After fall term, the council received major governing group status, but did not have a voting ASMSU seat because it had not yet been officially recognized by the board. Tuesday's referendum provided the student vote necessary to gain official recognition.

The other five MSU major governing groups are the Residence Halls Association, the Intercooperative Council, University Apartments Residents Council, Interfrater nity Council and Panhellenic Council. All hold voting ASMSU board seats.

ASMSU President Kent Barry said he was pleased with both the voter turnout and results of the referendum

"I think it's great to see that students turned out to vote on this," Barry said.

"It will be valuable to have minority input on the board.

Arguments were made last term that to grant the council major governing group status would imply an institutionalized form of segregation at MSU, since the council represents only minority Greeks.

But Barry disputed these arguments

"The only kind of segregation has been the de-facto segregation of the student board,"

"That kind of segregation could persist in the absence of this kind of affirmative inclusion of minorities," he explained.

An early morning fire caused an estimated $100,000 damage and forced an East Lansing family out of their home Tuesday. One family member suffered minor burns but no one wa eriously injured.

The Ivan Mao family, 1787 Bramble Drive, was sleeping when they were awakened by ne smell of smoke at about 2:50 a.m., said East Lansing Fire Marshall Burman Prether. Mao awakened his wife, two children and a guest and led them out of the house through he front door, Prether said.

Mao returned to the house, entered the kitchen - where officials believe the blaze riginated — and reported the fire to a telephone operator, Prether said. Mao could see the lames spreading in the kitchen, Prether said, and escaped from the burning house. Mao suffered minor burns but did not need treatment, Prether said.

The house was engulfed in smoke when the first firefighters arrived at about 2:55 a.m All five of the East Lansing Fire Department's trucks, including the three trucks from e MSU substation, were at the scene. A rescue truck was also dispatched to the area. The fire burned for about an hour and a half before it was extinguished around 4:20 a.m. But firefighters stayed on the scene until about 6:30 a.m., Prether said.

The Academic Council Tuesday narrowly passed a resolution airing its "deep regret and disappointment" with the MSU Board of Trustees' alteration of council guidelines for selection of the next MSU president.

The procedures were presented at last Friday's monthly meeting of the Board of Trustees and were significantly altered

Ralph E. Taggart, associate professor of botany and plant pathology, amended a motion to ask the council's various committees to implement the process of presidential selection.

His amendment instructed the commit tees to implement "the Board of Trustees procedure for selecting a president.

when the trustees approved amendments to He emphasized that the procedures, in their altered state, were no longer those of the council.

"The board blithely restored all matters to which we (the Academic Council) took objection," said James B. McKee, professor of sociology. McKee also amended the motion to affirm that the council's document had been prepared in compliance with the Bylaws of Academic Governance He added that the "queasy" language that the trustees put back into the document did not serve the Academic Council but instead served the board.

The alterations in the presidential selec tion guidelines came primarily from amendments introduced by Trustee John Bruff, D.Fraser, which restored certain language to desired by the board to the document.

A provision was inserted which allows the chairperson of the Search and Selection Committee to be jointly picked by the trustees and the committee from all tenured MSU faculty. The council's document had specified the committee would pick a chairperson from its own faculty Bruff also changed the number of candidates the committee will recommend to the board from no less than three nor more than five to read at least five names with no top limit.

Taggart said the amendment before the council to begin the process of presidential selection indicated "tacit approval" of the trustees altered procedures.

Denise Gordon, undergraduate representative to the Academic Council Steering Committee, voted against the resolution She said the document of selection procedures had become the board's after it was passed to them from Academic Council.

The council also discussed recommenda-(continued on page 14)

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Syrian peacekeeping forces clashed with Lebanese troops Tuesday for the first time since the end of Lebanon's civil war 15 months ago.

Coast Guard warns of potential oil spill

SALEM, Mass. (AP) — The Coast Guard warned of a "potential major oil spill" Tuesday as it searched for a Greek tanker grounded and lost in a blinding blizzard in Salem Harbor.

Meanwhile, a pilot boat that had run to the stranded tanker's rescue had not been heard from since Monday night when it lost its navigational equipment in the mountainous waves.

Though the 682-foot tanker "Global Hope" was thought to be about 1,000 yards from shore, a searching Coast Guard cutter could not find it because of the fierce snowstorm that cut visibility to 400 yards.

The tanker, loaded with 160,000 gallons of oil, ran aground Monday night with its crew of 32. It had tried to ride out the storm anchored in Salem Sound.

John Bablich, a Coast Guard spokesperson, said the ship had radioed Tuesday that it was in no immediate danger of sinking.

However, he added, "It's a potential major oil spill. But our first major concern is getting the crew off board."

Weather affecting entire nation

By THE ASSOCIATED

Snow, winds and floodwaters brought a second day of misery to millions in the blizzardplagued Northeast on Tuesday, while residents of some Midwestern areas suffered bitter cold and new storms. Trouble spots ranged from

Massachusetts — where a power blackout and some looting in Boston compounded the blizzard problems - to Montana, which was struck by snow on Monday and faced continued blizzard warnings Tuesday. Even Anchorage, Alaska, had to close its schools for the first time since 1964 because of snow which started Saturday and was still falling

More than two dozen weather-related deaths, some from over-exertion - shoveling snow or struggling through drifts - were reported across the nation. Like most disasters, the storms brought out good and bad. New Jersey officials described public cooperation as "marvelous." In Boston, however, at least 10 persons were arrested in the Roxbury and Dorchester areas after windows of two supermarkets were smashed and half a dozen other stores were raided.

Police Commissioner Joseph M. Jordan ordered all off-duty police to report to divisions with full riot gear Tuesday afternoon.

The snow in the Northeast began Sunday night — barely two weeks after the last snow storm - and was still falling in some parts at midday Tuesday, although it was less severe than earlier and was expected to taper off during the day. Accumulations ranged from 1 foot to 2 feet.

Transportation was at a near standstill. Airports in the Northeast were closed and there was doubt as to whether

Treaties debate up to Mondale

WASHINGTON (AP) — Parliamentary maneuvers by opponents of the Panama Canal treaties, rather than desk-pounding orations on its merits, will highlight the Senate's initial debate today.

Because of this the Carter administration will be relying heavily who is the chamber's presiding officer.

Last week President Carter went on nationwide television, using a "fireside chat" format to appeal for public support of the treaties, making their ratification a top priority foreign policy goal

Before the debate begins in earnest, Mondale must confront Sen. James Allen, D Ala., a leader of the treaties opposition and a master of Senate procedure. Allen announced Tuesday that he wants Mondale to rule on a list of 17 questions, several of which indicate that delay may become a principal weapon of the opponents.

The treaties would relinquish U.S. control over the waterway to Panama in the year 2000, and assure the continued neutrality of the Canal Zone after that date. Several of Allen's parliamentary inquiries deal with procedures for limiting debate, an indication that opponents might try to use a filibuster to kill the treaties or, at least, delay a vote until closer to the November elections.

Opponents reason that with the continuing heavy flow of mail in opposition to ratification, some votes may be swayed as senators approach their re-election campaigns.

As snow stopped, the clean up started. The New York City Sanitation Department had 3,700 men on the streets, working a 12-hour shift. They used 1,300 major pieces of snowfighting equipment and were supplied with 42,000 tons of salt. About 600 state snow plows, aided by 1,000 private trucks and scores of county and municipal crews, worked to clear roads in New Jersey.

In Maryland, where depths ranged from 4 to 24 inches, state police helicopters were used to airlift patients to hospitals. Authorities warned that roads were "snow-covered, slippery or just completely drifted shut."

Almost no area of the nation was spared bad weather in one form or another. Chicago, still recovering from a blizzard 12 days ago, was hit by an unexpected storm that Monday afternoon and left 9 inches of snow on the ground. Near-zero temperatures

Lansing P.D. to decide fates of twelve officers

By JOY L. HAENLEIN
The Lansing Police Department will have to decide what to do with 12 police officers who will be replaced by technicians under the new 911 emergency phone program, starting May 1, 1978.

The program will be a county-wide system in which all emergency police calls are dialed through the phone number 911.

The Lansing City Council voted six to two Monday night to allow the Lansing police to determine the fate of the officers who will be replaced.

By using technicians in the 911 program instead of sworn police officers, the city of Lansing will save at least $544 a year in salaries per technician, according to councilmember Jack Gunther

$11,380 per year and can increase to $12,110, while a uniformed police officer starts at $11,924 per year and can increase

The starting salary for a technician is

While the implementation of the technicians will be less costly, there is some debate as to how efficient they will be,

The technicians will begin training for the program in May, but the 911 crime prevention program will not become operational until July of this year.

Final approval for the funding of the 12 additional officers will have to be given by the Finance Committee at its next budget hearing during the last week in March,

Before the vote to let police officials debate within the council centered around whether to use them in squad cars or on foot beats.

Councilmember Richard Baker would like to see the officers used as foot policemen. "Foot policemen are effective," he said.

Baker also said he had received a petition from 750 citizens of the West Hillsdale Logan Street area in Lansing, which encouraged the council to appropriate the additional officers as foot beat policemen in high crime areas.

Baker said the foot beat policemen should be used in high crime areas, including the

Instead, now that the extra policemen will be under the control of the police department, Baker is worried that they will not use the officers as foot beat policemen. He also thinks that it is wrong for the police department to have that type of control over where their officers are stationed, as he feels this is out of the department's jurisdiction. Baker said he will continue to fight for the use of foot beat policmen, as he feels it will be a deterrent to crime in all areas of the city

Over the past ten years, student involvement in city government has increased as emphasis on political awareness becomes more important to the student community, according to a spokesperson for the East Lansing Public Information Bureau.

Griffiths said the East Lansing City Commission suffers from a large turnover, as each member is elected to a three year term. This creates attendance problems for students who are constantly moving, and this might explain why more students have not sought appointments.

'We have to have a quorum to get something done," he said, and shifts in attendance makes this difficult.

Amended resolution approved Tuesday

Over protests by MSU Provost Clarence L. Winder, the amended resolution on Endowed Faculty Chairs was approved Tuesday by Faculty Council.

The Steering Committee will now decide whether the resolution should be sent to Academic Council.

The resolution would create a University Committee on Endowed Faculty Chairs composed of five faculty members, one graduate student and one undergraduate. The Provost would serve as an ex-officio member.

A goal of $1.75 million from the University's $17 Million Enrichment Program has been established for endowed faculty chairs to be awarded to distinguished professionals or scholars. Winder's protests centered on the role the Provost would play in the selection process for the appointments.

He distributed a memo prior to Tuesday's meeting urging that existing procedures developed for MSU's John A. Hannah Distinguished Professorships be used in the selection of recipients. In November, during early stages of the discussion on endowed faculty chairs, Winder had sent a memo to council members explaining how Hannah professorships were established in 1966. The message stated that only two of six attempts to recruit professors to MSU under the Hannah professorships had been

In Tuesday's memo, Winder stated, "The Provost should be responsible for the procedures for designation of program areas, departments, or schools to which Endowed Chairs will be allocated, and for initiation and coordination of procedures to select the individual for appointment to each Endowed Chair.

The Faculty Council resolution calls for the University Committee on Endowed Faculty Chairs to share these responsi-

Jack Stieber, professor of economics and an author of the Faculty Council resolution, said, "It was in effect a reaction against the procedure that was announced.

Before the Council's final vote on the resolution, Winder advised the group that he considered endowed faculty chair selection an academic personnel matter. Winder told the Council he has been known not to take the advice of the faculty at times.

According to the resolution, the Endowed Faculty Chairs will be used to attract to the University members of the National Academy of Sciences, the American Academy of Arts and Sciences, or scholars of comparable quality and national or international standing. The chairs may be awarded to current MSU faculty.

Units in which an endowed chair was established by the Provost in conjunction with the University Committee on Endowed Chairs would submit to the Committee a nominee who met the criteria.

Election may take place shortly

By JANET HALFMANN State News Staff Writer

Will a date be set for an MSU faculty collective bargaining election after the Michigan Employment Relations Commission makes a decision on the composition of the bargaining unit? When MERC hearings on the definition of the unit ended on Jan. 13, administrative law judge Shlomo Sperka predicted a decision on whether certain members of the medical faculty should be included would be made in time for an election to be held this

But Keith Groty, MSU vice president of personnel and employee relations, doesn't assume that an election is inevitable.

He questions whether MSU Faculty Associates, the group that filed the petition authorization cards.

If the bargaining unit determined by MERC is larger than the unit originally proposed, FA may or may not have the 30 percent required, he said.

Sperka said the statute governing collective bargaining elections in Michigan requires signatures be secured from 30 percent of the bargaining unit. MERC will decide which faculty can be included in the

Philip Korth, former president of FA and an associate professor of American Thought and Language, said no matter how the unit is defined, enough cards have been submit

"The shifting of numbers here is really very small," he said. "If there is any problem, we have already demonstrated we can overcome it. We could get additional cards within days."

But Sperka said he did not know without further research into other cases whether additional cards could be accepted.

"The statute makes no provision for filling in the missing cards," he said. Sperka added he could "think of several cases when the petition was dismissed on the spot when the petitioner didn't have enough authorized cards when the unit was Usually the petitioner submits cards signed by over 50 percent of the proposed bargaining unit, he explained.

Most faculty members said they are not getting involved in the collective bargaining sue until the election date is actually set. Before a collective bargaining election in 1972, there was a flurry of activity on the part of the faculty early in the petitioning ocess. Sixty percent voted against union ization in that election. In 1972, as in the current union drive, the MSU chapter of the American Association of the University Professors was competing with FA to be the sole bargaining agent for MSU faculty. In 1972, at about the same time that FA and AAUP began their authorization card drives, Elected Faculty Council asked the Faculty Affairs Committee to prepare an impartial review of collective bargaining.

The card drives were underway less than two months when over 800 faculty members signed a petition calling for a moratorium on the signing of authorization cards. The halt was designed to give the faculty more time to become informed, petition organ izers said.

An ad hoc committee was then formed by Elected Faculty Council to prepare a comprehensive report on collective bargain ing in higher education and the possible impact on MSU. The 39-page report involved nearly a year of work.

In the current election drive, there has been no discussion to date of collective bargaining in the Faculty Council according to Lester V. Manderscheid, co-chairperson of the steering committee.

Donald O. Meaders, who took part in the informal committee of Elected Faculty Council members which spurred the mora torium petition in the 1972 election, said he plans to ask his current colleagues on the Council to suggest such discussion.

Another anti-union organizer in the past election said he intends to organize a spontaneous group opposing unionization again if an election does take place this

Gerald Miller, professor of communication, explained that the group's strategy would be much the same as in the past election. Group members gave presentations against unionization, mailed information to all faculty, provided transportation on the day of the election and bought advertising space in the State News. Miller said 500 to 600 faculty members signed an ad opposing unionization, which the Committee of Concerned Faculty placed in the State News.

Chemistry professor Harold Hart, also belonged to the anti-union faction in 1972 and said he will support such a group again. Serious problems could occur in his departa union negotiated for higher salaries, but the legislature did not increase appropriations, he said.

If funds were budgeted for equipment and chemicals were used instead for increased salaries, it would leave departments such as chemistry with an impossible situation for teaching and research, he said.

Mordechai Kreinin was one of five faculty members from the department of economics to circulate a two-page statement to oppose all attempts to unionize MSU in the last Kreinin said he will stay on the sidelines this time, but added that he is still opposed to unionization.

"I don't like the idea that a whole new administrative hierarchy would be created on the campus with more red tape and more people paid for not participating in the real function of the university," he said.

Kreinin said another problem area is the use of seniority by unions to determine wages. He said wages should be based on creativity, performance and creativity in teaching and research.

Title IX: a deadline unmet, a pledge unkept

Athletic competition in the United States on all levels public school, college, amateur, professional — is split by the chasm of sex discrimination. The record shows that women have been consistently and unjustly shortchanged in the arenas and on the playing fields. Conventional wisdom holds that Sport is the province of males, and that is an ethos deeply rooted in the macho mythology of athletics. This particular barrier to sex equality has proved insidious and very difficult to bring down.

Legally, the fight to even the score on the university level is well underway. A provision implemented several years ago by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare is the catalyst. Two spare words — Title IX — oversee a broad range of directives mandating equal opportunity in men's and women's athletics.

These are directives MSU has chosen to ignore.

Ostensibly, July 21 is the deadline for all U.S. high schools

At Friday's meeting of the and colleges to meet Title IX's requirements. At that time HEW will examine sports budgets, scholarships, facilities, equipment, coaching salaries, schedules and travel expenses to determine if equal opportunity between sexes has been realized.

MSU falls woefully short of meeting Title IX requirements, and stands to lose $36 million in federal funds because of this. There is no reasonable justification for this situation, and HEW would be foolish to accept one.

Intercollegiate sports for women at MSU were inaugurated in 1972, a year prior to the institution of similar programs at most other colleges. Despite a year's head start, MSU quickly fell behind other colleges in allocating funds, space and facilities for women. Women's programs were allowed to simply languish as Title

At Friday's meeting of the MSU Board of Trustees, Athletic Director Joseph Kearney told the trustees' Affirmative Action Committee that to meet Title IX's provisions. $1 million would have to be added to the women's athletic budget, three new buildings would have to be constructed, and existing facilities would require extensive renovations. He said these goals could not be met.

At this late date, that is undoubtedly true. But why was the problem allowed to fester for so long? Why has MSU not built upon the encouraging beginning it made in 1972 when women's intercollegiate athletics were started?

Mary Pollock, MSU's Title IX coordinator and director of Women's Programs, makes a good point. She believes MSU should have surveyed students on their athletic interests and abilities two years ago to establish some basis for determining the need for kpanded women's athletics. If MSU could demonstrate to HEW that there exists some rationale for different funding levels between men's and women's athletics, a difference based on divergent needs and interests, then MSU's reasons for not meeting the deadline might have some merit.

As it stands now, the University's position is untenable. MSU has not only failed to make women's athletics a viable part of University life, but it has not even begun to undertake the process of determining where the greatest need for expansion and modification lies. It is a pitiful situation

A flawed selection process

The MSU Board of Trustees approved Friday the procedures for selecting Michigan State's next president, but adequate input from the University community has not been fully guaranteed.

Revisions in the procedures outlined by the Academic Council essentially affirms the ultimate authority of the board in the selection process, while divesting the power of other University groups, thereby relegating the role of the Search and Selection Committee to an advisory body.

New amendments call for the committee to issue a recommended list of at least five names" of candidates qualified to serve as president, with no limit on the number of names submitted. Previously, the document asked for at least three and no more than five names.

The trustees have also broken with convention by declaring that the chairperson of the presidential Registration plan: will State News err?

After all the talk about the registration hassles that students go through three times a year, it was a relief to see that someone finally took action to simplify the process. I'm referring to the notice in the Feb. 2 issue of the State News explaining the changes in the early enrollment process for spring term.

What better way to plan your schedule than to watch for supplement and closed courses in the State News that you can conveniently pick up on campus?

I just hope the State News can manage this new enrollment process and avoid making the errors and inaccuracies it is Charles Crumm, the Director of the Legislative Relations Cabinet, also gave a report at this time. The State News editorial staff seems to have been ignorant of all of this. 3) Several members of the Legislative Relations Cabinet and of the President's Office gave all of the information requested by the State News in their article to the SN reporter assigned to ASMSU, during a briefing that took place several days prior to the State News article being published.

It would seem that the next time that the State News feels it should express an opinion, it should find out what the facts of the situation are first. The least they could do is to talk to their own reporters.

Exceedingly tired

I have grown exceedingly tired of the diculous and unfounded accusations that Basim Esmail continues to advance in the State News. His Viewpoint last Thursday was filled with hatred, his strategy was that of the Big Lie, and his charges, growing more and more bizarre all the time, remain unsubstantiated.

Regarding the alleged torture of his brother, Mr. Esmail writes, "Sami, according to his Israeli interrogators, is very fortunate. His American passport protected him from electric shocks and hot iron rods . . ." How did Mr. Esmail get "his Israeli interrogators" to admit to that? Can we believe that Mr. Esmail has a source in the Israeli government that confides in him? Are we to believe Felicia Langer, who has never once been able to prove her charges of torture to the satisfaction of Amnesty International, or our State Department officials in Israel who say that no evidence of torture exists?

Mr. Esmail asks the State News to condemn the Israeli Consulate in Chicago nerely for coming to Lansing to give the Israeli side of the story. He insists that Sami have the right to express his anti-Zionism while condemning anyone who states an opposing view. Is this his view of free speech? Is this his idea of justice?

I am tired of Mr. Esmail's double-standard and I grow weary of his wild, unproven accusations which are an insult to the intelligence of the MSU community. Mr. Esmail had been asked to document that Sami was in Ohio in August of 1976. He declined to make that information public.

It is time for Mr. Esmail to put up or shut up, and since Sami's case should not be tried in the press, I suggest that he wait until the trial before speaking out again.

VIEWPOINT: FEMINISTS

Separatism unjust; strive for personhood

By RICHARD J. WHITNEY

Recently I attended, or tried to attend, a meeting being held to deal with the increasing incidences of violence being committed against women in the MSII community. I had been told that it would be an "open" meeting. But shortly after my arrival, a motion was made to exclude males from the proceedings. Much annoyance was registered that time had to be wasted discussing this issue "again" (although to my knowledge, this was the first meeting of this particular group), and the motion was quickly railroaded to a vote. Although the ote was close enough to warrant a recount, I left voluntarily, because I didn't want to stay at a meeting where such a sizable faction of women would feel inhibited or a majority.

Nevertheless, I was upset by that sentiment, and I would like to address some comments to those feminists who support the practice of "separatism," i.e. exclusion of males from feminist groups.

I have always understood the ultimate oal of the feminist movement to be the creation of personhood. By "personhood," it not meant that sexual and other characteristics are ignored, but that they not be associated with other characteristics, separate or unequal treatment, or a socialized identity or role. Separatism, on the other hand, implies that sexism in the male is an immutable condition, that the male cannot overcome his past sexist socialization. What else could be meant by the exclusion of males just because they are male?

But sexism is not immutable in the male. Just as women are able to overcome their past socialization, and break free from the submissive role, men are able to overcome their past socialization and break free from the dominant role. Obviously, to convince oneself to come out of a dominant role is more difficult. But the separatists overstate the case when they insinuate that no one ever leaves a dominant role willingly.

That argument is based on the notion that being the dominant one is eminently satisfying. It is true that the dominant role is more satisfying than a submissive role. But it is far more satisfying to not play a role at all. I have given up the dominant role, because any kind of role cuts off the full, free flow of human feelings and actions. I don't want something from women, I want disturbed by my presence, even if it wasn't to relate to, and appreciate an entire woman, who is herself free to be herself. I have found that much more satisfying than playing a prescribed role as dominator. I daresay that I am not alone in this respect. although admittedly, the overwhelming majority of males are, blatantly or latently,

> But even though I have freely given up the socialized "male" identity, and seek to join other feminists in the creation of personhood. I find myself rebuffed, because the separatists look at the male and not the person. Ironically, the woman who initiated the motion at the meeting said, "Don't take it personally," as I left the room. That's tantamount to saying, "We are rejecting you because you are a male, and not because of your personal qualities." It meant that she is automatically attributing other characteristics to my sexual ones. It is nothing less than sexist treatment, and is contradictory to the goal of personhood.

The same woman who began the motion to exclude men by stating, "This is a state of siege!" To me, this reeks of Susan Brownmiller's notion that violence against women is something that all men have a part in. I resent that. I have tried to confront and eliminate sexist attitudes in other men, both in words and by my own behavior. I am not saying this to be self-righteous — in some situations I have failed to fight it as vigorously as I should have, for fear of "making a scene." But that failing is one shared by women feminists as well. In any case, I am hardly a "spy" for the

The other argument used was, "If the men really cared, they'd form their own group to confront the problem." But just a reiteration of the separatist p that men inherently are not to be to We want to break down the walls be the sexes, not institutionalize them h Again, we cannot achieve person alienating persons who happen to be

It would have been a different ma someone had said that the situation meeting warranted expediency, and they couldn't afford the time to make that I was "O.K." That I could understood. But it was apparant the of those voicing separatist opinions want male involvement within the gre any time.

Since the poems are not arranged chronologically, and since the collection was written in a span of twelve years (from 1965 to 1977) inferences are hard to pin down which convey the collective attitude of despair that pervades "Low Water." Poems like "After The President's Departure" and "The Man in the Cellar" overflow with despair and hate. Anger is intense in "Dog fight Before Dawn:"

similarities in the structure and the ideas themselves fit together. "Low Water" seems to be the most interesting section of book if only for the attempt by the author to come to grips with anger and frustration. Since Lawder views poetry as a filtering of images and impressions through the mind and pen of the poet, he believes a writer should try to make sense out of chaos. By publishing his poetry, Lawder knows that he is sharing something, a personal world perhaps, with the reader The third section is a set of poems concerning the poet's feeling for humanity, composed mostly of love poems. The section is entitled "Wave Back" and according to the author, they were the easiest to write. The feelings in this section deal with love not only for people, but for life in general and all of the incidents and events that make it worthwhile to be alive.

We swallow mouthfuls of groundfog rolling its whiteness over the road. Headlights, porch and houselights come ringed in wavering halos from "Motorcycle Poem for C." In the poem "Eating Strawberries in the Dark," Lawder is probably most successful in merging the images and contrasts of making love and eating the blushing fruit, with "Their red flesh so bright they flash in the mouth . . ."

The fifteen poems in this section all convey to the reader a great sense of positive energy. He is able to extract reactions from reading his poetry that can range from a chuckle to a knowing smile. There is not the power in his poetry of a Diane Wakoski or a Galway Kinnell, but he s not dealing with the same subjects as these poets are. Lawder's poetry seduces, at times invites you into the poem to explore the possibilities of rhythm and occasionally a poem fails outright, but for the most part, the collection stands well on The final section is entitled "Footholds" and deals with the process of writing and its subsequent function. Contemporary poets seem obsessed with this process and Lawder is no exception. Without dealing with the reason why he is writing, the poet may lose focus and perspective on what he is writing about as well. It is no accident that the title poem "Trolling" is in this section or why it was chosen for the title. I trol! waiting for a thick tug, the thing to lean its weight against the line, feeling the strength of it, the wit down below, and begin to pull a dark dripping shape into sight;

By showing the process of successfully writing a poem in the first half of "Trolling, he is then able to deal with the unsuccessful attempts of writing as well: images of "bringing up dead lines" and dreaming of "silver bass" and "the red pompano that swim every night in slow rainbow circles just under the bed."

This is the hardest section to read and the emotions received are mixed. In "Trying to Write Again," Lawder compares his attempts to write to the dying elm searching for water and a fish's search for light in a dark tank, "Footholds" also includes a final exam for advanced poetry writing class that he wrote at MSU a few years ago, and the final poem in the collection entitled "Tools:"

The curious dormant nature of tools becoming more than themselves in their quick and singular way of performing: Lawder creates for the reader snowshoes, a shovel, an ax, and finally a wood stove that: gathers to itself all the heat it can handle.

Stranded in the Suicide Mountains

In the Suicide Mountains by John Gardner

By Bill Holdship

John Gardner is a cynic. Of course, it only seems natural that a mental medievalist physically stuck in the twentieth century is going to be somewhat cynical. Who but a cynic vould have the nerve to tell the Beowulf legend from the monster's point of view as he did in Grendel? Who but a cynic would pause in the middle of a medieval morality fable to permit his allegorical Misery to urinate?

However, cynicism in the hands of an artist can be a blessing. In Gardner's case, it has entered the author's perceptions of reality, enabling him to better depict a world where reality isn't always the way it seems. Such a notion is no doubt what first led him to the discovery that originality in art is often found in the return to ancient art forms. With In The Suicide Mountains, Gardner's fifth fairy tale for "children," he has created a world so hard-core real in its fairy tale unreality that the reader can't help but perceive the only real moral behind Gardner's numerous morality parables: "things \dots are not always \dots as they

Gardner's tale metaphorically depicts the issues and emotional climate of our own time, and offers the reader a brilliant defense of "misfits," a popular theme in recent commercial literature. The plot concerns three "misfits" -- Chudu the Goat's Son, Armida the blacksmith's daughter, and Christopher the Sullen — who meet, by chance, in the Suicide Mountains. Each is a "misfit" only in that they have been forced by society to assume roles not their own. Rather than fight, they have all come to the Mountains intent on Chudu, a magical dwarf, is so ugly that the villagers are convinced he must use his magic for evil purposes. In actuality, Chudu has a heart of gold and uses his magic for good, but he cannot rid the people of their prejudice. Gardner introduces a feminist motif to the story with Armida and Christopher the Sullen. Armida is a beautiful "tomboy," who, at a late age, is suddenly forced to assume the role of a "lady." The result is disaster in Gardner's inimitable cynical fashion. Christopher the Sullen, crown prince of the kingdom, hates quests, battles, and even horses. He does, however, like poetry and music. The King has sent Christopher to the Mountains to slay the dastardly six-fingered man and finally prove his role as a "man."

The three meet, become friends, and each tries to convince the other that suicide isn't the answer. In the course of their journey, they encounter the Abbot of the Ancient Monastery — saintliest (and most enigmatic) of men — who, in a series of stories-within-a-story, teaches them that things are not always as they seem. The Abbot convinces them that they must slay Koog, the dragon - "the confusion at the heart of things" - before they will be able to see things clearly.

Drawing on each other's "imperfections," they are able to slay Koog with an ingenious plan. The three return to the Ancient Monastery for what appears to be a "happily ever after" ending, that is until Chudu notices that the good and saintly Abbot has (gasp!) six fingers on one hand. What happens to our heroes? One hint: "things . . . are not always .. as they seem . . ." And the world rolls on.

If you choose to believe me, good. Now I will tell how Octavia, the spider-web city, is made. There is a precipice between two steep mountains: the city is over the void, bound to the two crests with ropes and chains and catwalks. You walk on the little wooden ties, careful not to set your foot in the open spaces, or you cling to the hempen strands. Below there is nothing for hundredsandhundreds of feet: a few clouds glide past; farther down you can glimpse the chasm's bed

This is the foundation of the city: a net which serves as passage and as support. All the rest, instead of rising up, is hung below: rope ladders, hammocks, houses made like sacks, clothes hangers, terraces like gondolas, skins of water, gas jets, spits, baskets on strings, dumb-waiters, showers, trapezes for rings for children's games, cable cars, chandeliers, pots with trailing plants.

Suspended over the abyss, the life of Octavia's inhabitants is less uncertain than in other cities. They know the net will

Dance program falters

By CONSTANCE A. WARNER

State News Reviewer

It seemed like such a good idea: a program of dance, accompanied by live chamber sphere of the Music Auditorium. A Special Blend of Dance and music, presented by the MSU Repertory Dance Company and members of the MSU Symphony, was a disappointment. This is due in part to the small size and inadequate technical resources of the Music Auditorium stage.

The Music Auditorium is a shade too intimate for dance: the back row is about as far away from the stage as the first row of orchestra seats in many houses. The stage itself was so small that the floor patterns often became blurred, and there were several near collisions. The lighting was flat and garish and did nothing to diminish the impression of lack of depth caused by the small stage.

Some dance works are not especially harmed by such limted staging; I remember, for example, a performance by a University Russian folk-dance ensemble several years ago in the Music Auditorium which was economical, graceful, and lively. But none of the works on Monday night's program, "A Special Blend," survived intact.

The first two works on the program, "A Still Point in Time," choreographed by Dixie Durr to the Samuel Barber "Adagio for Strings," and "Cosmorama," choreographed by Barbara Banisikowski Smith to "Quator" by Heitor Villa-Lobos, suffered especially. The small stage magnified unmercifully the technical faults of the dancers, who were unconscionably careless of minor technical details: a g fact were often not fully pointed.

unconscionably careless of minor technical details: e.g. feet were often not fully pointed, knees were slightly flexed when they should have been stretched and extended, dancers fidgeted when they should have been standing still, etc.

An exception to this unfortunate tendency was Angela Lowe Gullet, who danced in "Cosmorama" like a one-woman solution to the energy crisis. The Villa-Lobos piece, scored for flute, harp, saxophone, celesta, and women's voices, was light and charming.

"A Ceremonial Portrait," choreographed by Durr and Smith, showed rather more kinetic vitality. The style of the work was balletic slavic, supplemented with simple folk movement. It was a pleasant enough work, if one could manage to dissociate the dancing from the music, which was Aaron Copland's Appalachian Spring. Why one of the most quintessentially American works of a composer best known for his distinctively "American" style should be used for a ballet about slavic peasant wedding customs, in the manner of Les Noces, was not explained. Perhaps they were slavs who had settled in Appalachia? I could not help feeling a few qualms watching central European peasant dances set to Copland's treatment of the old Shaker hymn, "Simple Gifts." The effect was incongruous, rather like seeing Swan Lake rechoreographed to the score of Billy the Kid.

snow," the program called A Special Blend of Dance and Music was performed Monday night. For the first work, "A Still Point in Time," Barber's Op. 11(1936) "Adagio for Strings" was used. The string quartet for this was comprised of Martha Prudon, cello; alled . . . dance. Mary Jane Reikow, viola; Pamela After a rescheduling due to "the big Szulborski and David Prudon, violins. The rendition was warm, but there were technical difficulties which could have been cleared up if these fine players could have had a little more preperation time.

Still in the Twentieth Century, "Quator" by Heitor Villa-Lobos was integrated into the dance "Cosmorama." Villa-Lobos wrote this work in 1921 at Rio de Janeiro, And. like "La Creation du Monde" by Milhaud

(the Villa-Lobos predates this by 2 years), the work is full of jazz idioms and Latin rhythms; which were spicily delivered by the conductor Janian O'Brien. An intrinsic part of this piece is a women's chorus, which is used similarly to the one in "Nocturnes". The well executed women's parts call for such effects as "Batten Bouche" and ends on a startling F minor chord.

Another composer who had used jazz idioms, but later gave them up because of certain limitations. was Aaron Copland. Copland's Appalachian Spring was used in conjunction with "A Ceremonial Portrait."

Copeland's 'Appalachian Spring' was used in conjunction with 'A Ceremonial Portrait. Conductor Richard Rosenberg said he was inspired to perform this piece after he heard Copland himself conduct it.

This piece is imbued with simple melodies of an American folk nature, and it features "Simple Gifts," that old sprightly hymn tune. The rhythm is this piece is of great importance; and, except for small second violin errors, Rosenberg gave life to those complex rhythms, bringing the whole to a fine climax.

As an added note, Rosenberg is the director of the "New Musical Arts" ensembles which will be giving a performance at 2 p.m. March 5, in which Gershwin's Rhapsody in Blue, and other works will be performed; this too, in the Music Audi-

State News Reviewer MSU's public broadcasting stations, WKAR-TV and WKAR radio, will be appealing to their audiences for contribution in the near future.

While fund raising campaigns have been a regular part of WKAR radio's programming, steadily rising expenses have required that WKAR-TV join the many public TV stations around the country that broadcast auctions to draw contributions.

"We've been having to generate more and more of our operating costs," explained Lawrence Swartz, WKAR-TV's Manager of Community Relations. "We don't want to have to cut back any of WKAR-Tv's Director Robert Page added that inflation (in the form of rising operating costs) was only of the reasons for the decision to hold the auction. According to Page, the station now has to purchase many programs that it used to receive for free from the Corporation for Public Broadcasting (CPB), including the ever-popular Sesame Street.

WKAR-TV receives only 40 percent of its operating capital from the University. The rest must come from the CPB, business grants, and, of course, the public. The importance of public contributions is increased by the fact that money from CPB is provided on a "matching" basis, where the CPB will provide funds in proportion to the amount of money donated by the public. This means, for example, that a $10 pledge will net the station $15.

The auction for WKAR-TV (channel 23 in East Lansing) will be held during the week of April 17-22. According to Auction Co-ordinator Barb Sutton, the auction will be patterned after the ones currently shown by the other public stations around the country. The monetary goal has been set at $100,000, though Sutton has stated that she is confident that this figure will rise in future years as the public becomes aware of the event. Some of the goods already lined up to be auctioned include a Baldwin organ, hot air balloon rides, a gourmet chef dinner, and a tour of the MSU stadium with Darryl Rogers.

WKAR radio, which is completely separate from the TV station, began their fund-raising campaign Saturday, February 4. The drive, which is called "Classics for Cash," is an annual event at WKAR radio, which must also raise public donations to receive matching federal funds. There are several distinct parts to the campaign, which will run through Sunday, February 12.

According to Development Director Marjon van den Bosch, most of these items will be of the "I wish . . ." variety, because they are things unavailable elsewhere. Among these will be lessons on the MSU carillon in Beaumont Tower, a party in the planetarium, original design furniture pieces, and the chance to program the music on WKAR radio for a day.

Van den Bosch stated that in addition to a monetary goal of $40,000, WKAR radio hopes to attract 1,000 new members, because "if you get enough people behind you, the money follows automatically."

Hustles for rebounds

By MICHAEL KLOCKE

State News Sports Writer
Just how far is a major college basketball coach willing to go to find talent? In the case of Jud Heathcote, on the surface, it wouldn't appear too far. After all, his two biggest recruiting catches -Earvin Johnson and Jay Vincent - are both from Lansing.

But on the other hand, he recruited Ron Charles from the Virgin Islands . . . and people are beginning to see why he did. The 6-foot-7 sophomore has developed into MSU's "sixth man" and he's played an important role in many of its wins. Against Indiana Saturday, he scored 11 points and pulled down five rebounds despite only playing about half the game.

Why would anyone from the Virgin Islands be interested in

"Coach Heathcote recruited me at the Pan Am games when I was playing for the Virgin Islands," Charles recalled. "He was recruiting me to go to Montana at the time. But when he got the job here, I came up to visit the campus and liked what Heathcote also recalled recruiting Charles, whom he thought had "unlimited potential."

"Ron was only 16 years old and he was playing for a very poor Virgin Islands' team," Heathcote said. "He played a bit erratic, but he was still only a boy playing against men."

After seeing limited action as a freshman, Charles has become a vital part of the year's 16-3 team. And it's not because he changed his style of play, but rather because he has a better understanding of college basketball.

"I hustle a lot more than I did last year, but the real difference is that I've matured," Charles said. "I was used to playing under international rules, and now I've made the necessary adjustments."

"We've always said Ron is a good prospect and that we just had to get more playing time for him," Heathcote said. "He has worked much harder this year.

"You have to be aggressive to play in the Big Ten, and Ron is not an aggressive kid by nature." Heathcote added. "But this year, the times he has lacked hustle have been fewer and far

Charles has been averaging only 13 minutes of play per game, but his rebounding ability suggests he has the potential to average in double figures.

'I get a lot of my baskets off offensive rebounds," Charles said. "Rebounding is something I've always taken pride in." Charles said the hardest part being the "sixth man" is he has to come off the bench cold and then get into the flow of the game. Although he could probably be a starter at many schools Charles said he doesn't mind coming off the bench and giving "I feel my role is to come in the game and play tough defense, rebound and score some points," Charles said. "I have to keep the team going so we don't lose anything when we go to the

Charles, who was voted the Most Improved Player as a freshman, also appears to be the heir apparent to teammate Gregory Kelser as MSU's best dunker. Two times this year "Bobo" Charles has slammed through dunks for the last basket

Heathcote keeps saying that Charles has unlimited potential, and it seems that potential is just beginning to surface.

MSU's sophomore forward Ron "Bobo" Charles puts in two of his 11 points in the Spartans' 68-59 win over Indiana Saturday.

tern Collegiate Hockey Association (WCHA). Next year, it looks like it may be changed again.

According to Burt Smith, executive director of the WCHA, a change must take place soon because of the ever rising costs of traveling across the wide WCHA geographic regions.
"I made a proposal for expansion three years ago," Smith said. "Bowling Green and St. Louis were good at that time but the proposal was turned down. Our own coaches are now expressing their concern. This is the first real push that we've had in three years.

Smith said that while the NCAA rules committee was meeting in Atlanta Ga. last representatives of the WCHA also met and a committee was formed to look into the possibility of expansion. Ralph Romano, athletic director of the University of Minnesota-Duluth, is heading the commit-

"Don Canham (athletic director of Michigan) made a dramatic speech about the costs of the league," Smith said. "Father (Edmond P.) Joyce (faculty representative of Notre Dame said that Notre Dame lost thousands of dollars from its hockey program last season.'

The committee will meet at the WCHA executive meeting in March to discuss the dif ferent proposals. Then they will take whatever information they come up with to the regular WCHA meeting in April.

"I think if we have an expansion, the expansion will come with the proposal of absorbing all six CCHA (Central Collegiate Hockey Association) teams," Smith said. The most common proposal for expansion is to merge the 10 WCHA teams and the six-team CCHA league. The problem of the expansion comes with the different division proposals. Of the 16 teams in the proposed merger, 14 are in the

"I don't know how you're going to satisfy everybody, Smith said. "The only thing that I would like to see is that the WCHA stay the dominant league in the West."

"I would like to see expansion," said MSU hockey coach Amo Bessone. "Instead of spending money on traveling, we can spend it on recruiting." Bessone, like almost every One division would include all of the Big Ten teams currently in the WCHA (MSU, Michigan Minnesota and Wisconsin) and Notre Dame. It would also include Ohio State, Bowling Green and Western Michigan in the CCHA.

The other league would consist of Michigan Tech, North Minnesota-Duluth, Dakota, Colorado College and Denver from the WCHA, CCHA teams would include St. Louis, Northern Michigan and Lake Superior State.

That would be great for us, Bessone said.

But ask the teams in the other division and don't expect the same answer.

Bob Kurtz, radio announcer for WKAR radio who covers all of the MSU hockey games, has a different proposal. He would like to see Ferris State and the Air Force Academy added to

THE MAJESTIC SYSTEM

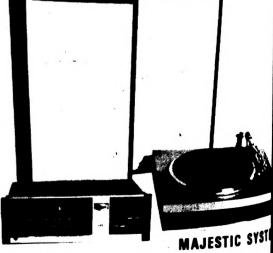

Flexibility and performance at a modest price. Thats the MAJESTIC SYSTEM. Even a quick check of the many convenience features of the JR-S100 shows that it offers much more than similarly priced receivers. Not only does the JR-S100 shore many of the original JVC technical developments of the larger and more expensive models, it also guarantees the same Original Sound Reallism that is a JVC Policy in high fidelity aquipment. The JR-S100 delivers enough power for those greet boss notes (below 45 Hz) that characterize popular music today. What this means is you can use medium efficiency speakers and still get greet guty sound. The Genesia 1 speakers are those speakers. You get deequate sound pressure levels in a normal room with power to spare. So fleetwood Mac sounds like Fleetwood Mac. The bell driven Gerard GT-10 turatable incorporates everything Gerrard considers essential for true high fidelity performance. It seems to me that this feeling was not something I held alone. Since I was a freshman four years ago, participation in IM activities has increased substantially.

What it has done is to make the current facilities obsolete in handling the number of people wishing to use them.

Take basketball, for instance, which is the major sport this term. Because of the lack of space available, the number of teams allowed to play was limited to 500. If there weren't a space problem there could easily have been as many as 750 teams competing. Michigan on the other hand, which happens to have brand new facilities, doesn't even get as much as 500 teams that want to play.

Some of the big beefs heard are that the refs are bad, there are no good courts to play on and who wants to play so late at night. First of all, one has to look at the fact that they are even able to play at all. Second, they must realize that the refs are only students like ourselves and are trying to do the best job that they can. Try to imagine what it would be like if there were no refs at all.

There has been a new proposed building in the works now ever since I have been at MSU. It is all well and good, except that I really haven't seen anything done about it.

There is a performing arts center in the works and then there are rumors about a new museum and new library facilities going up. Then there is talk of putting up a new sports arena which looks like it might come about. This is also all well and good, because we need a new fieldhouse desperately, but we have gone so long with the one we have that I feel we could go just a little bit longer with it

I do not see continuing with the IM buildings we have now. It is outdated and with the trend being to compete in sports, and this includes both men and women, the current facilities will soon reach the point where only a few of the students and faculty will be able to use what facilities we have now.

I think that something should be done to get some new facilities going before the current problem gets too far out of hand. This means getting the president of the University, the IM officials and maybe a student advisory committee together to discuss the problem.

On the other hand, physics professor Frank Blatt, AAUP chairperson, said unionization would benefit the faculty precisely because it would give formal, legal status to the regulations and codes under which the faculty and university operate.

"At the present time these regulations can be changed at the whim of the Board of Trustees, and in some instances have been changed," Blatt said.

A union is one of the most effective ways of assuring the faculty a substantial role in the formation of university policy, according to Blatt. The form for participation now exists, but there is little substance to that form, he noted.

Many decisions are now termed as administrative even though they have a great impact on the faculty, Blatt

Blatt said the faculty is the only full-time group at MSU which is not unionized. There is at least a suspicion that when resources are allocated, contractual obligations with other University employees are met before faculty salaries are considered, he said.

Former FA president Korth said he also believes that a contractual agreement would benefit the faculty.

"Collective bargaining is not advisory to anyone," he said. The governance system at MSU is advisory to the administration even in grievance pro-

A faculty member should be allowed to file a grievance without any possibility of reprisal Korth said.

Individual faculty members would also benefit, because when a contract exists, cost of living clauses would be written into the agreement, he said.

Collective bargaining would strengthen the tenure system. said Korth who characterized the present system as simply a "gentleman's agreement" that can be set aside.

Collective bargaining would also be a way to assure that efficiency and budgetary reasons would not prevail when decisions were being made about academic programs, according to Korth.

"There is a sense among faculty that it is their university, that it does not belong to the administration," he said. Korth added support for unionization is significantly higher now than in the last 'We got all our cards in a brief time," he said. Economics professor C. Patric "Lash" Larrowe said it would be difficult to predict the outcome, should an election take place.

of demoralization on the part of the faculty generated by the feeling that the administration has proliferated and more and more decisions are being made by the administration," he said. "The faculty has less to say than it would like."

Faculty salaries have not risen as much as the cost of living in the last five years — a factor which may also influence more people to vote for a union this time, Larrowe said.

However, he said some faculty members voted for unionization in 1972 because they needed some method for solving grievances and dis-putes. An effective grievance rocedure has been in effect for five years now, he noted.

The fact that a very high percentage of the faculty at MSU have tenure will also affect the vote at MSU, according to Larrowe

"The person with tenure tends to feel secure overall," he

The collective bargaining situation in Michigan and throughout the county has changed dramatically since the last union election in 1972.

universities without a collective bargaining agent, according to William Owens, higher education consultant for the Michigan Education Association.

The University of Michigan is the only four-year state-supported institution with no active union drive currently going on, he said.

Universities are even being organized in states such as Ohio where the legislature has not passed a collective bargaining act, Owens added.

an apparent gathering point for Cuban forces, the sources report. 'A large number of Cubans appear to have left Cuba by ship last week," a Western diplomat, who asked that his name not be used, said in the Somali capital. "The Cubans are already fighting in Ethiopia. But we have indications that in a few weeks the number of Cubans there will triple or double." In Washington, the State department reported at least 1,000 more Cuban troops have been sent to Ethiopia, raising the estimated number of Cubans in the conflict to 4,500. On Tuesday, spokesperson Hodding Carter III said the United States does not believe "the participation of outside powers is useful" in the Horn of Africa and cautioned both Egypt and Israel against supplying arms or troops to Somalia or Ethiopia. In Rome, Ethiopia's information minister, Maj. Girma Neway,

The sources said Cuban troops primarily provide artillery support for Ethiopian soldiers at the government strongholds of Harar and Diredawa in the northern Ogaden. The Cubans are driving tanks and armored personnel carriers in ground battles and flying Ethiopia's MiG-17 and MiG-21 planes - newly acquired from the Soviet Union - in saturation bombings of Somali-held towns, primarily Jijiga, diplomats report.

EXPERT SUGGESTS GUM AS TRANQUILIZER

Tips for 'painless' test-taking offered

By NANCY WOLLENWEBER SHEETS
Midterm migraine and bloodshot orbs can be avoided, according to a Learning Resource Center professor, who recently offered several simple tips for more productive pre-exam studying.
For instance, Elaine Cherney suggested, students should "put themselves in the head of the professor" to figure out what might

Another effective study technique is to make up questions from class notes and readings. If students cannot answer their own questions, they do not know the material well enough for a test, she said.

Cherney suggested putting an "X" and a key word in a textbook margins, rather than underlining sentences or paragraphs. Students should think in terms of the main point the author is saying and ask why and how the examples apply to the class, she added.

In math problems, she said, it is best to select a strategy for finding the unknown.

"If your mind goes blank on the first question, turn to the middle Cherney suggested note cards with pertinent facts listed on them to help jog the memory and change the train of thought between tests. The test directions and number of pages should be checked carefully—students rushing to complete a test often find out they are missing a page or forgot to check the back of the test, she said.

Finally, she suggested bringing gum or candy along to help relax during those two-hour exams.
