they are not, and attempts to solve them in isolated ways lead to only partial solutions which cannot be implemented fast enough to even outrun the problem.

Rather, we must begin to solve problems by dealing with them comprehensively, in reference to their relationship to other problems. We must, as a society, begin to be willing to pay the real price for energy and other natural resources — a price which reflects the time the resource has taken to develop and one which reflects the need future generations will have for those same

Finally, it will be the role of government and policy-makers to insure that changes occur where appropriate. It should not be the responsibility of any one group to bear the costs of the changes which will have to be made. Rather, the political process will have to be used to insure that the burden of change is distributed evenly throughout society.

It's a crucial time for some critical

Finally, there is the problem of waste disposal. No method thus far devised has been successful, and to date millions of gallons of highly radioactive wastes have leaked from storage tanks. The use of salt formations near Alpena has been suggested, but this method has never been tested on a large scale and has met with a great deal of criticism. Should Michigan be turned into a nuclear garbage dump before these doubts are

In light of all these dangers we cannot accept nuclear energy as a viable energy alternative. Fossil fuels are also undesirable and strictly limited. What shall we do, then?

Technologically, we should intensify our efforts to develop nonpolluting energy sources such as solar and tidal power. Even if these sources are only capable of supplying a small portion of our needs, it is that much less pollution added to the environment. Research should also be directed toward nuclear fusion, a process that is more efficient and uses less noxious radioactive isotopes.

However, the key to the energy problem does not lie in finding new energy sources. Our limitless demand for energy, our wastefulness and our selfish desires for comfort are incompatible with the reality of finite energy sources. If a severe energy crisis is to be avoided we must alter our lifestyles and minimize our energy consumption, now. Automobiles use 30 per cent of the petroleum consumed in this country. If we all started walking, bicycling, or using the bus instead, an enormous amount of energy can be saved. We have the ability to use energy sparingly or to live profligately and cause a crisis. In the words of Pogo, "We have met the enemy, and they is us."

Carter lies on energy

By ROBIN PERRY

Graphic by Van Tuttle

Yes, the energy crisis is here, as Michael Crofoot said in his column last week, and the turnout at the energy forum sponsored by the Lansing Energy Affairs Network (LEAN) did supply "that born again feeling," one of increased awareness. However, the young Mr. Crofoot lacks a necessary historical perspective, one that is supplied by Americans in their 50s and older who immediately recognize Carter's energy policy as a demand they relive the agonies of the Great Depression.

Crofoot also mentioned a most common zero-growth rhetoric: "postindustrial era." He inconsiderately forgot, however, that the human race has managed to survive and increase its population to four billion by a process of continued technological advance, in which the central necessary tendency has been increase in labor power of society.

Within hours of Jimmy Carter's energy message, legislative bodies in three states voted in support of memorial bills calling upon the U.S. Congress to insure the expansion of controlled fusion and breeder fission research and development in this country. Resolutions passing the Delaware and Maryland legislatures and the Washington Senate provide a barometer of national resistance to the administration's energy plan, which calls for elimination of breeders and shoving fusion under the rug.

Coupled with the achievement of laser fusion at the U.S. Los Alamos Scientific Laboratory and the near "scientific breakeven" achieved at the MIT Alcator fusion reactor, the U.S. assistant administrator for advanced energy systems describes the results as follows: "The significance of this world record event is its demonstration that researchers can control a plasma very close to conditions required for fusion energy breakeven, getting as much energy from plasma fusion as was required to originally create the plasma."

Consult the usual history text on American technological development and you will find something like: "The Fabulous Story of How American Dreamers, Wizards and the Inspired Tinkers Converted a Wilderness into the Wonder of the World."

Inconceivable to Mr. Crofoot's mind is that politics is the fight for scientific and technological breakthrough, for material realization of man's advanced ideas. Each succeeding phase American development was a bitter factional battle between the forces committed to economic and scientific development and those who would either deliberately or mistakenly subvert the growth forthe nation.

The Carter Administration's statement that we have a "permanent energy crisis the only alternative being conservation" is a lie.

With combined fission-energy programs and high technology extraction and use of fossil fuels, the world would face no energy shortage

However, to expand our energy resources adequately to maintain technological and economic progress, we must begin the process of converting the world into a fusion-based energy economy during the next decade.

Mr. Crofoot is correct in asserting that the Carter energy proposal is "the greatest domestic challenge our nation will face in our lifetime, but conservation, my dear Michael, is a lawful prerequisite for a solar-coal economy that would unsurprisingly bring the United States all the manifold benefits of 14th century feudal society. rry is a graduate of MSU.

By EDWARD L. RONDERS State News Sports Writer

With a late night in Gotham City and a quiet breakfast in East Lansing, the grid fortunes of two former Spartans

Tight end Mike Cobb spent Monday evening seeing the sights in New York City, courtesy of his newly acquired agent,

Tom Hannon, meanwhile, rose early Tuesday morning and "ate breakfast for the first time in about a year."

Both Spartans spent some Tuesday pensive moments waiting for the NFL player draft of college players.

The phone calls came to the anxious players with the re-

With those calls, the fortunes of the two took a change for the better.

For Cobb it marked the end of nearly two years of the negative side of sports. The 6-foot-5 tight end was named in several recruiting violations by the NCAA which resulted in his suspension for the first five games of the 1976 campaign.

Following the first contest, a 49-21 thrashing by Ohio State, the Youngstown senior could hardly hold back the tears in the locker room of Ohio Stadium.

"I looked across the field and I had all I could do to keep from running across the field and hitting that fat man in the mouth," Cobb said of Buckeye coach Woody Hayes. Hayes had taken credit, publicly, for turning the Spartans into the NCAA which subsequently resulted in Cobb's suspension.

Tuesday's selection pushed the tribulations of the past few years into the background. "It's the dream of every player to be chosen on the first round," Cobb exclaimed.

Hannon, meanwhile, was enerous with smiles Wednesday after he had been tabbed in the third round by the defending NFC champion Vikings.

Tuesday was a long day, man," Hannon recalled. I got up about 7 and even ate breakfast, was so nervous."

His selection by the Vikings didn't surprise the Spartan defensive back. "I was in Minnesota last week talking to the Vikes and it was their opinion that I would go no later than the third round," he said.

During a 20-10 defeat at Purdue, where the Boilermakers crunched for 276 yards rushing, Hannon made several safety blitzes.
Former MSU coach Denny

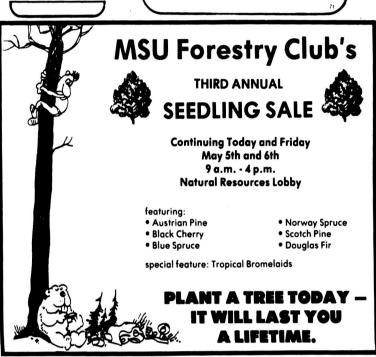

Stolz stated after the game the maneuver was a desperation attempt to stop the Purdue ground attack. "Normally, you don't have that many safety blitzes in a game, but our defense was torn to shreds. And Tommy Hannon is the type who would blitz on every play." Stolz stated.

While Cobb's and Hannon's All-Big Ten performances failed to gain even one bowl bid for MSU during their tenure, neither are bitter.

Looking to the future with a playoff contender. Hannon visualized manning the freesafety for the Vikes and having to tackle a tight end by the name of Mike Cobb. "Know ing that we're both pros now and knowing that we're both friends, I'd try to grill him. And if he had the chance I'm sure he'd try to kill me. But we're still the best of friends both off and on the field," Hannon

Validity of PBB study doubted

By ED LION and MICKI MAYNARD State News Staff Writers

The sponsor of a measure aimed at reducing the allowable level of PBB in Michigan meat cast his doubts Wednesday on the validity of a study that seems to indicate healthy cattle evidenced traces of PBB when placed on once-contaminated farms that had been cleaned.

"I'm not a scientist," said Rep. Francis Spaniola, D-Corunna, "but I understand the study was on animals of one herd that hadn't been tested before they were purchased to see if they had PBB in the first place. It doesn't seem to me one herd is any basis of study."

Snaniola said he interprets another study, conducted by the Michigan Department of Agriculture, as supportive of his view that recontamination would not be a problem. That study found six herds out of 89 tested had traces of PBB in their milk. Those six all had much lower levels than the proposed figure. Spaniola said the Michigan Department of Agriculture apparently did not consider recontamination a problem because it had successfully urged that $500,000 originally earmarked in the measure for helping farmers clean-up any traces of the chemical be deleted.

Meanwhile, Agriculture Secretary B. Dale Ball told a Senate committee Wednesday that a new federal study showed six of 300 Michigan hamburger samples chosen randomly contained PBB traces. The six samples all had .05 ppm-higher than Spaniola's proposed level.

The amendment was approved by the Student Board and was defeated by Student Council after Rosenberg spoke against it at its last meeting. Student Council will vote on it again today.

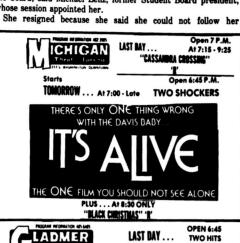

The proposed amendment, approved by Faculty Council, states that if a student's grade is based on factors other than academic performance "the dean of the college shall cause the student's performance to be reassessed and appropriate grade awarded.

Rosenberg came before the board in response to a bill approved last week demanding her to appear "on pain of being removed." The bill to recall her was introduced by Kathy Wright, College of Education representative and John Furtaw, University College representative. Several members of the board said they felt recall was in order since Rosenberg should have reflected the opinions of the Student Roard the Student Board.

One representative said the publicity aroused by Rosenberg's actions damaged the credibility of ASMSU. "If we don't take action on what Merry has done, we're going to get more bad publicity," said Jeff Knoll, Handicapper Council representative.

Rosenberg holds her position on Student Council because of her appointment as chairperson of UCSA. She was appointed by ASMSU to represent women on the committee, not the wishes of the board, said Michael Lenz, former Student Board president, whose session annointed her. whose session appointed her.

I recently came across an essay written by modern philosopher Abraham Kaplan on Freud's psychoanalytic theory. Kaplan stated most aptly that "what differentiates man from other species is precisely his capacity for culture . . ."

How strongly I agreed with this thought, and went on to draw a few conclusions about the House Appropriations Committee's decision to drastically cut proposed funding for the arts. In recent weeks, the committee voted to slash in half Gov. William G. Milliken's recommended $4.25 million for the arts, therby granting a 25 per cent budget increase instead of the proposed 125 per

This week the full House will vote on proposed funding for the Michigan Council for the Arts (MCA). And if the Appropriations Committee's decision carries into the House and Senate budget process, the arts throughout the state of Michigan will suffer. A sad prospect, indeed, as the MCA does contribute a good deal to MSU and Lansing cultural fare.

Throughout the year MSU received periodic grants for its art, music, theater and English departments. ShowcaseJazz receives partial funding from the MCA. The Metropolitan Lansing Fine Arts Council, is, in part, funded by the MCA—not to mention Lansing-area working artists who often depend on MCA monies for the perpetuation of their projects and skills.

The committee's weak rationale for the cut, combined with their clowning and snide remarks during the hearing, cause me to question this species who call themselves the committee.

V. Wierzbicki, D-Detroit, set the tone for the budget cut when he asked committee members at the hearing if they would like to see their tax dollars going toward ballet lessons for male dancers. The committee jeered at such a prospect, and once again Wierzbicki blatantly displayed his lack of awareness and infantile sense of humor.

Wierzbicki's cultural prowess can be further estimated with his uncouth remark, "An evening with the classical music of Robert and Clara Schumann costs $250. So why not an evening with Wierzbicki and Pattison?" Mary Pattison being his long-time lady companion. I'll pass on that one, Frank.
Though we are all entitled to our opinions, what we have here is Wierzbicki, along with Committee members Rep.
Dominic J. Jacobetti, D Negaunee; Rep. James E. O'Neill, D-Saginaw; Edward E. Maha-

There is an ideal piece of legislation that was recently requested by Rep. Ruth McNamee, R-Birmingham. The bill would amend the 1967 state income tax law to include a voluntary arts subsidy.

With this measure, the arts supporter could contribute a dollar for the arts on their income tax forms, while the Wierzbickis of the state could save their money for "other amusements."

The distinctive jazz-rock sounds of Return To Forever will be presented in the Pop-Entertainment sponsored concert tonight at 8 in the Auditorium.

Return To Forever will be performing material from the recently released "Music Magic" and other RTF releases, and the solo works of Corea ("My Spanish Heart" and the "Leprechaun") and Clarke ("School Days").

Tickets are available for $5.50 and $6.50 at the MSU Union Ticket Office and the Lansing and Meridian Mall Recordland stores.

Refunds for the canceled Ebony Productions' Natalie Cole concert are available in 307 Student Services Bldg. from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. until May 13.

Virgil Fox's "Heavy Organ" concert Wednesday in the University Auditorium was really all just in good clean fun. Good clean fun, because Fox's dialog, or sermon to the audience, sounded like it was being delivered in a church rather than at a concert. One can conclude that Fox's Bach is what Dom Parignon 1962 is to a wine connoisseur.

Fox, as a performer, is very theatrical, and David Synder's light show, "Revelation Lights," complemented Fox's performances. After playing a "surprise" — Scott Joplin's "Entertainer" — and then the "Maple Leaf Rag," he commented, "You know, Scott Joplin is the grandson of Bach."

During the Joplin pieces, Snyder's "Revelation Lights," which are more or less abtract images (with the exception of a picture of Bach which appeared and reappeared during the concert), featured figures of light doing a jig to "The Entertainer."

One of the high points of the first half of the concert was Fox's marvelous performance of Bach's "Sinfonia to Cantata no.

Fox began the second half of the concert with another powerful performance, Bach's famous "Toccata and Fugue in D." but at times theatrics got in the way.

Debussy's "Clair de Lune." Though I question the rendition of this piece on the organ, it came off quite well, nevertheless to Concluding the concert, Fox offered Bach's "Passacaglia and Fugue in C." Fox's story on pulling "out all the stops" was verelever, and his performance was strong, involved and entertaining.

During his encores, Fox became even more animated and his performances came at a feverish page. At a constitution of the second second performances came at a feverish pace. At one point For bench caught on fire, which seemed just a bit too calculated. As a whole, Fox's concert was very entertaining. Musically, Fox stands up very well, and his stories are sometimes very effective, though one listener commented, "Why doesn't be shut up and just play the organ?"
