Bath opposes dredging

By MARCIA BRADFORD
State News Staff Writer

A suit to prevent the Ingham County Public Works Board from proceeding with the Lake Lansing Restoration Project was filed Tuesday by the Bath Township board.

The suit, filed in Clinton County Circuit Court, charges that Ingham County and the county board of public works never received permission to sink wells or build spoil sites in Bath Township.

June Burnett, Bath Township Clerk, said Bath board members reviewed tapes of a December 1976 meeting and determined they had not given Ingham County permission to use the land.

She said the board at that time requested a clarification of the type of activity involved and asked what regulations might be imposed.

Larry Salstrom, attorney for the board of public works, said Ingham County and the Board of Public Works believe they received permission in 1976.

He said Ingham County sent an engineer two and one-half years ago from the consulting firm for the lake project to discuss the project and explain development of spoil sites and their uses.

"It was our understanding at the time that we had permission and we have acted on that," Salstrom said.

"The whole point of sending an engineer up there was to answer questions and avoid the dispute we are now having."

The restoration project is designed to improve Lake Lansing, which is located in Ingham County. The project involves dredging the lake to a depth of about 12 feet. The materials from the dredging process are to be placed on spoil sites in Clinton County.

In addition, wells are to be dug in Clinton

County to maintain the level of the lake while it is being dredged.

Salstrom said much of the dispute centers around a parcel of land in Bath Township owned by Harry Harter, 8360 Coleman Road.

Harter signed a release in 1977 allowing Ingham County to use his property, but his wife Cherry, a joint owner of the property never signed the release, Salstrom said.

The Harters are saying Ingham County does not have the right to use their land because the release was not signed by both, he said.

Ingham County and the board of public works have moved to condemn the land for public use and the Harters are challenging the right to condemn, Salstrom said.

Lance Fertig, attorney for the Harters, said Bath Township is basing the move on Public Act 185 which stipulates that a county must have permission by resolution or contract to use land in another county.

Richard Hawks, Clinton County Commissioner, said the Ingham County Board of Public Works is interpreting three motions made at a Bath Township meeting on Dec. 26, 1976 as permission to use land in Bath Township.

"The situation will come to a head on May 24, when a judge will decide if Ingham County needs permission to condemn Harry Harter's property," he said.

East Complex annex faces political battle

By BRUCE BABIARZ
State News Staff Writer

EDITOR'S NOTE: The following is the second of a four-part series on three separate petition drives that could affect East Lansing and its relationship to MSU students.

A petition drive to annex parts of East Complex from Meridian Township to East Lansing faces a legal and political battle before it can reach a spot on the city ballot.

Parts of Akers, Hubbard, Holmes, McDowell and Owen residence halls would be annexed from Meridian Township to East Lansing if Ingham County Commissioner Mark Grebner's petition drive is successful.

But township officials said they will fight the proposal, which would take away about 10 percent of the township's population and $120,000 in state and federal monies.

"All I can say without revealing our battle plan is that we will fight it any way we can," Township Superintendent Richard Conti said.

He said he would consider taking the issue to court, but the final decision is left to the Township Board of Trustees.

Grebner said the main reason for annexing East Complex to East Lansing is to eliminate the "headaches" at voter registration time.

Walking across the hall in some of the complex residence halls puts students across voting boundary lines, he added.

Grebner needs signatures from 20 percent of the registered voters in the affected area for a referendum to be placed on the ballot.

As of Tuesday, the petition drive had netted just over 300 of the required 440 valid signatures needed, Grebner said.

About 700 signatures are being sought to ensure that the petitions are not invalidated, he said.

East Lansing and Meridian Township officials said if the annexation proposal is successful, it could put a damper on the "good working relationship" between the two

MEDICS ON SCENE IN 'NORMAL' TIME

Rescue info garbled by 911

By THE STATE NEWS

A 911 emergency telephone operator gave the incorrect location to an East Lansing rescue team responding to a sports accident that left an MSU student dead Monday night, The State News has learned.

Despite incorrect instructions from Ingham County 911, rescue units reached the field near East Complex in a "normal" amount of time under the guidance of the MSU Department of Public Safety, East Lansing Fire Chief Phil Patriarche said Tuesday.

Several 911 officials refused to discuss the incident Tuesday and would not release tapes of 911 activities at the time of the accident.

Steven Morgenthaler, 20, of 472 N. Hubbard Hall, collapsed and went into "convulsions" shortly after 8:30 p.m. Monday when he was struck in the chest by a ball thrown by an infielder during an intramural softball game, witnesses said.

He was pronounced dead at Edward W. Sparrow Hospital at 9:59 p.m., said Dr. Richard Schultz, assistant Ingham County medical examiner.

Rescuers arrived at the hospital at 9:42 p.m. with the victim, a spokesperson for the hospital's president said Tuesday.

Preliminary autopsy results Tuesday were inconclusive, Schultz said, but because Morgenthaler was hit in the chest "you can only speculate it stopped his heartbeat."

The DPS released a tape involving the incident to The State News Tuesday. According to the tape:

• At 8:44 p.m., the DPS dispatcher was contacted by Ernest C. Wong, 20, of 359 N. Hubbard Hall, who ran from the field to use the Conrad Hall library telephone.

Wong provided the dispatcher with an accurate location and description of the apparent injuries.

Wong called the DPS dispatcher on its regular 335-2221 number. DPS officials said Wong's call was the first notice they received of the accident.

• The DPS dispatcher immediately dispatched two police units to the East Complex location provided by Wong.

• The DPS dispatcher then called the East Lansing Police Department, which dispatched a fire rescue unit to the scene.

• The DPS dispatcher then called a 911 operator and requested an Ingham County paramedic unit. On four occasions during the conversation, the dispatcher provided the correct location of the accident.

• At about 8:47 p.m. two DPS patrol cars arrived on the scene.

• While en route to the accident the East Lansing rescue squad reported to DPS that it had been directed by 911 to an accident at an area near Wilson Hall on the south part of campus. This was also confirmed by the East Lansing police log.

The East Lansing rescue unit then requested a clarification of the accident location from the DPS dispatcher who directed it to continue to the East Complex location.

• The Ingham County Paramedic Unit arrived about 10 minutes after the initial call to DPS, Patriarche said. The unit had been called because East Lansing's rescue squad is staffed by Emergency Medical Technicians and not trained paramedics.

It is yet unclear whether the incorrect location supplied by 911 to the East Lansing rescue unit was a result of inaccurate information supplied to the emergency

Planned gas station shutdowns may be curtailed amid pressure

By MARK POTTS
AP Business Writer

Plans for a shutdown of service stations from Thursday through Sunday to protest federal price controls seemed about to collapse Tuesday amid fears of a consumer backlash and government retaliation. But many stations may close anyway because they've run out of fuel.

"If they're closed down it will be because they're out of gas," said James V. Cresente, executive director of the Northern Ohio Petroleum Retailers Association. He said the shutdown proposal "kind of petered out by the time it got here. Nobody wanted to go along."

California gas dealers may be the only ones to participate in the protest, although it is doubtful whether the leaders of the movement will get the kind of support they had expected. At one time, at least two-thirds of California's 14,000 dealers were expected to hang "closed" signs Thursday.

Jim Campbell, chairperson of the California Service Station Council and leader of the protest, said he still expects the shutdown to take place in his state.

But a survey by the Sacramento Bee of 290 service stations in Northern California showed that 160 of them would close Saturday and Sunday. Another 62 said they would close for the full four-day period, but half of those said they were closing because of short supplies rather than the planned protest.

Testifying before the state Senate Committee on Energy and Public Utilities Tuesday, Campbell said, "We have the right to petition our government. The regulations we're living under basically are putting us out of business."

The committee passed a measure to make anyone responsible for withholding gas supplies — from producers down to retailers — subject to a maximum of six years in prison and a $1 million fine. The bill's sponsor, Sen. Alfred A. Brown Jr., said he hoped to push it through the Legislature and have it on the governor's desk by Friday.

In other developments in the gasoline crunch Tuesday:

• California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr., signed an order requiring some stations in that state to stay open on weekends regardless of the gasoline shortage.

Brown said police will enforce the order, although he admitted that penalizing violators will be difficult, since it will be hard to tell if a station is closed or simply out of gas.

That was the plight of a station in Covina where six outraged drivers kicked and pummeled two attendants Tuesday, forcing them to seek refuge inside their office. They had no gas left to sell.

• House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill said Congress could not meet President Carter's challenge to come up with a new gasoline rationing plan.

• The nation's large car-rental agencies say their business has not suffered because of the gasoline situation, but many smaller companies, lacking national reservations networks and not doing a lot of airport business, say times are hard.

The proposed "gasless weekend" was designed to protest limits on the mark-up service stations can charge on gasoline.

But Fred Bowman, director of the Evergreen Service Station Association, a Washington State group, described the plan as "untimely, unwarranted, unwise and illegal."

"This would not hurt the Department of Energy or the oil companies and it would hurt the consumer and in turn would hurt the service stations," said Maurice Langelier, executive director of Massachusetts' Bay State Gasoline Retailers Association.

The concept for the "gasless weekend" originated in California last month. Regulations say a dealer's mark-up — which covers rent, salaries and other expenses, and provides the station's profit — can be no more than what it was in May 1973, plus 3 cents. Dealers say that fails to take inflation into account. They want to be able to mark up a gallon of gas 25 percent above the wholesale price. That would raise the cost to the motorist about 3 cents.

Many state groups which had said they would back the shutdown have reversed their positions. "While most service station dealers in Idaho agree government regulations must be changed, they have mixed feelings on how best to achieve this," said Clyde Linzy, executive director of the Idaho Service Station Association. Idaho dealers were among the earliest boosters of the plan.

"If we shut down, we would not have an effect on anyone but our customers," said Irving Turetsky, chairperson of the Florida Service Station Operations.

But the dealers may also have been deterred by rumblings from the Justice Department. A spokesperson for the department said the closings could violate the Sherman Antitrust Act's regulations against conspiracy and restraint of trade and warned that dealers involved in an organized shutdown could face legal action.

Air Force dumping spurs Kelley lawsuit

By United Press International

Attorney General Frank J. Kelley said Tuesday the Air Force is knowingly dumping a suspected cancer-causing compound into the groundwater at Wurtsmith Air Force Base near Oscoda.

Kelley said he will file suit against the Defense Department and the Environmental Protection Agency for failing to stop the potentially dangerous discharge of trichloroethylene.

The Air Force uses TCE as a degreasing agent to clean aircraft. Kelley said TCE is being washed off planes and into the groundwater at the base and has traveled into the water supply of nearby residential areas.

He said the EPA has known of the contamination since 1977. The EPA and state Department of Natural Resources issued a joint order last fall telling the Air Force to clean up the contaminated groundwater, but Kelley said the EPA has not followed through.

"Nothing of consequence has been done since that administrative order and press release were issued," Kelley said. "Six months later, the problem is worse."

Kelley called the EPA "a toothless tiger" and said it is reluctant to strongarm a sister agency.

"Officials at Wurtsmith have not kept the promises they made to clean up the contamination and the EPA has done nothing to make them act," he said.

"The EPA has failed and refused to enforce its own order."

Kelley said there is evidence the contamination "has spread and is a potential hazard to nearby residential areas."

He said base personnel already have been advised to find another water source and said TCE has been found in the wells of nearby neighborhoods.

There are at least 100 homes in the area. TCE has been shown to cause liver cancer in laboratory animals and some persons are known to have died by simply breathing the chemical.

Kelley said he is required by law to give the federal government 60 days notice before going to court against it. He said he will file suit against the EPA and Defense Department in federal district court.

"They're all talk and no action," he said.

"They like to nip-tick state agencies, but don't do anything themselves."

Queen addresses Parliament on Tory pledges

LONDON (AP) — Queen Elizabeth II told Britain's new Parliament Tuesday that Conservative Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher's government planned to cut income taxes, boost defense spending and curb union power.

In the traditional opening address, the queen read a speech prepared by ministers in Thatcher's new Tory government. There were no surprises.

The queen also said the Tories will make "every effort to end the conflict in Rhodesia and to bring about a lasting settlement based on the democratic wishes of the people of that country."

Her statements were interpreted as a signal of the new government's sympathy for Zimbabwe's first black majority government. Other Western governments still are studying the balloting which elected Bishop Abel Muzorewa prime minister.

Details of the new government's plan to cut income taxes, a central theme in Thatcher's campaign, will not be revealed until Chancellor of the Exchequer Sir Geoffrey Howe submits the government budget on June 12.

Brezhnev and Tito to meet, strengthen ties

MOSCOW (AP) — Western diplomats will be watching 72-year-old Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev for clues about his health when he meets this week in Moscow with Yugoslavia's older but apparently healthier President Josip Broz Tito.

The Soviet leader's health is a prime concern among U.S. officials planning the summit between Brezhnev and President Carter next month in Vienna for the signing of the recently completed SALT II treaty.

American sources have said they fear

Brezhnev's lack of stamina could severely limit the scope of the Vienna talks, which U.S. officials hope will span a variety of crucial world problems.

A Yugoslav government spokesperson said the talks would provide the two communist leaders an opportunity for "a comprehensive exchange of opinions" on bilateral relations and international issues.

A Yugoslav spokesperson told reporters in Belgrade last week that Soviet-Yugoslav ties now were developing positively "in all fields."

100 children allegedly slain by Bokassa regime

PARIS (AP) — An official of Amnesty International said Tuesday the alleged killing of about 100 school children in the Central African Empire was part of "a violent repression against a growing popular opposition" to Emperor Bokassa I.

In Rabat, Morocco, Juan Juba, the empire's ambassador to Morocco, said the allegation that his government killed as many as 100 youngsters aged 8 to 14 last month for rock-throwing protests against the wearing of school uniforms was "utterly unbelievable."

Edith Villain, vice president of the French division of Amnesty International, said her organization had sent telegrams to the Bokassa government but had received no response.

The French division of the London-based human rights organization, which won the 1977 Nobel Peace Prize for its work on the plight of political prisoners, issued a statement Monday alleging the schoolchildren were suffocated, stabbed and beaten to death in April.

The Amnesty statement cited "numerous, varied and reliable sources, both African and European." It refused to elaborate.

Investigators suggest possibility of cult death list

WASHINGTON (AP) — Congressional investigators said Tuesday they can not rule out the possibility that a Peoples Temple death squad is stalking the nation's leaders, seeking to carry out the last wishes of the Rev. Jim Jones.

The investigators, reporting to the House Foreign Affairs Committee after a six-month probe into the murder of Rep. Leo J. Ryan in Guyana, said the possibility that cultists had a "death list" marking nearly 40 national leaders and congress members for assassination

"should not be totally discounted."

"I think the people are there," staff investigator George Berdes told the committee. "They may no longer be part of an organized hit squad but I think they are here."

The investigators refused to give details of their evidence. Asked flatly if a death squad exists, Berdes replied: "Because of the delicate nature, the chemistry of the people involved, I don't want to turn the answer to that question into a self-fulfilling prophecy."

Black African mental patient care inadequate

CHICAGO (AP) — Black patients in South African mental facilities receive treatment grossly inferior to that provided whites and are sometimes allowed to die needlessly, a committee of U.S. psychiatrists reported Tuesday.

While some of South Africa's facilities for whites are superior to U.S. institutions, blacks are deprived of such basics as bedsheets and shoes, the psychiatrists said.

"Our investigation convinced us that there is good reason for international concern about black psychiatric patients in South Africa," said the committee, which issued its report at the annual meeting of the American Psychiatric Association.

The committee chairperson, Dr. Alan Stone, APA president-elect and a Harvard professor, said the report had been submitted to the South African Department of Health, which disagreed with almost every aspect of it. He said the department, in fact, impugned the committee's honesty, fairness and objectivity.

The biracial committee of four psychiatrists observed the mental facilities, at the invitation of the South African government, to investigate charges by the United Nations Committee on Apartheid.

Governor to battle crime with 'supercop' force

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Violent crime has become so common in New Orleans that Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards says he wants to create a force of about 50 state "Supercops" to help city police deal with it.

The surprise proposal raised a lot of questions Tuesday but won approval from Mayor Ernest Morial and Police Superintendent James C. Parsons.

Edwards said he was responding to a plea by state legislators from the New Orleans area for assistance in fighting a rising rate of crime which included 10 killings over the past three days in this city of 500,000.

Police department statistics show there were 70 homicides during the first three months of 1979, up from 45 during the same period in 1978. Armed robberies during the period increased from 577 to 1,327. Parsons attributed part of the jump to better reporting.

Start-up costs of the state program were estimated at $600,000. Edwards said units could be trained and ready for assignment by the first of the year.

SALT II changes proposed

WASHINGTON (AP) — One of the foremost critics of SALT II suggested four amendments Tuesday to the proposed treaty and said outright rejection of the pact "would not be the end of the world."

Paul Nitze, a former deputy secretary of defense, said he thought the Soviets might accept at least some of the changes.

But an administration spokesperson, Hodding Carter, said no changes were necessary, and reiterated Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's statements that substantive amendments risked killing the treaty.

Senate votes on amendments to the proposed treaty are likely to be the key battles in the ratification struggle. Nitze was one of the first major critics to propose a specific list of changes.

Nitze's proposals were:

- A stipulation of the right to adopt the "shell game" system under which the United States would dig thousands of dummy holes and move its missiles secretly from one hole to another. The idea would be to protect them from increasingly accurate, multiple-warhead Soviet missiles by giving the Soviets too many targets to cover.

The administration claims the treaty as written would allow a shell game deployment. It says the treaty would only require it to devise a way for the Soviets to check some holes and see that the United States was not deploying more missiles than the treaty allows.

- An amendment to equalize and reduce the number of heavy missiles allowed each side. As the treaty stands, the Soviets would be allowed to keep their 308 "heavy missile launchers" which contain mammoth SS-9 and SS-18 rockets, but the United States would effectively be precluded from developing such heavy missiles.

Administration spokesmen maintain the United States has never wanted such missiles, because it can build smaller, more accurate ones.

- A verification amendment, to make certain that the Soviets are not able to encode vital data from their missile tests.

The administration says it is satisfied that the treaty will prevent the Soviets from encoding data needed for verification and that the United States would be able to detect cheating.

- An amendment to include the Soviets' new Backfire bomber on the list of strategic weapons. Each side is permitted only 2,250 such weapons.

The Carter administration accepted in 1977 the Soviet contention that Backfire was not a long-range strategic weapon.

Mental health care bill submitted

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter, saying 10 to 15 percent of Americans have an emotional problem of some kind, sent Congress legislation Tuesday to revamp mental health care in the United States.

It is estimated to cost $99.1 million the first year.

Rosalynn Carter, who made an unusual joint appearance with her husband in the White House press room to announce the legislation, is expected to be the administration's chief lobbyist.

"We have still a very serious problem for those who are mentally ill or emotionally disabled," Carter said.

Joseph A. Califano Jr., secretary of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, identified the three main aims of the bill:

- improving services for the 1.5 million chronically mentally ill, moving as many of them as possible from large institutions to smaller community facilities;
- granting money to link the mental health programs to the generally health care system. Califano pointed out that 54 percent of those who seek help for mental problems go to general health practitioners; and

- improving services for a group he called the underserved: the poor, minorities and often those in rural areas.

The legislation would set aside $700,000 to encourage states to devise a bill of rights. It also would emphasize preventive measures.

The act would attempt to place more mental health personnel in underserved areas by requiring that those who receive federal aid for training work for a period in areas with a shortage of personnel.

Rosalynn Carter, who has been an advocate for mental health since her husband was governor of Georgia, praised the legislation as "a very important first step."

Federal judges disclosure law halted by judge

NEW ORLEANS (AP) — Federal Judge Robert Collins on Tuesday temporarily blocked a law from going into effect that would have required all federal judges to make detailed financial disclosures.

Collins, ruling on a lawsuit filed in U.S. District Court here by six other Southern judges, issues a temporary restraining order postponing the effective date of the law until its constitutionality can be tested. No hearing date was set.

The Ethics in Government Act, passed by Congress in 1978 and scheduled to go into effect Tuesday, would require federal judges to issue detailed information about their income, gifts, property, liabilities and corporate and business positions.

Although the law also requires congressmembers to make public financial statements, the suit and the restraining order cover only those aspects covering federal judges.

The suit said it is "an unconstitutional encroachment upon the separations of powers in the federal government" for Congress to try to cover judges in the act.

The law requires that the information be filed with an ethics committee and with local clerks of court. The penalty for not complying is a fine up to $5,000.

The suit says the law puts the judges in a dilemma. If they disclose the information, the suit said, they face possible threats of economic and physical harm from disgruntled persons who appeared in their courtrooms.

It said that if the judges refuse to comply, the public will doubt their integrity.

"In this unfortunate period when kidnappings are daily news," the suit says, "the public disclosure of the details of the judges' finances invites disaster."

Defenders of the act say its provisions would give lawyers financial information about judges who preside over their cases and would help find conflicts of interest.

Committee criticizes proposed parking lot

By MARK FELLOWS
State News Staff Writer

The proposed parking structure on Lot 9 should provide at least 200 more spaces than is being proposed, commercial advisory committee members agreed Monday.

The committee, one of eight advisory subcommittees to the Planning Commission for the formation of a new Comprehensive Plan, said the suggested 400 spaces would not be enough to attract developers into the central business district.

A part of Grove Street could be used to make room for additional spaces, committee members said.

The committee preliminary public report indicates that additional parking is needed in the Grove Street area, as well as in the eastern part of the city center, to attract private developers to the CBD and especially to the Citgo and Dooley's blocks on Albert Street.

The committee also discussed the possibility of financing the parking improvements through parking waiver fees, which would be charged to downtown business owners who do not supply the required number of private parking spaces.

Committee member Robert Metzger opposed assessing an annual waiver fee. "Businessmen financed the parking lots we have now — we can't reassess them for another waiver," he said.

Committee members agreed with Metzger's opinion and said the parking system must finance itself.

Metzger also suggested the possibility of an independent parking authority to plan and finance the parking system.

Complaints were voiced by two downtown business persons concerning a proposed CATA Central Bus Transfer station on M.A.C. Avenue, which would close the street to all vehicles but delivery trucks and CATA buses.

Bill Campbell, owner of Campbell's Smoke Shop, 207 M.A.C. Ave., objected that the move would encourage people to loiter in stores on the street.

"People use our stores already as waiting stations for the buses," he said.

Several committee members remarked that the bus transfer point should be looked at in relation to the other improvements the committee will recommend to the East Lansing Planning Commission.

The committee later moved to include Charles Avenue as another possible choice for the location of the transfer point.

The main purpose of the meeting Monday was to prioritize the recommendations of the committee, chairperson Ed Church said.

All projects, such as the parking lots and development of unused lots in the CBD, depend on the construction of a western access route into the downtown area, the committee agreed.

The proposed route would run from the Delta Street intersection with Michigan Avenue across Grand River Avenue and cross Abbott Street into the central business district.

The committee also voted to recommend a study of an eastern access route into the city using Collingwood Avenue and Albert Street, which would require widening Albert to two full lanes, members said.

Over the teeth, past the gums: 'U' students teach diet and dance

By ANNE BERRY

The powerful Tonguato — a group of tongues — swept across the gym floor, dragging Dorothy into a dream world where the Evil Sugar Monster, the Junk Food Junkies and fat Mr. Cholesterol awaited her arrival.

The children at Allen School in Lansing squealed with delight as Dorothy, armed with her toothbrush and floss, battled the Sugar Monster and traveled down Esophagus Road to coat an upset stomach with Pepto Bismol.

The story, a parody of "The Wizard of Oz," has a dual purpose. It not only teaches children the dangers of an improper diet, but also introduces them to dance and dance movement.

Every Friday morning, the MSU Lecture-Demonstration Dance Ensemble travels to elementary schools in the Lansing school district with their tale of Dorothy's adventures down Esophagus Road.

The troupe is comprised of Angela Lowe Gullet, teaching specialist in the dance department, and four MSU students — Kathi Calef, a junior French and communications major, Robin Hansik, a senior physical education major, Gale Palivoda, a junior communications major and Carrie Pflepsen, a sophomore dance major.

Barbara B. Smith, an MSU dance instructor, is the director.

The Lecture-Demonstration Dance Ensemble, a creation of dance department director Dixie Durr, began going into the Lansing public school system five years ago. The purpose of the ensemble is to expose youngsters to movement, help them develop a greater awareness of themselves and of themselves in relation to others and the outer world, Smith explained.

Auditions for the troupe are held each fall. Smith said 20 people usually try out, but only four to six are chosen.

The auditions involve performing a short part of the script from the program to be presented, dancing a short combination and devising an improvisation using dance movement and voice.

During the auditions, Smith and Durr look for someone who has potential in qualities such as confidence, sensitivity, awareness, friendliness and sincerity.

They must have a dynamic personality, Smith said, but not one that would overpower the children they will be working with. A sense of performance and teaching potential is also necessary.

During the fall, the group works on developing its program for the coming year. Winter and spring terms are spent going out to the schools and giving performances with follow-ups in the classrooms, where the members of the ensemble work individually with the children on movement skills.

The ensemble travels to about 20 schools during winter and spring. This year's program was written and choreographed with the help of Gullet. Each program strives to attract the interest of the children, which often involves audience participation.

A bill that would require the blending of alcohol with all motor vehicle fuel sold in Michigan was introduced into the state Senate Monday.

Sen. John C. Hertel, D-Harper Woods, said the measure would reduce the consumption of gasoline in Michigan over the next few years.

Hertel said the bill was an "immediate alternative" to deal with gasoline shortages in the short term.

If passed, the bill would require that all motor vehicle fuel sold in Michigan contain 3 percent alcohol in 1978. The percentage would increase to 5 percent in 1982, 7 percent in 1983 and 10 percent in 1984.

"Whether this tight gasoline supply is real or manipulated, people will have to deal with it," Hertel said.

Hertel said that leaded gasoline, non-leaded gasoline and diesel fuel can all be blended with alcohol without affecting an engine's performance. Some studies have concluded that a mixture of fuel and alcohol burns cleaner than gasoline and can also result in better mileage.

He also pointed out that Chrysler and General Motors would still honor warranties on cars using fuel containing alcohol.

"The bill would allow us to say that we don't need as much oil from the petroleum companies," Hertel said.

However, Hertel said that fuel-alcohol blends would cost several cents more than the price of unblended fuels in order to pay for the expansion of alcohol-producing plants and blending facilities.

Hertel said the bill starts off with only a 3 percent blend of alcohol with fuel because of the lack of supply of large amounts of alcohol.

Requiring Michigan fuel dealers to blend alcohol with gasoline could create new jobs and business in the state, he said.

Enthalol, an alcohol, can be made from plants containing sugar or starch. Husks, stalks, grain and other farm products or by-products could be utilized to manufacture ethanol.

"This would generate more business for farmers in the state," Hertel said.

Menthanol, another kind of alcohol, can be made from sewage, garbage and coal and can also be easily mixed with gasoline, he said.

Currently, there are about eight locations in Michigan where "gasohol" is sold.

House OK's expansion of murder law

By United Press International

The House Judiciary Committee approved legislation Tuesday updating and slightly expanding the coverage of the law dealing with murders committed during robberies, rapes and other crimes.

Under that law, any murder committed in the course of certain felonies is a first-degree murder. The law also makes all participants in the crime equally guilty of the murder.

Legal problems have arisen because the current law refers to rape, while Michigan has replaced its rape statute with one dealing with varying degrees of criminal sexual conduct.

The bill places criminal sexual conduct in the first and third degrees under the felony murder statute.

It also deletes the reference to burglary and replaces it with breaking and entering — a similar but somewhat broader offense.

40 MEMBERS PROTEST ISRAEL'S BIRTHDAY

Arab students demonstrate at 'U'

By JENNIFER DIXON
State News Staff Writer

Members of the organization of Arab students demonstrated in front of the International Center in observation of the establishment of the Israeli state 31 years ago Tuesday.

About 40 students marched from Beaumont Tower to Wells Hall chanting, "down with Zionism, down with Sadat, long live the Palestinian people."

Egypt's President Anwar el-Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin were denounced for signing the Middle East peace treaty and were the subject of several speeches by members of the organization.

The Arabian students "think the history of Palestine has been distorted by the United States government and Zionist propaganda," said Abrahim Mizouni, a graduate student in sociology.

Students in the organization feel the need "to present some facts about Palestine and its history," Mizouni told those gathered while people in the background chanted rhythmically "Zionism is racism, down with Zionism."

Arabian groups across the country are observing this day, he said.

Israel's claim to Palestine by Zionists is contrary to history and "even the Bible itself," Mizouni said.

"The peace treaty represents the capitulation of the Arab-dependent bourgeoisie, represented by Sadat," he said.

Begin was the "Hitler of a Zionist terrorist group" 30 years ago Mizouni said adding the Zionist movement is dependent on colonialization and imperialism.

Sadat contended the peace treaty would bring peace and prosperity to Egypt, but the Mideast is far from peace, said an MSU professor who comes from Egypt.

"But a peace that requires violent measures to contain the masses is fragile and will soon crumble," the professor said, adding the majority of Egyptians did not favor Sadat's signing of the treaties at the beginning of this year.

"A peace dictated by military conquest is never stable," he said, adding peace in the Middle East must be consistent with "all the Arabs" of the area, which borders three continents — Africa, Asia and Europe.

Egypt is suffering from an unbearable inflation rate of 40 percent, a housing shortage, increasing unemployment and an unbelievable disparity between the rich and the poor, aggravated since Egypt "sold out" and signed the peace treaty, the Egyptian said.

"The treaty ushers in the beginnings of Zionist economic penetration and opens the way for the realization of the longstanding dream of Israel as a sub-imperialist power with access to Arab markets, labor and petrodollars," he said.

Sadat works with the imperialist "fat cats," deposits money in foreign banks and is "clamping down" on free expression because the treaty has no popular support, he said.

"Sadat is the sole decision-maker," he added.

Sami Esmail, a teaching assistant in the Department of Electrical Engineering and a former Israeli-political prisoner, said, "As long as people want to go home (to Palestine) there won't be peace."

Mizouni said since Israel occupied the territory in 1948, 3 million Palestinian Arabs have been deprived of their homeland and half of these people live in refugee camps in neighboring Arab countries, dependent on United Nations charity. They are given 15 cents a day, he explained.

The rest live under Zionist occupation as third-class citizens, Mizouni said.

An Iranian student in urban development said the struggle entails "sacrifice, devotion and resistance," to overthrow Sadat.

"Financial and economic domination of imperialists, especially American imperialists, has to be challenged and defeated," the MSU senior said.

"Sadat's days are numbered," he added.

"Long live Palestine, long live Arabian solidarity, death to imperialism," the group chanted in unison.

Winder advises council

By MICHELE McELMURRY
State News Staff Writer

The state of Michigan should review its priorities in the consideration of higher education, Provost Clarence L. Winder said Tuesday.

Winder explained to Academic Council the results of the recent Senate Education Committee hearing concerning policy matters in higher education.

Winder said the committee had invited representatives from MSU to discuss problems facing the University.

One of the main problems facing MSU is underfunding, he said.

MSU is seriously underfunded despite its high level of tuition for a public university, Winder said.

MSU has not received the level of funding characteristic of a four-year university, he added.

Winder explained that some of the problems resulting from underfunding include low faculty and personnel salaries and the inability to keep "key" faculty members at MSU.

"Faculty salaries do not compare favorably with other Big Ten schools," Winder said.

Quality higher education cannot continue unless there is a change in public policy, Winder added.

Academic Council also discussed the proposed revisions in the guidelines for course formats and credits, formulated in 1974.

Samuel Moore II, professor of administration and higher education, moved the council should approve the revised guidelines.

Many council members, after reviewing the revision, voiced objections to the document which the University Committee on Academic Policy has been working on for the past two years.

Some members said the revised document, which defines course format and the instructional requirements assigned to courses, was too rigid.

The council needs a document general enough to allow flexibility, said James McKee, professor of sociology.

After more than an hour of debate, the council decided to return the document to UCAP for reconsideration.

"I don't understand why after five years this institution cannot find a document to use as a guideline for course formats and credits," said Dorothy Lorimer, professor of institutional research.

Debate held for N-power moratorium

"Should Michigan have a nuclear moratorium?"

Representatives from power companies and consumer groups will attempt to answer that question in a panel debate at 7 tonight in Erickson Kiva.

Speaking for the moratorium will be Mary Sinclair, co-chairperson of the Great Lakes Energy Alliance, and Ron Wilson, energy director for PIRGIM.

Speaking against the nuclear moratorium will be Jene Vance, a representative of the Bechtel Power Co., and Larry Drake of Detroit Edison Power Company. Zolton Ferency, MSU professor of criminal justice, will moderate the debate.

The debate, sponsored by PIRGIM, is being held to promote the issues associated with the nuclear moratorium bill recently introduced in the Michigan Legislature.

Dental clinic will cut services if cost-reduction plan is enacted

By JAMES KATES
State News Staff Writer

Services at the Ingham County Dental Clinic will be cut by about 60 percent if a cost-reduction plan submitted to the Ingham Board of Commissioners is enacted.

The plan, approved Tuesday by the Ingham County Board of Health, was formulated in response to a request from the county commission that all department expenditures be trimmed by 10 percent for 1980.

The proposal would eliminate at least four employees in the dental clinic, as well as a general clerk-receptionist. Also eliminated would be a $13,000 health education program for senior citizens.

Total savings under the plan would be in excess of $100,000. Board Chairperson Elinor Holbrook called the decision to recommend cuts in dental care "a painful one," but said maintaining a base amount of clinical dental care will allow for expansion should funding be available in the future.

The biggest cuts under the plan, Holbrook said, would be in preventive areas such as dental care education and fluoridation programs.

Bruce Bragg, county health officer, stressed that the proposal would be adopted into the 1980 budget only if "the worst" were to happen.

"Let's clearly identify this as a contingency proposal," he said. The board voted to send the proposal to the Human Resources Committee of the County Board of Commissioners along with a memo outlining the way in which cost-cutting priorities were determined.

In other action, the board also received Chairperson Holbrook's report on a May 3 task force meeting with MSU officials to discuss a proposed policy requiring proof of immunization against several communicable diseases as a University admission requirement.

Holbrook said the task force would meet again to discuss measures such as pre-entrance screening and health education to help lower incidence of disease without the legal problems brought about by mandatory immunization.

The board also approved a preliminary draft proposal to divide health department activities into seven separate budget units.

Each unit would have several service levels, to be used by the board of commissioners in setting up a zero-based-budgeting structure for 1980.

Under zero-based-budgeting, allocations to programs are made on the basis of merit rather than based on previous budget levels.

The proposal will be reviewed later this month by the Human Services Committee.

Budget forms for minority councils due

Minority councils must turn in applications to Programming Board by 5 p.m. today or they may lose funding next year.

Until winter term, the councils were part of Student Board. They were transferred to Programming Board which is now responsible for their funding beginning January 1980.

The board is now working on next year's budget and needs to know which councils are joining the board and what their budget requests will be.

OPINION

ASMSU's games stifle any activism

The latest chapter of the ASMSU follies surfaced this week with the attempt by Henry Sosa, board representative, to circulate petitions to recall College of Education Rep. Kathy Wright. Her recall is being sought because she has yet to attend a meeting since her election at the beginning of spring term.

And while that is a good reason for a recall, the problems with student government at MSU go far deeper than the non-attendance by one board representative. In fact, Wright ran unopposed in the election, so a recall seems pointless. The net effect of Wright's recall could simply make official what is already apparent — students don't really care about ASMSU anymore.

If more evidence is needed, go back to last week when all of 600 students voted 2-1 against paying their board representatives. The simple truth is that most students didn't care enough to vote and those that did rejected an upgrade in status for their elected representatives.

And to go back just a little bit further, most of us can recall the flock of students who came to the ASMSU Business Office at the beginning of spring term to retrieve their refunds — 956 to be exact. That's 300 more than voted in the compensation referendum.

Student government was an effective and powerful force in the late '60s and early '70s, but somewhere along the line — it didn't just start this year — it lost its guts and idealism. Student government became the mirror of comfortable bureaucrats everywhere. Put bluntly, student government became a means to fatten a resume and the purposes and goals were lost.

While ASMSU may be in its death throes, student activism is not. A freshman, Paul Schwartz along with his Anti-Towing Coalition, proved that. They took an issue of importance, big importance to students, and effectively brought it into the limelight. Schwartz and the coalition did more in two weeks to bring about long-needed change than the endless committee and board meetings did over a period of years.

Schwartz is a student leader in the true sense of the word. There do not appear to be any Schwartzes on the current ASMSU Student Board. But towing is not the only issue of importance to students; in reality, it is a minor one. The coalition has already made a tremendous impact on the towing policy, but now ASMSU decides it's time to discuss it at a board meeting. Once again a day late and a dollar short.

Other important issues facing students are current annexation and de-annexation elections to be held in East Lansing soon. Will ASMSU spend as much time and energy to defeat an ill-guided de-annexation plan as they do worrying about recalling one of its tardy members?

Resolutions, bills and committees do not necessarily make a student government. Action, changes and impact do. The trend of ASMSU is to do a fantastic job of the former and a pitiful job of the latter.

Apply law fairly to all offenders

The Ingham County Prosecutor's Office is apparently using one of the state's felony laws to the letter. A state statute, allowing the maximum sentence to be imposed on persons convicted of two felonies, has been applied, one attorney claims, to the wrong people.

The attorney has charged that the office is deterring suspects from going to trial by reserving the right to impose the habitual criminal act, which can theoretically allow courts to send an offender away for a period longer than the maximum sentence allowed for the crime committed. The office also uses the statute as a plea bargaining tool, by holding the worst possible penalty — a maximum sentence, sometimes life — over an offender's head should the defendant decide to fight his case in court. Apparently, even a strong defense is no assurance against a stiff penalty for crimes not severe enough to warrant the maximum sentence.

The law is not serving the function for which it was intended. States need some sort of deterrent to felonious crimes, but those deterrents should be applied to those persons who could be accurately defined as habitual. Misapplication of the law could easily occur if its interpretation was so open as to allow someone, whose criminal history amounts to one or two prior convictions, to be sent away for the maximum amount of time, regardless of the nature of the most recent offense. That is what is happening in Ingham County, according to a local attorney, who is miffed at having to defend previous offenders, who are looked upon unfavorably in the eyes of the law.

The law hits lower-income people the hardest. Persons who are apt to rely on court-appointed attorneys cannot obtain the legal tools necessary to properly defend themselves when the odds are stacked against them. Also the suspect has a case to prove before even entering the courtroom. In obtaining legal counsel, suspects who have been previously convicted of two felonies at any time in their lives, are viewed as a lost cause by attorneys bound by the statute. There is no incentive for the attorneys to represent persons who are virtually doomed because of their past actions.

Ingham County's application of the habitual criminal statute is too open-ended to be considered merely a deterrent to habitual offenders. Law enforcement officials can easily misapply the law to the disfavor of suspects who are undeserving of heavy jail sentences. If the state's felony law needs teeth, its application should be directed toward those offenders who pose societal threats or are proven to be repeated menaces.

VIEWPOINT: PALESTINE

Consider Albert Einstein's view of Menachem Begin

By SAMIESSMAIL

During this year, the world is celebrating the 100th anniversary of the birth of one of the greatest and most celebrated scientists of this age, Albert Einstein. Einstein's contributions to science are numerous and well-known.

There is another side to Einstein that is less talked about. Einstein was a man of principle, and had the courage to speak out against oppression and injustice. He protested against the blockade of the Soviet Union in 1917. He was an outspoken foe of "McCarthyism" in this country. Sen. Joseph McCarthy called Einstein an "enemy of America." Einstein's name was first, among millions, on a petition to save the lives of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg. He also joined other scholars in a desperate plea for a ban on all warfare.

Einstein also had something to say about Menachem Begin, the present prime minister of Israel. In a letter to the New York Times, published Dec. 4, 1948, Einstein, along with a number of prominent Jewish people, described Begin's Freedom Party: "It is a political party closely akin in its organization, methods, political philosophy and social appeal to the Nazi and Fascist parties. It was formed out of the membership and following of the former Irgun Zvai Leumi, a terrorist right-wing, chauvinist organization in Palestine."

The world today must not be fooled by Begin's talk about peace. Begin in 1948 was talking in a similar tone. To this, Einstein and the others wrote, "The public avowals of Begin's party are no guide whatever to its actual character. Today, they speak of freedom, democracy, and anti-imperialism, whereas until recently they openly preached the doctrine of the Fascist state. It is in its actions that the terrorist party betrays its real character; from its past actions we can judge what it may be expected to do in the future."

A shocking example was their behavior in the Arab village of Deir Yassin. This village, off the main roads and surrounded by Jewish lands, had taken no part in the war, and had even fought off Arab bands who wanted to use the village as their base. On April 9, terrorist bands attacked this peaceful village, which was not a military objective in the fighting, killed most of its inhabitants — 240 men, women, and children — and kept a few of them alive to parade as captives through the streets of Jerusalem." The article goes on, "The terrorists, far from being ashamed of their act, were proud of this massacre, publicized it widely, and invited all the foreign correspondents present in the country to view the heaped corpses and the general havoc at Deir Yassin. The Deir Yassin incident exemplifies the character and actions of the Freedom Party."

Begin defends his criminal act at Deir Yassin saying that there would be no Israel today without Deir Yassin. In the original Hebrew edition of The Revolt, Begin further wrote, "After Deir Yassin, the Zionist army marched through the Arab villages like a knife in butter."

My mother happens to be one of the few survivors of the Deir Yassin massacre. She miraculously escaped. Many of her relatives were brutally murdered. With her own eyes, she recalls how her neighbor, Salhiya Issa, six months pregnant, had her stomach slashed, her fetus taken out, and then kicked by Begin's Irgun terrorists. She also had to see how her grandfather Ismail Attiya was hanged from the balcony porch. Then 30 years later she had to witness the same Begin arrest, torture, and try her son.

Describing more of Begin's philosophy, Einstein and the others wrote: "Within the Jewish community they (Begin's Freedom Party) have preached an admixture of ultranationalism, religious mysticism, and racial superiority. Like other Fascist parties, they have been used to break strikes, and have themselves pressed for the destruction of free trade unions. In their stead, they have proposed corporate unions on the Italian Fascist model."

"During the last years of sporadic anti-British violence, the I.Z.L. and Stern groups inaugurated a reign of terror in the Palestine Jewish Community. Teachers were beaten up for speaking against them, adults were shot for not letting their children join them. By gangster methods, beatings, window smashing, and widespread robberies, the terrorists intimidated the population and exacted a heavy tribute."

The article concluded with a warning to the American people: "In the light of the foregoing considerations, it is imperative that the truth about Mr. Begin and his movement be made known in this country. It is all the more tragic that the top leadership of American Zionism has refused to campaign against Begin's efforts, or even to expose to its own constituents the dangers to Israel from support to Begin."

Einstein knew very well that the creation of a religious state, and the uprooting of the Palestinian people that would have to follow such a creation, would not bring peace to the area and to its people. In his book, Out of my Later Years, Einstein wrote "I should much rather see reasonable agreement with the Arabs on the basis of living together in peace than the creation of a Jewish state."

The media corporations in this country have deliberately attempted to hide the truth from the American people about the true nature of Menachem Begin. The voices of Einstein and other prominent Jews have been suppressed. The world was warned about Begin in 1948. Today Begin, while speaking about peace, is carrying out a war of genocide against helpless Palestinian and Lebanese civilians. Israeli occupation troops continue to plunder the wealth of the land. Thousands of Palestinians have been thrown into prison. One would like to wonder what Einstein would have had to say, were he alive today, about Begin, and his receiving of the Nobel Peace Prize.

American people must demand that their tax dollars be cut off from Begin. The history of persecution of the Jewish people demands that they reject the racist and colonialist doctrines of Begin and Zionists. The sufferings of the Jewish people must not be exploited to oppress and persecute others. Begin and Zionism can only lead the Jewish peoples along the same path that Hitler led the German people.

VIEWPOINT: SINGLE-SEX SWIMMING

Just divide the courtyard

By DALE JAGER

Watching one man swim in the Circle IM lower pool this weekend while seven others lounged around outside soaking up the sun, I was reminded once again of the sheer stupidity involved in combining the issues of single-sex swimming and single-sex sunbathing. These issues are, in fact, unrelated and can be discussed separately. The issue of single-sex swimming goes back a long ways. Three or four years ago I heard complaints about co-rec swimming similar to those expressed by women in the past few weeks. The issue of single-sex sunbathing, however, is new and stems from what can politely be called the unimaginativeness of our University administrators in implementing Title IX provisions. It is to the issue of single-sex sunbathing and a simple solution to the problem that I would like to address my remarks in this letter.

Few letter writers to The State News seem to be aware that until the end of last summer, men could use the inner court at the IM South as a place for private sunbathing. Access to the court could only be obtained from within the men's locker room. But the subsequent construction of a women's locker room at IM South has rendered the inner court unusable by either sex.

The solution, however, is relatively simple. A wall can be built running north and south down the center of the court. The wall need only be as high as the first story. To complete the project, the windows on the north side of the court can be replaced with frosted glass as were the windows on the east and west when the women's locker room was constructed. Anticipating the use of such private sunbathing facilities I would further suggest that the two doors now opening onto the court be replaced by doors on the south side of the court. In this way, one could go directly from the showers to the court and visa versa.

These proposed changes to the inner court at IM South would allow private sunbathing for both sexes every day of the week, which I think would be a great improvement over the situation as it now is. Since one cannot sunbathe and swim at the same time there is no need to tie up one of the IM pools just so each sex has a private place for sunbathing.

I would hope that this proposal would be evaluated before the end of the fiscal year. In this way any untargeted funds that must be spent by the could be allocated toward the project and we would not have to wait until next season for a place in the sun.

This week is our time to be proud

There is not a definition of "Lesbian/Gay Pride Week" which sums up the goals of the Lesbian/Gay Council. This is because it affects people to different extents. The most important function, though, is that which is geared toward gays and toward those people who are uncertain of their sexual orientation.

Probably the most important aspect of discovering one's sexuality is the awareness which comes from talking with friends and so forth. This provides for comparison of thoughts and feelings and allows a person to realize and understand where he/she fits in.

In our society, this occurs when we are very young, and we are indoctrinated with the values of an overwhelmingly straight society. If that is as far as the communication goes, the world can become a forbidding, frightening place. Little wonder gays are often fearful and anxious.

The only way to breach the barriers is through exposure to other gays — their thoughts, their frustrations, their lives. But how does one go about meeting gays? Straight people have it "easier." They can (and all too often do) assume that everybody they meet is also straight. This is not applicable for the gay person.

Gay Pride Week is aimed at providing gays with an opportunity for making contact with others. It runs through May 19. Watch "It's What's Happening" for events and times. For schedules and additional information, drop by 313 Student Services Bldg., or call 353-9795.

ASMSU Gay/Lesbian Council

We must stand up to the gay threat

Enough is enough! Last year this campus and its students had to put up with a gay student president, Dan Jones, and his liberated followers. Jones instituted "Blue Jeans" day a year ago so he and all of his sympathizing patriots could show off. The majority of the student body (including myself) didn't wear jeans that day because of the fear of being associated with these perverts. The number of gay students at MSU is very small. For such a minority to be able to dictate what the majority will wear is ridiculous! It shows a lack of courage by all the "straight" people. We should stand up against such an insult and not back down meekly as we did last year.

This Friday, wear every article of denim you own. Denim jeans, denim shirts, denim coats, denim underwear if you own any. Let me say that just because I advocate wearing denim that doesn't mean that deep down inside I'm sympathizing with gays. They can all go to Hades!

Paranoia sure is better than death

In regards to Viewpoint: Nuclear Power, "Anti-nukes are paranoid." I don't think that anti-nukes are paranoid about the destruction of our environment due to nuclear energy proliferation, they are concerned. And I don't think that anti-nukes seek to stifle the evolution of mankind by stopping the expansions of knowledge on fusion energy. And most of all, I don't believe that anti-nukes are alienated people who lack maturity and wisdom, unable to be a constructive part of the centralized large-scale society.

What I do believe, however, is that Steve Crocker has sold his soul to the almighty dollar.

These posters that have recently sprung up all over town showing Richard Nixon and Spiro Agnew mouthing the words, "I'd like to get into your mother", are really disgusting. Telling it like it isn't

By Z. R. PORDOMINSKY

Setting: a pleasant corner in a pleasant restaurant. The play's characters occupy three of the four chairs around a square table. Characters: P.K., the producer and kingpin; P.A., the producer's assistant; A.S., the assistant scriptwriter; P.S., the principal scriptwriter.

As the curtain opens, P.K., P.A., and A.S. are holding a story conference. The theme is an incident from the producer's life. P.S., whose job it will be to give the story professional credibility, does not appear on scene.

P.A.: We've got a story, all right. But it won't make you look good, P.K.

P.K.: It will when we're done with it.

P.A.: I say let it die. It's not going anywhere as it is.

P.K.: I've been vilified, P.A.

P.A.: No, you haven't, P.K. Guy says he likes the place, comes here all the time.

P.K.: And I give it a bad reputation.

P.A.: All he does is describe what you do. He doesn't even mention your name.

P.K.: I had no trouble recognizing myself.

P.A.: So chalk it up to experience. Let's see what we can learn from this, and go on from there.

P.K.: When was the last time you stopped doing something just because someone said it was wrong?

P.A.: OK. What do you want to do?

P.K.: Teach him not to mess with me. Make him look bad.

P.A.: You can't change the way things happened.

P.K.: Oh, yes, I can. All I have to do is say they didn't happen that way.

P.A.: What do you have in mind?

P.K.: For starters, we harp on Easter Sunday. We make it an isolated incident.

P.A.: He just gave that as an example.

P.K.: So who's going to check back with him?

P.A.: You'll still look bad, P.K. You just don't rush people out.

P.K.: You do if they sit there for two hours.

P.A.: Is that how long he and his friend sat?

P.K.: How do I know? You think I have nothing better to do than clock people in and out?

A.S.: We could have them lingering extra long over the coffee. Who can stand seeing some jerk on his sixth cup?

P.K.: I like that. Six cups it is.

P.A.: That could be dangerous, P.K. People are not going to feel welcome if they start to wonder how many cups they can have before you class them as jerks.

P.K.: Do you know a better way to get them moving?

P.A.: We could offer up to two free refills. Then if they want a fourth cup, it's their choice, but they'll think twice about it.

P.K.: P.A., sometimes I wonder if we even speak the same language. You're talking management. I'm talking feelings.

P.A.: Well, feelings is what you'll need if you're going to get people to buy your story.

P.K.: OK. Picture this. It's Easter Sunday. The lines go for blocks. People on the street wilt from the sun. Some are starting to faint from hunger. We cannot seat them. We would gladly do so if we could get these creeps to vacate their table. And what do the bums do? Out of nowhere, as if in pact with the devil, they materialize papers and books. And then they proceed to spread them out on the table as they begin, get this, a leisurely study session on one of the busiest restaurant days of the year.

P.A.: A study session? On Easter Sunday.

P.A.: P.K., I've got to hand it to you. I hate the bastards already.

A.S.: To think they were only jerks when I met them.

P.A.: Just one thing, P.K. How are you going to get P.S. to put her name to all that?

P.K.: What does she know? She wasn't even there. She'll believe me. After all, it's my life.

Olin to the rescue

In my three years at MSU, Olin has often been the subject of much ridicule. In fact, I cannot recall ever hearing any favorable comments about the health center. Because of its reputation, many students have grown so accustomed to criticizing Olin that they have almost developed a phobia to even walk in for treatment. When they do, it's only because there is not much alternative. Until last week, this echoed my sentiments exactly. After developing a sudden illness, however, I was admitted into the emergency clinic which resulted in a two-day stay at Olin. To be perfectly honest, I was overwhelmed by the amount of personal attention and care I received in 48 hours. I couldn't believe this was the same Olin which constantly receives such verbal criticism. Without exception, every person I came in contact with was extremely friendly and seemed to take a genuine interest in seeing my recovery.

This fine quality is missing in many of today's medical institutions and to see it at Olin was very encouraging. Addressing the subject concerning the actual medical treatment I received — I don't see how it could have been any better. Because of this incident, I will never again question the medical ability of Olin. Undoubtedly, some people have had unfavorable experiences at the health center, but with the volume of traffic they encounter, this must occasionally be expected. I would just like to say thank-you Olin, keep up the good work.

Can anybody read?

The selection of books for the MSU libraries is a continual process with many dollars being spent for new titles each year. It is essential that input be obtained frequently from the library users for the selection process to be a success.

Unfortunately, students — the largest group on campus — have not given much input into the book selection process. In the past year, only three book suggestions have been received from MSU students.

With or without student input, the money will be spent for new books. If students have a specific book title they feel the library is lacking, they should submit the information at any of the libraries' many suggestion boxes. Students who feel certain areas of study are not represented should contact the bibliographers on the first floor of the main library to voice their concerns.

Let's see if input regarding the book selection process can be made proportional to the size of the student body.

Eggs against bullets

This letter applies to the DPS officer that was parked in front of Akers West Hall on May 5. The reason your car was egged was because you were parked illegally. You failed to put money in the meter. Maybe you don't think it was funny having egg on your car but we don't think it is very funny when you put tickets on our cars. If you feel you can park illegally in a non-emergency situation and still put tickets on our cars, you can expect to be hassled by us.

Turn that noise off

Through the cooperative efforts of WMSN, the Shaw Hall Student Government, DPS, and the vice president for Student Affairs, MSU will be blessed with two outdoor rock concerts. They will be held on May 13 and May 20, noon to 7 p.m. behind Shaw Hall. I can think of no finer episode of bureaucratic nearsightedness and incompetence than to plant two seven-hour rock extravaganzas smack-dab behind a University Residence Hall that houses over 1,000 students. If it is any concern to the idiots responsible for this outrage, there are students living in Shaw who want to study. This highly undemocratic intrusion of privacy is unfair and could have easily been avoided.

What right have these people invading the public domain? And why weren't Shaw residents given any say-so in the decision, or at least forewarned? It's downright sneaky. Furthermore, Shaw jumps on individuals blasting their sound systems into the courtyard, yet, curiously, has no qualms over two live rock concerts in the very same courtyard. Is this fair? This blatant disregard for student's privacy and the contradictory nature of the issue raise serious questions that must be answered lest this transgression be repeated.

NEW POEMS BY FRED LEE HADDOX

'Mixed Blood' speaks to people

Mixed Blood, Mixed Emotions by Fred Lee Haddox
Vantage Press
New York

Reviewed by
DARLENE DONLOE

As the title Mixed Blood, Mixed Emotions implies, the poems collected within this anthology are written to inspire black people to write, but also they are intended to educate the white reader as to how a single black man, a poet, thinks and feels.

The poems reel with pain, anger and love. Each poem brings to light a different aspect one goes through in his/her life.

There are periods of lost loves, suffering and despair written in each line.

The poems deal with hope for tomorrow, suffering, disappointment and a plea to end suffering and despair, to bring love to the world and "especially to America."

There is a definite sadness and concern as each poem has a message that needs to be heard.

Fred Lee Haddox's poems are pure joy. They reach deep within the soul and emotional tract to capture your every feeling.

The poems seem to speak of past experiences in Haddox's and other black men's lives. Poems such as: "Sick and Tired," "Detesting Life," "Injustices" and "We Need the Time to Pray" seem to say it all. They speak of life's situations. "Sick and Tired" is a poem about a distressed individual who is sick and tired of a "no-good world, where people lie and kill." "Where the world is filled with work and bills and bills and bills."

"Detesting Life" speaks of the lack of concern for peace in the world. How each individual is only out for themselves. The author says what is really needed is for everyone to find peace in Christ. He illustrates his despair in the passage: "This is a crazy country; I've tried to be a man. But life is bound to be no good in a God-forsaken land."

"Injustices" speaks of those experiences in everyday life. The injustices for men to kill, steal, die and "not knowing why." The author exemplifies this with the lines: "it's good when we are dead; injustices, injustices, for no one gets ahead."

"We Need the Time to Pray" capitalizes the entire collection of poetry with a plea for everyone to pray and put their trust in God, for only the Spirit can help in these times.

The poem says that "we dream, the dreams, it really seems, men dream their lives away. The Dreams, the dreams, it really seems most men forget to pray."

Haddox's hopes lie in religion and in love. He writes about "love versus selfishness, despair versus hope, injustice, lying, stealing, cheating, the limits of the human mind, religion and law."

Mixed Blood, Mixed Emotions speaks the language of the people.

It digs deep into the soul of oppressed people. It hits home not pulling any punches when talking about the shame, hypocrisy and lack of concern people show for one another and for the Lord.

Mixed Blood, Mixed Emotions is an excursion into the troubled spirit of the average man. Its insights and nobility of expression make it valuable, reading for the connoisseur of poetry.

Within the book lie ideas and deep thoughts of great importance to be searched out by everyone who reads it.

Haddox spent 16 years writing the book. In many of the poems a feeling of personal dramas escape. In some of his poetry he writes of the childhood he spent on his father's farm in Tennessee, the happy times and the bitter times. They all serve a purpose in bringing a source of strength.

Haddox's poetry should be read by all people.

As Haddox said, "white people can hope to learn more about how a black man thinks and, more importantly, why a black man thinks the way he does."

GAINESVILLE, Fla. (AP) — Ken Kesey, author of One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest, says he wishes high school teachers would take his book out of the classroom and bring in Shakespeare or the Bible.

"They're teaching Cuckoo because it's easy," Kesey told the University of Florida's annual writers conference Monday. "You have to teach what is hard. But teachers don't want to. They want to be popular, to be called by their first names and jostled like in Welcome Back, Kotter."

THE JUILLIARD QUARTET SEMINAR

An intense musical experience

By DORIS TISHKOFF

State News Staff Writer

During the bulk of the concert season, the Juilliard String Quartet leave their audiences with that special "high" that follows a performance packed with warmth, color, and what cellist Joel Krosnick calls a "personal" kind of music. This past week, however, the shoe was on the other foot. Deeply involved in a coaching session of The Thounval Quartet, one of nine participants in last week's Juilliard Quartet Seminar at MSU, Krosnick exclaimed — "it's such a thrill to coach this quartet — I love it so, and you're right on the edge of it."

Not one to be satisfied with anything less than total satisfaction, Krosnick coaxed and guided "expose that dialogue between viola and violin — get the tension of that crescendo, don't make it tense, but intense" — until the talented group finally took that giant step into the essence of Beethoven's Quartet in F Minor, op. 95. Krosnick, like his three colleagues, had brought out the best that these young musicians had to offer, supporting and underscoring their intrinsic musicality.

In the next room, first violinist Robert Mann was coaching the New World Quartet, selected just three weeks ago as this year's sole winners in the coveted Naumburg competition. Like a Shakespearean director, Mann probed beneath the bare lines of the score to discover "the basic element that gives every living moment a kind of intellectual and emotional power — with each phrase related to the one before, and leading into the next with a sense of purpose." Once again, his aim was to arrive at the essence of this complex work to which Mann brings the multiple levels of his thinking — literary, aesthetic, philosophical, and, above all, musical. "I try to put myself into the composer's shoes and ask — what is the underlying element?"

In his next session with the International Quartet, themselves faculty members at Indiana State University, and winners of several awards, Mann became engrossed in the subtleties of Debussy's Quartet in G Minor although Mann found this group to be so adept that, at one point, he exclaimed, "I really like the way you do that — I'm going to try it myself that way," there was clearly still room for expansion. Addressing the question of layers of expression in the work, he discussed the subtleties of "terracing," cautioning them to be "so gradual at the end of the slow movement, that it is the overtones, not the expression alone, which becomes the core."

Simultaneously, Samuel Rhodes, was exhorting the Prajna Quartet, another top-flight professional group, to work for "a shimmering tone quality in the tremolo" in Mozart's Quartet in G Major, yet to "keep some emotional reserve — don't let it all out at once." In another place where Rhodes had successfully helped first violinist Wanda Jaworski over a difficult technical spot, she kicked her feet in delight, exclaiming, "That's great — it feels a lot better."

Working with the Ariosio Quartet, who have been in residence at MSU this past year, second violinist Earl Carlyss also shared his special insights as to quartet playing. "Try for a rich chocolate sound in the pianos — that phrase should have the quality of something propelled effortlessly along a stream," he suggested, as they analyzed Beethoven's Quartet in E Flat Major.

This intensity, the total absorption in the process of music-making, whether it be performing or sharing their warmth, dynamism and perception into the complex art of quartet playing is what made the week of May 8 to 13 at MSU an experience perhaps without equivalent today. For the community, it was the opportunity to hear the Juilliard both in rehearsal and in performance.

For participating quartets, most of whom are professional groups in residence in key centers of the country, it was an opportunity of a lifetime, a chance to fine-tune their art, already at a level of some excellence, with the world's outstanding masters of this genre in music.

For Ross Harbaugh of the New World, it was an occasion "that changed the direction of my life and my career — like a river that suddenly takes an entirely new turn." For Lee Joiner of The Blair Quartet, an outstanding group in residence in Nashville, Tenn., it was an essential ingredient in his need to continually explore and investigate the endless scope of his art. In fact, The Blair typifies the enduring relationship which these groups have established with their mentors — they will be performing Samuel Rhodes' Viola Quintet next April, with Rhodes himself as second violinist.

The final performances of these outstanding groups on Saturday and Sunday was a feast of top-level quartet playing. It can only be summarized by acknowledging the heightened perceptions and deepened expressiveness of their playing after the week of sharing, growing, and, one can only say, loving both one another and the music. The Seminar with The Juilliard at MSU is possibly one of this country's most outstanding musical happenings.

Al Hudson, Partners show off at Dooley's

Barry White made a special appearance at the Al Hudson and The Partners concert at Dooley's Sunday night.

So did Eddie Kendricks, the Supremes, Al Green and Esther Phillips.

All were part of a somewhat entertaining impersonation act put on Al Hudson's "partners," that perked up an otherwise listless crowd.

Singer Alicia Myers drew well-deserved applause after her near-perfect impersonation of Esther Phillips, while bassist Dave Robertson clowning with his monologue version of "The Maestro," Barry White, Eddie Kendricks was performed by guitarist Kevin McCord, while Al Green, alias Al Hudson, sang a few lyrics touched with Green's southern twang of "Love and Happiness."

Impersonations were perhaps the highlight of the concert, for Al Hudson and The Partners had little to offer from their own material. The group performed a few of their better-known pieces, "Lost Inside of You," from the album Speedy Love, "You Can Do It," "How

Okemos Barn's 'Mary' affectionate, lively

By ROSANNE SINGER

State News Reviewer

Little Mary Sunshine holds cynicism momentarily at bay. A charming, clever and humorous musical comedy by Rick Besoyan, the show affectionately parodies Nelson Eddy, Jeanette MacDonald movies where the hero and heroine couldn't be purer and goodness triumphs.

The setting is turn of the century Colorado, where Little Mary owns and runs an inn. Often patronized by forest rangers, the inn is temporarily overrun by delicately bred young women from an East Coast finishing school. The women bemoan the lack of men in the wilds of Colorado until a group of steadfast rangers led by a Capt. Warrington march into the area and capture the women's hearts.

The production of Little Mary Sunshine now at the Okemos Barn Theatre features an irresistible cast, for the most part, and provides a captivating evening's entertainment.

Susie Breck heads the cast as the sweet, innocent Little Mary who loves the forest ranger. Big Jim Warrington, Breck has a well-controlled, assured singing voice and a graceful, light stage bearing befitting the shy Mary. Without overdoing wide-eyed innocence, Breck nevertheless conveys Mary's unbelievable goodness and naivete. She and Ken VanderKolk share a hysterical love song, "The Colorado Love Call," that provides probably the funniest moment on stage.

Although VanderKolk begins somewhat stiffly, he gradually gains confidence and projects an appealing warmth by the end of the show. Physically he has the stature of a man who takes charge, but also betrays the insecurity of someone inexperienced in love. He is funny as he displays mounting frustration as Mary continually eludes his kiss and attempts to propose to her. VanderKolk has a consistently strong, clear singing voice.

Kathryn Heath sparkles as the slightly naughty Nancy Twinkle, an experienced flirt who occasionally loves Billy Jester. Jim Warrington's second-in-command. Heath seems to delight at being on stage and is appropriately energetic as a woman constantly scheming. In contrast to Breck's more fluid movements, (continued on page 16)

Runners get ready for AIAW nationals

By CHERYL FISH
State News Sports Writer

With a week left before the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women (AIAW) Nationals are held on Ralph Young Field, the anticipation by MSU's women qualifiers is building.

Meet director and track coach Nell Jackson said she has received entries from 133 schools so far. There will be at least 1,000 athletes on hand for the four-day meet.

Jackson said the meet was important for a variety of reasons. First, it would help qualify the women for the Amateur Athletic Union (AAU) championships which are held in late June. It is prestigious because the top amateur athletes in the country are competing, as well as college athletes.

In addition, the possibility of making it into the World University games or making the World Cup Team is in the back of each qualifier's mind.

Holding such a large meet at MSU will give athletes from all over a chance to look at the facilities here. Jackson expects many of the spectators will be from high schools across the state, and could help them decide whether or not to attend MSU. She also said that Spartan athletes will see the way others work and what it takes to be a winner.

Defending champion Cal State Northridge will be expected to bring in a strong team. Teams from Texas Women's University and University of Texas-Austin have some of the best women athletes in the Southwest.

"The AIAW is the meet for quality and depth," Jackson said. Last year, 14 new records were set during the AIAWs. Jackson foresees more of this. "We have a fast track," she added.

Eleven of MSU's track team members have qualified for the nationals. The qualifiers are: Lisa Berry, 3,000-meter, 5,000-meter; Kelly Spatz, 3,000-meter; Nathalie Hughes, 3,000, 5,000, 10,000-meter; Cynthia Wadsworth, 5,000, 10,000-meter; Cheryl Gilliam, 100, 200-meter and Mollie Brennan, 400-meter hurdles. The relay teams are the 4 x 110-yard Gilliam, Brennan, Kathy Miller and Kim Hatchett; 4 x 440 yard Brennan, Miller, Pam Sedwick, Pam Swanigan; 880-yard medley Gilliam, Brennan, Miller, Sedwick; 4 x 880-yard (conditional) - Berry, Spatz, Hughes, Dawn Juola.

Sprint coach Karyn Dennis said Gilliam has a good chance to win in the 200-meter. "Our relays have a chance to place high," she said.

It will be exciting for the women to run alongside athletes that will be in the 1980 Olympics. It is expected that entrants will begin arriving early next week as the anticipation builds.

In all, there will be 20 events, including the 10,000-meter which has been added for the first time. The action will begin on Wednesday, May 23, with the pentathlon events. The trials for track and field events will be held on Thursday, May 24 and the semi-finals on May 25. The finals will be held on Friday and Saturday.

Tickets will cost students $1 daily and adults $2. There will be no advance sales.

Eight women and eight men will be selected for next year's squad.

Ruggers hammer U-D; Roth leads way with 16

Led by Mary Kay Roth's 16 points, the MSU women's rugby football club soundly defeated University of Detroit 36-4 in its first home match of the season Saturday at the Vet Clinic field.

Though the cold wind, rain and mud made the conditions terrible, MSU held a 16-0 lead at the end of the first half. Chances for a shutout looked good until U-D scored late in the game.

Vicky Smythe backed up Roth's 16 points with eight points, and Leslie Lindsay, Marilyn Shorn and Terri Melvin each scored four points.

The win raises the women's record to 8-6. The women belong to the Midwest Women Rugby Football Club Union, which is comprised of 30 teams from around the Midwest. The women's next match will be at Kent State University Saturday.

Golfers fly in Big Ten

By JEFF MINAHAN
State News Sports Writer

In the last tournament of the season, the MSU golf team produced its strongest showing yet to take an impressive third place in the Big Ten tournament in Champaign, Ill. This past weekend and set off optimistic predictions for the 1980 season.

The Spartans finished with a team total of 1,503, 14 shots behind Big Ten champion Ohio State University and six shots behind second-place Indiana University for their best league finish since 1975.

Coach Bruce Fossum, who had said all season that his team was better than they were playing, was extremely happy with the results, and said that the third-place finish did not surprise him.

"I'm very, very pleased with the total team performance," he said. "We had six people playing their guts out, and if one person had a bad round, someone else played well."

Fossum attributed the strong finish to the balanced play of his team, and added that if not for the crucial third round in which MSU slipped after being tied for the lead, the Spartans might have placed second.

OSU's John Cook and Rick Borg took individual honors in the 72-hole tournament with identical scores of 290. Cook will be defending his national amateur championship this weekend at the NCAA championships in Salem, N.C.

The Spartans had four golfers all within six strokes of each other, led by junior Rick Grover, who had rounds of 73-76-71-77 for a total of 297 and eighth place in the final standings.

Behind Grover were David Belen at 300, Steve Lubbers at 301, Tom Mase at 303, Hill Herrick at 309 and Eric Ger-sonde at 318.

Fossum said that he felt his team lost strokes around the greens, which he said were extremely testing on the Savoy Orange Golf Course of host University of Illinois, and added that from tee to green his team played better than the runner-up Hoosiers.

With the high finish, Fossum immediately began projecting a very strong MSU team in 1980. The Spartans will lose only one senior from the top six to graduation in Eric Gersonde, and will return a strong nucleus next season.

"We think we will be very strong next season," Fossum said. "Ohio State or not, we will be better next year and we are going to take them on. We are confident."

Fossum added that he feels his team can still golf better when it gets the chance to practice for an extended period of time. Until recently, the weather had hampered practice sessions significantly and had often produced extremely poor conditions in many of the tournaments.

The Big Ten tournament ended the season for the Spartans, since their third-place finish did not qualify them for the NCAA tournament this weekend. But it was a third-place finish Fossum can live with, for at least a year.

THIS TIME PITCHERS INCONSISTENT

MSU hitters split twinbill with EMU

By JERRY BRAUDE

State News Sports Writer

With all eyes on this week-end's Big Ten title showdown with University of Michigan, MSU's baseball team let its regular starters have a rest and gave its two sophomore hopefuls some experience against Eastern Michigan University Tuesday.

And the doubleheader at Kobs Field happened to turn out much irony in the two second-year pitchers' performances.

Left-hander Steve Kruse had a 3.1 record and 1.62 ERA going into the twinbill but was shelled in MSU's 10-2 opening games loss.

Right-hander Phil Magsig only had a 1-1 record with a 3.17 ERA, but he handed the Hurons their first northern season shutout, 2-0 in the nightcap.

"He pumped us up," coach Dan Litwhiler said of Magsig's nightcap performance. "He has good stuff. He has a good fast ball and his curve moves well. And it all worked well today since he had his control."

Magsig's first complete game of the year was a three-hitter. The Hurons only reached third base once, which was in the third inning when Brian Petroff doubled and went to third on an error.

"I was placing the ball where I wanted to," Magsig said. "I didn't get into any trouble with walks. You just can't beat good control."

Control was one problem opening game starter Steve Kruse had in his first disastrous appearance of the season. In two-thirds of an inning pitched, he had problems finding the plate. When he found the strike zone, he was belted. The result was a six-run inning before MSU even came up to bat.

MSU scored a run in its first time up to bat when second baseman Randy Hop led off the bottom of the first with a triple to right-center field. He then crossed the plate on left fielder Ken Robinson's sacrifice fly to center field.

The Spartans scored their only other run in the sixth inning on a pair of EMU errors. The Hurons added one run in the third and two runs in the fourth off Greg Butzirus and one final run in the seventh off Risto Niecevski.

Hop was the only Spartan to have two hits on a twinbill. His other hit, the Spartans' only hit in the second game, was a RBI single to right field to drive in third baseman Al Dankovich.

Both of MSU's runs in the nightcap came in the third inning with the help of two EMU errors. The second run came when Hop scored on a fielder's choice.

The Spartan hitting has been inconsistent this year. Yet, on this afternoon, the MSU bats did show some consistency. But it wasn't the kind of consistency MSU wanted.

MSU only had four hits during the twinbill. Besides Hop's pair of hits, Ken Mehall and Jerry Pollard had hit singles in the first game.

The Spartans only had four runs on the afternoon, and only one of them that they scored was earned.

But Litwhiler was not concerned about MSU's anemic hitting performance against the Hurons.

"It was just one of those

Spartan designated hitter Ken Mehall dives back to first base ahead of an Eastern Michigan pitcher's pick-off throw Tuesday. The two teams split the twinbill at Kobs Field with the Hurons winning the first game 10-2 and MSU taking the nightcap 2-0.

State News: Richard Marshall

things," Litwhiler said. "We're saving them (the hits) for Michigan. We hit better on weekends anyway."

And as far as the Spartan cause is concerned, a revival of the team's hitting for just one more weekend wouldn't be a bad idea at all.

BETH TUSCHAK

Double fun in Chicago

Two times this year, Chicago baseball fans — and hardcore groupies willing to travel to the Windy City — are treated to the spectacle of seeing both the White Sox and Cubs play on home turf. This year's first double city match-up, which pitted the Cubs against Cincinnati and the Sox against Kansas City, didn't draw record-breaking crowds, but the 13,801 at Comiskey Park were treated to a 5-2 home-town victory and the 9,164 seated in Wrigley Field's grandstands witnessed a 7-7 suspended slugfest. (The Cubs had to catch a 6:05 flight to Houston, thus the tie stands until the teams' next meeting.)

It's a simple matter of maneuvering to catch the Cubs warm-up, eat a few hot dogs, cheer the last out and make it across town in time for the second National Anthem. One way to avoid crazy Chicago traffic jams is to park at Comiskey Park in the morning, (when lots are empty) hop on the southbound Elevated, transfer to the baseball fan-packed subway and pour out with the rest of the crowd a block from Wrigley Field.

Last Thursday, sun and Cub worshippers saw action from the first inning, when singles by Dave Concepcion and Ray Knight allowed two men to score for Cincinnati and a double by Johnny Bench brought home two more.

The Cubs retaliated in their half of the inning when Dave Kingman doubled to center, bringing home two, and a single by Steve Ontiveroz brought Kingman across the plate.

The Cubs picked up two more runs in the fourth inning but the Reds tied the score in the fifth and picked up two more in the seventh to lead by a run. Kingman's ninth home run of the year, a solo shot in the seventh, created the deadlock.

The tie-hating fans — including those perched on rooftops adjoining the park — were disappointed by the suspended game, but were assured the final inning (s) would be played July 23 to determine the victor.

Back over at Comiskey Park that evening, the "show" began before the first player got up to bat. Former Red Sox star Ted Williams was honored during pre-game festivities, and a local sporting goods store employee attempted to cast a baseball tied on a fishing rod to the scoreboard 500 feet away. (He managed to snag it 440 feet into the upper deck.)

A homerun by Claudell Washington gave the White Sox a first-inning run, and the warm cloudless twilight was interrupted with fireworks from the famed ChiSox scoreboard.

Francisco Barrios pitched four hitless innings, but was caught by Tom Poquette in the fourth for a sacrifice fly which brought home Clint Hurdle.

Paul Splittorff also had fine early innings, but let the White Sox move ahead by one in the sixth on a sacrifice fly by Lamar Johnson to center field, which brought in Washington.

On this note the stadium announcer informed the fans that "Lucky Chairs" would be played — the winners finding numbered stubs on the bottom of their seats, good for prizes from a local fishing emporium.

Steve Trout, the winning pitcher, came in for the Sox in the eighth, getting off to a shaky start with a single by Jamie Quirk, who stole second and was batted in by Amos Otis.

Kansas City changed pitchers in the eighth, bringing in Al "The Mad Hungarian" Hrabosky, who turned away from the batter, stamped, snorted and spit and with a final curse leaped around to face his man. It was one, two, three and they were on, with Eric Soderholm, Rusty Torres and Wayne Nordhagen all delivering run-scoring singles for the victory.

Hrabosky, head hung, walked off the field to the accompaniment of Nancy Faust's organ leading the fans in a lung-bursting rendition of Na-Na-Na-Na, Na-Na-Na-Na, Hey-hey-hey, Goo-ood bye.

Densmore sees Spartan potential

By ADAM TEICHER

State News Sports Writer

There are many reasons why the MSU football team has to be considered a front runner for the Big Ten championship next season. Offensive guard Mike Densmore is one of them.

Like most of next year's seniors, Densmore came to MSU just when the Spartans had been placed on a three-year probation by the NCAA, which denied them the opportunity to play in a bowl game or play on national television.

Yet the Lapeer native came to MSU before he realized that the Spartans were to be punished. He was a midterm senior in high school and came to East Lansing while Denny Stolz was still the Spartan coach.

"Even when I found out that we were put on probation I never thought of leaving because when (current) coach (Darryl) Rogers came in, that was an excellent opportunity for me to come in and start," he said. "This was the best decision of my life to come to Michigan State. Hopefully, this fourth year will make up for all the things I've missed for three years," Densmore said, summing up the feelings of most of his senior teammates as well as his own.

To do next season what he has missed the last three, namely go to the Rose Bowl, the Spartan offense will have to overcome the loss of key individuals. Quarterback Eddie Smith, wide receiver Kirk Gibson, and tackles Craig Lonce and Jim Hinesly are gone, but Densmore feels that in time, the offense can be as good as last season.

"I think Bert Vaughn is going to be a very good quarterback by the time the season rolls around," Densmore said. "In order to do well at first next year, we'll have to run more until Bert gets his timing down."

"I think the adjustment to Bert has gone well so far. By the fourth or fifth game of next season, we'll be on track. It's going to take some time though, because you can't expect a new man to do well right off the bat."

With the departure of Hinesly and Lonce, "that kind of leaves me as the old man of the offensive line," he said. "We should be able to run more effectively because we have experience in the middle three in the line (guards Densmore and Rod Strata and center Matt Foster all are returning starters) which is real important for a running game."

Playing with new tackles will be a new experience for Densmore. "I've been playing next to Jim Hinesly for three years, so no matter who plays beside me, it'll be an adjustment," he explained. "I think that whoever plays next to me, Angelo Fields, Dave Whittle, Ted Grabenhorst or Regis McQuaide, they are all capable of playing well."

Influence of fascism on racism in U.S. subject of lectures

A lecture on fascism's interference with American racism will be given by a noted author Thursday at 10:20 a.m. in 304 Natural Science Bldg. and 7 p.m. in 117 Berkey Hall.

Charles R. Allen Jr., author of several internationally acclaimed books, will also discuss the rewriting of the Holocaust and Nazi war criminals in the United States and their utilization by American intelligence.

The lecture is sponsored by the Department of Racial and Ethnic Studies.

Allen has done extensive freelance work in addition to writing "Heusinger of the Fourth Reich," which was translated into more than a dozen languages.

Both lectures are expected to last about two hours and are open to the public.

Foot patrol vetoed

By RUSS HUMPHREY
State News Staff Writer
Lansing will not have police foot patrols on the 500 block of East Michigan Avenue next year.

In a 6-2 decision, the Lansing City Council defeated the proposal designed to protect the area businesses from prostitution and crime.

Asking the council to "support reasonable change," Robert Hull, First Ward council member and co-sponsor of the resolution, said the defeat was an unfortunate decision for foot patrols in the city.

The proposal for foot patrols would have transferred $25,000 for the one officer to patrol the two block area of the 400-500 blocks of East Michigan Avenue.

The proposed change in the type of patrol used in the city could have eventually developed into a scooter or bicycle patrol.

But the council considered it a dangerous move — both politically and for assigned officers.

Three members of the Fraternal Order of Police said the proposal would be dangerous because officers could be easily attacked and harmed.

Three FOP members asked the council if any members would be willing to "give up" officers from their wards.

James Renton, president of the Non-Supervisory Division of the Lansing FOP, said that if the council adopted the foot beats then a "dangerous precedent" would occur.

"Everyone would want one (a foot patrol)," he said.

With Councilmember-at-Large Richard Baker contending that merchants and property owners in the area are entitled to protection from "winos and derelicts," discussion continued for almost three hours.

The FOP members said it would be hard for the beat officer to "enforce morality" and that the officer "would get hurt" because the assigned officer would not have an automobile.

Councilmember Hull said that after several months of studying police problems with citizens, his committee determined that it was essential to get the police officer back on the streets.

Other councilmembers said the proposal was good and should be implemented, but could not be justified for one area.

The Lansing Police Department has requested $208,000 in the 1979-80 budget in order to pick up a presently federally funded program.

The nine member program termed Stop Traffic Accidents Right (STAR) would patrol certain areas exclusively, and would provide added protection like a foot patrol to certain areas, Council president Louis Adado said.

The budget proposals, and other department recommendations, will be voted on May 21 on the 10th floor of City Hall.

In other action, the council made appointments to the Capitol Commons development district review board.

Dance troupe teaches

In this version of Dorothy's story, several children are chosen to come onto the stage and show the Junk Food Junkies what a stomach ache is like.

With the help of Dorothy (Gullet), they demonstrate that it bends, falls, rolls, moans and groans. The children who have been on stage are instant celebrities when they return to their seats.

Audience participation is needed to help coat the stomach with Pepto Bismol. Imaginary paintbrushes are placed on elbows, noses, heads and legs, and shapes are made in the air — big and small circles, polka dots and swiggly lines.

In their places, the children move their arms to help the heart push Mr. Cholesterol out of the passage that he is blocking.

During the groups' final dance, to the music of "Ease on Down the Road," children and their teachers keep rhythm by clapping.

Classroom follow-ups incorporate dance movement and education, Smith said. Language and math skills are tied to movement and imagination through the use of words — on, over, under, dab, flick and press — and through the body's demonstration of geometric shapes such as circles and triangles.

Ensemble members work with the children to teach them the many ways they can move, in addition to walking or running.

Although only one of the ensemble members is a dance major, all have some dance background.

Hansk said she began taking dance lessons when she was four, to correct pigeon toes and knock knees. She continued dancing until she was a junior in high school and began again when she came to MSU.

Calef auditioned just because she enjoys dancing and because her roommate, a member of last year's ensemble, always seemed to have such a good time working with the group.

But, she confessed, "It's scary, even now, because all the schools have a whole different atmosphere. All the kids aren't the same, so you have to think of ways to get them all involved."

When Paliwoda transferred from Oakland University to MSU, she decided to find out if MSU had any sort of dance program like the one at Oakland. She began dancing as a freshman at Oakland.

"Being on stage is like being a whole different person," Paliwoda said. "It's easy to be crazy up there, because no one knows me."

After graduation, Pfeipsen said she would like to join a dance company and perform for several years and then open a school to teach ballet, jazz and modern.

The most important thing she has learned from Lecture-Demonstration has been how to work with children and the necessity for each performance to seem just like the first time, she said.

"I've learned just how open and creative kids are," Pfeipsen said, "now I'm more receptive to them — I think of them as little people."

East Complex annexation battle jurisdictions. After the petitions are completed, they must be filed with the county clerk. But, it is unclear exactly who would be responsible for setting the election because of a conflict between State Election Law and an amendment to the State Boundary Commission Act.

Under the Charter Township amendment to the boundary act, the county clerk would review the petitions for their "adequacy" and send them to the township clerk, who would review the validity of the petitions.

If the township clerk finds the petitions valid, they would be returned to the county clerk. The clerk would set an election after 60 days and within one year from the date of validation.

The State Election Law procedure would also require petitions to be filed with the county clerk for review and forwarded to the township clerk. The clerk would determine their validity and return them to the county clerk, who would notify the Ingham County Elections Scheduling Committee.

The committee is required to put the proposal on the ballot within 45 to 60 days from the validation date, County Clerk Lingg Brewer said.

If no general election is scheduled for East Lansing during that period, the committee must hold a special election. Only the people in the area to be annexed and the registered voters of East Lansing will vote on the issue if the petition drive succeeds.

Other Meridian Township residents and officials have no say in the matter, Brewer said. Grebner said he wants to get the annexation proposal on the November ballot.

If the East Complex population becomes part of the city before the 1980 census, East Lansing can qualify for additional state and federal revenue sharing funds, he said.

East Lansing receives about $2.7 million per year in state and federal revenue sharing funds given to cities with a minimum population of 50,000.

If East Complex is annexed, the city would gain an additional $120,000 in revenues slated for the township, officials said.

"We would probably get more than that figure ($120,000) because state and federal revenue sharing programs have a different program for cities than townships," said Gary Murphy, the East Lansing group manager for finance.

Conti said that it has never been reported to him that there were problems at voter registration.

"My clerk doesn't indicate any headaches at registration," he said. "We register Meridian Township and East Lansing voters side-by-side."

Conti said the move for annexation to city boundaries is totally "unjustified" and will "not gain anything for anyone." "I see it as an erosion of territory for no good reason," he said.

The township and the city have a good relationship, Conti said. But, he added, the annexation proposal would not change the relationship because an "outside force" is advocating the move and council is not supporting it.

"The township board and City Council has a good working relationship," Conti said. "We know where the council stands; City Council is not supportive of it."

But a majority of City Council members have said that they do support annexing East Complex into city boundaries.

"I think it's a good idea,"

Councilmember John Czarnecki said. "We are providing bus service to a portion of East Complex."

"As it stands, we are providing an incidental service to nonresidents," he said. Mayor George L. Griffiths said he supports the proposal with reservations.

"I favor it, Griffiths said. "It will resolve the voter registration problem and increase bucks to East Lansing."

He said he has reservations because he does not want to "upset" the city's relationship with the township.

Councilmember Carolyn Stell said the annexation of East Complex to the city would be "correcting historical oddity."

Stell said the fluke having part of the campus in the township occurred before the Residence Halls were built and that time has come for the situation to be corrected.

Conti questioned the sincerity of the annexation efforts, as a "grass roots" movement.

The people that live in the areas to be annexed did not initiate the proposal, he said. Under county guidelines, the petitions must be circulated by persons registered to vote in the area to be annexed.

Grebner said that the two people circulating petitions are receiving pay and are registered to vote in the area.

"The $100 from ASMSU Student Board is all going toward paying circulators," Grebner said. "We have contributions coming in to also help pay them."

County Clerk Lingg Brewer said that he was "not pleased" that the circulators are being paid.

"I think it violates the spirit of the law," Brewer said.

Grebner said that while paying circulators may "violate the spirit of the law," it is necessary.

"There is a lot of work involved in circulating petitions and I've got to be able to tell people what to do — you can't fire volunteers or even yell at them," he said.

TOMORROW: A proposal to divide the city into five separate wards on a population basis. The proposal would also expand the East Lansing City Council from five seats to nine.

County labor pacts topic of discussion

Labor contracts for Ingham County Circuit Court Employees will be discussed by the county Finance Committee at 1 p.m. today, Room 401-A, Ingham County Bldg., 303 W. Kalamazoo St., Lansing.

The committee will also consider compensation for special prosecutors who handle divorce cases involving minors.

Japanese flower art demonstrated tonight

Ikebana, the art of Japanese flower arrangement, will be discussed and demonstrated at 7:30 tonight in the Horticulture Building Auditorium.

The lecture will be given by Robert Plummer and is sponsored by the Lansing chapter of Ikebana International.

Plummer received his certificate as professor of ikebana, First Grade, in 1970 and has studied the art for more than 25 years.

Tickets are available at the MSU Asian Studies Center and at the door for $3. Student tickets are $1.

COUNCIL CALLED 'AFRAID' BY MEMBER

'Watered down' info request passed

By RUSS HUMPHREY
State News Staff Writer

A lengthy debate Monday night resulted in what some members of the Lansing City Council thought was a "watered down" communication concerning the Hay Classification and Compensation Plan of 1978.

The communication, which began as a strong demand for information on the plan, was revised to the form of a letter asking the mayor for a response at his convenience. The letter requests an explanation about frozen wages in the building department.

The Hay Plan, completed in July 1978, was an extensive study into job classification within the city government. The study, done by Hay Associates of Chicago, Ill., recommended that city employee salaries be frozen when they reached a certain level.

City council accepted the recommendations and asked the administration to implement the plan.

Councilmember - at - Large Richard Baker said many salaries of the upper echelon increased shortly after the council accepted the Hay plan.

In some cases, Baker said, upper level positions had increases of as much as $10,000.

Monday night Baker said he was outraged that department heads received salaries which were "reserved for the exceptional."

"Now that the heads (of the departments) are at the top of the pay scale there is not any pay incentive left," Baker said. "That is exactly contrary to what Hay meant."

Baker said the "peons or non-executives got their salaries frozen. This is not even simple justice."

The original resolution Baker proposed had asked for specific reasons why the wages in lower-level employment had been frozen.

The resolution had also asked for answers to other specific questions in "one week."

But the other members of the council, especially Third Ward Councilmember Terry J. McKane, said the resolution was too demanding.

Second Ward Councilmember James Brinke said a committee has been assigned to the problem.

Brenke added that any action affirming the original Baker resolution could interfere with collective bargaining.

McKane, who chairs General Services Committee investigating the charges, said his committee, which includes Baker, has asked for detailed answers to questions concerning the study.

"The resolution should go back to committee," Brenke said.

"But we have lost entire divisions (in the building department)," Baker said, "and since Hay went into effect I know of 20 people who have resigned."

Baker explained to the council that the resolution would "just ask the chief to respond to some questions" in a week.

"One week is more than enough time," he said.

After three amendments were adopted, reducing the impact, the resolution passed 6-2.

"I've never seen the council so afraid even to ask the mayor for some information," Baker said. "I listen to you (council members) in the hallway and you seem sympathetic — but now you're afraid."

"You insist on watering it down," he said.

The only vote against the amended resolution, besides Baker, was Councilmember-at-Large James Blair, who said he would never again vote in favor of anything to do with the Hay Plan.

Meeting on reporting in medicine begins

"The second annual conference on "Problems in Medical Reporting" begins today at 9 in the Union with a discussion on "Issues in Medicine."

At 9:45 a.m., a panel discussion on "Techniques in Reporting Medical News" will be presented and at 10:30 a.m. a panel discussion on "Sources for Obtaining Medical News" will be conducted.

Registration for the conference will be held from 8 to 9 a.m.

The conference is sponsored by the School of Journalism and the medical society.

Lansing considers energy referendum

Lansing's City Council and the utility board will discuss holding a public advisory referendum to determine future energy methods at 5 p.m. on the 10th floor of City Hall.

The Board of Water and Light, which serves the Lansing and East Lansing areas, is considering several options for meeting the area's predicted future energy needs.

An option for buying into a nuclear power facility either with Consumers Power Co. or Detroit Edison Co. has come under fire by some area consumer groups and residents.

Board members suggested the meeting with City Council four weeks ago to determine the feasibility of conducting an advisory referendum.

The referendum would attempt to establish how residents want the board to provide for future energy needs.

The referendum would not bind the board to any decision.

Teen smokes again despite allurements

HOUSTON (AP) — Sixteen-year-old Shawn Galloway is smoking again — despite an offer of a trip to Washington, a lecture from Carter Cabinet member and severe pressure from her friends.

Shawn attracted national attention three months ago when Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph Califano discovered, during a visit to Houston, that she was the only girl in her ninth-grade Scarborough Junior-Senior High class who smoked.

Califano offered her a trip to Washington, with a friend of her choosing, if she could kick the cigarette habit for six months.

Shawn, 16, hesitated at first. But a few hours later, she threw away her cigarettes and gave her lighters away.

Then, about a month ago, she returned to the cigarettes she said she had replaced with chewing gum and fingernails.

"I could have quit for good," she said. "But I didn't want to. It's something to do with your hands. Anyway, I didn't care about that trip to begin with."

She recognizes her return to smoking might hurt her. "But then you only live once," she said. "You might as well live it good."

"Cigarettes keep me company when I'm bored. There's nothing else better to do."

DISSEMINATION OF INFO MAIN AIM

African center tries to dispel myths

By CONSTANCE FON

Editor's note: Fon is a visiting African journalism student from the University of Western Ontario, London, Ontario. He is spending three weeks in East Lansing and is working at The State News as part of a special internship program.

For a long time, Africa has been a myth to most Americans. Americans will continue to perceive Africa as a country with wild groups of people going naked, hunting wild animals, living in trees and reasoning like the animals they chase.

At least, that is how the American media has presented Africa until now. But with the assistance of such information centers as MSU's African Studies Center, which is one of about 150 centers spread all over American universities, Americans may soon perceive Africa in its true image.

Located in the International Center, MSU's African Studies Center was created in 1960 along with seven others in the Midwest and on the West Coast with aid from the U.S. Office of Education.

"The main aim of the center is to coordinate and facilitate the development of programs of teaching, research and public services and African area studies throughout the University," Anne Schneller, administrator for the center, said.

To achieve this aim, the ASC has a staff of 50 faculty members who have lived, worked and carried out extensive research in Africa, or who are interested in doing research on and in Africa.

Over 50 additional faculty members, with significant experience in African studies, serve as consultants.

Courses in a wide variety of subjects in humanities, social sciences, agriculture and medicine are offered throughout the colleges and departments of MSU. Twenty-one different African languages are also taught.

The center maintains a number of relationships with departments and institutes at African universities.

"We cooperated with the University of Nsukka before the outbreak of the Nigerian civil war to build a new campus for that university, but our joint efforts were disrupted by the war," Schneller explained.

The ASC organizes exchange programs for American students and professors to go to Africa, and for African students and faculty to study in the United States.

David Wiley, center director for the past 20 months and an assistant professor of sociology, said the center currently has exchange programs with the University of Zambia and with Addis Ababa University.

Two American students will go to Zambia this year while Zambian students will come to MSU for graduate studies in various fields, Wiley said.

Schneller added Addis Ababa University is currently receiving scientific equipment from the United States which was negotiated by the ASC. About 25 students from three Sahel regions are now taking graduate studies in agro-economics at MSU, she said.

To achieve its stated objectives efficiently, the center is broken down into subdivisions which handle different aspects of its work.

The publications section has maintained an extensive program since 1960 and has published many books, research papers and periodicals on Africa.

Outreach is rather a wide subdivision. It includes the Educational Resource Center, which gathers information, materials and gives assistance for planning programs on Africa to educators and community groups.

Its collection includes teacher's manuals, periodicals, teaching aids such as maps, charts, posters, transparencies and study prints and audio-visual materials including color slide sets, film-strips, and recordings.

The African Media Center, created with grants from the National Endowment for the Humanities, is a center for the documentation and the dissemination of African-related materials. It is currently preparing a comprehensive evaluation guide to all audio-visual materials of Africa.

Interaction with Michigan's 97 institutions of higher education is accomplished through the Michigan Information Network on Africa, also coordinated in the ASC.

The 4 H African Heritage Program promotes better understanding of Africa, its environment, politics and cultures among various community youth programs in Michigan.

The MSU African Library, though not part of the center, contains 111,000 pieces of African-related literature and employs three full-time librarians.

Through a grant from ACTION, two graduate assistants recruit students to serve in the Peace Corps in African countries. Steve Howard, one of the graduate assistants, has been working there for 10 months and said about 50 students possessing skills in agriculture and scientific fields have been recruited and sent to Africa during this period.

Peace Corps recruiters also compile a list of service opportunities in Africa through various international organizations.

ASC has an advisory committee. It is elected by students taking courses on Africa plus all African students at MSU. It is composed of one faculty member, four students and one Afro-American.

HEALTH HAZARDS CONNECTED TO CONSTRUCTION, REPAIR

Asbestos found in many common goods

By WILLIAM KIMBALL
Hair dryers are not the only product that contain the health-hazardous substance asbestos, according to a recent Kearney Report.

The report, compiled for the Consumer Product Safety Commission in Washington D.C. by a private consulting firm, maintains asbestos can be found in over 100 common products.

Included in the list are toasters, slow cookers, stoves and varnishes, ranges and ovens, automotive mufflers, polishing compounds, fireplace ash and logs, floor tiles, cement sheets for construction and cigar and cigarette filters.

Just about anything that is made to be heat resistant or containing a heating element has asbestos, the report said.

Heidi Bowers, spokesperson for the Consumer Products Safety Commission, said the agency may try to investigate each product on a case-by-case basis, but may be limited by time and expense.

The Kearney Report, which was delivered to the CPSC in April 1978, was not acted upon until April of this year and is currently under investigation by a U.S. Senate consumer sub-committee, chaired by Sen. Wendell Ford, D. Ken.

Martha Malloney, a Ford aide, said the main problem seems to be the health hazard for people who repair and use asbestos products eight hours a day at work.

"The senator is very concerned about professional beauticians who work all day around the hooded hair dryers which may emit high levels of asbestos fibers into the air," Maloney said.

"The committee investigation will stretch through the summer and one of the issues will certainly be some form of workman's health plan," she added.

The Kearney Report said if a product contains asbestos it does not necessarily become a health hazard. The product must be constructed in such a manner that fibers can be released into the air by abrasion or wear and tear.

Repairpeople who dismantle hair dryers, toasters, ovens and slow cookers, people who take damaged mufflers off cars and construction workers who demolish cement sheets and floor tiles which contain asbestos, are the most likely candidates for future health problems, the report said.

The Kearney Report also stated although asbestos has been linked to asbestosis, a slow, irreversible degradation of lung function, mesothelioma, a cancer which spreads rapidly through the pleural or peritoneal cavity, and other organ cancers, nothing has been done to curb the growing use of asbestos in products.

"Currently, the overall use of asbestos in the United States appears to be increasing at the rate approximating economic growth," the report stated.

Department of Languages hosts own Award Day

The Department of Romance and Classical Languages is hosting its Second Annual Awards Day at 4 p.m. today in the Honors College lounge.

Students to be honored include:

Bruce Barron, Barbara Brady, Dana Clinton, Elsa Cortina, Cheryl Dancy, Tamera Hamilton, Heather Hoffman, Robert Koons, Joseph Krause, Carl Mentley, Dorene Rosenbloom and Josefina Ruiz.

'Mary Sunshine' lively

Heath displays the forcefulness of a would-be femme fatale. The rapport between Heath and Scott Baker as Billy Jester is particularly good in their number, "Once in a Blue Moon."

Other cast members are excellent in more minor roles. David Milstein is physically perfect as Chief Brown Bear and is appropriately gruff and stone-faced. Barbara Milstein maintains a believable German accent as Madame Ernestine Von Liebedich, a former opera singer who for some unknown reason is residing with Little Mary at the Colorado Inn. Milstein retains her composure admirably while delivering her combination of German and English that results in such phrases as "I just put zwei und zwei together" or "mit snow." She and Bill Helder as the harmlessly lecherous General Oscar Fairfax interact beautifully in their song, "Do You Ever Dream of Vienna?"

Because of the liveliness of the songs and script, Little Mary Sunshine holds audience attention. However, occasionally the show suffers from sluggishness and too-consistent an energy level. More songs demand the kind of sharpness and attention that "The Colorado Love Call" exhibits. While the young ladies from the finishing school come across as individuals and maintain interest, the forest rangers frequently looked bored and somewhat lethargic. On the whole, however, the production keeps the audience charmed and transported to a rarely found fantasy world.

Little Mary Sunshine continues at the Okemos Barn Theatre Thursday through Sunday. Curtain time is at 8 p.m. and special discounts are available for students and senior citizens.
