Guyanese troops sent to fatal ambush site

GEORGETOWN, Guyana (AP) — The Guyanese government airlifted troops Sunday into the remote jungle where a California congressman and three journalists were ambushed and killed as they tried to escort unhappy settlers from the camp of an American religious sect.

One of the settlers also was killed, government officials said. Nine other persons were reported wounded in the attack near the Venezuelan border of this South America country. All the dead and wounded were Americans, according to the U.S. Embassy.

Authorities said at least one suspect had been apprehended.

There were rumors that 200 or more of the sect's members had committed mass suicide at the Jonestown settlement in the aftermath of the Saturday ambush of U.S. Rep. Leo J. Ryan's group. The government said it could not confirm that such a bizarre bloodbath had taken place.

Guyanese officials said the attack on Ryan's group apparently was staged by members of the People's Temple sect who were angered by the representative's interference.

Jack Gelin, a Guyanese government spokesperson in New York, said a company of soldiers sent to the sect's camp took one suspect into custody. Gelin identified him as Larry John Leyton, an American whose age and hometown were not known. The Georgetown Chronicle said eight men and a woman were arrested but it gave no details.

Government sources said 130 soldiers and about 40 police were sent to the area, 150 miles northwest of Georgetown and about 50 miles south of the border with Venezuela.

At least seven persons, including American attorney Mark Lane, had been listed as missing after the attack. But State Department spokesperson Tom Reston said in Washington he had information that Lane and another lawyer, Charles Garry, were alive in Jonestown. He gave no source for his information.

Lane, who defended Martin Luther King's convicted assassin James Earl Ray, and Garry were serving as counselors to Jim Jones, the founder of the California-based People's Temple sect that established Jonestown.

The State Department identified four of the dead as the 53-year-old Ryan, reporter Don Harris, 42, and camera operator Robert Brown, 36, both of NBC News and both Los Angeles residents, and photographer Gregory Robinson, 27, of the San Francisco Examiner newspaper.

The identity of the fifth victim was withheld pending notification of relatives, but Guyanese sources said it was an 18-year-old American woman from the settlement.

Examiner Publisher Reg Murphy Sunday praised the slain photographer as someone "who represented the very best in American photojournalism."

Ryan's party was ambushed as he tried to escort a half-dozen or more People's Temple settlers from the sect's agricultural project back to Georgetown, Guyana's capital. Most sect members are Californians, and there have been repeated allegations that the sect was abusing some of its adherents.

The State Department said it had unconfirmed "alarming indications" that at least 200 of the outpost's estimated 1,100 American settlers committed suicide after the Saturday evening ambush. Department spokesperson Thomas Reston said one settler from the compound walked 30 miles to Mathews Ridge, where the troops had stopped because of darkness, and reportedly said at least 200 had killed themselves before he left.

Guyanese authorities in Georgetown said army units were in Jonestown and had not filed any reports about suicides, but communications were difficult.

A Guyana police spokesperson said an unidentified member of the sect and her three children were found dead Saturday night at a People's Temple complex in a suburb of Georgetown, apparently a triple murder-suicide.

In San Francisco, a People's Temple spokesperson who identified himself as Archie James said sect members did not commit the Jonestown killings and denied the suicide reports.

A White House statement issued in Washington said President Carter was saddened by Ryan's death.

The State Department said members of the People's Temple, which claims about 20,000 followers in California, had previously mentioned the possibility of suicide if they felt the sect was threatened. The FBI in California was alerted, the department said.

The State Department said it would respect the Guyanese law requiring autopsies on all murder victims despite a family request that the law be waived and the bodies returned immediately. An American pathologist was flown to Georgetown and may help with the autopsies, the department said.

Ryan, a Democrat from San Mateo County re-elected to a fourth term Nov. 7, had gone to Guyana with aides and reporters to investigate alleged abuses at the settlement. Jones, a former San Francisco city official, founded the agricultural commune a year ago.

Before leaving San Francisco last week at the head of a 14-member delegation, Ryan said he was going to investigate conditions of Americans at the settlement. He said he had been told they "are working from dawn to nightfall, with terrible mental and physical punishments if they don't work hard enough."

People's Temple in Guyana, South America, was photographed a few days ago by San Francisco Examiner photographer Greg Robinson, before he, two other American journalists and U.S. Rep. Leo Ryan, D-Calif., were killed Saturday in a jungle ambush. (Right) Associate Minister Archie James (dark suit) of the People's Temple issued a statement Sunday in San Francisco, denying reports that members of the cult planned to commit mass suicide in the wake of murders of the representative and three others.

ASMSU REPS CHARGE LACK OF LEADERSHIP

Student Board to consider ousting Jones

By MICHAEL MEGERIAN
State News Staff Writer

The ASMSU Student Board will consider a bill to impeach board president Dan Jones Tuesday, representatives said Sunday.

Complaints about lack of presidential input and deficiency in leadership qualities have been lodged against Jones by board members.

Dan Stouffer, College of Agriculture and Natural Resources representative and author of the bill, said Jones has not done anything for student government since taking office last spring.

Stouffer criticized Jones, saying he has not been a catalyst in generating input and ideas for the board. He said Jones has failed to act as the board's leader.

Julie Maki, College of Art and Letters representative, said she was informed of Stouffer's legislation Sunday and was displeased with the board's actions.

Maki said a breakdown in communication between the president, the board and committees is prompting the board to resolve its own problems through impeachment. "There's no problem-solving process," she said. "Committees are not relating to each other or sharing information. That's a fertile climate for misunderstanding."

Maki charged the board with playing "political games" and displaying "power trips" by voicing disapproval over some of Jones' actions.

Some board members were upset earlier fall term by Jones' decision to set up an advisory board to look into restructuring student government. The move was in direct violation of ASMSU's Code of Operations, representatives contended.

Stouffer said he and other board members have tried to show their willingness to work with Jones, but have been met by minimal cooperation from the president's office.

Stouffer said he feels Jones is "paranoid" of the board.

Jones, who was informed of the prospective legislation Sunday evening, said he has not received cooperation on bills he has introduced.

"They don't want to work with me," he said. "A lack of communication would not justify their action."

Jones said he was aware of rumors regarding his impeachment but had heard nothing about the bill. He added he doesn't see the bill as a "personal threat," and said it may be the result of vindictiveness on the part of some members of the board.

The board's attempt at impeachment is not the first time ASMSU's Student Board has attempted to oust its president.

Tim Cain, ASMSU Student Board president from 1974 to 1975, was nearly removed from office after he violated two student ordinances.

Cain had requested that Union Building employees allow persons waiting for concert tickets to enter the building, an act for which he was not authorized.

Cain was also accused of fostering student unionization in the Student Worker's Union. He was acquitted by the All-University Student Judiciary of both charges.

The bill to impeach Jones requires approval by a majority of board members for referral to the policy committee.

The board must then vote on the bill, which requires a two-thirds majority to pass. If impeached, Jones would step down and be replaced by a candidate elected by the board.

That person may come from any facet of student government, Stouffer said.

Botha vows elections for S. Africa despite guerrillas' opposition

NEW YORK (AP) — The prime minister of the Republic of South Africa said Sunday that elections would be held as scheduled next month in Namibia despite the opposition of guerrillas.

"We have no idea of canceling it, we are going to proceed with it," Pieter Botha said in an interview on NBC's "Meet the Press" program, taped in Pretoria, South Africa, and aired here Sunday.

South Africa controls the territory, also called South-West Africa, under a League of Nations mandate that has been voided by the United Nations.

The U.N. Security Council demanded last week that South Africa call off the December election in Namibia and hold one next spring under U.N. supervision. The demand was backed by a threat of sanctions against South Africa.

It was believed that a non-U.N.-supervised election next month would be won by a pro-government party rather than by the South West Africa People's Organization. SWAPO claims it represents blacks who want independence from white rule in the territory, but Botha disputed that claim.

"SWAPO was invited to take part in that election. They preferred not to take part because they are not interested in elections, they are interested in foisting their own ideas at the point of a gun at the majority of the people of South West Africa (Namibia)," he said.

In another interview, Kurt Waldheim, secretary general of the United Nations, said he is to report to the Security Council by next Saturday on whether South Africa will agree to a U.N.-supervised election later next year, possibly in July.

He said on the ABC "Issues and Answers" program that the South Africans maintain that the winner in the December election "will be the leaders of the people of Namibia, but the United Nations will continue to negotiate with South Africa, and not those leaders."

Waldheim said there is "uneasiness in Africa" because the function of those leaders is unclear and also because SWAPO, "the liberation movement operating outside Namibia, will not have the possibility of participating."

"We have to clarify the situation," Waldheim said, "before we can accept any further involvement of the United Nations."

Egyptian 'timetable' rejected by Israel

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Prime Minister Menachem Begin — hit by an egg thrown by angry Israelis as he arrived at a political meeting — said Sunday Israel rejects timetables for solving the Palestinian question in a peace treaty with Egypt.

Palestinian guerrillas struck a new blow Sunday when a bomb exploded on a bus packed with Israelis and tourists in the occupied West Bank 10 miles east of Jerusalem, killing four persons and injuring 37. No Americans were reported among the casualties.

In Beirut, the Palestinian guerrilla group Fatah claimed responsibility.

Begin said Israel was ready to sign the treaty draft as it existed Nov. 11 — without a timetable — but Egypt had added "unacceptable" demands in asking for a timetable.

"We will never agree to timetables," Begin declared on the first anniversary of Egyptian President Anwar Sadat's historic trip to Jerusalem, the first step in the current peace drive.

Begin spoke to the central committee of his own Herut Party after a Cabinet meeting opening debate on the deadlocked Washington peace talks, the new Egyptian proposals and a U.S.-proposed compromise.

As Begin arrived for the party meeting, angry Jewish settlers from occupied territories and other Israelis pelted his car with rocks and eggs. The prime minister was hit on the left shoulder by an egg.

Demonstrators also threw stones and eggs at Defense Minister Ezer Weizman's car when he arrived.

Many settlers in the Sinai are upset by the government's willingness to return the peninsula to the Egyptians. Settlers on the West Bank fear a treaty would lead to withdrawal from that occupied zone.

In Cairo, Egyptian Prime Minister Mustapha Khalil marked the anniversary of Sadat's Jerusalem visit with a warning that a peace treaty with Israel would not solve problems in the Middle East.

He said Egypt still insists on Israeli withdrawal from all Arab lands seized in the 1967 Mideast War.

Sadat issued no statements to mark the occasion. He met in Cairo with U.S. Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph Califano, who described Sadat as being "in a very fine mood."

The Washington talks have stalled over the "linkage" issue — whether and how the Israeli-Egyptian treaty and Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai should be tied to progress in establishing Palestinian autonomy in the West Bank and Gaza Strip.

Israel and Egypt have agreed that negotiations should start in one month on the powers and responsibilities of the planned Palestinian self-rule in the West Bank and Gaza.

But Egypt wants elections in Gaza to take place in six months and in the West Bank in a year. Israel fears that if it agrees to such a timetable and it is not met, Egypt may consider the treaty nullified.

Egypt also wants its police in Gaza but Israel opposes this, Begin said.

Train repair keeps club chugging

By JENNIFER DIXON
State News Staff Writer

In 1957, former MSU trustee Forrest Akers, a millionaire, paid to tow a locomotive donated by Chesapeake & Ohio to MSU because he thought the University should have a monument to the Age of Steam.

The MSU Railroad Club has been reinsulating the locomotive's boiler, repairing the running gear and reinstalling the lubrication system of the 1225 locomotive since 1969.

Currently the monument to steam is covered with a plastic canopy. Club members recently finished installing the shelter around the engine so they can continue with restoration through the winter.

The club members will be able to work under lights strung from wooden beams and keep warm with an electric stove.

When the engine is fully restored, it will be one of eight large operating steam engines in the country and will pull football fans to Notre Dame, Ohio State, Northwestern and U-M, and be used for an excursion service.

The 1225, which burns soft coal, will pull 1,500 people per trip, club members say.

The 100-foot engine was the largest ever used in the state, said railroad club member Dave Jones, a junior in Justin Morrill College.

In the early 1900s, railroad tracks crossed the Red Cedar River at the dam continuing over the the University's first power plant, where the Administration Building now stands, Jones said.

The C & O Railroad ran from 1941 to 1961, merging with the Pere Marquette railroad in 1947. The tracks became University property in 1957.

MSU is the only University "in the world restoring an engine like this," Jones said, speaking from under a striped railroad cap.

Restoration is funded by the railroad club's 400 members, who are garnered through magazines advertisements or visitors who like the idea.

Members are "just general people who want to see the engine run and restored," Jones said.

Jones is among eight people repairing the engine. When working, he wears oiled coveralls, a blue workshirt and paint-spattered shoes.

Those working on the restoration have taken off sheet metal and three inches of insulation running the length of the engine to check the boiler.

The club "doesn't have a time table," for completing the restoration because "all labor is volunteer, it's hard to work without protection, as this is the first time we've had cover."

The railroad club gets no money from the University, "because MSU is not a railroad operator or a restoration group," Jones said.

The engine currently sits on railroad tracks leading to the Shaw Lane power plant. Across from the 1225, on another set of tracks, is an ex-Grand Trunk Railway post office train purchased to serve as a storage car.

The train smells of oil. Rusty chains, electric saws, piles of sawdust, coils of wiring and a lone hammer are strewn across the train's wood floor.

The pigeon-hole shelves that once held mail now hold washers, bolts, screws, nuts and dies.

Wrenches are lined in rows on another wall.

And anyone who wants to pick up a wrench or other such tool to help out should contact the club through the Museum.

"We can always use 'em (new volunteers)," Jones said.

The members of the Railroad Club have built a shelter over the train, Project 1225, so they can continue repairs through the winter.

Last Tuesday I bought tickets for the Bruce Springsteen concert (Friday) at Munn Ice Arena. I showed up at the Union Ticket Office two days before tickets went on sale, and was the 24th person in line. A diagram put up by ASMSU Pop Entertainment said the first 10 rows of the center section (the best seats in the house) would be available at the Union Ticket Office. A Pop Entertainment representative also specified no promotional tickets would be taken out of those rows. If all those seats were really available, I should have ended up in the sixth or seventh row. I came away with tickets for the second section back. What happened?

First section tickets were on their way after call from Trouble Shooter to Pop Entertainment. Problem stemmed from Pop Entertainment oversight causing 38 tickets to be held in reserve. These were held back for people who lost places when rows were removed to make room for the soundboard. Ron Stump, of Pop Entertainment, said they shouldn't have been taken from the first 10 rows. Problem was resolved by promise to Trouble Shooter that tickets will never be pulled from these rows again. The Theta Delta Chi fraternity house, 139 Bailey St., is badly in need of repairs we can't afford. Are we eligible to receive any money from the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to help us get our house up to standard?

Sounds to Trouble Shooter like you weren't first to ask — and HUD money could come soon if you get on the stick. Federal Government says HUD money can be received regardless of who owns your house, if primary beneficiaries have low or moderate income, and money eliminates slums or blight. If 75 percent of brothers in the house make less than $13,500 a year, you could qualify. But the money is administered in East Lansing by the city's Housing and Community Development Commission. ## Sleeping Bear Dunes land owners oppose government takeover

By PAUL COX
State News Staff Writer

Land owners seeking to keep or regain their northwest Michigan property dominated a National Park Service workshop to help develop a management plan for Sleeping Bear Dunes.

While the land owners — many from the Lansing area — expressed a need to maintain protected wilderness areas, they said they have a right to their personal "havens." About 150 persons attended the fourth and final workshop, which was held in MSU's natural Resources Building Thursday.

In 1970, the U.S. Congress designated the Sleeping Bear area a National Lakeshore, and the land is now being obtained by the federal government, Dune Superintendent Donald R. Brown said.

Residents owning land designated as part of the National Lakeshore are required to sell their property to the federal government.

"We're being overpowered by the federal government," said Walter Bierkamp, a Lansing resident who owns Dune property. "I'm just a little guy. I wanted to keep it (property) for my children."

No industrial development will be allowed in the National Lakeshore but a plan must be developed as to what degree of wilderness will be maintained, Brown said.

A national Park Service team divided the Dune into six areas and formulated management alternatives for each area, which are listed in a workbook.

The workbook explains the alternatives and has a detachable section, which can be used to mail in personal comments and recommendations.

recommendations.

These comments and suggestions from the public workshops will be used to create a more concrete management plan, Brown said. Following more public comment, Brown said he hopes to formulate a final management plan by next summer.

Brown said attendance and the amount of comment has been high at the public workshops.

A recap concluding the MSU workshop brought out a number of common concerns. Sentiments of returning the land to its original owners drew applause.

Persons also strongly opposed "scenic corridors" which are long, thin parcels of land which would link various separated areas of the National Lakeshore.

Opponents said these corridors "put a noose" around the entire area and are a National Park Service effort to expand the boundaries of the federally owned land, infringing on the rights of more landowners.

Opponents also said existing historical structures and dune rides should be maintained.

John V. Polomsky, MSU assistant professor of Metallurgy, Mechanics and Materials said while he feels maintaining wilderness is important, he would not want to see a national park made inaccessible to senior citizens and handicapped.

The public comment workbook is available by writing Sleeping Bear Dunes National Lakeshore, 400 Main St., Frankfort, Mich., 49635.

HARVARD, 'U'-CHICAGO PROFESSORS

Race significance debated

By THERESA D. MCCLELLAN
State News Staff Writer

Although gains have been made for the educated middle-class black person, affirmative action does not satisfy the needs for the uneducated and poor blacks, said University of Chicago professor William J. Wilson in a debate held Thursday night.

Wilson debated the significance of race in determining racial inequality with Harvard professor Charles V. Willie in an overcrowded Wonders Kiva.

They have conducted several public and written debates after Wilson wrote the book "The Declining Significance of Race."

Wilson debated that class has become more important than race in determining black access to privilege and power.

"There are many talented and educated blacks that are entering prestigious positions at rates comparable to and in some cases exceeding whites with the same qualifications," Wilson said. "But the poor and uneducated blacks are on the bottom rung of the ladder."

Willie, however, contended that blacks only made progress during the year of Martin Luther King's death and race is not declining in significance but becoming more important.

"The death of Martin Luther King shamed the nation into the goal of full equity for blacks and the black median income inched forward to 70 percent of the white," Willie said. "But we are still 30 percent short of our goal."

The professors debated for over two hours. Willie hurling statistics and Wilson comparing South African blacks with American blacks.

While both agreed that enough progress has not been made for poor blacks, neither could agree on the gains made by middle class blacks.

Wilson stated that affirmative action has allowed black graduates to be on the same economic level as whites but Wilson presented data that stated otherwise.

From a 1976 study that allowed for past and present discrimination, college-trained black and other racial minorities received 15 to 20 percent less than their white counterparts, Willie said.

"This shows that racism is alive and well in the United States," he said.

Wilson stressed the fact that he did not say race was insignificant but also condemned affirmative action for not assisting everyone.

"I support affirmative action," he said, "but it doesn't go far enough."

He also said enough blacks were not aware of the Humphrey Hawkins bill, which would improve the status of all unemployed.

"There was more publicity given to affirmative action and the Bakke decision," he said, "while there is only a superficial knowledge of this bill."

While Willie stressed the need for institutional changes, Wilson concluded that there is a need for a united class movement among the poor. However, he said he did not see this happening in the future.

Reactions differ over race debate

The students and faculty present at the Wilson-Willie debate voiced various opinions concerning its importance and the political implications of the topic.

"The crowd seemed to be more partisan for Willie," Lee Meadows, guidance specialist in supportive service, said. "Whether this was because he was more charismatic or just because the crowd agreed with his point of view, I do not know."

However, some members of the audience said they felt Wilson's view would have a negative effect on the status of affirmative action.

"The political implication would be very negative," Meadows said, "in that there would cease to be feelings of offensive guilt by the controlling majority."

Lee June, president of the Black Faculty and Administrators Association said he "doesn't think Wilson has considered the political implications of the book."

"People could use just the title and say, 'look even this black man feels that race is no longer an issue' and begin to slack off on their efforts," he explained.

"There really is no difference in their arguments," said graduate student Gwen Taylor. "It depends on your interpretation and your analysis of others' interpretations."

"The only difference between their arguments is the emphasis," said Ron Gizza a senior in James Madison College.

"I can't identify the root of their disagreement and I don't understand their perception of their differences," he said.

The topic of debate was relevant to the events that are occurring today, said freshman Clarence James.

"It brought out a lot of questions about affirmative action that haven't been raised," he said.

"Contrary to what Wilson says even the so-called elitist are experiencing racism," James added. "It may be more subtle but it's there."

Black Affairs meets today

The Office of Black Affairs will be holding a meeting concerning the need for an MSU black student coalition at 8:30 tonight in the 334 Union Bldg.

OBA has called the meeting to discuss black survival at MSU after such things as restructured affirmative action program, MSU divestiture from South Africa and the Bus Stop discrimination issue have taken place this term.

"There is an extreme need for all black factions to unite and form a black student coalition if we are to regain our identity and political awareness," an OBA spokesperson said.

Refreshments will be served after the meeting.

Lt. John Peterson, of the Department of Public Safety, shouts out drill instructions to 15 students in Mason recently during police academy training procedures. Mary Dahlstrom, sponsored by the Weberville Police Department, clutches her night stick.

Future police officers learning 'real life' roles during training

Since the drilling was completed the group of police trainees mingled together and forgot, for a moment, the strenuous workout.

"Oh fearless leader, what do you have to say?" one asked his squad leader.

Her eyes rolled back as she pleaded with him to stop joking.

"That's enough," she commanded.

By RUSS HUMPHREY
State News Staff Writer

Mary Dahlstrom, of the Weberville City Police Department, did not get the response she wanted from the man in her squad. Though it was break time then, she would soon be obeyed when the drilling resumed.

Dahlstrom was one of 27 police trainees graduated Friday from a Lansing Community College-sponsored police academy.

Twelve of the police graduates were sponsored by a county or city police department, while the rest paid the tuition themselves in order to become a qualified officer in Michigan.

The Department of Public Safety and East Lansing and Lansing police departments have had officers undergo the training procedures, and also have had either officers or detectives involved with some of the instruction.

The class went through a rigorous 11 week training period which concentrated on various problems and procedures faced by a patrol officer.

Possible situations encountered by an officer were presented to the group after several hours of class time. The situations were designed to be as near as possible to the real thing.

Interviewing problems, investigating techniques and report writing were some of the class work at the academy, East Lansing Lt. Tom Hendricks said.

"We taught them to use their heads in all circumstances," Hendricks said. He taught some of the various techniques of report writing, and has been involved with some of the other aspects of the school in previous sessions.

"Real life" episodes of criminal activity were included in the training. These included a mock crime scene, civil disorder, vehicle search and fire arms practice, which helped develop the proper attitude of the trainee.

Hendricks said the academy tried to make the students familiar with not only the problems people present to a police officer on duty, but also the correct way to proceed with an investigation.

In the ninth week of the term, officer trainees were drilled using military techniques in Mason for several hours a night. The drills were used to make the trainees familiar with riot action, and their enforcement responsibilities when a crowd becomes violent.

A mock riot, full of violent people, gave the trainees the opportunity to use the techniques they learned.

Each platoon was divided into squads which could surround a building or group effectively.

Lansing board choice: coal or nuclear power?

By PAUL COX
State News Staff Writer

First of two parts

The Lansing Board of Water and Light will be making an energy decision in the near future with potential effects on many.

The decision basically comes down to choosing between the traditional energy source — coal — or going with a newer technology — nuclear power.

Roland F. Rhead, board chairperson, said the board will require more power to meet increased consumer needs by about 1984. A decision must be made soon to meet these needs so negotiations or construction can be completed in time to fill them.

The decision will have an economic effect on power rates in the Lansing area and environmental effects on Michigan.

The board's narrowing process has whittled the alternatives down to coal and nuclear. The board will announce which alternative it will pursue at a special meeting Dec. 5.

Engineers and scientists have uniformly favored going with the nuclear technology. They say it will provide economic advances with coal. They insist that nuclear technology will not work efficiently, creating both economic and environmental burdens.

R. W. Beck and Associates, an independent engineering research firm, was contracted to study the situation and conditionally recommended then nuclear alternative. The board should buy into the Consumers Power Midland nuclear generation plant, "unless the business risks normally associated with nuclear energy" are too great, the report said.

The board currently generates power with coal at its Erickson plant located in Delta Township. The Beck study indicated that these facilities could be expanded, along with the use of oil-fired turbines to meet the area's power needs.

The Midland alternative is to purchase about 7 percent of the Consumers Power owned nuclear generation plant, which is under construction. Current estimates indicate the plant will be "on line" by 1981.

A great amount of politicking has surrounded the issue, but it comes down to what is best for the Lansing area.

Coal is a known technology with regard to its economic and environmental ramifications.

Nuclear energy is potentially better in terms of cost to consumers and safety to the environment. Because of its relative infancy as an energy source, it is not known if it will live up to its potential.

An article in the August 1978 issue of Science magazine stated that 12 percent of the nation's electricity was generated by nuclear plants in 1977. Since the country's first nuclear plant went on line 20 years ago, the total volume of nuclear energy has been growing by about 30 percent a year.

The article focuses on the experience of Commonwealth Edison in the Chicago area, which is the nation's largest nuclear user. Edison figures show savings of 10 percent in 1977 to consumers on their electric bills because of nuclear energy usage.

But nuclear opponents point to the Consumers Power Palisades nuclear plant, which has produced at only 33.8 percent of its capacity.

People often oppose nuclear energy because they think of it as a bomb — it could explode.

Explosions are not possible at nuclear power plants because there is not enough Uranium-235 in the fuel used to produce an explosion.

This is not to say there are not potential dangers from the radiation associated with nuclear energy.

Although no major accidents have occurred at nuclear plants, the Brown's Ferry Ala., plant and the Fermi I plant in Detroit came close to having a "core melt" occur. A core melt releases large amounts of radiation into the environment.

Large reactors contain about 1,000 times the amount of radioactive material as the bomb the United States dropped on Hiroshima, Japan during WW II.

Little attention has been focused on the coal alternative because it is a tried and well known method of electrical generation. Coal has had a recent rebirth as an energy source in this country.

The coal supply is not controlled by a foreign country and it appears an adequate supply exists. It has been estimated that the United States has enough coal to last 300 to 400 years.

Coal is the most widely used energy source used in this country.

Boeings don't mix well with Cessnas

With the approach of the holiday season many members of the MSU community — not to mention millions of Americans — will be taking to the air to travel home. In doing so, they exhibit tremendous confidence that the government, air carrier companies and their personnel will get them there safely.

And for the most part the confidence is well-earned. Aircraft builders, airlines and the government, through the Federal Aviation Administration, have done a fairly credible job over the years in providing for the safety of airline customers. In fact, the safety record of air travel supercedes that of any of its land-bound counterparts.

But, while the record has been good it could and should be even better. Less than two months ago over 140 people died when a commercial jetliner collided with a private airplane in a confusing set of circumstances in the skies over San Diego.

While the investigation into that particular accident continues, there exists one nagging fact. The mixture of commercial and private aircraft at large metropolitan airports is inherently dangerous.

Pilots, through their professional organization, have complained for years about the increased congestion and the resultant dangers associated with mixing ever-larger and more crowded commercial aircraft — complete with expanding schedules — with the increasing proliferation of slower, smaller aircraft associated with private aviation.

It's not only pilots who have voiced negative opinions about this lethal mix of aircraft, either. Air traffic controllers, on whose shoulders and earphones falls the task of safely sorting through incoming and outgoing traffic, also have expressed their dissatisfaction with current airport traffic situations.

The solution seems simple enough — move private air traffic to outlying smaller private airports. But the politics of the situation are not quite so easy. Businesses who own their own planes obviously want close access, as do the weekend flyers who live in metropolitan areas.

But before the stark reality of the recent San Diego tragedy becomes another cold statistic the FAA should move strongly to investigate, but more importantly implement, the separation of two very different kinds of aviation. Continued inaction by the FAA on the complaints of professional aviators is only an invitation to another disaster.

A seller's market

DPS, never known for its prosecutorial discretion, has been arresting "scalpers" for selling their football tickets outside Spartan Stadium. This has all come at the request of the Athletic Department, which would rather sell their $8 tickets than have potential customers buy unused student tickets.

Ticket scalping is the perfect victimless crime. Nobody is hurt by selling a ticket. If a person wants to see an event, that person is either willing to pay the price or not see the event.

To many people, a Spartan football game is worth more than $4 but less than $8. Who do they hurt by buying an extra student ticket? The Athletic Department thinks it should be a crime because those people won't buy from them. It is a selfish attitude to take, and is especially harmful to students who can't make it to all the games but don't want to let a ticket go to waste.

Besides, how can DPS establish how much a ticket costs (retail) when no prices are printed on student tickets? Surely they don't think an Iowa ticket, for a game to be played in the cold on a holiday weekend, is as valuable as a Notre Dame ticket, a game played on a sunny afternoon. Folly? Yes. But DPS started it.

DPS, in enforcing an ordinance requiring selling permits, is discriminating at the request of the Athletic Department. DPS does not send an officer to Wells Hall to copy down the names of students selling ski equipment, used cars, or textbooks. But when the Athletic Department tells them to come out to the stadium and suddenly start enforcing the ordinance, they come running.

The Athletic Department, like any other component of this University, is supposed to serve the student body. Sponsoring athletic events is a fine form of entertainment and brings revenues to the school. But calling DPS to arrest students for selling their extra tickets is not benefiting the students in any way.

VIEWPOINT: AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Human rights: joke of the century

By MARCELLA TARDY

I was mortified by recent statements from the U.S. State Department and other members of our government indicating U.S. support for the Shah of Iran and his "temporary" military government. Although the shah and his supporters would have us believe the present and past unrest has been the doing of a handful of Muslim extremist and leftist guerrillas, television and radio news coverage, movies smuggled from Iran, and the accounts of Iranian students within the U.S. indicate this is a popular uprising long in the making. Moreover, contrary to most media reports, the grievances of the Iranian people are not limited to unwanted reforms from the shah and a desire for Islamic rule, but also includes excessive military expenditures while basic needs of the population go unmet, corruption at all levels of government (the shah's arrest of members of his government is little more than a futile attempt to disguise his own involvement), and the shah's brutal repression of opposition to his regime.

Few, I think, have failed to notice the downplay of the human rights issue, once such a favorite when speaking of the U.S.S.R. Yet it is well known that Iranian jails are full of political and that systematic torture and murder are common methods of dealing with opponents of the monarchy. Amnesty International cites Iran as perhaps the worst violator of human rights in the world today. While the great economic and strategic importance of Iran for the U.S. is clear, filling American gas tanks with the equivalent of Iranian blood is unconscionable for a nation whose leaders blather about human rights.

In our paranoia of communist expansion, the U.S. has repeatedly supported not only Western style "democracies," but corrupt and dictatorial regimes as well, often damning our own long term interests. Tyranny can only be tolerated for so long and when the point is reached that life itself is not so important for the oppressed as deliverance from their oppression, when the tyranny itself becomes life-threatening, then that tyranny will be overthrown at whatever cost. I doubt it will be soon forgotten by those who struggled that the United States supported their oppressors.

The United States needs friends, and though our government is banking on hopes that the Iranian military can maintain the shah (or failing this, impose another leader friendly to U.S. interests), I think it important to remember that a government is only as strong as its backing — and this backing must ultimately come from the general population. I firmly believe that the shah will be overthrown. The question is one of time and cost in human lives.

Iran is not just a valuable and strategic piece of real estate. It is a nation. And as a nation it is her people who should determine the future of Iran, not the United States, and not a privileged and corrupt monarchy. We, as dues-paying members of this republic, should demand our government cease meddling in the internal affairs of Iran, withdraw all military and verbal support from the shah (though he will probably get refuge in San Clemente anyway), and maintain the hands-off respect that we demand of other nations toward ourselves. We have been caught with our greedy little fingers in the pies of other nations too often and frankly, I would not like to feel ashamed of my citizenship in the U.S., a place where "integrity" really means "hypocrisy" and "human rights" is rapidly becoming the joke of the century.

Incidentally, (to those who find this issue devoid of relevance) I think that disco-football stinks.

VIEWPOINT: PROPOSAL D

18 is no good? why don't we try raising it to 65?

By CINDI DUBEY

Proposal D has passed, much to the dismay of legal adults under 21. Many students are angered, frustrated and confused as to how 'they' can strip them of their privilege to purchase and consume alcoholic beverages. "It shows the ignorance of the older people. Nineteen would have been fine; people didn't even give it a chance to work out. They didn't even pay attention to the facts," asserted Mike Schaefer, Shaw Hall resident.

Many groups, such as The Three O'Clock Lobby, a youth advocate group, are seeking possible litigation. Their argument is based on the theory that Proposal D is not only unenforceable but discriminatory. But one Wayne State University student has another alternative.

Dave Menard, a Wayne State sophomore, feels, "What's good for the goose is good for the gander." Menard's proposal is to raise the drinking age to 65 and link it to the benefits of retirement. He says his purpose is "... to show how ludicrous it is to strip us of our rights."

Menard originally conceived the idea the night before the election when he and his friends were discussing the fact that they were about to lose their privilege to drink. Initially Menard wasn't serious about the idea until the Wayne State student newspaper and Detroit's Channel 7 picked up on the story.

Accidentally, Channel 7 publicly broadcast a telephone number where Menard could be reached for further information. Surprisingly, the response was overwhelming. As Menard put it, "... the switchboards lit up like Christmas trees."

Now, backed by numerous supporters, Menard says, "I'll take it as far as I can." However, he was quick to add, "I don't actually want to see it raised to 65."

Currently, Menard is in the process of meeting with University of Detroit law students to straighten out legal technicalities. Within the next week, petitions should begin circulating in an attempt to get the proposal on next year's ballot.

Although Menard doesn't really want to see the drinking age raised to 65, his campaign may succeed in proving his point. At the same time it will be a blatant "very of Proposal D."

It's a possibility that Menard may be successful in acquiring the required number of signatures needed to get his proposal on next year's ballot. Many people will sign his petition because, like Menard, they believe that Proposal D is an infringement on the privileges and responsibilities granted to legal adults under 21.

If Menard's proposal does make it into the 1979 ballot it is almost guaranteed not to pass because of its absurdity. However, Menard will have had the opportunity to show the public how ridiculous Proposal D is.

Students interested in helping to promote Menard's cause are asked to write to him at 672 Putnam, Detroit, MI 48202.

Independents love pledge raid tales

You people disappoint us! How can you possibly limit your fine coverage of pledge raids to just one involving Chi Omega and Psi Upsilon? Surely there are many humorous and noteworthy tales of raids among the other fraternities and sororities. Perhaps the State News should send their ace reporter (Jennifer Dixon) on a special investigative mission to search out more of these brilliant anecdotes from among the Greek system. We G.D.I.'s certainly find these stories to be entertaining reading.

Soviets are illiterate buffoons

With my whole heart I share the humane views expressed by Ifrikhar H. Malik in last Thursday's State News, but one of his statements struck me as evidently wrong. Malik says: "All of the leaders of the world in politics, economics or military are the highly-educated people of the present century. They are all torch-bearers of the entire heritage of human progress, spread over all these centuries of our past."

When comrade Secretary General approaches the next perfidious word. Now, this time he's going to overcome it... But he always fails.

I am afraid that torches borne by Soviet leaders are of different kind.

Lev Lifshitz
Visiting professor of Arts and Letters

The sad truth is that, on the contrary, it is astonishing how small the number of the world leaders there are who are educated appropriately.

As a Russian, I can witness that the top leaders of my country are poorly educated people. They received their degrees from special institutions for young Soviet bureaucrats. In those schools the major requirements are the "proletarian origin" and blind obedience to the party discipline. Their fabulous ignorance in the history, culture and literature of their own country is a source of numerous anecdotes. None of them can speak grammatical Russian. Such words as "socialist," "capitalist" or "differentiation" (i.e. Latin borrowings with Russian endings) are always a challenge for Brezhnev as a speaker. It is a peculiar Russian fun to watch Brezhnev's TV speech

A victory for the E.L. community

Three cheers to everyone in the MSU and the East Lansing communities for voting down the construction of the Dayton Hudson mall. You have just taken a giant step toward preserving the sense of "community" not to mention preserving the environment.

I live in Detroit, an if you're not tuned into it there truly is a renaissance going on in this city although we do have a long way to go. But my point is this: Besides the flight to the suburbs, crime, pollution and many other factors that contributed to the demise of the city, the erection of shopping malls helped to destroy neighborhoods and the sense of community in many areas.

Walk down the streets of East Lansing, Ann Arbor, Traverse City, etc. There is a great feeling about passing down the street, mingling with people, turning into a pub for a beer, dashing into the news stand to catch a glimpse of the New York Times or some favorite magazine, stopping off at the donut shop to escape the cold and enjoy a cup of coffee, bumping into a friend on the street and talking over last weekend's big victory, etc., etc., etc.

The Northlands, Eastlands, Wonderlands, Fairlanes and so forth helped rob those great things from the streets of Detroit. They helped rob our sense of community.

It's great that you haven't taken for granted what you have in East Lansing. And it's a great feeling for an alum to know that it will be there to enjoy on return trips to campus. I look forward to those trips back to the East Lansing "community."

Placers are OK

I have been here three years and have gone through lots of red tape and confusion — from parking to registration — but only recently have I encountered the other end of the spectrum. I am referring to the Placement Officers. I've been going there for job interviews and I was amazed at how well things were organized. Not only are they well-organized, but everyone I have contact with has always been helpful, knowledgeable and friendly.

So to Jackie, Sharon, Tammie, Toni and everyone else I don't know or see there, thanks.

E.L. seeking consultant for service facility

The East Lansing Housing and Community Development Commission has directed a subcommittee to find a consultant for the proposed Human Services Facility by mid-December.

The city has allocated $15,000 in federal monies to conduct a feasibility study for a multi-use $1.5 million human services facility or facilities for Spartan Village and Red Cedar areas of East Lansing.

The study committee, a subcommittee of the commission, was ordered Thursday to find a consultant for the study by Dec. 14 so the commission can submit the consultant's name to City Council at its Dec. 19 meeting.

The study group has been given five candidates for the consultant position. Reference checks are currently being made on these persons.

"One problem in hiring a consultant is that we don't have a defined task yet," said Brad Pryce, group manager for the Planning, Housing and Community Development Department.

Commissioner Nanette Rodgers suggested hiring a consultant from MSU, but Pryce objected the idea.

"There is a potential bias with (hiring) anyone associated with the University," Pryce said.

The city does not have to put up the consultant job for bid because the city can engage in professional contracts, he said.

In addition, a proposal to acquire open space property north of Red Cedar School for preservation as a natural area or as a location for the human services facility was included in a commission report.

Any action to purchase the property is pending the result of the feasibility study and an estimated cost of the property, which has not been determined.

Dean N. Glick, 1037 Daisy Lane, owns the property, which he said is being looked at by a number of potential buyers.

"It's my feeling the land would be used for a public facility," Glick said.

Ebony Reflections present fashion show

By THERESA MCCLELLAN
State News Staff Writer

The performers enter the darkly lit room and the narrator begins. "This is a play about our time... when houses didn't get robbed quite as much." From that point on the Black Renaissance Ensemble stole the show.

The United Blacks of Akers Ebony Reflection presented their fourth annual fashion and talent show Saturday night.

Along with fashions furnished by Hoslers and the background music from a Muskegon Heights 9-person band, the BRE performed three skits dealing with blackness.

Although the models strutted to the music well and the fashions were "sharp" as one woman stated in the audience, but the BRE was the highlight of the show.

Rhonda Hughes won the battle to stay in tune though the band almost defeated her as she sang "This Is Your Life." Darryl Hibbert ignored the band as he sang "Hold Onto The World," while the band played their own song.

A modern dance by a brother and sister act could barely be viewed by the audience in the back because the dancers performed on the floor, instead of the stage.

The best scene in the fashion show came when the mannequins came to life in robot style and exhibited their apparel.

Ebony Reflections also treated the audience with a surprise guest — Mystery. The local singing group that sounded like the Dramatics quickly approached the audience with vigorous movements almost too quick for the eye.

At one instance the movements were too quick for the microphone as it coyly draped around one singer's leg.

After an embarrassing moment of unwrapping the microphone the group performed several songs which were met with delighted squeals from the audience.

But the BRE stole the show. Their first selection dealt with the time when being called "black" was negative. The dramatic troupe reflected this with the portrayal through children's eyes.

The audience roared when Carl Gilliard, a junior majoring in telecommunications cried that he was not "black" but a "colored-Negro."

The prom night selection brought sympathetic "awws" from the audience after the hero told his date he invited her because he respected her "even though she had three kids."

Three honored at ceremony

MSU President Edgar L. Harden, Attorney General Frank J. Kelley and Helen Milliken were honored at an awards ceremony and banquet given by the Michigan Association of the Professions Thursday night.

The dinner was held at the University Club on Forest Road.

Harden, an association member, was the recipient of the association's 1978 Distinguished Award, a bronze sculpture by Michigan artist Marshall Fredericks.

The award read: "Of all men he (Harden) has served the professions best."

Kelley was awarded the Great Citizen Citation for his "exemplary service and conduct in public and private life," and Milliken, wife of Gov. William G. Milliken, received the Distinguished Woman of the Year Award.

Milliken has actively campaigned for the Equal Rights Amendment.

Harden, Kelley and Milliken were chosen for the awards at the Congress of the Professions held at Boyne Mountain ski resort in August.

Loans, judges on agenda for Lansing City Council

A proposal authorizing Lansing to submit applications for low-interest loans designed to rehabilitate residential property will be considered by the City Council at 7 p.m. Monday on the 10th floor of City Hall.

Low-interest loan applications for the Neighborhood

Improvement Program are available through the Michigan State Housing Development Authority for purposes of providing additional home improvement funds.

Council members will also consider a measure aimed at increasing the city's share of supplemental funding to district court judges to $4,581 per judge.

The proposed increase would bring the city's total share of district court judges' salaries up to $16,225 per judge.

Floral show set Dec. 1

It's beginning to look a lot like Christmas... and it will look that way even more during the Country Christmas Floral Design Show Dec. 1.

The show, to be held at 7 p.m. in 206 Horticulture Bldg., is put on annually by MSU students enrolled in the Flower Design III class — a course that is part of the agricultural technology commercial floriculture program.

In the two-year program, students "train to become professional florists as far as management, marketing strategies and actual design are concerned," instructor of the course and this year's program director Robert Hoernschmeyer said.

The show will consist of two parts: a floral design show, which will feature demonstrations on how to assemble Christmas arrangements, and an open house.

Aside from the visual delights of the show, the financial delights may appeal to those on a tight budget even more.

Creations will be sold only 5 to 10 percent above cost of materials to cover the bills for those materials.

On sale will be centerpieces, door swags, novelties and wall plaques which will be on sale at the show's conclusion.

Refreshments will be served and entertainment provided by the Okemos High School Madrigal choir.

Tickets for the show are 50 cents and available at 109 Horticulture Bldg.

Oil for heart?

DALLAS (AP) — A human-made substance which could be substituted for cooking oil dramatically reduces high cholesterol levels and the accompanying risk of heart attacks and stroke, scientists say.

Two teams of scientists researching the substance, sucrose polyester, say it tastes like margarine.

"Sucrose polyester seems to have remarkable potential as a cholesterol-lowering agent," with many advantages over existing drugs, said Charles Glueck, head of the University of Cincinnati's General Clinical Research Center.

Too much cholesterol in the blood greatly increases the risk of major heart problems, according to heart specialists.

The Boss proves it all night

By JOHN NEILSON
State News Reviewer

To explain WHAT Bruce Springsteen did in Munn Arena last Friday will be easy — it's a simple matter to just run down a list of the songs he did and make note of the most interesting solos and raps he went through. To explain HOW he did it will be another matter entirely. To capture the rush that accompanied the opening notes of "Badlands," or the gut-wrenching tug of Bruce's guitar solos, or even the looks of wide-eyed awe and euphoria on the faces in the crowd when the lights finally came up after three hours... well, you really should have been there.

Friday night's concert gave MSU a taste of what the big fuss is all about. Springsteen was HOT; the E Street Band was HOT; and the audience demanded — and received — one of the best rock events this town has seen in years.

Springsteen, for his part, played with a dramatic fire that was totally unexpected. The only previous time I had seen him he had put on a joyously exuberant performance, but the authority and majesty that characterized his last two albums was sadly missing. This time there was an "edge" to the music that greatly enhanced the performance. Despite his superstar status, Springsteen played as if he had to prove himself to his audience, and by the look of things he succeeded admirably.

Another major change was that the show has been tightened up considerably. Gone are the rambling introductions and "stories" that used to be woven around almost every song, and in this reviewer's opinion it's just as well. Sure, they were interesting, but after hearing them once on stage and reading them in countless magazine features the novelty in them had all but disappeared. This time Springsteen let the music speak for itself.

The first set was dominated by material from Darkness on the Edge of Town, which was rendered with great passion and dynamic playing on the part of the band. "The Promised Land" and "Prove It All Night," especially, contained raw power that was only hinted at on the studio versions. The extended guitar introduction on the latter tune, meanwhile, reaffirmed my belief that Bruce Springsteen would be considered one of today's rock guitar heroes were it not for the fact that he is so good as a singer.

Good as the first set was, it was the beginning of the second set that really put the show into high gear. Springsteen kicked off with "Ties That Bind," a new song that is reminiscent of Graham Parker's best work, and then did a simply excellent rendition of "Fire," a catchy pop number that he wrote for Robert Gordon's second album. Then came one of the evening's highlights — a stunning "Candy's Room" that literally exploded with rock 'n' roll passion and screaming distorted guitar, as did his stellar version of "Because the Night." Another new song, "Point Blank," followed, and if it is any indication of what his next album will sound like, I want to reserve my copy now.

The extended version of "She's the One" featured Springsteen's usual oldies jam, this time including both "Mona" and "Gloria." Springsteen's live show builds upon the oral tradition of rock 'n' roll, as he never fails to include a variety of classic '50s and '60s tunes in amongst his own songs. In this respect he is reminiscent of the early Rolling Stones, who brought many great-though-unknown blues songs to a general public that might never have heard them otherwise. At a time when many young rock fans are turning up their noses at songs they consider old-fashioned, it's good to hear someone who can make this music sound fresh and new again in his concerts.

By the time "Rosalita" (one of the two pre-Born to Run songs he played) capped the set nearly every person on the main floor was standing on their chairs or in the aisles. Their thunderous applause brought the band back for a powerful "Born to Run" encore, which he followed up with a medley of Mitch Ryder hits and his perennial concert-closer, "Quarter to Three." This last tune was turned into a real audience participation number, with the entire crowd jabbing their fingers in unison and demanding "You! You! You!" while Bruce repeated the song's chorus again and again and yet again. It was a great show — a REALLY great show — and for all those who really love rock, Bruce Springsteen did put a little "magic in the night."

Springsteen's thrill is gone

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Reviewer

I'm sorry, folks. — Bruce Springsteen is NOT the Boss, not by a long shot.

At this point I've seen Springsteen four times: three years ago in Ann Arbor; at the MSU Auditorium half a year later; at Detroit's Masonic Auditorium during the summer; and now here, Friday night, at Munn Arena. I don't want a sound like a trendie, but yeah, I've been listening to him since his Greetings From Asbury Park, since he was hailed as the "new Dylan" (an honor?), and yeah, back then I thought he might turn into a major artist if he canned cutesy lyrics like "Gokart Mozart" — checking out the weather chart to see if it was safe to go outside. And Little Dark Age Pearly came by in her curly-wurly, etc., etc.,

And I guess he HAS turned into a "major artist," though not for the right reasons. A lot of it has to do with the fact that Springsteen's replaced the cutesy lyrics with even more tepidly melodramatic ones — i.e. "Born to Run," "Racing in the Street" — and possibly, quite possibly, Springsteen's contagiously enthusiastic live performances have slowly, by word of mouth, brought him his large following.

But Springsteen's status as a major artist is disturbing. He's yet to do a better record than The Wild, the Innocent and the E-Street Shuffle; rather than exploring new territory he's got an "I'm just a prisoner of rock 'n' roll" rap down that excuses him for playing other people's tunes ("Quarter to Three," "Mona," "Gloria," "Chimes of Freedom" and a whole Mitch Ryder mini-set) so most people won't notice the simple fact that most of his newer songs all sound the same.

Worse still, and related to the above point, Springsteen's boxed himself into a cumbersome lyrical stance, typified by "Prove It All Night," that not only is adolescent but exploitive. What's he exploiting? All the stuff of rock romanticism, the James Dean/Loner/You-and-me-against-a-f---ed-up-world ethic that's responsible for the sappy excesses that Rolling Stone prints when somebody like Keith Moon dies. Instead of rock as an art form, Springsteen's music now aims for rock as a lifestyle — with the ultimate result new songs like "Point Blank," real crapola that sounds like it belongs in West Side Story.

Sure, I like Darkness on the Edge of Town — but now I can see it's probably for all the wrong reasons. I like the album because it's so damned depressing, mini-stories about losers who really won't win in the end. I don't fall for all the romantic implications simply because I can't see any happy ending in the tunes; most "true" sappy romanticism involves one sort of happy ending or another. I like most, probably, the album's overwhelming air of bleakness.

But, my God, everything's so self-consciously calculated in Springsteen's act these days that there simply isn't any room for spontaneity left. And spontaneity, not "meet me in the fields out behind the dynamo" is what REAL rock 'n' roll is all about. When I hear "Prove It All Night" I don't think wow, what great rock 'n' roll, I think, wow, that reminds me of great rock 'n' roll — and there's the major difference. There's an unspoken element of manipulation involved, by Springsteen, by his bellowing voice, and by the songs he synthesizes and eventually "creates" as his own.

There's no variety anymore; the happiness of "Rosalita," the unbridled innocence of "Sandy" or even "Kitty's Back in Town" is now replaced by a blaring trumpet on "Meeting Across the River" and a contrived "Promised Land" stance. Jeez, I wouldn't have been surprised at all if Springsteen broke into "Down in the Boondocks" Friday night. That's certainly where he's headed, lyrically if not literally.

But sure — he DOES put on a great live show, and yeah, I really do enjoy watching him play wacko-frenzied lead guitar, and sure, he really is to be commended for putting on such a long show, and so on. I really can't justifiably say a word against Springsteen's obvious concern and care for his audiences; plain and simple, he's a real nice guy who probably wouldn't hurt anybody for the world. The manipulation I'm talking about isn't purposeful, but it's happening anyway. Springsteen is exploiting rock's romanticism, using it instead of rightfully letting it use him — and there's the truth to that — and, to make things even more problematic, the audiences are responding to it wildly. Who knows what's next — a remake of "I Got You, Babe" with Patti Smith or Ronnie Spector? God, I don't know what would be worse.

So don't get me wrong, I enjoyed Springsteen's concert — especially his version of "Fire," his guitar intro to "Prove It All Night" and his version of "Rosalita" — but I'm not sure that means anything at all. When he's not singing "Summer's here and the time is right for racin' in the street," he's singing the same rock raves I saw him sing in Ann Arbor three years ago. And here, two years ago. And this summer at Masonic. And probably the same tunes he'll sing NEXT time I see him — which I will, believe me, 'cause I know Springsteen's worth it, one way or another.

Springsteen isn't the Boss, though he'd like to be. Maybe he's "the Boss," but those quotation marks change the term's meaning considerably — to a contrived image, a turning-away from what's real to what's ideal, by nature defying what is one of the canon's of classic rock 'n' roll. And yes, I know, there's a good deal of my own rock romanticism involved in a statement like that, but I'm willing to take my chances.

If I were Springsteen, I'd stop doing what everybody wanted me to do and just do whatever I pleased. No more oldies, no more James Dean crap — jeez, if he had any brains he'd kiss it all goodbye and record Asbury Park Machine Music. Forget the image, Bruce, forget the expectations and get back on the right track. Springsteen still hasn't recorded his own Astral Weeks, and if songs like "Point Blank" and "The Ties That Bind" are any indication of what's coming up, Van Morrison STILL isn't gonna have any real-life contenders. Sorry, Bruce, but that's the truth.

DeJohnette follows new Directions

By DAVE DIMARTINO
State News Reviewer
Lester Bowie with Jack DeJohnette?

Sure, maybe in the '60s when the A.A.C.M. was starting up in Chicago; but now, a decade-and-a-half later, the pairing seems quite curious. With Bowie's inclusion in the ECM stable, and an Art Ensemble of Chicago disc on the same label, there's an interbreeding of music forms going on that's not only fascinating, but entirely workable.

All this was demonstrated this weekend by Jack DeJohnette's Directions, brought here by Showcase Jazz for two sets of concerts that showed Bowie's inclusion in the group was no mismatch. Featuring drummer DeJohnette, guitarist John Abercrombie, bassist Eddie Gomez and Bowie on trumpet, Directions plays an interesting blend of styles — freeform, structured and even a little bop (Bowie did a quickie "Autumn Leaves," no kidding).

It's no fun assigning stereotypes to music, but it's probably safe to say that Bowie and bassist Gomez are coming from totally different jazz scenes — Bowie from the relatively unrestrained Art Ensemble, Gomez from a stint somewhat more "disciplined" with both Bill Evans and Jeremy Steig. Drummer DeJohnette, however, is the common link, pulling everything together into a cohesive sound that's a Direction in itself.

A friend commented Saturday night that it was the first DeJohnette/Abercrombie show he'd seen that hadn't put him to sleep, and he's got a good point: Bowie's presence has livened up the music considerably. Actually, the trio of DeJohnette/Abercrombie/Gomez is such a tight, well-practiced one that their music at times seems as effortless as it is enjoyable. The end result of watching such a tightly-knit group in action is either complete fascination or else boredom from the sheer flawlessness of the performances involved. Bowie's presence, on the other hand, lends to the music an element of unpredictability that makes audience inattentiveness a near-impossibility.

DeJohnette himself was superb Saturday night, inventive as ever on drums and always willing to take a few chances. He and Gomez work well together, of course, and it was interesting watching them both make room for Bowie. Occasionally DeJohnette used an electric melodia, and the additional voice was quite welcome. It's funny — DeJohnette seems much more concerned with melody than most drummers, and it really shows in his playing approach. I can't think of another drummer with his melodic gift; his piano solo, a 15-minute interlude, wasn't exactly complex, yet it had a bare-bones melody that was as elegant and nonpretentious as anything else played that night. Gomez was impeccable on bass — but then, he usually is.

Sometimes, though he seemed at a loss with Bowie, as he's probably used to playing with a partner with a more consistent playing approach. Gomez' few solos were uniformly excellent and my only quibble with his performance is the fact that he simply wasn't playing more. During several of Bowie's avant gardisms he just sat back and watched, apparently preferring being a spectator to sticking his nose in unfamiliar territory.

And, strangely, it was John Abercrombie who stayed in the background most of the night. Generally, he spent most of his time comping behind Bowie, soloing a regrettable few times. His tone sounded strangely close to that of an electric piano at times, especially during his comping. Abercrombie has an interesting quality in his playing: though he plays many notes, his inflection and rhythmic approach combine to make his style seem so low-key it seems as if he's underplaying. Which, of course, he isn't.

In all, Directions seems a tight quartet that, if it manages to stay together long enough, might develop into something extraordinary. Sometimes things weren't quite together Saturday night, certainly — the extended "free" improvisation seemed a little directionless at times — but the inherent humor in Bowie's music merges superbly with DeJohnette's own approach and provides a freshness that more "cerebral" trend clinical jazz foolishly disregards. A nice concert, certainly. What the future will bring for DeJohnette's new group will indeed be interesting.

Ashkenazy concert superb

By DORIS TISHKOFF
State News Reviewer

Although the English Chamber Orchestra would seem from its title to be as British as tea and crumpets, its performance in the MSU Auditorium Thursday evening had a distinctly international flavor. Vladimir Ashkenazy, conductor and piano soloist, Russian born and trained, now resides in Iceland, and Jose-Luis Garcia, concertmaster and violin soloist, is Spanish.

As combination soloist and conductor in Mozart's Piano Concerto No. 17 in G, Ashkenazy displayed the meticulous attention to musical detail, the crispness and clarity that characterized both his solo performance and his conducting throughout the evening. The concerto, one of Mozart's brightest and sunniest, is remarkable for the unadorned, almost childishly simple melody that underlies the work. Unassisted by massive choral combinations of harmonies to stun the listener, the pianist assumed the difficult task of breathing musicality into the bare, exposed lines of this work. This Ashkenazy did with sensitivity and dedication to the poetic qualities of the music which, especially in the Adagio and even the cadenza, emphasized all the nuances, the carefully placed taunting pauses, and the fluent runs, with the subtlety of a still small voice.

Mozart's Violin Concerto No. 5 in A was also delineated with the same great care for its musical intent. Garcia's solo violin passages, which dominate this concerto to the point that the orchestra became less a partner than an accompanist, always had a beautiful, natural and easy singing tone. The audience was constantly aware of dynamic contrasts and an expressive quality that gave the music just the proper degree of emotion, highlighting its lyrical beauty, and evoking from a single bridge such exquisite harmonies in the double stops as to create new admiration for the violin as a multi-voiced instrument.

The opening Stravinsky, Concerto in D for String Orchestra an early work which does not startle the listener with the unusual tonalities and intensity of his later output, was controlled and meticulous almost to the point of understatement. The orchestra brought out the surprises and contrasts in the work, moving from the tentativeness of repeated staccatos, through syncopation to smooth, almost waltz-like passages, as Ashkenazy demonstrated his respect for detail and precision, and ensemble.

However, audience involvement seemed to be at its highest during Benjamin Britten's Variations on a Theme of Frank Bridge. This extraordinary work is certainly one of the most original tours de force in terms of the amazing freshness of the 10 different ways in which Britten plays upon the most basic of three note themes, first stated by the cello with each variation completely new and surprising. Under Ashkenazy's most inspired conducting of the evening, the orchestra captured the essential mood of each segment. In one, violins and cellos teased one another in madcap playful exchange, while the two basses, outstanding throughout the evening, added their deepest tones to the jesting. Others went from catchy syncopation to long sustained lyricism, to eerie Halloween-like mood, to the deep sensuality of Britten's deliberate exploitation of traditional harmony.

Composer, orchestra, conductor, and soloists all shared the heartfelt applause that ended this totally satisfactory musical evening.

Poor Rick Venturi

Evanston, Ill. — In Rick Venturi's first year as coach of Northwestern, his team went without victory. When Ara coached the Wildcats, it took him two years to get a team that went without a win.

"I guess you're one year ahead of Parseghian," a reporter joked to Venturi after MSU had destroyed Northwestern 52-3 Saturday.

"I guess at this point, that's a dubious distinction," Venturi replied. "But Ara went on to accomplish great things with Northwestern football, and I hope to do the same thing. We will establish a winning program at Northwestern."

The 32-year-old coach's job is not an enviable one. Amid cries that the school should withdraw from the Big Ten conference, and confronted with apathy from the fans from the greater Chicago area, Venturi is trying to build a winner at Northwestern. And, he has to make the Wildcats even respectable.

Northwestern football is in trouble, but if it is going to be revived, Venturi is the person to do it. He played at Northwestern in the mid 1960s, when the Wildcats were a respectable football team and not a patsy that everyone could look forward to playing.

He knows that Northwestern football has been successful; he knows "things go in cycles" and that the university can once again have a successful football program.

The drive and enthusiasm this man has is incredible, but he was a bit subdued, maybe even relieved, after Saturday's season finale. "You obviously get frustrated . . . God, you've got to get frustrated," Venturi said. "But I'm not discouraged at all."

"I'm very proud to be the football coach at Northwestern, because there are no kids that give a better all-out effort than ours do. You'll never see a Northwestern team give up."

Effort is fine, but Venturi admits it will take more than just desire and intensity on the part of the players to rebuild the program.

It will take talent.

Venturi is likable and impressive, but the fact still remains his team finished the year 0-10-1. Still, you have to believe this man can do the job . . . if indeed anyone can.

To say Venturi is looking forward to next season, would qualify as the biggest understatement of the year. A good portion of his post game press conference Saturday dealt with the type of athletes he will be recruiting next year. And after the game, a group of mammoth size recruits, most of them clad in their high school varsity jackets, made their way through Dyche Stadium football offices on a tour.

So recruiting has already begun, and the current season has just ended. See what I mean by Venturi's drive?

The two major obstacles that Northwestern has in trying to become respectable are admission restrictions and paltry attendances.

The attendance restrictions really make Venturi's job of recruiting difficult. He not only has to find talented athletes, but he has to find smart talented athletes.

Before the season began, Venturi went on his "Expect the Unexpected" campaign, hoping to bolster attendance. Despite the fact that students get in free, the attendance Saturday was 14,157 — and a good portion of those were MSU rooters. It is quite obvious — although sad — that it is going to take wins to put people in desolate Dyche Stadium.

So you see, Venturi really has enough problems as it is, without having to worry about people crying for Northwestern to leave the league.

Still, though, the cries will persist. Let's hope the athletic officials at Northwestern ignore the cries, and keep trying to build the program.

Like Northwestern athletic director John Pont said a year ago, "Northwestern is good for the Big Ten, and the Big Ten is good for Northwestern."

Spartans bomb Northwestern

By JOE CENTERS

State News Sports Writer

Evanston, Ill. — It doesn't seem like much of an accomplishment to beat Northwestern. But MSU's 52-3 romp over the Wildcats Saturday, combined with Michigan's 24-6 victory over Purdue, leaves the Spartans in a position they have wanted to be in for a long time — on top of the Big Ten.

The Spartans are tied with U-M and Ohio State for first place, and next week one of those teams will fall by the wayside when the two hook up in their annual battle, which will take place in Columbus.

MSU was the heavy favorite going into Saturday's game, but the Spartans had a rough time getting started before the sparse crowd of 14,157 at windy Dyche Stadium.

"The hardest part about it was that we were supposed to do so well," said offensive tackle Jim Hinesly. "But the pressure was on us to score a lot of points and hold them to nothing. I think we got something accomplished today because the young guys got to play. They're the ones that have to play next year."

As it worked out, the Spartans have had the easiest schedule of the four teams — MSU, U-M, Ohio State and Purdue — fighting it out for the Big Ten title. And as far as Hinesly is concerned, that's just fine.

"I pretty much like having the easier teams at the end of the season because you are so beat up by that time," the 6-foot-2, 254-pound senior said. "Sometimes you have to piece yourself back together just to play."

The Spartans scored the first time they had the ball Saturday on a one-yard pass from Eddie Smith to Kirk Gibson, who later in the game became the Big Ten's all-time leader in pass receiving yardage.

The Wildcats scored their only points of the game on a 36-yard field goal by Sam Poulos to make the score 7-3. But they were completely outclassed by MSU and never got any drive going after that.

"I think they played hard through the whole game," said Spartan coach Darryl Rogers, who gave a lot of credit to Northwestern's first year coach Rick Venturi. "I don't think they ever folded up."

MSU added three more scores in the first half, including short touchdown runs by Bruce Reeves and Andy Schramm. Gibson also fell on a Reeves fumble in the endzone for a touchdown.

Smith, who is about the only person that had the potential to create some excitement in this game, had problems with a gusting wind and didn't have one of his better days, going 12 of 24 for 180 of MSU's 601 total yards.

"Yes, it did," Smith said when asked if the wind bothered him. "More mentally than anything else. Just the thought of it bothered me. I shouldn't have even thought of it. Really, it wasn't that bad."

The second half gave Rogers and his staff a chance to use several players. Tailback Steve Smith, who rushed for 109 yards and added 86 more on four punt returns and a kickoff return, scored on MSU's first offensive play of the second half on a 45-yard run, but it was called back because of a penalty.

After that, though, everything counted as Leroy McGee scored on a nine-yard run, Morten Andersen kicked a 42-yard field goal, Steve Smith got a second chance as he scored from 12 yards out and Schramm wrapped up the scoring on another one-yarder.

The real excitement of the game came when freshman Derrick Hughes got to run the ball. Hughes, who generates excitement every time he touches the ball, gained 106 yards in the seven times he ran in the second half.

"Standing on the sidelines watching everyone else play, you pick up a lot of little things," said Hughes, who is one of four Spartan tailbacks who has seen considerable action this season. "It makes it a lot easier for me when I get in there because I know what's going down."

Hughes has been making it a habit to break at least one big run per game, and he didn't disappoint any of the Spartan fans who were at the game. On his third run, he took a pitch-out and galloped 46 yards before being dragged down on the one-yard line. He came close to scoring on the last play of the game, but he was pulled down on the four yard line after picking up 14 yards.

The Spartans missed many chances to put more points on the board, but no one seemed to mind because MSU accomplished what it set out to do. Now, the Spartans have a say in their final destiny. A win over Iowa at Spartan Stadium next Saturday assures MSU of at least a share of the Big Ten title. Only a tie between U-M and Ohio State would give the Spartans the crown outright.

Swimmers trounce Western Michigan

By JEFF MINAHAN

The season began on a happy note for the MSU women's swimming team last Thursday night as they beat Western Michigan University convincingly, 97-33.

The meet, which was held at the men's 1M pool, was dominated by the Spartans from the start. MSU took 11 first places out of 13 swimming events and were never seriously threatened.

Coach Jennifer Parks said she was still sizing up her team in this meet, and placed many of her swimmers in their "off" events.

"I switched many swimmers out of their events to get a better meet with Western," she said. "I wanted to experiment and try different people in different events. Some worked, some didn't."

Kathy Kolon turned in a strong performance, taking three first places to pace the Spartan swimmers.

Kolon placed first in the 500 yard freestyle, beating out her sister Carol who swims for WMU, then won the 50-yard backstroke and the 100-yard backstroke.

The Spartans also had help from Vicki LeFevre, who took firsts in the 100-yard butterfly and the 200 yard individual medley, and also swam on the winning team in the 400 yard freestyle relay with Lorie Bird, Colleen O'Malia and Sandy Sarhatt.

For $75000 Tony bought a fantastic stereo. For $2500 more he could have gotten it back.

Tony's stereo rocked lots of midnight parties, created several romantic evenings and debuted too many musical sounds to list. It was the pride and joy of the whole dorm floor. But the last before-game celebration never happened because something else did. Theft.

$25.00 won't prevent theft, or burglary, vandalism, fire, smoke damage, explosion and riot; it'll just ease the pain when it does happen and buy back what was ripped off or destroyed.

Trust The Cooper Group to protect special possessions; it's what we've been doing for seven years. With $25.00, buy $1500 coverage ($25.00 deductible) on your personal property inside the dorm room, apartment or fraternity.

For full coverage of cameras and calculators worth more than $100 as well as stereo components valued at more than $200, simply list make, model and serial number on a separate sheet of paper and enclose with your application. The total of all such equipment can not exceed 50% of the policy's face amount. Additional units of $500 can be added for $6.50 up to a total coverage amount of $5000. Your policy is effective 24 hours after postmark and if you're not satisfied, return it, for a 100% refund.

Abbott Road took on a different appearance Saturday. Over 2,200 people participated in the East Lansing State Bank 10,000-meter race.

Lindsay wins race.

By CHERYL FISH
State News Sports Writer

Despite the chilling 35 degree weather, 2,200 men, women and children filled Abbott Road to run in the second annual East Lansing State Bank 10,000-meter race on Saturday.

Herb Lindsay, former MSU track standout, won the six mile race for the second year in a row. His winning time was 29:37, and former teammate Stan Mavis was right behind him at 29:42.

The race's main attraction, Olympic gold and silver marathon winner Frank Shorter, finished third with a time of 29:43. He was followed by Steve Flannagan, 29:52, and former AAU six mile champion Gordon Minty, with a time of 29:57.

Lindsay, who said the weather was perfect for running, saw this race as training for the National AAU race coming up in Seattle.

"I felt real good and went out to win," Lindsay said. "I was surprised that no one caught up with me. I just held my pace."

He also said that he has a long-range goal similar to most runners, that is to run in the Olympics some time in the future. "But there's a lot of races between here and there," Lindsay said. Shorter did not run in last year's race due to an injury. He said he was glad to be a participant again. "It was good for me," Shorter said after the race. "It's been a long time since I could run so hard."

Shorter was also pleased with the continuing growth of interest and the increasing level of participation in races of this sort. His store, Frank Shorter Sports, 217 Ann St., is doing good business as a result.

Stu Bartlett, assistant vice-president of the East Lansing State Bank, said that participation in the race had almost doubled from last year's 1,250 runners. There were also more children and people over 50 taking part.

Every runner received a certificate which showed their participation in the race.

Swimmers win opener

Other winners for MSU were freshman Becky Stanley in the 50-yard breaststroke, Lorie Bird, another freshman, in the 50-yard freestyle, Sandy Sarhant in the 200-yard freestyle, and Mary Ellen Mahoney in the 100-yard breaststroke. Mahoney is also a freshman.

WMU did not enter any divers in either the one-meter or three-meter diving competition. As a result, the four MSU divers staged an exhibition in those events.

In the one-meter, Jeannie Mickle came out on top, then finished second to Patty McDonnell in the three-meter.

Icers swept again

By JERRY BRAUDE
State News Sports Writer
SOUTH BEND, Ind. — MSU hockey coach Amo Bessone hoped last Saturday night's 5-4 Spartan victory at Michigan Tech would be the season's turning point, but the win ended up being just a temporary pause enroute to the Spartans digging themselves deeper into the Western Collegiate Hockey Association cellar.

MSU returned to its losing ways this weekend, bowing at Notre Dame 9-1 and 5-4 Saturday night, to give the Irish their first sweep of the season. The Spartans have fallen to 1-7 in the league and 3-7 overall.

In Friday night's 9-1 Spartan nightmare, MSU ran into the lingering problem of allowing goals early in the period. Notre Dame scored 23 seconds into the first period and 22 seconds into the second period.

The Spartans did even the score at 1-1 on Darryl Dipace's second goal of the season at the 8:28 mark of the first period, and for the opening 10 minutes of the game, MSU was picking apart gaping holes in the Irish defense.

But the WCHA's leading goaltender, freshman Dave Laurion, kept the Spartans from pulling away early with some outstanding goaltending. Laurion's best save came before Dipace's tally. Russ Welch had a clean breakaway, but all he came away with was a look of disbelief after his shot was picked out of the air by Laurion just before it was about to go into the net. After Notre Dame skated to a 3-1 lead to close a sloppy first period, Laurion also came up with some nice key saves early in the second period to keep the Spartans from getting back into the game.

Once Laurion kept his team alive after the opening 10 minutes of the contest, the Irish took target practice on MSU goalie Mark Mazzoleni for the rest of the way. Greg Meredith led the Notre Dame rout with four goals.

"The game was the worst exhibition we gave all year," Bessone said. "It was one of those nights where nothing went right. Everything that could possibly go wrong — did. We'll do better tomorrow night." He paused. "I hope."

Taking Bessone's advice of more hitting and forechecking, the Spartans did play better the following evening. The big difference from Friday night's game was the Spartans hitting to keep the Irish off balance. The defense also protected Saturday's MSU goalie Doug Belland better than when Mazzoleni was guarding the nets.

MSU jumped out to an early 2-0 lead on Craig Lakian's first goal of the season and Joe Omiccioli's sixth. But Meredith ended the first period's scoring and Ted Weltzin tied it at the 5:14 mark of the second period.

The Spartans, though, went into the locker room with a two-period 3-2 lead when Mitch Horsch's drive from the right point escaped through Laurion's legs.

Notre Dame then controlled the play in the final period. The Irish scored twice by coming from behind the Spartan net and tucking it by Belland to grab a 4-3 lead.

It looked like the game was going into overtime when Aaron Rucks jammed the puck in on the power play with 3:23 remaining.

But 47 seconds later, the Irish came back to win the game on a fluke goal. MSU defenseman Jeff Barr, who played well all night, picked up a loose puck in front of the net, but he didn't have his stick. After he tried to kick it, and some players took swings at the puck, Notre Dame's Jeff Logan picked up the loose puck, moved to his right and blew it by Belland.

"Notre Dame was firing at us in the third period, and we couldn't get the puck out of our zone. Our biggest weakness right now is that we just don't have the puck handlers to get it out of our own end."

Bessone has been hoping his team can stay alive until the academically ineligible players of Leo Lynett, Dan Sutton and Paul Gottwald return in January. But if the Spartans continue to lose, they'll be out of playoff contention by the time these players come back.

Spartans win invitational

By DAVE JANSSEN

The MSU wrestling team opened its season this past weekend by winning its own tournament, the Michigan State Invitational, for the second straight year.

MSU captured the team championship with 66½ points. Northern Michigan University finished second with 48¼ points while Indiana State took third with 35.

The win did not come easily for the Spartans, however, who trailed NMU after Friday night's first round of matches. It was not until the completion of second round action that it became clear that MSU was in control of the second annual tourney.

MSU sent nearly all of its wrestlers into the championship matches.

Jeff Thomas, at 126 pounds, was the lone Spartan wrestler to capture a second MSU Invitational crown. First-time winners for MSU were 177-pounder Jim Ellis; transfer Charlie Schoen, 190 pounds; and heavyweight Shawn Whitcomb.

The Spartans also saw three of their wrestlers take second-place finishes in the tournament. Harrell Milhouse, at 118 pounds; Fred Worthem, a 150-pound performer; and 167-pounder Steve Foley all reached the finals of their weight class before going down to defeat.

We lost some heartbreakers but we also had a lot of gratifying things," MSU coach Grady Penninger said.

"We had four champions with seven wrestlers reaching the finals. I guess you can't complain when you win."

Penninger said that he thought the tournament would prove to be a real help to the team in preparation for its upcoming matches. Heavyweight Whitcomb agreed.

"Our first match is with Michigan and we want to be ready for that. This tournament helps show us where we're at compared with some other teams," he said.

Ellis, a veteran MSU wrestler, noted, "It's a good icebreaker. The competition is good but probably not as stiff as what we'll see the rest of the season." Ellis added that for him the tournament helped in getting over the nervousness of the season's first match and also gave an indication of what he could work on before the start of the regular season.

One particularly bright spot in the tournament for MSU was the performance of Shawn Whitcomb, who made his first mat appearance since the 1976-77 season after sitting out last year with an injury.

"Injuries have made Whitcomb an unknown factor since high school but it looks like things are finally going to work out with him," Penninger said.

MSU will spend this week preparing for its Big Ten opener against U-M here Nov. 27.

HRI class hosts feast

By JENNIFER DIXON
State News Staff Writer

The Friends of Wine Club came dressed up for a $20-a-piece dinner planned and put on by a Hotel, Restaurant and Institutional Management class, Thursday night at Kellogg Center.

Every Thursday six of HRI 435's 32 seniors plan and put on a dinner in the Kellogg Center cafeteria.

The planners requisition the proper china from Kellogg and write job descriptions and the menu. Everything is done beforehand so the night of the dinner they simply have to supervise the workers.

Two supervise the reception, two the kitchen and two the dinner.

Thursday's dinner was "our swan song for the HRI class this term," Craig Allen, a senior HRI major, said.

Cheese and crab meat fondue, asparagus tip crepes and quiche cups were nibbled before the dinner in the Big Ten Room. The Friends of Wine chatted while sipping champagne.

"It was the first time an outside group has been invited," Don Bell, HRI instructor, said.

Two hostesses whisked the guests downstairs in groups of six just when the hors d'oeuvres supply started to dwindle and the word from the kitchen was go.

The purpose of the dinner is to demonstrate how to start a restaurant, Mike Hryciuk, a member of the management team, said.

"It's the best learning experience because we're actually doing it," senior Dian Boshears said.

Downstairs, eight waiters were lined up against a railing in black pants and tuxedo vests, ruffled white shirts and a bow tie, a white towel draped over their left forearm.

In the kitchen, rows of uncooked identical quails and strip steaks waited on trays.

The waiters served the first course and poured the first bottle of wine.

A very expensive brand, someone said.

The guests sat on one side of the partition laughing at candle lit tables. On the other side the waiters talked about finding trays and the opportune time for clearing the tables.

"The veal's coming out at 7:30," a messenger from the kitchen relayed.

Like a football team huddled around the quarterback, the waiters gathered for the scoop on the next course. They then dispersed and did their assigned job — clearing tables around and be quiet, talked on in a monotone.

"Great, great, looks real good, excellent, excellent," he said, checking out his "employees."

Out front the manager told the waiters in a whisper to check the water when they cleared the tables. Waiters returning with trays of dirty dishes discussed what members of "Les Amis du Vin" were talking about.

With their manager they talked about the proper position for steak knives and serving the next wine.

They were testing most of the skills they had learned in their two-year HRI program, Allen said.

It is hectic, putting on these dinners, they said, but fun.

Citizens sought for committees

The East Lansing Planning Commission is seeking citizens to help them in the revision of the city's Comprehensive Plan.

Persons are needed to serve on the Commercial Committee, the Public Facilities Committee and the Environmental Committee.

The revised Comprehensive Plan will replace the existing plan which was developed in 1967, and was intended to project the city's growth through 1980. The new plan proposes to present policies and programs to guide future actions and allocation of community resources.

The committees are being formed to assist the East

Lansing Planning Commission in identifying city objectives and examining functional elements of the new city plan. They will work with outlines prepared by the commission.

Each committee will be composed of nine to 11 members. Representatives of the Planning Commission, other city commissioners and citizens will be on the committees.

Members will be appointed by the Planning Commission Dec. 13 and a general orientation meeting will be held.
