AFFIRMATIVE ACTION AGREEMENT REACHED

'U' to review job decisions

By DENNIS PETROSKEY
State News Staff Writer

MSU administrators will review, and possibly intervene, in all employment and promotion decisions affecting minorities and women.

The action will be taken in accordance with an affirmative action agreement negotiated with the U.S. Department of Labor.

University officials have agreed to monitor the progress of tenure, promotions and reappointments given to women and minorities in the tenure system, according to the agreement released Monday.

The document said MSU's affirmative action plan, implemented on Jan. 29, addresses these problem areas and will be reviewed by deans, the provost and federal compliance officials.

The Office of the President will be responsible for promotion and employment decisions at lower administrative levels as a result of the agreement.

While conducting the first on-campus audit of MSU's affirmative action plan for hiring and promotion, federal compliance officials found a disproportionate number of women in non-tenure jobs, as well as an imbalance in the ratio of men in tenure positions.

Terms of the agreement apply both to academic and non-academic personnel.

According to the document, the University recognizes the need to review the salary structure of the tenure system for irregularities.

Compliance investigators found women were often paid less than men with equal qualifications. MSU is required to review these differences by applying criteria used in a similar review conducted in 1974-75.

While the agreement cited no cases of racial discrimination, investigators found an obvious case of sex discrimination arising from salary discrepancies paid by the Athletic Department.

The University has agreed that the salary discrepancy exists, but "since the case has been uncovered only recently, the University has not had sufficient time to study the full reasons for the discrepancy," the document said.

The woman in question is to receive a salary adjustment from the University, the agreement said. She was also a victim of a "negative" tenure recommendation, allegedly based on sex, the document said.

A simultaneous review of joint appointments of individuals between the Department of Health, Physical Education and Recreation and the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics will also be conducted under terms of the agreement.

Compliance investigators found discrepancies in the way the University pays men and women coaches.

"Implications of this employment practice for salaries, reappointments or tenure for members of the protected class of females will be evaluated and reported," the agreement said.

MSU was also found to be deficient in its hiring of women and minorities in non-academic jobs.

MSU has failed to "accurately protect job opportunities and document good-faith efforts during the first seven months of the affirmative action plan year," the document said.

According to the agreement, the problem arose from unreliable projections of job opportunities, resulting in underutilization of minorities and women.

President's Cabinet, staff submit resignation offers

By FRANK CORMIER
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — President Carter requested and received offers of resignation from his entire Cabinet and senior White House staff Tuesday in a stunning new effort to revive his troubled presidency.

One aide, who asked not to be named and who was among those affected, said he had no doubt the president would accept some of the resignation offers.

Speculation about possible Cabinet changes has centered on Energy Secretary James R. Schlesinger, who said earlier Tuesday that he had told Carter weeks ago that he planned to resign "well before" the start of the 1980 presidential primaries.

Schlesinger, who has been the target of much criticism for the nation's energy problems, said on NBC's "Today" show that "I do not think that in the Democratic primaries that I would necessarily be an asset."

There also has been speculation that Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal and HEW Secretary Joseph Califano might be on the way out because they reportedly have antagonized Carter's top White House advisers.

Reporters were given authoritative, if anonymous, word that Carter would not accept resignations from three members of his national security team: Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, Defense Secretary Harold Brown and national security adviser Zbigniew Brzezinski.

The resignations were requested at a Cabinet meeting Tuesday morning. A White House spokesperson would not say who did the asking. However, two government sources said Carter made the request himself. No one else would have that authority, anyhow.

"They were offered," said one official. "... We felt it would be an appropriate step to take at this particular time."

The prelude to a shakeup of Carter's high command came after two days of presidential addresses in which Carter said the nation is beset by a "crisis of confidence" and urged Americans to rally back to unity around a $142 billion energy program.

The development was reminiscent of former President Richard M. Nixon's 1972 demand for standby resignations were accepted by Nixon.

The offers were submitted by all presidential assistants and special assistants, including such White House luminaries as Powell and key Carter adviser Hamilton Jordan.

CHEMICAL WASTES TO BE REMOVED

Dumps being excavated

By DEBBIE CREEMERS
State News Staff Writer

Two chemical waste disposal sites — still under investigation by the Department of Natural Resources are being excavated, the State News has learned.

The two waste sites are located 600 yards southwest of the Jolly and Hagadorn roads intersection and behind Power Plant 65 near the South Complex residence halls.

Excavation began Monday at the Jolly Road site under DNR supervision.

The site is being excavated by A1 Disposal, a commercial firm in Plainwell, Mich., contracted by the University, said Robert Hayes, a geologist in the Water Quality Division of the DNR.

Hayes said excavation at the Power Plant site will begin today or Thursday.

The excavated materials will be shipped to an appropriate waste disposal site in- or out-of-state, Hayes said.

"The liquid waste in the concrete pit was pumped out Monday," Hayes said, "and is currently stored in 55-gallon barrels around the Jolly Road site awaiting disposal."

The excavated soil is being piled on plastic sheets. Hayes said it will remain there until samples taken from the soil are tested for the amount and type of contamination involved.

"As soon as test results are in, we'll decide how and where to dispose of it," Hayes said. The site selected could be a normal landfill site if contamination was minimal, he said.

The amount of contamination in the area seemed to be a topic of dispute.

State News staff were refused permission to photograph the University-owned site Tuesday by A1 on-site supervisor Bill Anderson, who cited danger of contamination as reason for a threat to call the State Police.

A1 workers and DNR officials wore masks to deter the danger of exposure. But Matthew Zabik, associate director of the Pesticide Research Center and director of tests for organic chemicals in the area, dismissed talk of danger, calling the excavation effort "much ado about nothing."

"The contamination present is very small comparatively speaking — very minor," Zabik said.

Frank D'Itri, professor in the Institute of Water Research, conducted chemical analyses of heavy metal and nutrient content in water taken from observation

Perrin accepts position; will rejoin former MSU president in New York

By DENNIS PETROSKEY
State News Staff Writer

MSU Vice President Robert Perrin will rejoin former MSU President Clifton Wharton when he takes over as vice chancellor for university affairs and development at the State University of New York in mid-September.

Perrin, who has served nine-and-one-half years as vice president for University and federal relations, was appointed to his new position by the SUNY Board of Trustees Friday. "I'm very enthusiastic about my opportunity to rejoin Dr. Wharton," Perrin said. "I enjoyed my relationship with him when he was here and I'm looking forward to working with him again."

The chance to work with Wharton and the challenge of working for the largest university system in the world were major reasons for leaving MSU, Perrin said.

"The nature of SUNY was a factor in my decision," he said. "Being such a large and diverse university, it represents a significant challenge in my professional career."

SUNY is the world's largest university system with 64 campuses throughout the state of New York. Central administration for the system is headquartered in Albany.

Wharton, who worked with Perrin when he served as president of MSU before becoming Chancellor of SUNY, said he is "very pleased" Perrin accepted the offer.

"Mr. Perrin and I worked extremely well together when I was at MSU," Wharton said. "I was pleased when the selection committee recommended him to me because it reinforced my own judgments about him."

MSU President Edgar L. Harden said he thinks it will be a "happy marriage" between Perrin and Wharton.

"They had worked well together when former President Wharton was here," Harden said.

As vice chancellor at SUNY, Perrin said he will be responsible for communications, publications, alumni affairs, fund raising and acting as liaison between SUNY's central administration and the media.

Perrin said he does not know when he will step down from his position at MSU.

JFK: probable 'gang plot' victim

By JIM ADAMS
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — John F. Kennedy was the victim of a probable murder conspiracy that possibly can be traced to an individual organized crime figure or a small underworld group, the House assassinations committee concluded in its final report Tuesday.

It is "possible... that a individual organized crime leader or a small combination of leaders might have participated in a conspiracy" in the Kennedy assassination in Dallas on Nov. 22, 1963, the now-defunct 12-member panel concluded.

The committee's final report, culminating more than two years of study and a host of hearings, also concluded that a conspiracy may have been behind the 1968 assassination of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

The committee went out of business on Dec. 31, 1978, after spending nearly $6 million investigating the two assassinations. A skeleton staff headed by chief counsel G. Robert Blakey finished the panel's final report.

The report also said there is "substantial evidence to establish the existence of a St. Louis-based conspiracy to finance the assassination" of King, the famed civil rights leader.

But it also said that while investigators raised the possibility of conspiracies in both the Kennedy and King cases, they were unable to positively identify the conspirators.

The House panel had concluded tentatively in December that Kennedy's slaying was a "probable" conspiracy and that King's was the result of a "possible" conspiracy.

The final report conformed to the preliminary finding, but went further in developing the conspiracy theories.

The report released Tuesday, months after the committee passed out of existence, named Carlos Marcello and Santos Traf-

Officials of the Communications Workers of America presented President Carter with a replica of the Liberty Bell after he addressed the group's 41st annual convention at Cobo Hall in Detroit Monday.

Carter tells Detroit of 'revitalization' plan

By JAMES KATES
State News Staff Writer

President Carter brought his "revitalization campaign" to Detroit Monday, asking an enthusiastic crowd in Cobo Hall to join him in "a rebirth of the American spirit."

Speaking before 2,100 delegates at a convention of the Communications Workers of America, Carter said the prime tasks facing the nation included restoring public confidence, revitalizing basic human values and restoring a sense of national unity.

"Your concern, your sacrifices, your values, your participation, will determine the future life of a nation which we all love," the president said.

Carter's 15-minute speech, focusing more on the mood of the country than its energy problems, drew frequent applause from the group.

The talk was followed by a 40-minute question-and-answer period, during which a dozen union members didn't hesitate to speak up about their problems — notably, Carter's 7 percent wage increase guideline.

But despite the scrutiny given the president's proposals, the mood was upbeat. Carter entered the hall amid strains of "Hail to the Chief," took the steps to the speaker's platform two at a time, and removed his jacket under the 86-degree heat of the television lights. His tone was enthusiastic, his gestures frequent.

As he had only hours earlier in Kansas City, Mo., the president asked his audience,

"Do I have your commitment for a greater America?" His answer — a standing ovation.

It was in Kansas City that Carter had revealed details of his energy conservation and development plan — a $142.2 billion scheme to be financed largely by a proposed "windfall profits tax" on oil companies.

The plan — the most massive peacetime program ever undertaken — would involve rapid-fire development of alternative fuel sources such as solar energy and oil shale.

Much of the governmental "red tape" could be cut, Carter asserted, by delegating responsibility to an independent Energy Security Corp. funded by the sale of bonds.

An independent Energy Mobilization Board, he said, could help speed the projects just as wartime boards have coordinated defense production.

See related story on Page 3.

In Detroit, Carter spoke little about his energy proposals, choosing instead to focus on America's "crisis of confidence." A crisis, he said, which can only be resolved if Americans are honest about themselves.

"Our future will equal the promise of the past only if we face the truth, heed the warning, and change our course," Carter said.

In a request reminiscent of his 1976

Somoza bows to guerrilla pressure, his successor inherits fresh fighting

By TOM WELLS
Associated Press Writer

MANAGUA, Nicaragua — President Anastasio Somoza bowed to seven weeks of Sandinista guerrilla rebellion and fled to exile in Florida on Tuesday.

But fresh fighting broke out when Somoza's successor, a close friend, took charge and apparently decided to cling to power.

The successor, Francisco Urcuyo, was elected by Nicaragua's legislature after midnight as Somoza prepared to fly out of Nicaragua.

At first, he was expected to hand over quickly to the rebels. Thousands in rebel-held areas danced all night when the news of Somoza's resignation spread, and the State Department said in Washington it hoped for a new beginning in relations with Nicaragua.

Then reports spread of Urcuyo's intention to retain power. Diplomatic sources in San Jose, the Costa Rican capital where rebel junta members waited to fly back to Managua, said Urcuyo had let it be known he intended to finish out Somoza's term — meaning he would stay in power until 1981.

Outside rebel-held Masaya, reporters saw a Sherman tank, two armored cars and artillery lash out at guerrilla positions. Government sources reported more fighting in Sapoa and other towns in southern Nicaragua.

Instead of offering a cease-fire, which junta members were reported seeking, Urcuyo went on the radio for 10 minutes and said: "I urge all irregular forces to lay down their arms for the benefit of the country."

Urcuyo's new commander of the Nicaraguan national guard, Lt. Col. Federico Mejia, issued a statement read over national radio that all officers and soldiers should redouble efforts "in the current fight."

The United States welcomed the demise of the Somoza regime in Nicaragua despite more than 40 years of close ties to that Central American government.

The State Department said the United States now wants a fresh

French Jew first European Parliament prexy

STRASBOURG, France (AP) — The European Parliament, history's first directly elected multinational assembly, opened its inaugural session Tuesday and elected as its first president Simone Veil, a French-Jewish woman who survived the Auschwitz death camp.

Veil, a 52-year-old grandmother, narrowly missed election on the first ballot by the deputies, but emerged victorious in the second round, receiving 192 votes, three more than the required majority of 189.

Veteran Italian Socialist Mario Zagari, 65, received 138 votes, and Giorgio Amendola, an Italian Communist, got 47.

All but six of the 410 deputies attended the session, 400 voted and 23 ballots were invalid or blank.

After 45 seconds of applause from the conservative and liberal bloc, Veil took the chair and thanked the house "for the great display of trust you have shown in me."

Boat people face death; conference begins

HONG KONG (AP) — For 370,000 Indochinese refugees crowded in camps across Southeast Asia and thousands more jammed into boats on the high seas, this week's conference in Geneva holds the key to new life or, perhaps, death.

Top leaders from more than 60 nations who will attend the U.N. Conference on Indochina Refugees Friday and Saturday have one critical decision to make: Will enough of their countries guarantee resettlement for the refugees already in camps and the thousands yet to come?

Five Southeast Asian nations, all struggling to care for their own populations and now inundated with a total of 370,000 unwanted refugees from Vietnam, Cambodia and Laos, anxiously await the decision.

Malaysia warned Tuesday that if nothing much is done in Geneva, it will have no choice but to force the 73,500 refugees now in its transit camps back out to sea.

Since Malaysian Prime Minister Hussein Onn announced on June 18 that all arriving "boat people" would be prevented from landing, more than 16,000 refugees have been towed out in 85 boats — an unknown number to death from starvation or drowning.

Ford auto talks begin; mood lighthearted

DETROIT (UPI) — Economically crucial auto industry contract talks began in a lighthearted mood Tuesday at Ford Motor Co. in stark contrast with an angry bargaining session a day earlier at General Motors Corp.

Without going into specifics, United Auto Workers Union officials gave Ford executives an outline of demands for wage increases, shorter hours and improved pension benefits.

Sidney F. McKenna, Ford's chief negotiator, appealed for a settlement without a strike — echoing statements by top executives at GM, which analysts say may be picked as the union's strike target this fall.

Contracts for 750,000 U.S. auto workers expire Sept. 14. Economists have said a strike could aggravate a recession this year, while the size of the settlement could have considerable bearing on federal attempts to hold down wages and prices.

Bargaining begins today at Chrysler Corp., the last of the Big Three auto firms involved in the talks.

New doll Sugar Babe for 'closet diabetics'

PRINCETON, N.J. (AP) — Dolls marketed by Madison Avenue can cry, wet, talk, walk and even dance. Sugar Babe does not do any tricks, but her creator says the doll can help "closet diabetics" — children ashamed of their condition.

The doll was designed by Lory Needelman, 37, a diabetic since age 19. What Sugar Babe does that other dolls are not designed to do is receive injections — as do many of the estimated 1.5 million diabetic children in the United States.

Some 20 million to 30 million Americans suffer from diabetes, a condition in which their bodies fail to produce enough insulin to metabolize sugar. It is a leading cause of blindness in the nation, and is most serious when it develops during childhood.

Needelman, who has two children, says playing with Sugar Babe teaches children that diabetes is nothing to be ashamed about.

"Playing with the doll encourages children to talk to it and keep from acting like 'closet diabetics,'" she said.

CBS begins West Coast edition

LOS ANGELES (AP) — CBS will begin a West Coast edition of its evening news program next month, in an effort to update the main news program taped three hours earlier in New York, the network announced Tuesday.

CBS would be the first network to split its newscasts between the East and West coasts.

The "CBS News With Walter Cronkite" will still be seen by viewers in the Pacific time zone, but the portions of Cronkite's program dealing with the three-hour-old breaking news would be deleted and replaced with latest national and international reports via the Los Angeles bureau.

"There is scarcely a product in the world as perishable as news," Cronkite said in a release. "It is alive and vibrant and exciting, when it is NOW, when it is the latest news you can deliver to the audience. With each passing moment, it becomes more stale."

The West Coast edition will begin Aug. 27, and will be anchored by Correspondent Terry Drinkwater, said Bill Leonard, head of CBS News.

Historic N.Y. jail slams its door

JOHNSTOWN, N.Y. (AP) — Cell doors have been slamming shut at the Fulton County Jail here since 1772, but the keys probably have been hung up for the last time.

The two-story, cobblestone jail turned out what is expected to be its last prisoner Monday after the state Commission on Correction threatened to order it closed as a fire trap.

"I think it may have been the oldest continuously operating jail in the country," said Michael Mongin, chairperson of the county Board of Supervisor's Public Safety Committee, on Tuesday. "George Washington inspected it in 1783. It was considered the pride of the Revolutionary forces."

Mongin said the jail had been an integral part of Fort Johnstown which guarded the Mohawk Valley frontier during the Revolution.

"There's great historic interest in the facility and the board has agreed to do all it can to see that it is used as a museum or for some historic purpose," said Mongin.

POLL SAYS CONFIDENCE IN PRESIDENT STILL LOW

Public accepts Carter speech

NEW YORK (AP) — Americans agree with President Carter that the nation faces a crisis of confidence and that the world is ensnared in an energy crisis, a new Associated Press-NBC News poll shows.

But most of the public is not ready to say Carter is a strong leader as the United States faces the quagmire of energy shortages, continuing inflation and national malaise.

The poll, taken Monday after Carter's speech to the nation Sunday, found the president's job rating essentially unchanged from that found at the first of May. Americans, deeply worried about inflation and the economy, still rate Carter's efforts at the lowest levels of his administration.

Carter's speech Sunday was a report to the country on what he heard and learned at the "domestic summit" at Camp David, Md., as well as the unveiling of his initiatives to deal with the energy crisis.

The public overwhelmingly joins Carter in seeing a confidence crisis. Here is the exact question and the results:

"President Carter said that America faces a crisis of confidence. Do you agree or disagree with that statement?"

Agree — 79 percent
Disagree — 14 percent
"The energy crisis is real. It is worldwide," Carter also said Sunday.

Fifty-six percent of the public agrees that the world is gripped by an energy crisis, while 39 percent said there is no crisis.

Five percent of the 794 adults interviewed by telephone across country were not sure. Although the public agrees with some of Carter's words and perceptions, they remain skeptical of his leadership, reserving judgment on his actions still to come.

"How would you rate Jimmy Carter as a leader? Would you say he is a very strong leader, a strong leader, a weak leader or a very weak leader?"

Motorists and pedestrians in Albany, N.Y. were surprised as female pilots cruised down Route 155 on their way to a convention.

Carter may receive rationing authority

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House Commerce Committee moved Tuesday to give President Carter the standby gasoline rationing authority he requested.

Final committee approval of the legislation seemed assured as it rejected, on an 18-4 test vote, an amendment by William E. Dannemeyer, R-Calif., that would have had the effect of striking the rationing section from the bill.

Other attempts to make major changes in the bill were also rejected. The measure would reverse a House vote in May denying Carter rationing authority.

House leaders hope to bring the bill to the floor next week. The committee's approval of the bill would mark the first congressional action on any of the measures outlined by Carter in his new plan for dealing with national energy scarcities.

Long gas lines and climbing fuel prices — along with the president's new appeal for national energy unity — are generally credited with building support for the measure.

In his Sunday broadcast to the nation and in speeches on Monday, the president asked for standby rationing authority.

"No one in his right mind wants to impose rationing. But this is a plan that should be in the president's toolbox," said Rep. Phil Gramm, D-Texas.

The bill would allow the president to invoke rationing if the nation experienced a 20 percent decrease in supplies from the previous year — or even if such a shortage appeared likely to the president.

Congress would then have 15 days to review the plan, during which either chamber could vote to veto it.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two former chiefs of naval operations testified Tuesday that the negotiators of the SALT II treaty "flubbed" their job and handed the Soviet Union war-winning nuclear superiority. But two other retired four-star admirals and a former chief of the Strategic Air Command said a good bargain was achieved for both nations and that the treaty makes nuclear war less likely.

Admirals: U.S. 'flubbed' SALT

Adm. Noel Gayler, a former head of the National Security Agency said rejection of the pact would "ruin the arms-control process" and that because SALT II does put a ceiling on nuclear arms, "in its modest way it is a good thing."

"There seems to be a preoccupation with whether we or they got a better bargain," Gayler said. "The fact is that we both got a good bargain. When we cut a bargain to the advantage of both adversaries and the world, we should stick with it."

Retired Adm. Isaac Kidd and Retired Air Force Gen. Russell E. Dougherty also endorsed the treaty in the sixth day of testimony about the pact before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

But Adm. Elmo Zumwalt said he believes the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the NATO allies endorsed SALT II only because the Carter administration used "the awesome, raw, naked power of the presidency to bring people into line."

And Adm. Thomas Moorer said rejecting the treaty would be better than ratifying it as is. Zumwalt said he believes that would result in "six or seven months of Soviet bellicosity, after which the Soviets would come back and negotiate in good faith."

Former DES producer will appeal woman's suit

NEW YORK (UPI) — Eli Lilly & Co. said Tuesday it will appeal a state Supreme Court jury's decision ordering it to pay $500,000 to a woman who contracted vaginal cancer from a synthetic hormone taken by her mother during pregnancy.

A three-man, three-woman jury ruled Monday Lilly was liable for damages even though the woman, Joyce Biehler, 25, could not prove Lilly manufactured the drug her mother had taken.

The verdict was the first successful suit against a manufacturer of DES, or diethylstilbestrol, which was widely used from 1941 and 1971 to prevent miscarriages.

Similar DES cases are pending in California and Michigan. In the trial, Biehler's attorney, Leonard L. Finz, a former state Supreme Court justice, used an untested legal approach of claiming joint enterprise liability.

Finz claimed that manufacturers of DES had a common responsibility to make sure the drug was safe. Lilly was one of the first and largest of about 300 firms that manufactured DES. He said Lilly had "43 percent of the DES market."

"The entire pharmaceutical industry produced a generic drug in a joint, concerted and cooperative manner," he said.

"Therefore, we claim that the production of that drug by all of the manufacturers made each individually and severally liable for any harm that that drug caused."

DES was linked in 1971 to clear cell adenocarcinoma in the daughters of women who took it during pregnancy.

Although clear cell cancer is rare, about 90 percent of the daughters of women who took DES during pregnancy suffer from adenosis — the abnormal presence of benign glandular tissue in the vagina. Fran Fishbane, head of DES Action, said.

News conference on Miller case called

LANSING (UPI) — Ingham County officials called a news conference for today to announce new developments in the case of Donald Gene Miller, an ex-security guard who has admitted killing two East Lansing women.

Lansing radio station WILS quoted law enforcement sources as saying county prosecutor Peter Houk had attended an autopsy Tuesday.

There were unconfirmed reports the autopsy was performed on the body of Michigan State University student Wendy Bush, who vanished last year.

Houk would say only that "significant developments" would be discussed at the Wednesday briefing.

At a news conference Saturday, Houk said Miller was a suspect in both the disappearance of Bush and mutilation slaying of Marita Choquette, an editorial assistant at WKAR-TV on the MSU campus, last summer.

Bush, 19, was last seen talking with a man on the MSU campus June 27, 1978.

Miller, 24, led police Friday to the skeletons of his ex-fiance, Martha Sue Young, and East Lansing science teacher Kristine Rose Stuart in exchange for a plea bargaining agreement.

He will be allowed to plead guilty to voluntary manslaughter in the cases.

Young disappeared after a New Year's Eve date with Miller in 1977 and Stuart was last seen walking near her home last August.

Miller, convicted in May of raping a Lansing area teenager and trying to kill her and her brother, currently is serving a 30- to 50-year term in Southern Michigan Prison at Jackson.

Houk said he agreed to plea bargain with the scripture-spouting Miller in exchange for recovering the bodies of Young and Stuart.

Miller originally was charged with second degree murder in the slayings, even though the women's bodies had not been found.

The bodies were found about 20 miles apart in Clinton County, 25 miles north of Lansing. Young's skeleton was found in a wooded area of Priggois Park and Stuart's remains were in a farm drainage ditch near U.S. 27.

The maximum sentence for voluntary manslaughter is 15 years.

SHOTS ARE A 'PAIN IN THE STOMACH'

Rabies vaccinations called painful

By JEFF MINAHAN
State News Staff Writer

Thirty-eight people getting 21 shots in the stomach at Olin Health Center to prevent rabies have long forgotten the reassuring words of childhood, "It will only hurt a little bit."

The culprit behind the vaccinations, which MSU Veterinary Clinic officials call "very painful," is a cat which was brought to the small animal clinic in June. The cat was treated in the intensive care unit of the clinic for nine days and died on June 26.

An autopsy later revealed that the cat had been infected with rabies. According to clinic officials, the cat displayed no symptoms of rabies, and for that reason the potentially fatal disease was ruled out.

Clinic officials said they suspect a rare strain of rabies, which would account for the unique symptoms displayed by the cat.

Upon discovery of the rabies, an intensive search was initiated for any persons who might have come in contact with the cat during its stay at the clinic. Some people were even called who were on their vacations, a clinic administrator said.

Any person whose bare skin came into contact with the saliva of the cat was considered exposed, said Dr. Norman McCullough, MSU professor of medicine who is supervising the vaccinations.

The people receiving vaccinations were separated into two groups, McCullough said. The treatment people received depended on whether they had previously had a protective immunization against rabies which was recommended by the Veterinary Clinic, he said.

Those who had not received the protective immunization were given a special formula designed to slow down the disease and then placed on a series of 21 daily injections. These would be followed by two boosters at 10 day intervals.

Those who had received the protective immunization were put on a series of five boosters, unless tests indicated that the amount of antibodies in their systems were too low. If this occurred, these people would be put on the same treatment as the first group.

"I get up in the morning and figure it's no big deal and I've got to finish them," said Lynn Cowan, a technician in the intensive care unit.

Cowan had to be called back from her vacation to begin the treatments. She said she considered whether she should go through with them.

"I decided I would rather live and take the 21 shots than die of rabies. Who wants to take the chance of dying?" she asked.

For Cathy McGee, another technician, it is the second time she has had to go through these vaccinations. McGee said a similar incident occurred at another job about a year and a half ago.

Mitch Rodu, a senior veterinary student who conducted the initial physical examination on the cat when it was admitted to the clinic, admitted being "pretty bummed" when he found out he would have to take the shots.

Rodu said the discovery of rabies came as a shock to him, but he does not have any fears that he will contract the disease.

"I never really thought about it seriously happening," he said. "I guess it's just one of the hazards of the job."

McCullough said Monday the vaccinations are proceeding with no complications.

Some of the people will be finished with the treatment in a week and others in 10 days, he said.

Injunction stops audiology prof's tape disclosure

By MICHELE McELMURRY
State News Staff Writer

An MSU professor has been temporarily barred from disclosing the results of his work on tapes considered to be key evidence in the 1978 murder of Italian Premier Aldo Moro.

Circuit Court Judge Thomas L. Brown signed a temporary injunction Friday preventing Oscar Tosi, MSU professor of audiology and speech, from sending a report of his work to Italian authorities.

According to Judge Brown, this "so-called report," known under Roman law as processo verbale, would reveal the results of Tosi's findings.

Under the injunction, Tosi may continue to analyze the tapes but cannot disclose the results until a full hearing is held in Circuit Court.

Tosi, a world-renowned voice print expert, had been asked in May by the attorney general's office in Rome to examine tape-recorded telephone calls to Moro's widow by the premier's kidnappers.

Moro, former Italian premier and a leading candidate for Italy's presidency, was kidnapped March 16, 1978 and found dead 55 days later in the back of a car in Rome.

Italian police believe Antonio Negri, the founder of the Red Brigades and a political science professor at the University of Padua, is responsible for the kidnapping and murder of Moro.

Negri, who was arrested April 7 with another suspect in Moro's slaying, has been imprisoned in Rome since that time. The key piece of evidence against Negri is reportedly the taped telephone conversations to Moro's widow. Italian police believe Negri's voice is one of those on the tape.

Last month, Italian Judge Rosario Priore and prosecuting attorney Guido Guasco arrived in East Lansing to deliver the tapes to Tosi and to help "observe and assist him" in his work.

On the day the two Italian officials gave Tosi the tapes, Paul Bricker, an attorney for Negri, arrived at MSU and accused the officials of taking testimony from Tosi.

Bricker claimed illegal court hearings were being conducted at the University in

Groundbreaking set for new arts center

A groundbreaking ceremony for the MSU Center for the Performing Arts will be held Thursday at 2 p.m. at Bogue Street between Wilson Road and Shaw Lane.

MSU administrators and other state officials are expected to be on hand for the ceremony. The 30-piece MSU Symphonic Band will provide musical entertainment.

In the event of rain, a ceremony will be held in the Veterinary Clinical Center auditorium across from the center site. The groundbreaking is open to the public.

The performing arts center is expected to be completed in 1981, with construction to begin this fall.

Africa forum

will feature key women

A forum on "African Development Programs and African Women: An Assessment for the 1980s" will be held Thursday at 2 p.m. in Room 204 of the MSU International Center.

The forum will bring together sixteen African women who hold key positions in their home countries to discuss non-formal education as it pertains to women in their professions.

The forum is sponsored by the African Studies Center, the Non-Formal Education Information Center and the Office of Women in International Development at MSU.

The forum is free and open to the public.

Correction

A story in Monday's State News incorrectly identified Dennis Castille as a member of the Board of Water and Light. Castille is a public relations spokesperson for the board.

The story also said the board "would" prepare educational materials for distribution before an upcoming poll. Castille said the materials "may" be distributed.

Olin Health Center receives accreditation

Olin Health Center has received the Certificate of Accreditation by the Joint Commission on Accreditation of Hospitals.

The JCAH is the acknowledged accreditation program for all hospitals in the country, said James Cooke, Olin administrator.

Olin received a two-year accreditation effective until February of 1981, he said.

The accreditation means that Olin has voluntarily chosen to be measured by standards developed by the joint commission and has been found to be in compliance with them.

A professional team from the commission, consisting of a physician, an administrator, a nurse and a medical technician, conducted a thorough survey of the hospital, Cooke said.

The survey consisted of questionnaires and an on-site visit by the four-member team. The visit included conferences with professional staff and members of the governing body of the hospital.

Cooke said Olin has voluntarily taken part in the accreditation program since 1969, and has always received accreditation by the commission.

There are only two Big Ten schools whose health centers are accredited, he said. Besides MSU, only Purdue University has an accredited health center, he said.

The commission is a private, non-profit organization formed in 1951 to promote high quality in the provision of health care and related human services.

Member organizations are the American College of Physicians, the American College of Surgeons, American Hospital Association and the American Medical Association.

Council OKs one utility board nomination

By PAUL COX
State News Staff Writer

Lansing Mayor Gerald W. Graves will have to go back to the well of Board of Water and Light candidates, but only one will be needed this time.

Lansing City Council finally approved one of his nominations Monday night.

Council unanimously confirmed the nomination of Antonio Benavides, the director of the Cristo Rey Community Center. The council rejected the nomination of Lansing nurse Mary Scodeller by a 4 to 4 vote.

The negative voting block consisting of council vice president Terry J. McKane and councilmembers Richard J. Baker, Robert J. Hull and James D. Blair, was the same one that defeated the mayor's first two nominations.

The council earlier rejected the mayor's nominations of incumbent Boardmembers Horace Bradshaw and Diane Buckel.

Baker said his overall impressions of the nominees led him to support Benavides and oppose Scodeller.

"Benavides has the community experience and ability and Scodeller doesn't," Baker said.

Following the vote, Graves blasted the council for refusing to seat a second female nominee.

Councilmember Hull reacted to the mayor's charge by saying he would definitely vote for a woman if she were the right one, but Scodeller lacked the experience needed to improve the "complexion" of the utility board.

Hull said the board is currently uncooperative with the city of Lansing, and Scodeller was not the answer to this problem.

Graves said he will have another nomination ready by the council meeting next week.

A member of the city Housing Commission addressed the council in response to city attorney Stephen Sawyer's ruling that the commission violated the Open Meetings Act in June.

'U' NOT READY TO ACCOMMODATE INCREASED ENROLLMENT

New fuel use to increase demand for engineers

By ROLAND WILKERSON
State News Staff Writer

President Carter's call for the switching of energy-seeking efforts to coal, oil shale and gasohol will "create a big demand" for the short supply of chemical engineers, an MSU professor said Tuesday.

Enrollment in chemical engineering this fall will decrease rather than increase, said Donald K. Anderson, chairperson of the Department of Chemical Engineering.

About 87 students will be accepted, in contrast with 100 accepted last year, he said.

"We just don't have room for a major expansion," Anderson said. "We don't have the faculty or the facilities to enlarge the program at this time."

More chemical engineers will be needed to design, construct and run factories that will be producing synthetic fuels, Anderson said.

"There is already a bigger demand than supply for chemical engineers. For some time there will be a shortage."

Competition between government and private industry employers for available engineers will also increase, he said.

During the Faculty-Staff Blood Drive at MSU's Clinical Center, Lenore Jones of the horticulture department donates one of 61 pints collected at the bi-monthly drive Tuesday.

Employees may collect a tax credit

As a result of a new law, employees who meet certain requirements can now receive the Earned Income Credit in advance, during the year as they earn their income.

To qualify for the credit, employees must expect their income (including spouse's income if married) to be less than $10,000 for this year. They also must expect to claim an exemption for a child who will live with them. The Earned Income Credit can provide payments of up to $500 in a year.

Employees eligible for the advance credit should fill out Form W-5 Earned Income Credit Advance Payment Certificate, available at the Payroll Office, Room 350 Administration Bldg.

The credit will be given on the annual tax return even if advance payment is not requested.

The Form W-5 certificate expires on Dec. 31, 1979. If employees expect to qualify for Earned Income Credit in 1980, they must file a new certificate for 1980.

James R. Riley told council the executive session which violated the act was "an overzealous mistake." The commission has a limited budget and cannot always consult an attorney on legal points such as the Sunshine law, he said. The executive session was held to hear the grievance of a commission employee.

The commission did not purposely violate the act and this mistake will not be repeated in the future, Riley said.

"We were only trying to protect the parties involved," he said. He added that the commissioners are unpaid public servants who are doing a creditable job and have felt persecuted following the publicity surrounding the violation.

Riley called the publicity "much ado about nothing."

Councilmember-at-large Richard J. Baker said council was not trying to persecute the commission and commended the members for their unpaid diligence. He said, however, that any open meeting violation is a serious matter.

"When we are conducting the public's business we must conduct it in public," Baker said.

Riley also told council that a complete report on the operation of the commission requested by council had been delayed by the recent retirement of former commission director Marcell Elliot. He presented council with an interim report with "about 75 percent" of the information requested by council.

Baker said the council requested the report in response to a federal Housing and Urban Development department study which was received in February and pinpointed internal management problems within the commission.

Baker said the commission is allowing too much time to elapse between the time one tenant moves out of a city-owned house until the next tenant moves in — sometimes up to four months.

This means the city loses rent for that time and also the federal funds that make up the fair market value for the property, Baker said. This lost revenue has forced cutbacks in recreation programs at city housing projects, Baker said.

Anderson also said environment restrictions would have to be relaxed under Carter's proposals.

"We cannot accomplish what Carter wants to within the present pollution standards," he said, adding that the building of plants and processing techniques would harm the environment more than the actual burning of these fuels for energy.

Nuclear power, a controversial source, would also have to be "part of the (energy) package," Anderson said.

"To simply cast aside nuclear power as a future energy source would be unrealistic," Anderson said. Under the supervision of chemical engineering professor Carl M. Cooper, graduate student Said Abubakar is doing research on the future of oil shale as a practical energy source in Michigan.

Abubakar is testing the feasibility of building a fire underground, part of the process used to extract oil or combustible gases from oil shale.

Cooper said although he was optimistic about the future of oil shale, he did not "visualize oil shale as a major energy source in the next 10 years."

OPINION

President's goals need our support

Americans witnessed a new and more vibrant Jimmy Carter Sunday night. The president appeared more confident about himself and his goals as he spoke to an estimated television audience of 65 million. He was dramatic. He was forceful. He was even possibly angered. It now seems that he has taken command of his office and is capable of providing the leadership the country so desperately needs. But, regardless of the impact, the president's message is nothing more than words. Only actions, deliberate and expedient actions on the part of Congress and the American people, will save this country from the very real threat of economic stagnation.

Carter briefly outlined his plan to combat the nation's energy woes. He proposed an unprecedented $142.2 billion for energy security legislation to be spent in the next 10 years. This proposal is unlike any commitment ever made for a peacetime cause. The funds, according to his Sunday night speech, will be appropriated to various agencies, newly-created governmental overseeing commissions, and other energy-related activities that Carter claims will assure America of energy security. It is an attempt, and a highly commendable one, to give this nation true freedom from the tightening yoke of oil producing countries.

But there was one very distressing issue Carter neglected. For reasons that may be political, he neglected to address the volatile topic of nuclear energy. What role does this controversial energy source have in our total energy supply for the future?

Today, Americans are justifiably leery of nuclear power. The Three Mile Island nuclear accident has given all of us, including pro-nuclear advocates, an all-too-real glimpse of the uncertainties surrounding the use of nuclear energy. Currently, 16 percent of our nation's energy is derived from nuclear sources. Will our new commitment to energy freedom include an increase in this percentage? This question, we feel, is extremely pertinent and should be answered without delay. The people of this country should not be forced to compromise their safety for any national commitment, no matter how important.

It was President Carter's comments on the state of our spirit, however, that deserve this editorial. Sunday night the president expounded on the lack of a national will — a "crisis of confidence" — that he feels has brought the country to a new low. We agree wholeheartedly. The ambience of the nation today is one of distrust and disgust, of uncertainty and disloyalty, of negativism and non-cooperation. We no longer feel confident about our future. And, as Carter pointed out Sunday, our institutions have greatly suffered because of it.

Consequently, this lack of confidence has contributed to our economic problems. We have become gluttonous; our insatiable appetite for consumption has been a major factor in our inability to alleviate our energy shortages. It will not be sufficient for us to "say something good about America" as Carter suggested. We must do things that will make others say good things about us.

While in Detroit, the president reiterated his comments concerning the unhealthy state of our national spirit, and offered his prescriptive remedies. He urged Americans to "revitalize our basic human values" and to "aspire for something better." It will be the responsibility of Congress, however, to instigate a more positive national mood. Its approval of the president's energy proposals will facilitate a resurgence in national unity and purpose.

The fact that we do not have a defined enemy in our struggle for energy independence makes our battle that much greater. It is time we looked into the mirror and became honest with ourselves. Only then will we see the real creators of our national problems and the only true source of those problems' solutions.

Towing legality needs questioning

Towing is legal.

So said Circuit Judge Robert Holmes Bell when he ruled last week that the University's controversial towing policy was legally sound. Citing sections of the MSU ordinance which sanctions towing under broad circumstances, the judge said the University had an adequate statutory and constitutional basis for removing vehicles improperly parked on University property. But the judge's ruling should further call to question the legality of MSU's towing ordinance.

Legally, Judge Bell exercised judicial responsibility in his decision. Plaintiff Karen Molony-Vierstra parked her car in violation of the ordinance as written, leaving the judge no choice but to rule against the over 7,000 students who were represented in the class action suit. But the court, it appears, neglected to consider the severity of punishment for parking violations on campus. It is distressing that the judge would uphold an established law even when the ordinance is unduly harsh on towing victims. We see no reason for the University to continue extorting $20 from students and staff simply because there is currently a law justifying the action. The law needs change, drastic change to make the punishment fit the crime.

It is not Judge Bell's responsibility to institute that change, although a thorough review of the towing problem might have prompted him to do so. Unfortunately, his ruling will retain an unpopular precedent to the satisfaction of the University and will put a damper on student rights in future towing incidents. Indeed, it will be harder to bring action against the University with the recent ruling now in the state's lawbooks.

Schools need criteria for teaching standard English

Jubilant. This is how Ann Arbor black parents, students and school faculty should feel.

They really do have a lot to be happy about if you consider the ruling a federal judge made in the controversial "Black English" case.

Federal Judge Charles W. Joiner ruled last week that black English becomes a language barrier if teachers do not take it into account when teaching standard English.

The judge's decision is indeed a landmark decision even though only Ann Arbor's Martin Luther King Jr. Elementary School is specified in the ruling.

But one thing that's very "standard" about the entire ruling is that Joiner also gave the Ann Arbor School Board 30 days to submit a special plan to teach reading to students whose primary language is black English.

Why did he go so far as to give the school board a definite time table in which it had to develop a plan without giving some criteria?

What Joiner should have done was give the school board some idea of what is an acceptable plan and what is not.

The order he has rendered could possibly take something that was intended to get the wheels turning on a language barrier problem and turn it into a disaster.

For so long in Detroit and other cities tutorial programs have been developed that were a waste of money.

What the school boards have done in the past is hire one or two full-time persons for each school to watch about 50 students an hour read. And then sometimes they would even give them a spelling test.

The major problem with this was that the employees were not reading specialists or trained to work with disadvantaged children in any fashion.

I sincerely hope that Ann Arbor's special program, once developed, will be a success and used as a model for other schools to follow across the country.

Many black students recently have begun to seek work in very technical areas yet are not competent in standard English.

Not being competent in standard English is not a language barrier because black English is a language that is widely used by 90 percent of black America at one time or another.

Some of them use it however and don't admit to it, but my statistics are far from being inaccurate.

I use black English and it is a tool I believe that has its right place and time just as most things in life.

It's something that I have used knowingly while watching myself swing between standard English and black English when the situation is suitable for one or the other.

I would never give up one for the other, but not having the advantage of speaking both is definitely detrimental for all minority groups.

And after the Ann Arbor area develops a special program to help those who use black English, I would like to also see one started at MSU and other campuses.

If you look at this problem realistically, when the special program begins in Ann Arbor, it's going to take two years before Ann Arbor and other cities have a chance to review its effect on the students.

Then it's going to take these other school districts another year or more to decide whether or not they are interested in having such a special program.

And during that time, thousands of black students will begin to attend colleges and other institutions of higher learning. These students will not be competent in standard English.

And they are not now competent in standard English because generally the schools they attended had teachers that were used to hearing black English and probably used it themselves.

This is true of most teachers who work in large metropolitan areas where black students dominate the schools.

It's something they too have got to become aware of because they are allowing black English to continue in the school system.

And as long as they allow it to be the popular language in the classroom, students will continue to leave for college and later find out they are ill-equipped to handle higher education.

And even though these students may successfully complete their education at various universities, the degrees they receive will only provide them with interviews, not necessarily jobs.

You've got to sell yourself to an employer; once you make it beyond getting the degree. And a part of selling yourself means you're going to have to go to him equipped with all essentials.

VIEWPOINT: ENERGY

Oil profits rising faster than world price increase

By MARTIN KUSHLER

Since energy is just about the hottest topic of interest this summer, I cannot resist adding my two cents worth to the debate. So here goes.

There is no doubt that the United States, and the world, face a serious long-term energy problem. There is also no doubt that the American public has failed to recognize the reality of this problem. A popular alternative view is that it is all a hoax drummed up by the oil companies to make money. Unfortunately, the sad reality is that there is both a long-term crisis and extensive oil company profiteering. The existence of the latter will continue to seriously jeopardize America's efforts to promote public cooperation and conservation.

A brief consideration of some information publically available (but not often focused upon) will illustrate the extent of the problem. Activate your math memory and follow along for a moment.

In mid-June the price of a barrel of OPEC oil stood at an average of $17 (including surcharges). As OPEC convened their latest meetings, the three television networks predicted a price hike to $20 a barrel (a rise of 18 percent) and quoted government and industry sources as saying that a price hike of this size would lead to a five-cents-a-gallon increase in U.S. gas prices. Using an average local price of regular gasoline of 90 cents a gallon, that would represent a 6 percent increase in gas prices resulting from an 18 percent rise in OPEC oil prices. We will call that six to 18 percent ratio (1 to 3) the "fair profit ratio," representing logical gas price hikes in response to OPEC oil price rises. Keep in mind that foreign oil makes up only half of our current consumption and that crude oil represents but a fraction of the cost of a gallon of gas. Other factors, such as labor, rent, etc., are rising in price much more slowly than OPEC crude. Hence a rise of x percent in OPEC crude should result in a much smaller increase in domestic gas prices, as the experts' predictions reflect.

Now return to December 1978 and observe that OPEC oil was priced at $12.70 a barrel. Between December and June, OPEC oil increased from $12.70 to $17.00 (including surcharges), for a 34 percent increase. Using our fair profit ratio, the corresponding rise in US gasoline prices due to the OPEC rise should have been approximately 11-and-one-third percent. To this we can generously add 1 percent a month to account for inflation in labor, materials, etc. (roughly paralleling the rate of inflation over this time period). Rounding off and giving the oil companies the extra fraction as a bonus, the overall fair profit rise in gas prices from December to June should have been approximately 18 percent. Or, assuming regular gas prices stood at around 65 cents a gallon in December (yes, it wasn't that long ago, folks), you should now be paying approximately 77 cents per gallon instead of the current 90 cents.

The difference between the two prices is purely and simply excess profit. (Remember, oil company profits were quite healthy even last year when gas was creeping up to 65 cents per gallon.) With some simple calculations, one can easily compute how much this extra profit is costing consumers. For example, in Michigan an approximate total of 4.6 billion gallons of gasoline were sold last year. Using these consumption figures, and spreading the price increase over time, the difference between an 18 percent fair profit price increase and the actual 38 percent price increase has cost Michigan consumers alone roughly an additional $140 million since December. If the current price discrepancy is maintained with no new price padding, the additional cost will be roughly $300 million more by the end of the year. (Now one can begin to understand how oil company profits can be showing such hefty increases.)

Finally, it should be mentioned that one effect of OPEC price increases is to pass along direct equivalent increases in prices and profits for U.S. oil companies on a substantial percentage of the oil they own. (With deregulation of old oil now proceeding, these unearned profits will increase even further.) CBS News estimated on July 9, for example, that U.S. oil companies will experience direct additional profits of $6.5 billion next year alone due solely to the latest OPEC price rise. (It's no wonder that U.S. oil companies have done virtually nothing to oppose OPEC from the time it was first formed through the present.)

In conclusion, let me return to my primary area of interest, which is energy conservation. There is certainly no need to repeat figures illustrating the extent of energy waste in this country. Such figures have appeared in these pages many times before. Indeed, in spite of all the recent talk of massive energy projects and synthetic fuels, energy experts unanimously concede that conservation is the quickest, easiest and cheapest way to make meaningful short-term contributions to solving our energy problem. Unfortunately, as the Carter administration is discovering, attempts at mobilizing public concern and cooperation are failing. There is a widespread suspicion, borne out in fact, that the oil industry is profiting handsomely while the rest of us pay the price. Indeed, the critically important national effort at conservation cannot be successful until consumers are convinced that the necessary burdens of this effort are being shared equitably. Have your governmental representatives heard from you lately?

Kushler is a graduate student in psychology.

GM recalls 1.8 million '78 cars

DETROIT (UPI) — General Motors Corp. Tuesday recalled 1.8 million 1978 model intermediate cars and light trucks to repair a possible front wheel bearing lubrication defect blamed for 17 accidents. The recall involves GM's entire 1978 model years production of the Chevrolet Malibu and Monte Carlo, Pontiac Lemans and Grand Prix, Oldsmobild Cutlass and Buick Century and Regal as well as the Chevrolet El Camino and GMC Caballero specialty trucks. GM said the defect causes front wheel bearings to lose grease — a situation that ultimately could produce a loss of vehicle control.

A company spokesperson said 17 property damage accidents have been reported in connection with the defect, but there were no reports of injuries.

The firm said it will mail notices advising owners of the recalled vehicles to take them to a dealer to install new outer wheel bearings packed with grease and new grease retainer caps.

In addition, the wheel spindle will be coated with lubricant, GM said.

The firm advised owners who have noticed front end noise or vibration to take the vehicles to a dealer immediately for inspection.

State commission OKs loans for energy users

By United Press International

The state Public Service Commission voted Tuesday to let Michigan utilities make interest-free energy conservation loans to their customers and pay for the program through higher rates.

The program, enacted through administrative rules given final approval by the PSC, is similar to one proposed by President Carter in his recent energy address.

Under the rules, utilities can make interest-free loans for insulation or furnace and flue modifications provided the cost of the project can be repaid within seven years through energy savings.

Officials said the program — which has been tied up for years by disputes in Congress and state government — could produce substantial energy savings.

Participating utilities can recover administrative expenses through rate hikes, but must demonstrate the loans eventually will result in lower rates as a result of energy savings.

"We are one of the first state regulatory commissions in the nation to adopt a program allowing utilities to provide interest-free loans which will help their customers save energy and money," said PSC chairperson Daniel Demlow.

State troopers shocked by Houdini-like getaway

DETROIT (UPI) — It was Tuesday the 17th, but it seemed more like Friday the 13th to the state police troopers who spotted a car weaving from lane to lane on the Chrysler Freeway.

The troopers stopped the car, slapped handcuffs on the driver and told him to sit in the back seat of their patrol car while they inspected his car.

Somehow, the driver — still handcuffed — managed to climb into the front seat of the police car and drove off.

The amazed troopers hopped into the suspect's car and gave chase, but the car ran out of gas before they could apprehend the wayward patrol car and its handcuffed driver.

A short time later, the police car was found abandoned in an alley in Highland Park. The driver was long gone — still wearing handcuffs.

Several hours later, police announced the arrest of a 26-year-old Detroit man in the case. The man, whose identity was withheld pending issuance of warrants, was spotted in a bookstore with a handcuff on one hand, police said.

The story doesn't end there.

A Highland Park police officer was sent to investigate the abandoned police car report. He put his own patrol car into gear and it burst into flames.

The officer escaped without injury. The cause of the incident is under investigation.

Gas customers will get credits

By United Press International

Consumers Power Co. gas customers will be getting credits averaging $14.54 on their August bills as a result of action taken Tuesday by the state Public Service Commission.

The PSC ordered the utility to refund $29.3 million to customers because it collected too much through its purchased gas adjustment clause between May, 1978 and March 31, 1979.

The standardized purchased gas adjustment clause allows a utility to recover from its customers certain increases in the costs of its gas supplies, if the costs go up over a level previously set as a base. If the company recovers more than its costs, a refund is made.

Pointers bring new sound

By REGINALD THOMAS
State News Reviewer

The Pointer Sisters came to Dooley's Monday night and brought a new look and sound that is a far cry from their former nostalgic one. No longer do they sing "Salt Peanut" or many of the old tunes that got them on the Mike Douglas and Johnny Carson shows. Instead they play loud electric rock.

The Pointer Sisters — Anita, Ruth and June — performed a loud concert that most of the audience seemed to enjoy. This reviewer says most because there were disappointing looks on the faces of those who expected to hear the old songs.

The Sisters performed only two of their older cuts "Yes We Can Can" and "How Long (Betcha Got A Chick On The Side)." The rest of the selections were from their last album Energy and their upcoming one, Priority.

To say they no longer perform their old tunes is to say the obvious. One only has to look at their audience, which is mostly white, to see that they have changed. They play psychedelic rock 'n roll, and the response of their audience shows that it is apparently good rock 'n roll.

The Pointer Sisters had the audience in a frenzy throughout the show. The energy level was high, both on and off the stage. There was no stopping these "loony birds," as they call themselves.

They opened with a rock tune and played everything from Allen Toussaint's "Happiness" and Bruce Springsteen's "Fire" off their Energy to "Fever" off Priority which is expected to be released in late August or early September.

"Fever" was one of the few tunes that allowed the Pointers' vocals to be heard. In the past, the Pointer Sisters have used a nice blend of harmony and fine choreography in their act. Now their movements and voices are unrestricted and uninhibited, and the instruments of their backup group drown the distinctness of their voices.

The Pointer Sisters had the audience in a frenzy throughout the show. The energy level was high, both on and off the stage. There was no stopping these "loony birds," as they call themselves.

"We weren't as loose then, we really had to think about the way we were singing and moving. Now we're looser with our voices and you can hear us individually," said June Pointer.

June's point is interesting in that the group no longer lists anyone as lead vocalist. They simply allow each to do their own thing. So much so that while Ruth, Anita and June rock their way across the country, Bonnie Pointer is climbing her way to the top of soul charts with her solo hit tune, "Free From My Freedom."

But all three Sisters seem to enjoy the way their music is going, which is more than can be said about some of their original fans. The Pointer Sisters have said that they will no longer include many old tunes in their act. Only the cuts that "fit in" with their new rock sound will be done in live performances. And since most of their earlier works have a jazzy scat tone, they are left out.

This might explain the shortness of Monday's concert. The Sisters came on at about midnight, and left the stage at 1 a.m. They returned for two encore numbers, including Sly Stone's "Everybody Is a Star," but were still finished before 1:30.

Ruth Pointer steps into the spotlight and wails during the Pointer Sisters concert at Dooley's Monday night.

The length of the concert and the loudness of the microphones were the only things that hurt the show.

One thing that got the 10:30 concert off to a late start was the opening act, which also began late. Pyramid Productions and Dooley's have been experimenting with various attractions for their shows, and Monday's added attraction was great.

Bob Dubac, comic and magician, put on a hilariously funny performance that left this reviewer rolling. His quick wit and use of magic was extremely pleasing. Dubac has a nice stage presence and rapport with his audience. He also knows how to get out of bad situations.

The worst thing for a comic to do is start rolling and then begin to falter. Once this happens many comics lose their composure. Dubac didn't. He simply took it in stride. Dubac is not new to entertainment and has appeared on Johnny Carson and Don Kirshner's Rock Concert. He also has an album out entitled Nothing Up The Sleeves.

Burns is back and Brooke's got him!

By BYRON BAKER
State News Reviewer

George Burns — still bright, quick, engaging, funny and apparently immortal — is quite the best thing about Just You and Me, Kid (Columbia; at the Meridian Eight Theatres). The picture, an extremely slight comedy-drama, would likely be utterly inconsequential without the light, sincere and oddly-endearing presence of the celebrated octogenarian comic. This movie is weakly plotted, most of the supporting roles are awkwardly written and embarrassingly performed, and Leonard Stern's direction is notably poor and disorganized, but you've got to give Burns some credit here. Almost by himself, he frequently brings the vehicle to life.

He's well cast in the film: Burns plays Bill, an old-line song, dance and patter vaudevillian ("Whatever did you do?" he's asked. "About forty replies.") Burns amiably replies, "Now comfortably retired in Bel Air. He is a benevolent and generous guy, giving freely of his time and fortune to colleagues whose lives haven't proven so fruitful as his — like his friend Max (Burl Ives), a great magician who has withdrawn from life, and of late resides mutely in an institution.

Life is active if regular for him until he meets Kate (Brooke Shields, who made a muffled splash last year as the child whore in Louis Malle's Pretty Baby), a worried, tough-talking youngster on the lam who turns up unexpectedly in the trunk of his Pierce-Arrow. She's naked, yet. Bill is at first bemused, then concerned. He becomes determined, despite Kate's fear and abrasiveness, despite the worst suspicions of his nosy next-door neighbors, and despite the best efforts of his grown daughter (Lorraine Gary) to help her. He's not too worried — at his age, with decades of performing experience behind him, he knows how to handle just about any audience.

Let it be said here and now that George Burns is simply a lot of fun to watch. Even here, with not always top-notch material, he makes it all look so easy: the gently zany and characteristic crooning of one of those off-tempo old standards, his sweet deadpan takes, those seemingly straight yet highly eccentric little stories which have proved the comedian's forte since the death of Gracie Allen in the early '60s — these and other touches and bits are much more than just excellent shucks. They are, in sum, the hallmark of a comic wisdom and experience accumulated by Burns over the last seven decades. He is a very funny man.

Shields, unfortunately, is no foil for Burns. She's really no actress: her face, so telling and provocative in her model work and still photographs, merely becomes closed and empty in motion pictures. She doesn't use either her features or body well on screen, and her voice is flat and inexpressive. She doesn't say lines — she blurts them or shouts them, and doesn't really show any sign of knowing what they mean.

It's sad: Mariel Hemingway, Jodie Foster, or even Tatum O'Neal could have given the role some spark, might have made Burns play straight man for a change. Shields, whose inexplicable fame and notoriety is helping to make her a bankable Hollywood commodity, doesn't register opposite him at all.

Better is Ives, who is nice to see in the movies again, though

Ex-students release single

Recent listeners of Lansing's country station WITL may have heard a new song entitled "Wakin' Him Up On The Inside" by Connor & Dalton.

Although the musical duo are presently based in San Diego, they are both former MSU students. Dan Connor attended the University from 1963 through 1970, while Larry Dalton received his B.S. in biology from MSU in 1971.

Longtime area residents may remember the pair as members of Severed Hands, which played the Lansing club circuit during the early '70s. Connor claims that the band was one of Lansing's first jazz-rock fusion units.

Connor & Dalton have leaned more toward a country vein since moving to Reno from Lansing in 1974. "Wakin' Him Up On The Inside" is their first record, recorded in a 16-track studio last October, and distributed by an independent label, Sahara.

The record (which features a vocal that vaguely resembles Waylon Jennings) is backed by the '50s country standard, "The Auctioneer." It is available in Lansing at Marshall Music and can be heard, of course, on WITL.

Betti's Italian drama opens tonight

By ROSANNE SINGER
State News Staff Writer

Most people would not miss the muggy weather of late, however, director John Baldwin thinks it is a perfect background for Crime on Goat Island, his Summer Circle production which opens tonight.

"I thought the weather being hot and sultry would work well," he said.

Contemporary Italian playwright Ugo Betti's drama takes place at a farmhouse in Italy where a woman, Agata, resides with her neurotic daughter and her equally disturbed sister-in-law.

"You get the feeling that all the women have been without men for a long time," Baldwin said.

As the play opens a man, Angelo, appears at the farmhouse claiming he knew Agata's husband in a World War II prison camp. He tells Agata that her husband has died leaving Angelo to carry out a last request — to take his place at home.

As the play progresses, Angelo establishes ambiguous sexual relations with all the women and gradually unleashes an anger that had always underlined his actions.

Baldwin said that Crime on Goat Island attempts to accomplish what Euripides intended in his drama, The Bacchae.

"It shows human, moral, intellectual behavior vs. the basic urges or sexual appetites," he said. "The animal vs. the intellectual or the Dionysian vs. the Apollonian."

Angelo, who Baldwin said may be the devil incarnate, brings out the animalistic feelings in the women. "We're playing it for the diabolical qualities in Angelo," Baldwin added.

Betti, who was part of an Italian post-war playwright boom, often writes dramas that leave viewers with a sense of ambiguity which Baldwin states is true of Crime on Goat Island.

"I've always wanted to do a Betti play," he said. "We've only done one other Betti play at MSU, The Queen and the Rebels. Crime on Goat Island is thought of as one of his best plays."

But Baldwin added that although the play has won awards in Italy and France, it has bombed in the United States and England. Baldwin attributes this to poor translations of a play that is already excessively wordy.

"I have cut out a good number of long-winded, philosophical tirades that are repeated and repeated," he said.

Baldwin said that he has brought together a dynamic group of actors for this play.

"The chemistry ought to be very interesting," he said. "One of the reasons I wanted to do the play is that it gets into three different female points of view."

Appearing as the three women are: Kerry Shanklin as Agata, Sue Chekaway as Pia and Estelle Goda as Silvia. Mohammad Ghaffari portrays the intruder Angelo and John Lee plays Old Edoardo.

Crime on Goat Island opens tonight and runs through Saturday in the Kresge Courtyard. Showtime is at 8:30 p.m. and admission is free.

PEOPLE RUN FOR VARIOUS REASONS

Running craze sweeps through area

By PAUL MAGUIRE

Just about everybody seems to have caught the running craze that is sweeping the country. But why do people run? Don Trevarthen, an East Lansing resident, has competed in two marathons. He said he started running because he wanted to run in a marathon someday.

"I guess I was just trying to prove something to myself," he said. Others run for the health of it. Pam Henning of Haslett said she runs two miles daily to help keep her weight down.

"It really seems to help," she said with a smile. Some people run for the relaxation and peace of mind that running has to offer. MSU student Shawn McCabe runs five miles daily. He said running relaxes him after a night of studying.

My mind feels good because I've done the workout and my body feels good because I'm exercising.

"It relaxes me and I don't feel tense after I run," McCabe said. Even though dogs and crazy drivers roam the streets, runners usually run by themselves. McCabe said he can keep a pace better when running by himself.

"I have a groove I get into," he said. "I think about my pace and increase it as I loosen up." Trevarthen said he is able to concentrate more when running alone.

"When I'm running by myself, I don't get interrupted and I can keep a steady train of thought," he said.

Probably the worst part of running is when exhaustion sets in. Faces fill with apprehension and pain and runners begin to hobble instead of run. Experienced runners know they should remain loose and relaxed so they can continue to travel smoothly and efficiently.

"You just lose yourself. You just think about keeping yourself as efficient as possible," Trevarthen said.

McCabe said he concentrates on his stride and breathing rate when he knows he is getting tired.

"If I can keep control of myself," he said, "I can run farther and faster."

It could be said people start to run so they can finish. But people who run know how physically and mentally rewarding running can be. Henning said even though she is tired when she finishes running, she feels good knowing she has completed another day of running.

"My mind feels good because I've done the workout and my body feels good because I'm exercising," Henning said.

Though they run hard, Bob Anderson (left), Chuck Laughlin and Jim Hore have no worries concerning speed limits. The three friends from the College of Agriculture and Natural Resources take to the roadside three to four times a week, all year.

Thoughts at midseason

Well baseball fans, the season is now at the midway point, the all-star break. Here are some personal thoughts on the national pastime:

• It's kind of refreshing to see that none of last year's four division winners — Philadelphia, Los Angeles, New York and Kansas City — are any higher than third place this season. And it appears that the Phillies are the only one of the bunch that will mount a challenge to repeat.

• The Dodgers are the year's biggest puzzle. How can a team go from the top of the National League to the bottom (they currently have the worst record in the league) in just a half of a season? A lot of people think the loss of Tommy John, the free agent pitcher who jumped ship following the Dodgers' loss to the Yankees in the World Series last year, is the real reason. But was John really worth the 17-and-one-half games that the Dodgers trail by?

• This season once again finds the Tigers a .500 team. But anyone who can't see that Detroit is on the way up should look closer. It may not show right away in the standings and because of some tough competition in the American League's Eastern Division, it may not show for a couple of years. But the Tigers, with the exception of third base, have a starting lineup that can compare with any in the league. Where Detroit is hurting is on the mound. Should some of the younger arms on the Tiger roster (Pat Underwood, Dan Petry and Jack Morris, to name three) continue their successful efforts of the past few weeks, Manager Sparky Anderson could have the same success in Detroit that he had in Cincinnati.

This season once again finds the Tigers a .500 team. But anyone who can't see that Detroit is on the way up should look closer.

• Anderson has done well since taking over the reins from Les Moss earlier in the year and will no doubt be the one to lead the Tigers to the top. But does he have to invoke his century-old ideas about how baseball players should look and dress both on and off the field? Does the fact that a player may wear blue jeans off the field mean he is doomed on the field? Its doubtful. Relax, Sparky, and worry about what your team does while playing baseball.

• What do Tony Armas, Jim Essian, Dave Chalk, Larry Murray and Mike Edwards have in common? They all are starters on the Oakland A's, the team that has won only 25 of 94 games that it has played so far this year. Unbelievably, this is the same team (at least they wear the same uniforms and play in the same stadium) that won the World Series three straight years from 1972 through 1974. Owner Charles O. Finley has systematically wrecked the franchise by letting most of his top players play out their options and trading away the others for Armas, Essian, Chalk, etc., or what amounts to peanuts. And of course the Oakland fans stay away from the stadium, making the team just that much less attractive to prospective buyers who may want to take the team off Finley's hands.

Predictions: California, Boston, Houston and Philadelphia will win their divisions and the Red Sox will beat the Phillies in the World Series.

CERTAIN PLAYERS REFUSE TO TALK

Rift still divides players, press

By MILTON RICHMAN
UPI Sports Editor

NEW YORK — If silence is golden, then people like Steve Carlton, Dave Kingman and George Hendrick don't have a worry in the world. They're going to wind up even richer and happier than they are now — they think.

The same goes for some of these other sociological heavyweights, these born again supercilious sphinxes, who consider themselves too important, too busy or too indifferent to talk with the press. I'm talking about such assorted copyists as Jimmy Connors, Thurman Munson, Ken Stabler, Larry Bird and Danny Ongais.

In case you've never heard of Danny Ongais, he's a race driver and he comes from Hawaii. Reporters call him the "Silent Hawaiian," and once in a while when he does consent to speak with them, he'll tell them, "I have the answers — you don't have the questions."

Sometimes, when I see a Carlton, a Connors or a Kingman get up on his high horse and act as if the outside world will be that much worse off for not being able to hear what each has to say, I can't help wondering if they realize whom they are hurting most. Themselves, of course.

Think back, what was it that originally got you interested in those who took part in a particular sport? And once your interest was captured, what was it that helped cultivate it? For me, it was largely the newspapers, and I don't think I'm that different than anyone else.

Let me give you a few examples of how absurd and stupid this veil of silence can turn out to be:

Richie Ashburn was a ballplayer once for the Phillies and he was an unusually good one. Now he does a column for a Philadelphia paper. Carlton will talk to other ballplayers but not to writers, but when Ashburn went up to him to ask him a question not long ago, the petulant Phillies pitcher wouldn't answer it because he was a writer! Now, I mean, how ridiculous can you get?

Then there's George Hendrick, the Cardinals' outfielder, who also refuses to talk to writers.

Last week, John Milner of the Pirates hit a ball which Hendrick caught with a fine leaping grab along the wall of Busch Stadium. Don Berns of UPI's St. Louis bureau has never had any trouble with Hendrick, and after the game, he said to him: "George, did you catch the ball in front of the wall or did you run into the wall?"

"You saw it, didn't you?" Hendrick answered.

"I was so far away, I couldn't tell," Berns answered, honestly.

"Look, man, you saw it," Hendricks finished his little speech. "It happened just the way you saw it."

The division between the players and the press seems to be growing, and I have my own theory for that, too. Some players think not talking to the press is the "in" thing to do. You know, monkey see, monkey do. They think it gives them some kind of stature not to talk to reporters; when actually they achieve the completely opposite effect in the long run.

Without publicity, where would Babe Ruth have been? Joe Namath or even Muhammad Ali? One thing you have to say about Ali — he knew the value of publicity perhaps better than any athlete who ever lived.

Some front office officials are upset when their players don't cooperate with the press; some are indifferent.

Harry Dalton, executive vice president and general manager of the Milwaukee Brewers, sees both sides of the coin, the players' side and the media's side.

"I think there are times when it's understandable why players don't want to talk to the media," he says. "That's because of the treatment they get from some reporters. By and large, though, I think it's the players' responsibility to keep dialogue open with representatives of the media. To amplify that, players are short-sighted if they think they have the right to stand mute. They're wrong. It is the fans who support the players and the fans want to know their comments. The only way they can get the players' comments is through the media."

Peter Bavasi, President and Chief Executive Officer of the Toronto Blue Jays, has by far the clearest approach to all this player-media problem of anyone I've seen.

"We have a special public relations seminar with our players each spring and we tell them what business we're in," he says. "We tell them we're in the entertainment business and they are entertainers. We try to explain to our players, in great detail, that the job of the 'beat writer,' especially the one on an afternoon paper, is demanding. The afternoon writer has to be creative. He must create 162 times a year. The morning paper writer has to be creative also, we explain to our players, but we tell them the afternoon writer probably will ask more probing questions.

"Our players are given to understand that the vast majority of print journalists are highly competent. We tell the players they will rarely, if ever, be misquoted. Misunderstood, perhaps, but rarely misquoted, so it's incumbent upon them to make themselves better understood.

"We also tell our players," Bavasi goes on, "that we have 40 people in the front office busy at work trying to sell our product and that the cooperation of the players not only is requested but absolutely necessary.

Peter Bavasi, whose father, Buzzie, runs the Angels, is unique among baseball officials.

"There is no bad news in sports journalism," he insists, "only different degrees of good news. I tell everybody that's my father's line, but it's really my line."

Dancers perfect skills

As the sunlight pours through the tall windows, a graceful silhouette is formed on the wall. The air is humid with exertion, as stretching, straining bodies limber up for another day at work. As the piano begins pounding out the rhythm, a flurry of leotards and pink tights scatter about preparing to take their places at the practice barre. Lambswool is pushed into toe shoes, leg warmers are pulled over cramped muscles, and hair is pulled back into tight knots. With heads held high and toes pointed, the figures await command. The instructor taps his foot, keeping time with the piano. The day has begun — now dance.

For the past two weeks, more than 250 dancers from 20 states and two foreign countries, have been perfecting their skills at MSU in the 28th annual Cecchetti Ballet Conference and Seminar.

Students and teachers alike have been participating in rigorous schedules of classes, auditions, exams and performances.

The conference, which is being held at MSU for the 16th year, offers dancers a learning experience as well as an opportunity to train and work with well-known artists.

One of this year's guest artists was Robert Barnett, artistic director of the Atlanta Ballet Company.

He has toured with the original Ballet Russe and was a featured soloist with the New York City Ballet.

Guest artist Margaret Marsh was a former pupil of Maestro Cecchetti and a major examiner with the Cecchetti Society.

A newcomer to this year's faculty was Francoise Martinet, a former leading ballerina with the Robert Joffrey Company in New York from 1956 through 1963. Martinet, currently an associate professor in the University of Iowa dance program, performed at the White House in 1965.

Dancers begin their day at 8 a.m. with morning classes. A full day's work-out of classes and exams which last until 5 p.m. is followed by meetings and workshops, and for the advanced students — more classes.

The highlight of the conference was a public performance Monday night at the MSU Auditorium which featured students from various dance companies throughout Michigan.

As the dancers pack away toe shoes, tights, warm-up suits and other ballet paraphernalia today, many already know they'll be back next year.

Somoza in exile to U.S.

beginning with the successor government in Managua.

Affirmative

Recognizing these "missed opportunities," MSU will make appropriate adjustments to its interim goals for hiring and promotion, the document said.

MSU is also required, by terms of the agreement, to do a feasibility study of a "skill-bank system." Such a system would identify minorities and women who may be qualified for higher positions and help them move to better jobs as soon as possible.

MSU President Edgar L. Harden said he was satisfied with the agreement.

"I was satisfied it was a fair document when I signed it and I'm glad they (Department of Labor) signed it because it indicates that we are operating in a spirit of good will and cooperation," he said.

The University will try to meet the affirmative action goals set forth in the agreement and has already started to take action, he said.

Jay F. Sauls, assistant regional administrator for the Office of Federal Contracts Compliance Programs, said the issues involved in the audit have been resolved with the agreement.

The MSU audit was required because the University receives millions of dollars from the federal government each year. Because of the federal funding, MSU must comply with an executive order which prohibits discrimination in employment against women and minorities.

Within hours of President Anastasio Somoza's flight to exile in Florida, State Department spokesperson Hodding Carter said the United States wishes "to look to the future and to build a relationship of mutual respect" with the new government.

With the call for a cease-fire, Carter said, the United States plans an immediate expansion of its emergency airlift to feed the hungry in Nicaragua.

He also said the new provisional government about to take power there has indicated its interest in a "friendly and cooperative" relationship with the United States.

The end for Somoza came four weeks after the United States publicly called for his resignation and the Organization of American States urged his "immediate and definitive replacement."

Somoza took refuge from war-torn Nicaragua in a palatial island estate saying he is prepared for a "lifetime exile" from his nation.

New facility on agenda

The human services facilities proposed for East Lansing will be discussed by the Housing and Community Development Commission Thursday.

The commission will receive a staff report clarifying the position of the City Council on the proposed centers, said Gary Zick, community development administrator.

The meeting will be held at 7:30 p.m. at 54-B District Court, 301 M.A.C. Ave.

A Wonderland: WALES

Filmed in color and narrated in person by
SID DODSON

Although Wales is part of Britain, the Welsh have retained a proud individuality. The secrets of Wales lie off the main highways: Laugharne Castle and the village nearby which served Dylan Thomas as a setting for his play, "Under Milk Wood." Explore the wild and rugged coasts and the spectacular tangle of peaks, lakes, rushing streams and valleys. And a visit to the International Eisteddfod at Llangollen.

THURSDAY, JULY 19 at 8:00 P.M.
University Auditorium

Series tickets are still available at $5.00 for remaining summer films.
Single tickets: $2.50, at the door only.

Perrin accepts New York position

Before incoming MSU President Cecil Mackey was appointed in June, there had been discussion of possibly eliminating the Office of University and Federal Relations under Perrin and combining his duties with other offices.

Mackey said he is still undecided whether he will fill Perrin's position or eliminate the office.

"Organizational plans will get high priority attention as soon as I arrive in August," he said, "but I cannot say what I will do at this time."

As vice president of University and federal relations, Perrin has been the chief information officer at MSU, supervising the Department of Information Services, the MSU

News Bulletin and internal communications within the University.

He has also been the University's representative to the Michigan Congressional Delegation and federal agencies and departments.

Perrin said he was contacted by the selection committee at SUNY in March and asked if he would allow his name to be considered for the position.

"I decided to take the position last Monday after giving it a lot of thought," Perrin said.

"I have sincere regrets about leaving MSU," he said. "During my nine-and-one-half years at MSU, I have not only grown attached to the University, but also to the community."

Prior to joining MSU, Perrin held various posts in Washington, D.C. He was an administrative assistant to Sen. Pat McNamara from 1955 to 1966. He then served as Assistant Director for Governmental Relations and Acting Deputy Director with the Office of Economic Opportunity.

ficante as "the most likely family bosses of organized crime to have participated in such a unilateral assassination plan" in the Kennedy case.

But it conceded the committee could find no evidence that Marcello or Trafficante had, in fact, conspired to assassinate the president.

Marcello and Trafficante, operating out of New Orleans and Miami respectively, have steadfastly denied they were involved.

The committee had concluded in December that Lee Harvey Oswald fired the shots that killed Kennedy, but that the president "was probably assassinated as a result of a conspiracy."

It said there is "a high probability" that a second sniper fired a shot that missed the president's motorcade in Dallas' Dealey Plaza.

Carter staffers offer resignations

Carter told congressional leaders Tuesday he wants action on his "windfall profits" tax and standby gasoline rationing plan before Congress leaves for its August recess.

In return, said House Democratic Whip John Brademas of Indiana, the president won "significant bipartisan support" for his new energy proposals at a White House breakfast meeting, although misgivings were expressed by some Republicans.

Before the three hours of meetings at which his Cabinet and White House staff reviewed what press secretary Jody Powell called "the progress of the past few years and the problems which remain," the president put pressure on Democratic and Republican leaders of Congress for early action on major parts of his energy program.

Carter specifically asked for action before the start of the congressional recess Aug. 4 on a tax on oil-industry profits flowing from decontrol of domestic crude oil prices, as well as standby authority to ration gasoline in the event of severe shortages.

Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd of West Virginia was quoted as telling Carter the mood of Congress and the country is likely to spur action.

After Tuesday's meeting with Carter, Brademas said some Republicans were critical of parts of the president's program.

Carter tells Detroit: 'revitalization'

campaign speeches, the president asked for a "coming together" of all Americans and revitalization of a sense of national purpose.

"We must bring together all the different elements in America - producers, consumers, labor, business - bring all of those together from the battlefield of selfishness to a table of common purpose," Carter said.

Carter also promised to defend Americans against "narrow special interests" and to make the governmental process more accessible.

"In the months ahead I will come to you, throughout America, with fresh proposals," Carter said. "I intend to open the process of government as wide as possible so the fresh air of America can blow across Washington, D.C."

Carter urged the unionists to "take the best interest of the nation at heart" in negotiating contracts.

"A great labor union such as yours was not built by Americans who said 'Me first, me last, me always,'" he said.

Carter assured the unionists that his support for a cost-of-living clause, as well as his forthcoming revised wage guidelines, would ease labor's problems.

He also reiterated his support for the windfall profits tax on oil companies, saying that if the measure passes Congress, it could conceivably "double or even triple" the government's financial commitment to home heating assistance programs.

And in a request reminiscent of the we-against-them tone of the 1976 campaign, Carter asked the unionists to push Congress into enacting legislation authorizing his proposed Energy Security Corp.

"If you'll help me," Carter said, "we'll cut out the delays that have held up Congress too long."

But markedly different from anything heard in 1976 was the president's admission that he could do little on his own.

"The best thing I can do is put my faith in the American people," Carter said. "If you don't believe I've got confidence in you, then you are not going to have confidence in me."

"I've made some mistakes since I was president," he said. "Many people have said, 'Mr. President, you're not out among the people enough. You don't listen to us enough.'"

"Well, I listened to that," the president said. "And I've learned my lesson."

Dumps being excavated

wells in the area. D'Itri said inorganic tests detected increased (30 parts per billion) cadmium levels in the water. Cadmium is a heavy, highly toxic metal.

Although 10 parts per billion was the accepted level of cadmium, D'Itri said the department cannot detect anything lower than 30 parts per billion, "so it could be lower."

Zabik said tests for the presence of organic chemicals have not been completed.

Andrew Hogarth, a DNR official in charge of the MSU investigation, said the critical issue at stake hinged on results of organic chemical analyses.

"We know what went in there, but we're dealing with a soup of organic chemicals now," he said. "You can tell from the odor at the excavation site that it has gotten into the soil."

Eckhart Dersch, associate professor of resource development, agreed with Hogarth.

"Once the chemicals are dumped in the pot like that, they recombine and you get exotic chemicals which are very difficult to identify," he said.

"It's very possible that new, unknown chemicals are being produced - toxicity unknown."

Zabik said his work to date shows the presence of compounds which have not yet been identified. To positively identify all unknown chemicals would require a very costly and extensive research effort, he said.

But two control wells drilled in areas geologically similar to the two sites, but not known to have been used for chemical disposal, may make additional tests unnecessary, Zabik said.

As soon as water and soil samples of observation and control wells are in and the pits are excavated, University officials will meet with DNR representatives to decide if future action needs to be taken, said Warren Malchmann, Director of MSU Radiological, Chemical and Biological Safety and a member of a task force set up to deal with DNR directives.

"How far we go at this point depends on the DNR," Malchmann said. "We've complied with all their directives."

Citing violations of Michigan's waste disposal laws, the DNR requested the University to stop all disposal at the sites on April 23, 1979.

At that time, the DNR issued nine other directives, including orders to:

- secure existing sites to exclude public access;
- store all future wastes in a manner approved by the DNR;
- document the waste materials, volumes and dates for each site where waste materials were disposed;
- provide copies of all previous studies which had been done on the waste disposal problem;
- sample existing wells near the disposal sites for appropriate parameters;
- develop and submit to the DNR a proposed hydrogeologic investigation plan for each of the sites, including timetable for implementation; and
- identify all sources of wastes within the University and persons directly involved in disposal operations.

Malchmann Tuesday said the University was working on the waste disposal problem before the DNR stepped in.

Fans may 'train' to get to games

By SUSIE BENKELMAN

Someday, football fans may be able to travel to games at Purdue, Ohio State and Northwestern universities via "1225," a 1941 steam engine being restored by the MSU Railroad Club.

The locomotive was given to the University in 1957 by the Chesapeake and Ohio Railroad Co. when Trustee Forrest Akers discovered the engine was to be scrapped and asked the railroad company to donate it to MSU.

The engine originally ran for Pere Marquette, a Michigan-based railroad company which merged with C&O in 1947.

The club was formed in 1969 "not just to restore" the obsolete engine, said President Chuck Julian, but also to study films and slides about steam locomotives.

In 1970, club members did a feasibility study to determine if the engine was restorable. Repair work began on the 1225 in 1971. "I want to see it run," Julian said. "It was almost a crime to see it sitting there rusting."

When empty, the engine and tender weigh about 400 tons. The tender holds 22 tons of coal and 22,000 gallons of water.

The engine rests on an island of track on Stadium Road near Shaw Lane. On the tracks next to it stands an old Grand Trunk mail car used by the club for storing parts and tools.

Of the club's 420 members, 12 volunteers spend their weekends refurbishing engine 1225.

The club has members from all over Michigan. The restoration is funded through yearly $5 membership dues and other contributions. Tools are also loaned by the members.

Members who work on the train have familiarized themselves with the engine's construction through books and parts manuals. The club also has blueprints for the engine, which were collected by a former employee of C&O.

One club member worked for Pere Marquette for 42 years. Such experienced railroad people provide specific information that cannot be obtained from books, Julian said.

The engine is essentially a "boiler on wheels," he said. It is a combined freight and passenger engine and can travel about 75 mph.

Currently, the club is reinsulating the boiler with sheet metal and insulation. The old insulation has collected a lot of water, which has caused the boiler to rust, Julian said.

Rust and deterioration are two of the main problems in repairing the engine, said club member Aarne Frobom. The engine's last overhaul was in 1948. It sat abandoned from 1951, when C&O discontinued its use, until 1957.

The club expects to have the locomotive restored in 2 to 3 years. "A lot of people walk by and say we haven't done a thing in the past 10 years," Julian said. "But we've done two-thirds of the work in the past 10 years."

When finished, the engine will make excursion trips to events such as football games at other Big Ten schools. The club will lease 20 to 25 cars from railroad companies, various organizations and museums.

The train will carry 800 to 1,000 fans to Ohio State, Purdue and Northwestern universities. It will not travel to the University of Michigan because of poor track conditions.

"The trackage is bad between Lansing and Ann Arbor," Julian said. "Unless it improves, I doubt very much that we'll go there."

The club hopes to keep fares for these trips below the cost of traveling on a bus, he said. Money collected from the fares will be used for "repairs and keeping it going," he said.
