Andrew Young will support Carter in '80

By The State News
and United Press International

Former United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young said Monday he will campaign next year for President Carter, but would support Sen. Edward Kennedy for president in 1984.

Young, who spoke in the MSU Auditorium, told reporters he does not think Kennedy is ready for the presidency.

"I hope he's president of the United States someday," Young said. "I'd rather see Carter president of it right now."

"I'll support Kennedy in 1984, but not this year."

"It's a very complicated job... This is an almost impossible country to manage."

Young added though he would be willing to work in connection with the Carter campaign, he will not serve on the re-election committee.

IN HIS ADDRESS, Young said many of America's current problems have been caused by the failure of the United States to handle Mideast relationships in the same manner as relationships with other countries are handled.

Young said that although a balanced peace process had been pursued at the Camp David summit, there had been no solution to the Palestinian problem.

The current Middle East situation was caused by a sense of guilt in the Western World following World War II, he said.

"Because we did nothing to prevent the holocaust, because we did not let the Jews come to America to escape the holocaust, there was a legacy of guilt," he said. "That required the repentance of the West and the Soviet Union as well."

"And we all participated in an act of affirmative action in affirming the rights of the Jewish people to a land of their own."

"But we didn't take American land and give it to them, we didn't take European land," he continued. "We made someone else pay for our guilt."

HE ADDED THAT the Palestinians not only paid for America's guilt, but are still displaced, asking where they can go and what they can do.

As a result, Young said that some Palestinians have become terrorists, but others have become the accountants, technicians and engineers that run the oil fields.

"They have located themselves strategically, I think accidentally, throughout the Middle East," Young said.

Everywhere the Palestinians have gone, he added, they have created turmoil and dislocations of people.

"There cannot be peace for anyone in the Middle East, it seems, until there is peace for the Palestinians."

The survival of Israel also depends on finding some way to reconcile the problems of Palestinian identity, he added.

YOUNG ALSO SAID there is an expansionist tendency in Israel which doesn't seem to hold to U.N. Resolution 242, which was to guarantee Israel's security within its 1967 boundaries.

Currently, he said, Israel is bombing Lebanon and establishing new settlements in the Sinai.

"The debate on that question (the Middle East situation) is still very much open," Young said, "and because that debate is open, I think it is a debate the American people ought to participate in, because if we don't participate in that debate, we will find ourselves inheriting some of the confusion and some of the disturbances that come out of that turmoil."

"When the price of oil goes up, so does the rate of inflation, and so does the rate of unemployment. Job opportunities for students disappear, and economic advancements of blacks and women under affirmative action, which depend upon an expanding economy, become jeopardized."

Young explained that whatever happens around the world is felt in the United States, due to the economic ties between the countries.

"Our economic security is going to depend much more on our ability to use our brains, to live up to our values and to persevere in working out solutions to various types of problems," Young said.

"IT IS NOT possible to solve those problems by dropping bombs or shooting people."

Young emphasized the importance that the United States maintain good relationships with other nations around the world.

'An innocent bystander'

Former United States Ambassador to the U.N. Andrew Young addressed a large crowd in the MSU auditorium Monday, speaking on the crucial issues in international urban affairs. Young said he was an "innocent bystander" in the PLO-Israeli conflict.

Young may teach class at MSU

Tentative plans for former United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young to teach a class during spring term at MSU were announced Monday by Robert Green, dean of the College of Urban Development.

Green mentioned the possibility of Young being named as a visiting faculty member during the former U.S. ambassador's speech at MSU Auditorium.

The class would be held one night a week for about three hours with Young lecturing four or five times during the term. Remaining lectures would be taught by guest speakers chosen by Young and other advisors, Green said.

Young's appointment and class schedule "are under active discussion," Provost Clarence Winder said. Winder must approve all University faculty appointments.

LAWMAKERS TOLD BY NRC

Michigan is unprepared for a '3-mile' incident

By LANA WIEGAND
United Press International

Michigan is improving its ability to handle a Three Mile Island-type nuclear accident, but still has a way to go, a Nuclear Regulatory Commission official told a joint legislative committee Monday.

Consumers Power Co.'s Big Rock nuclear plant at Charlevoix, and Palisades plant at South Haven rank below the national average for meeting federal safety requirements, said James Keppler, director of the NRC's Midwest region.

Keppler said Pennsylvania — where the Three Mile Island incident occurred — was much better prepared earlier this year to handle a nuclear accident of that scope than is Michigan.

"I think Pennsylvania was probably in better shape than a lot of states," Keppler told a meeting of the Special Joint Committee on Nuclear Energy.

Michigan presently has three operating nuclear power plants, two more under construction and scheduled to open by 1983, and one in the planning stage.

CONSUMERS' MIDLAND PLANTS, tentatively scheduled to open in 1982, were designed by Babcock & Wilcox Co., the same firm that built Three Mile Island.

But Keppler said stricter safety standards imposed since the spring accident might delay the Midland plants' opening until costly modifications can be made.

Michigan thus far is one of several Midwest states that have failed to provide the NRC with an acceptable nuclear emergency plan, but Keppler said he expects the state to submit a revised plan soon.

"My perspective of Three Mile Island is I don't think we ever thought that kind of an accident could happen," he said. "We focused more on major types of accidents."

Keppler said placing an inspector at each nuclear plant is one of the most valuable changes in NRC policy since the Three Mile Island accident.

But he warned on-site safety supervision should not be considered a "panacea" — an assurance that accidents won't happen.

TESTING STANDARDS for plant operators have been stiffened, Keppler said.

The NRC now requires all prospective nuclear facility operators maintain an 80 percent — rather than 70 percent — average on all tests, and eliminates any candidates who fail a portion of the examination.

Gregory Minor, who resigned his post as a manager of General Electric Co.'s nuclear division in 1976, told the committee states must take a greater role in overseeing nuclear plants within their boundaries.

"Until we solve a lot of problems in nuclear power plants, they're not going to be as safe as you want them," he said.

States should assume major accidents are possible and be prepared for them, Minor said. He said utilities operating nuclear plants, not the governments, should fund most safety research.

INFLATION:

Fed's action may lead to severe recession

By MICHAEL VEH
State News Staff Writer

The Federal Reserve Board's proposed steps to combat inflation may lead to a reasonably severe recession and an increase in the unemployment rate, a MSU economics professor said.

Mordechai Kreinin said the recession and unemployment problems are part of a "long and drawn out process in lowering inflation."

Kreinin divided the Fed's Oct. 6 action into three parts. The first part is a 1 percent increase in the rate of interest paid by commercial banks borrowing from the Fed. The current borrowing rate is 12 percent for banks.

Consumers who borrow from the commercial banks pay additional interest to balance the interest rate paid by commercial banks to the Fed.

This action leads to higher interest rates for consumers who wish to take out loans for high-priced goods such as homes and cars, he said.

The portion of the economy that is most severely effected, he said, is the housing industry.

The second part of the Fed's action is to establish higher reserve requirements which would reduce the money supply, Kreinin said.

The third part is intended to alter the rate of increase in the money supply in order to enforce the first two parts, he said.

By slowing the rate of increase in the money supply, Kreinin said, there will be less money in the market to spend on consumer goods.

The Fed's action would induce people to buy less which would lead to an economic slowdown, Robert Rasche, professor of economics, said.

The action would lead to a recession and, eventually, a decrease in inflation, Rasche said.

"They've got themselves in a box where they have no alternative solutions," he said.

He said the Fed has lost credibility in the eyes of the public. The people have lost belief that inflation will fall naturally, he said, and they believe that inflation will continue to rise.

Warren Samuels, professor of economics, said, the Fed is experiencing a "bankruptcy of policy."

He added that the Fed is "contributing" to a dampening of the economy and an "acceleration" of recession.

"The Fed," Rasche said, "has been working under the assumption that the economy is very weak and that recession is just around the corner."

He said the Fed has "misinterpreted what has been going on" and the recession that they expected never came.

"Essentially, the economy is working at full blast," Rasche said. The bright side of the Fed's actions, Kreinin said, will be an increase in exports to other countries.

"Exports will be booming through all this," he said.

He attributed the rise in exports to the decrease in value of the American dollar on European markets, which makes American products less expensive. Also the drought in the Soviet Union is expected to increase the amount of American wheat purchased, he said.

The increase of American exports will not stimulate the economy enough to reduce unemployment, Kreinin said.

Unemployment would have been less severe if the Fed's action would have been instituted last year, he added.

"The price that would have been paid then would have been less," he said.

"We've gotten ourselves into a strait-jacket where tight money is almost our only inflationary control," Kreinin said.

"It (the effects) depends on whether or not the Fed uses the policy and sticks to it," Rasche said.

In a year, he said, unemployment will be up and only a 1 or 2 percent drop in inflation will be seen.

"We've tried these type of measures before and we regretted it then," Samuels said. "We may live to regret it now."

The Fed has misinterpreted what has been going on and the recession they expected never came. Essentially, the economy is going at full blast.—Robert Rasche, professor of economics.

Committee begins action on SALT II; Senate debate should start in early Nov.

By LAWRENCE L. KNUTSON
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — The Senate Foreign Relations Committee made the first of an expected series of changes in the SALT II treaty on Monday but deferred action on the status of the Soviet Backfire bomber.

Dealing with a number of mainly non-controversial, technical issues, the committee voted 13-0 to include in the treaty a set of separate statements signed by the United States and the Soviet Union that interpret various provisions of the pact.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance testified last summer that these statements have the same force and effect as the treaty itself and a violation of them would be considered a violation of the pact.

But Sen. Frank Church, D-Idaho, committee chairperson, said he wanted them nailed into the treaty itself so there can be no difference of opinion over their validity or impact.

THE PANEL ALSO voted 10-2 to upgrade the status of a separate statement which sets as a goal for SALT II negotiations the achievement of "significant and substantial reductions in the numbers of strategic offensive arms."

Sen. George McGovern, D-S.D., author of the reservation which attaches the side agreement to the SALT II resolution of ratification, said he will seek at a later stage to make clear that the Senate will be satisfied with nothing less than deep arms reductions in SALT III.

"I think a consensus has emerged that SALT II has not gone far enough to reduce arms," McGovern said. "If the SALT II treaty were the end of the road I could not in good conscience support it."

The committee started making decisions on the arms limitation agreement after taking testimony from more than 100 witnesses in 30 public sessions beginning last July 9. The testimony filled more than 4,000 pages of official transcript.

IN A SEPARATE development, Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, met with Vance and Defense Secretary Harold Brown and received assurances they are trying to make up for the U.S. monitoring capability lost when Iranian listening stations were shut down earlier this year.

Glenn said he remains hopeful the efforts will be successful but said his vote for SALT II will remain in doubt until replacements systems are in operation.

Meanwhile, Senate Republican leader Ted Stevens of Alaska said that although he is currently leaning against approving the pact, he believes it is possible to win the 67 votes needed for Senate ratification "through a series of meaningful reservations and stipulations."

He said he believes these can be formulated in a way that would not trigger automatic Soviet rejection of an altered treaty. And, he said, if the right changes are made "it is possible I could vote for the treaty."

The Foreign Relations Committee is trying to complete its consideration of proposed treaty changes and reservations in seven working days, a schedule that could permit the agreement to be brought before the Senate in early November.

Stevens said that as he sees the situation now, an early vote on the agreement would favor its opponents.

HE SAID ALSO that he believes it would be a good idea to permit the commercial television networks to televise the SALT debate, providing unanimous consent is secured on an overall time limit for the debate.

Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia took an identical position.

Sen. Howell Heflin, D-Ala., introduced a resolution to permit radio and television coverage of the SALT II debate and to study the possibility of making such coverage permanent.

Two other Democratic senators, Walter Huddleston of Kentucky and Birch Bayh of Indiana, introduced a reservation to the treaty which would set up a permanent process to keep the Senate informed on the ability of the United States to monitor Soviet strategic weapons developments and to notify it of any Soviet violations with terms of the treaty.

Britain will conduct separate talks

LONDON (AP) — In an apparent attempt to force the hand of rebel leaders at the Zimbabwe-Rhodesia peace talks, Britain announced on Monday that it will conduct separate independence negotiations with the biracial government of Prime Minister Abel Muzorewa.

The move, in the sixth week of the British-sponsored talks, opened the way toward Britain's recognition of its war-torn rebel colony.

It left the Patriotic Front rebel alliance with the choice of quitting the London talks and returning to its African war bases, or bowing to Britain's demands that it accept the draft independence constitution.

In Washington, State Department spokesperson Hodding Carter said the United States backed the British approach to a settlement and called on all parties to negotiate "in a spirit of compromise."

Foreign Secretary Lord Carrington, speaking at a packed news conference Monday night, indicated that if necessary Britain would seek international support for a separate agreement with Muzorewa.

Jewish settlers camp on West Bank

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Ultranationalist Israelis staked out camps all over the occupied West Bank on Monday and played hide-and-seek with soldiers trying to end their protest against government settlement policy.

At nightfall the army and defense ministry claimed to have evacuated most of the approximately 30 campsites, but settlers in at least one camp refused orders to leave. Others jumped from one location to another when troops approached.

"It's like a cat-and-mouse game," said Defense Ministry spokesperson Dan Weinreich.

Nine of the demonstrators were arrested, and one shooting incident was reported when Moshe Shamir, a parliament member who supports the settlers' protest, refused to obey orders to stop at an army roadblock north of Jerusalem. A soldier fired one shot that hit a wheel of Shamir's car, the army spokesperson said, but there were no injuries.

Shamir claimed he had the right to go anywhere as a member of parliament, but a senior military official, who asked not to be identified, said Shamir's behavior had been provocative and he was lucky that there had not been a tragedy.

Turkish Premier resigns after election defeat

ANKARA, Turkey (AP) — Turkish Premier Bulent Ecevit decided Monday to resign in the wake of an election defeat that gave more power to the opposition Justice Party of former Premier Suleyman Demirel, a cabinet source reported.

Ecevit's moderate-leftist Republic People's Party suffered a stunning setback in the elections, losing all five Assembly seats being contested as well as crucial seats in the Senate.

The source, who asked not to be named, said the decision was reached unanimously by the Cabinet in a three-hour session.

Ecevit, who succeeded Demirel as premier in 1977, was expected to postpone any announcement until after a meeting of his party's executive body. There was no report on when the meeting would be held.

In Sunday's elections, Ecevit's party drew 29 percent of the vote in the partial Senate elections, while Demirel got 49 percent.

Ecevit's government has been plagued by gang fighting and terrorism and at least 2,100 persons have been killed during its 21-month tenure. Inflation reached 100 percent, unemployment rose and citizens were experiencing shortages of goods in items ranging from gasoline to lightbulbs.

Protest for low energy prices planned

WASHINGTON (AP) — Leaders of a "Campaign for Lower Energy Prices" are making final preparations for protests Wednesday in 103 cities, but their bid to restore oil and gas price controls is finding little support in Congress.

Even though heating oil prices have nearly doubled since last winter and natural gas prices are climbing above the rate of inflation, Congress seems disinclined to slap lids back on either of these fuels.

A series of pro-decontrol votes last week in the House, regarded the more sympathetic of the two chambers toward energy price controls, appears to underscore this reluctance.

Fights over oil-gas price controls have been bitter and numerous in Congress, with decontrol advocates gradually emerging as the victors. Now there seems to be little enthusiasm on either side for returning to the battlefield.

Standing a better chance of success is legislation being pushed by the Carter administration to provide about $2.5 billion in additional federal assistance to help low-income households pay their fuel bills this winter.

Sub explores depths of Lake Tahoe

TAHOE CITY, Calif. (AP) — A tiny submarine silently glided into icy Lake Tahoe Monday for test dives before carrying its three-man crew into the eerie depths for the first exploration of one of the nation's highest, deepest lakes.

The 17-foot-long submarine, dubbed Pioneer I, will explore, photograph and use a mechanical arm to pick up objects during a four-day, around-the-clock probe with an estimated cost of more than $30,000.

The lake that Mark Twain called "the fairest picture the whole world affords" is estimated to be 1,645 feet deep, third deepest in North America. At 6,225 feet above sea level it is the highest of its size in North America and holds enough water to cover California to a depth of 14 and-one-half inches.

Nestled in a lush basin in the Sierra Nevada, the 191-square-mile lake lies about 200 miles east of San Francisco and is sliced in two by the California-Nevada state line.

It is known to be a graveyard for dozens of ships and planes. It is also believed to hide bodies which never surfaced because the water, which gets as cold as 39 degrees, prevents bloating and decomposition.

One inmate still sought after jailbreak

SEATTLE (AP) — Police Monday sought the sole remaining escapee in the aftermath of a jailbreak by seven inmates that left one escapee dead and a police officer and two getaway car drivers wounded.

The seven used a gun to overpower their guards at the King County Jail, rode an elevator down from the 10th floor of the Seattle Public Safety Building and fanned out into the streets of downtown Seattle at about 9 p.m. Sunday, police said.

Seattle Police Chief Patrick Fitzsimmons said he was investigating the possibility that an organized radical or terrorist group helped engineer the escape.

"We're working on the possibility," he said at a news conference. "Apparently the break was well planned. They got a gun into the jail somehow and there were cars waiting."

The inmate still sought was identified by Flynn as David Warriner, 26, of Seattle, a convicted burglar.

UAW eases terms for Chrysler

By GUY DARST
Associated Press Writer

HIGHLAND PARK — United Auto Workers union President Douglas A. Fraser said Monday the union would seek "equality of sacrifice" from non-union workers at Chrysler Corp. in return for making unprecedented concessions to the troubled automaker.

Speaking to reporters after the resumption of contract talks at the No. 3 automaker, Fraser said he had told Chairperson Lee A. Iacocca that concessions had to cover "those not in the union as well as those in the union."

As an example, Fraser said, "Our salary people tell me people in our union are being laid off disproportionately . . . you can't tolerate that."

THE UAW REPRESENTS about 10,000 salaried workers at Chrysler, a little less than a third of the white-collar work force, the only company in the Big Three where it represents substantial numbers of these workers.

The company imposed a white-collar wage freeze in the spring, and some 1,700 executives have taken pay cuts.

In all, Chrysler has about 110,000 production workers, of whom 29,000 are on indefinite layoff. They average $9 an hour.

Never before has the UAW eased terms for one of the Big Three companies, although it did for American Motors Corp. once and also for Studebaker in 1954.

Chrysler, which expects to lose about $1 billion this year, is asking for federal loan guarantees to help it invest in new products. The company is scaling down a request for $1.2 billion to bring it under a $1 billion ceiling set by the Treasury Department, and UAW cooperation is a key component of its plan.

THE COMPANY WANTS an agreement it can show to Congress to prove that Chrysler's workers, as well as banks and suppliers, are helping out.

The previous settlements at Ford Motor Co. and General Motors Corp. will raise an assembler's basic wage by 31 percent and company hourly labor costs by 33 percent in three years. Such a settlement could cost Chrysler at least $267 million in the first year.

The day's session began with an hour-long report by Iacocca on the status of the company, the second time he has appeared at the bargaining table this year.

"Now is the time for all good union people to come to the aid of their company," Iacocca said on his way to the bargaining room.

HE SAID HE stood on his July proposal of a two-year freeze on wages and benefits, clearly an opening-round maneuver he did not expect to win approval. "It went over like a lead balloon," he said later.

Iacocca said he thought Chrysler's workers would go along with contract concessions because, "People are people and are pretty sensible when the chips are down."

And, he added: "The need is urgent."

Fraser said the union bargaining team hoped to put the union's response to Iacocca's wage-freeze proposal on the table by Wednesday.

To avoid "drift," Fraser said the bargainers probably would set a deadline soon for completion of their work, even though it would not exert the same make-or-break pressure of a real strike deadline.

Carter creates new 'Office for Families'

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — President Carter, declaring that the family unit is in trouble, told a Roman Catholic audience Monday that he is establishing an "Office for Families" in the Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

Speaking to the National Conference of Catholic Charities, the president called the family "one aspect of our national life" where a partnership of public and private interests is needed.

Carter also formally announced that the United States is pledging $7 million "to help feed tens of thousands of starving human beings in Cambodia." The money is to be funneled through the Red Cross and the United Nations Children's Fund.

The aid program was first disclosed by government sources last week. Sources said Carter originally had been scheduled to travel to Chicago for a fund-raising reception. He planned to hold a "town meeting" Tuesday with citizens of Dolton, Ill., a Chicago suburb, before flying back to Washington.

In his speech to the Catholic Charities, Carter said families "are the foundation of a healthy and vibrant society."

He said he shared the concern of John Paul and previous pontiffs for the family. "Today, what Pope John XXIII called 'the first and essential cell of human society' is in trouble," Carter said.

Carter said three White House Conferences on Families will be held next summer in Baltimore, Minneapolis and Los Angeles for a "long overdue assessment of how actions by government and major private institutions help, hurt or neglect American families."

Carter said the "Office for Families" in HEW is the first of its kind and will help implement the recommendations of the White House conferences.

U.S. dominates Nobel awards

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Two Americans and a Pakistani who took up where Einstein left off in searching for a key to the universe won the Nobel Prize in physics Monday. An American and West German who found ways to produce new drugs, pesticides and other important organic compounds were awarded the chemistry prize.

It made 1979 another year of U.S. domination of the three Nobel science prizes. Four of the seven laureates are Americans, the same proportion as in 1978.

But the happiest winner may have been chemistry laureate Georg Wittig, an 82-year-old retired professor of West Germany's Heidelberg University.

"When the phone call came from Stockholm the Herr Professor did not want to believe it at first," his housekeeper told a reporter. "He once hoped for the prize many years ago but had given it up long ago."

The physics winners were two Harvard professors, Sheldon L. Glashow and Steven Weinberg, both 46-year-old New York City natives, and Professor Abdus Salam, 53, a physicist working in Britain and Italy who is the first Pakistani to win a Nobel.

Wittig's co-winner in chemistry was Prof. Herbert C. Brown, 67, a London-born U.S. citizen teaching at Indiana's Purdue University.

DEMONSTRATIONS CONTINUE

Big Rock n-plant opening delayed

By MARK FELLOWS
State News Staff Writer

"Big Rock Point will never reopen" vowed a small group of demonstrators Sunday at the site of the nuclear power plant located near Charlevoix, Mich.

Though small by almost any standards — about 35 people — the demonstration in near freezing weather showed the dedication of the anti-nuclear groups, under the collective name Northern Michigan Alternative Development Group (NoMAD).

The demonstration was supposed to coincide with Monday's scheduled re-opening of the plant, but that was delayed two weeks for equipment to arrive, plant spokespersons said.

The two-and-one-half hour demonstration was peaceful, as both demonstrators and plant security personnel had predicted. Nonetheless, state police patrolled the site, and plant security barred demonstrators from proceeding down the road to the facility.

A DEMONSTRATION THERE last Dec. 2 resulted in 14 arrests for criminal trespass. Some members of the original "Big Rock 14" were present at Sunday's demonstration, and anticipated attending and addressing the anti-nuclear rally in Lansing this weekend.

"We live a long way from populations of students and labor groups, our traditional sources of support," said Pat Barnett, a NoMAD member. "We need the support of our brothers and sisters around the state."

NoMAD is a loose coalition of area groups dedicated to alternative forms of energy. The group includes Concerned Citizens for the Charlevoix Area and the Petoskey-based Energy Resource Group, as well as individuals from Traverse City and other northern Michigan localities.

"Nonviolence is our goal," Barnett said.

"We have no leaders and no formal organization. Everything is decided on a consensus basis."

At least one of Sunday's demonstrators attended the Seabrook, N.H. protest two weeks ago. About 1,500 demonstrators tried to force their way into the plant, but were turned back by 500 police who used Mace, smoke and fire hoses.

WE LEARNED SOME lessons at Seabrook," said Rick Burger, 24. "I was a medic there, and got maced while treating a journalist for Mace in the eyes."

"Police will start acting tougher," he said. "It radicalized people. I don't know if the struggle can remain nonviolent."

Although the group Sunday reaffirmed their commitment to nonviolent tactics at demonstrations, members admitted that they are preparing for civil disobedience when Big Rock reopens.

"When Big Rock reopens, we won't move," Theresa Hubbard, one of the "Big Rock 14," said.

"Our theme will be 'Big Rock will open over our dead bodies.'"

MARATHON OR 10,000-METER

MSU prof training for Olympics

The MSU education professor who won the Detroit Free Press International Marathon Sunday said he is now training for the summer Olympics in Moscow.

Gordon Minty, a secondary education instructor and curriculum specialist, blistered the 26-mile, 385-yard course in a marathon and personal record time of 2:15:42.

He is now training for the Olympic 10,000 meters or the marathon, he said Monday.

"If I decide to run in the 10,000-meter Olympic trial, I may run the Boston (marathon)," he said. He has qualified for both the Boston Marathon and the Marathon de Montreal. The Free Press will pay all his expenses to either race.

"If I decide to run the Olympic marathon, then I would not try either Boston or Montreal," he said.

"I might run another marathon in December or January. If I improve, I may try the (Olympic) marathon."

The Detroit course was a "good, standard course," he said, but the "wind kind of picks up down there."

"The wind was in my face for the last eight miles," he said.

He planned to take the first 15 miles at 5:10 a mile, and then pick up the pace. He finished the race with an average time of 5:10.7 per mile.

Minty did not run in the 1977 Free Press Marathon because of an Achilles tendon injury, and in 1978 he was out due to a groin injury.

In a marathon in Montreal last month, he stopped about six miles from the finish because of stomach cramps.

Minty was nearly three minutes ahead of the next two finishers, Robert McOmber and Duane Spitz. McOmber won last year's Free Press run.

A graduate from Eastern Michigan University with a master's degree in industrial technology, Minty's best times for the 5,000- and 10,000-meter runs are 13:38 and 28:20 respectively.

He is a marathon winner, "but mostly a track runner," he said.

Minty broke last year's Detroit marathon record by nearly 2 minutes, and he also won the Belle Isle marathon three years ago.

Dan Sheets, a senior in Hotel, Restaurant and Institutional Management from Warren, finished 98th with a time of 2:43:27.

Theresa Hubbard says she always thought of herself as a good, law-abiding citizen.

She still does.

Hubbard was the last of 14 persons arrested during a demonstration at the Big Rock Nuclear Plant near Charlevoix last Dec. 2. The "Big Rock 14" were arrested for trespassing on the property of Consumer's Power, the facility owners.

"We just joined hands and stepped over the chain," she said.

"WE GOT ABOUT 50 feet down the road and were arrested. We had two chances to go back, but we used the time to talk with the company people."

"I was scared and shaken. I was always a law-abiding citizen."

The 23-year-old nutrition major at Petokey's North Central Michigan College feels the action was worthwhile, though costly.

The lawyer's bill for the group's defense is now up to $7,000, with just a little money coming in from the group's supporters in Ann Arbor, Lansing and other areas.

"We felt it was the best way to get things moving," she said. "A year ago there was no anti-nuclear consciousness up here at all. Now it's really taken off."

"THE POLICE WERE very agreeable," she said. "I got the impression of a general feeling of support."

The 14 were sentenced in September to pay $105 apiece or serve ten days in jail.

"If I paid the fine it would be like admitting guilt," she said. "I'd rather spend the time in jail if I have to."

The group's defense was handled by James Olson, a Traverse City lawyer.

Lansing police holding Dewitt man for assault

A Dewitt man is being held in the Lansing City Jail in connection with a series of assaults and a car chase with police Sunday night.

Robert Howard Leathers III, 20, of 610 Dewitt Road was arrested Monday morning on eight charges ranging from malicious destruction of property to assault with a vehicle.

Lansing Police officer Sgt. Robert Mendel was injured during the chase after the suspect rammed his car into the officer's vehicle.

Mendel was treated for shock and possible injuries at Sparrow Hospital and released. The incidents started at about 11:30 p.m. Sunday at the 1100 block of Orchard Court in Lansing when a man reportedly assaulted a woman, identified by police later as Leathers' girlfriend.

When neighbors intervened the man pulled a knife and threatened them, police said. The woman then fled from her house and the suspect kicked in four windows before leaving in his car, police said.

Police said they spotted the man in his car and chased him to the north Lansing area, where he hit a parking meter, two road signs and finally rammed into a police car.

Ed. priorities fall

Student interests are not often considered when state governmental decisions are being decided. It may be hard however, for the legislators to continue ignoring student concerns over rising tuition fees. This in part is due to the perseverance and precision game strategy on the part of the newly selected Student Board members. The board members have embarked on an all-out drive to have their opinions regarding runaway tuition fees listened to by state legislators. Board members are meeting today to determine which course of action they will take.

Rising tuition costs can be attributed mainly to the reluctance of the state government to appropriate funds to higher education institutions. The Student Board hopes to have its position known and understood by the time the next appropriations meeting takes place, and it also hopes to give the legislature a show of student discontent over rising tuition costs by means of a mass rally. For this rally to come off successfully, avid student support is imperative. The board would like to instigate this support by conducting polls to gain student input on how the protest should be run. Getting students involved in the rally before it actually takes place is a fantastic strategy for gaining student support. Other protests in the past have dealt with issues that are as emotionally one-sided as is the concern over high tuition rates, but due to poor planning, few of these have been effective. This precision organizing on the part of the Student Board should prove to be an effective tool in gaining legislative attention.

The argument of the board against unjustified tuition hikes is as precisely put together as is its planning for the upcoming protest. The board cites the fact that in the past decade state funding for education has taken a lower priority in the legislature's fiscal policy. In the early '60s, higher education ranked 18th on the list for amount of funds received. Currently, it is ranked 34th. This lowering of priorities for the funding of education is a reality across the nation. Education has shouldered the brunt of reduced funding that resulted from recent tax rebellions sweeping the country. Since the importance of education has not declined in recent years, neither should its funding.

Castro ignored

As major issues regarding American foreign policy continue to face the Carter administration, these issues are repeatedly met with hesitant actions, and characterized by an absence of diplomatic skill. This seems to be the case with Fidel Castro's arrival to the United States over the weekend. This is his first visit to the United States in twenty years, though his visit burdens the Carter administration with more unwanted problems.

The inability to deal with the nation's economic crisis has been one of the dubious trademarks of the Carter administration, but continued diplomatic blunders cannot become characteristic of this country's highest office.

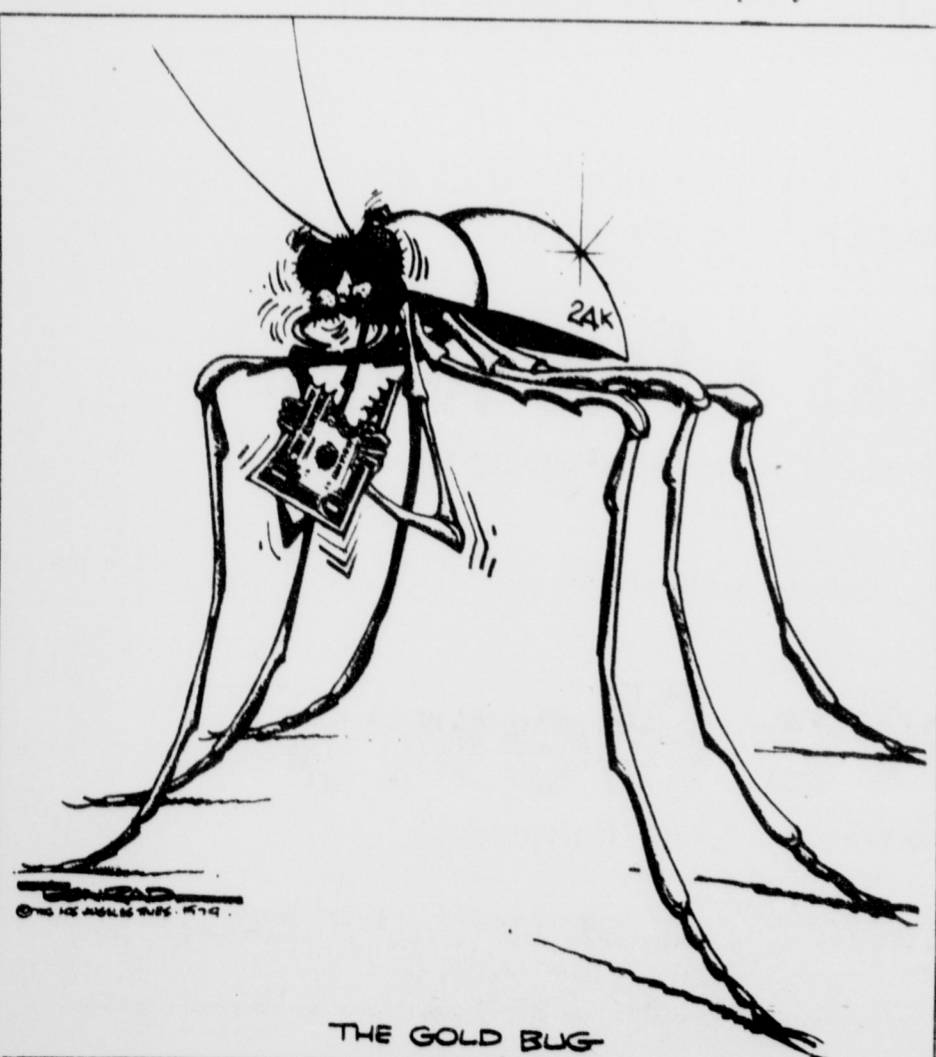

When the president of Mexico visited here about a year ago, he was given the red carpet treatment which is customary for prominent foreign officials. This sort of treatment should not be indicative of approving any particular leader's governmental policies. It should be, however, indicative of the standards of diplomatic policy.

As a leading force in Soviet American relations, Castro's presence must not be ignored, especially in light of the turmoil over the Russian troops stationed in Cuba. Several American leaders feel that not talking to Castro is tantamount to not recognizing the validity of his regime in Cuba. Well, not talking to Castro will not make him and the associated problems go away. Castro, and many other leaders around the world like him, do not quietly go away and fade into the depths of obscurity. These people often have serious problems that can only be intensified by turning a deaf ear.

That the Carter administration refuses to give Castro diplomatic recognition is quite ironic, especially since the administration was willing to recognize mainland China. Though it took the U.S. government almost thirty years to do so, it realized that ignoring a billion people would not be in the best interests of America or the world in general. Ignoring the Chinese would have had a devastating effect on the world as a society. The effects remain the same with ignoring Castro.

This latest American diplomatic blunder, when viewed in a global perspective, illustrates that the U.S. government — and not just those directly involved with the Carter administration — must revamp its outlook on international foreign policy. Critical issues like the oil crisis caused by OPEC price increases and the American lust for gasoline suggest that the United States may have to take a back seat to other nations if this country is to continue to be a leader in this constantly changing world.

Should President Carter not learn from his political mistakes, the recent episode in Cuba will haunt the United States as will the Mideast troubles arising from American refusal to talk to the Palestinians. Accordingly, not talking to Castro will undoubtedly escalate the likelihood of some sort of confrontation between the United States and the Soviet Union — with Cuba as an interested third party.

VIEWPOINT: INFLATION

Carter using wrong approaches

By DON PRIOR

The Carter Administration has repeatedly placed blame for our current inflationary woes on the increasing price of foreign oil. This new high rate for foreign oil is responsible for the current high price of gasoline. However, this rise in price does not inflate us, it only impoverishes us. Inflation occurs only when we attempt to pay for our OPEC bills with money printed specifically for that purpose.

Inflation, as defined, is an abrupt increase in the supply of money and credit relative to available goods, resulting in a marked and persistent rise in prices. An important distinction must be here in regards to the implication of rising prices due to inflation.

The rise in prices of foreign oil has resulted from the increase in demand for oil, given that the supply of foreign oil is held relatively constant. It is not an increase in price due to an increase in the money supply (i.e. definition of inflation). The rise in the consumer price level, on the other hand, was caused by an increase in the money supply relative to available goods. That, by definition, is inflation.

The Federal Reserve Board may choose the objectives of fiscal policy or monetary policy in their pursuit of public policy questions. Fiscal policy refers to the quantitative setting of interest rates (i.e. federal funds rate, discount rate) and allowing the supply of money to rise or fall, depending on the demand for money at those interest rates. Monetary policy attempts to control the supply of money and let the interest rates settle at levels that depend on the demand for money relative to that supply.

The fed has used primarily fiscal policy to guide the economy for the last 25 years. Fiscal policy during times of inflation possesses a basic paradoxical flaw. Assume that money supply is inflated (i.e. printing money to pay OPEC bills) and that the rate per year at which the money supply is increased (i.e. inflation) equals 10 percent.

The fed sets interest rates at 13 percent and the consumer is able to borrow money from the Banks at 14 percent. The consumer borrows money this year at 14 percent and assuming that his nominal income rises proportionally with inflation, he will have 10 percent more dollars next year with which to pay back the loan. The net effect is a "real" interest rate of 4 percent. The consumer will demand more loans at this low rate (relative to the nominal rate of 14 percent) and the fed creates the loans by increasing the money supply. This phenomenon results in an "inflationary spiral."

The more the money supply increases the higher inflation will be relative to available goods. That relationship implies an even lower "real" interest rate.

Fiscal policy could be facilitated during periods of inflation if the fed would discount the effect of inflation on nominal interest rates. This alternative would involve raising long-term interest rates high enough to offset inflationary expectations. This strategy is hazardous due to the fact that the level to which interest rates should rise, in respect to inflationary expectations, cannot be measured.

Monetary policy is the only feasible alternative during periods of inflation. This approach will eliminate the "inflationary spiral" by the ability of the fed to control the money supply. Short-run interest rates will temporarily fluctuate, but in the long-run stability is possible. The fed has made a very important and welcomed decision in selecting monetary tools to implement public policy.

The Carter administration has chosen the wrong approach in dealing with the causes and implications of inflation.

VIEWPOINT: CIA

Bad guys are infiltrating

By MORRIS CONERLY

After the disclosures of the assassinations, subversion and sabotage in which the CIA allegedly has participated, it is time to ask whose side they are on. If they are on the United States' side, which is dedicated to preserving and protecting freedom, then the CIA has a strange way of helping out, to say the least.

From the overthrow of the Iranian government in 1953 to the debacle in Chile, each regime that replaced the previous one was far more repressive and inhumane. A pattern of events like this cannot be considered accidental. The question is how did the U.S. get itself into a position where its course of action runs counter to strongly stated goals of freedom and democracy?

Maybe we can understand the United States intervention in Chile and involvement in other coups, if we put it in the context of the good guys versus the bad guys. For the majority of Americans this should be easy to understand, since from kindergarten on, we have been indoctrinated that America was fighting to protect and save the world from the communists, who were godless and evil incarnate.

Whether actually stated, it was assumed we were the good guys, because sure as hell they were the bad guys. In this fight against the bad guys, we discovered the bad guys used dirty tactics, i.e. espionage, sabotage, assassination, etc., to further their evil aims. At this point in time a decision had to be made to fight fair or dirty.

Having decided to fight dirty, the good guy U.S., aided by the CIA, has succeeded admirably. So well, in fact, that the opposition is nowhere in sight, left in the dust. The CIA has demolished governments efficiently enough to qualify as a wrecking company, replaced administrations as regularly as Midas replaces mufflers. With the success the CIA is having they should be giving courses to the opposition in order to have some competition. Right now the only way you can tell the good guys from the bad guys is with a scorecard.

Confusing? Yes. So confusing that it even has America's intellectuals befuddled. Their confusion was evident when they seriously debated contentions like Kissinger and Colby's arguments concerning to what extent a democracy may employ "dirty tricks" in the pursuit of its goals. Debate on this is like an angel asking God can the angel be a part-time devil. No way could there be consideration of such a ludicrous proposition. The rationalization put forth by Kissinger, Colby and others of their ilk, should be seen in the same light, for its ridiculous and absurd flight from logic. What happens though is that some of the leading elements in the intellectual community jump through hoops and go through wild mental gyrations and contortions in order to accommodate the CIA viewpoint.

If our intellectuals are confused, our leaders in the legislative and executive branches appear to be in the same boat. Why it is felt necessary to close ranks in support of the CIA's dealings is beyond comprehension. Keep in mind, this support comes amidst reports of torture and repression considered excessive even for our time.

The motivating factor in this collective decision appears to be the desire to demonstrate patriotism for America: A patriotism that demands that one accepts the goodness of America because it is America, to operate on faith and not critical observation, to always be trustful of the leadership and provide unrelenting support, because support is strength, and strength helps America keep up the "good fight."

Understanding how this patriotism works has allowed the CIA to carry out their operations unhampered. They have tried to be as secretive and discreet as possible, but whenever their devious schemes have been exposed, the CIA has known it was possible to go to the American people and have their actions rubber stamped OK. The chicanery the CIA practices masks its under cover operations, but it also obscures who the CIA serves. Supposedly it reports to the Forty Committee, which in turn reports to the White House. However, there are grave questions as to whose interests the CIA is serving. Huge multinational business interests or ideological fanatics who see the fight against Communism as a Holy Crusade. If the CIA is operating on the behalf of economic interests who will sacrifice democratic ideals to the making of a buck, then obviously the interests of the American people are not served.

Get new speakers,

State Theatre

If the State Theatre's sound system is the worst in the Lansing area, which it is, why does "Apocalypse Now," (described as having one of the best soundtracks ever produced for film) have to play in the worst Butterfield Theatre? I have occasionally listened to movies in the State Theatre that I had previously heard in other theatres without audio distortion, only to have the State Theatre's speakers garble whole sentences.

At first I thought the sound track was bad, then that my cramped position, knees below chin, was preventing blood from reaching the aural part of my brain, or worse, that my eardrums had finally rebelled from too much mega decibel rock 'n roll and disco in area bars. But it wasn't me! It was those tin cans they call speakers in the theater. As a customer service they ought to station a lip reader at the front of the theater to yell out every third word.

The mid-range of the speakers at the State Theatre are, in audio jargon, "tired." And I am very tired of trying to listen through them. If the Butterfield Theatre owners cannot transfer "Apocalypse Now" to another of their two theatres in the area, they ought to buy a new sound system for the State.

Neilson's right—Styx is wrong!

Why doesn't everybody just leave John Neilson alone? Just because he has the guts and the good sense to ridicule the rock 'n roll taste of 8,000 screaming teeny boppers

(who are five years behind in rock 'n roll taste anyway), doesn't mean he should be slandered in ridiculously written letters. Styx is obviously a passe band. Sure, five years ago the sound was "cool" but the novelty has worn off, even as Styx manufactures third-rate albums. Wise up, young MSU rockers! Recognize a good reviewer when you read one. Or better yet, open your clogged ears and minds to jazz and if you're still hooked on Styx's trashy attempts at music, you are too far ingrained in the groove of a naive young rocker.

Hurrah for the SN reviewers

I have been reading the editorials putting down the music reviewers during the last week. I applaud the reviewers. Although I do not always agree with them I respect them for "calling it the way they see it."

A concert is not just the music it is the whole experience. When the SN reviewers go to a concert they review the entire scene. I do the same thing when discussing the concerts to go to with friends. Don't you?

The reviews I have read (almost all of those published the last three years) show that they have a good grip of the music scene, not just your Boston, Styx, Kansas, Knack, Supertramp types, but other, less known, and often more progressive aspects of the music world. If you read any music magazines you will know there is more to music than the "Top 40." But the reviewers reasoning was all explained in the Welcome Week edition of the SN.

SHORTAGE WON'T HURT STATE

Salt supply good for winter

By MICHAEL VEH
State News Staff Writer

With winter rapidly approaching, road crews across the state are beginning to worry about the predicted shortage of road salt.

The expected shortage is due to a salt workers strike in Cleveland and a salt mine explosion in Louisiana, according to the U.S. Salt Institution. Ray Boomer, Michigan Department of Transportation manager of administrative services, said the department will have enough salt to keep the state's 9,450 miles of highway clear of ice and snow.

"Fortunately," Boomer said, "we learned of the shortage early. Steps have already been taken to fill the state's storage sheds."

THE INGHAM COUNTY Road Commission has placed its initial order for salt but whether or not there will be a shortage is impossible to predict, said James St. Louis of the road commission.

If there is a shortage, we will have to use sand, he said, because there are no other effective alternatives.

Sand is sometimes used in place of salt to add traction on slick surfaces. But road control experts said the use is infrequent because sand does not melt the ice.

Other materials are being tested by the Michigan Department of Transportation as possible substitutes but most traffic departments agree that salt is the cheapest and most effective way to keep roads clean.

The East Lansing Public Service Department is not deeply concerned with the possibility of a shortage.

"WE'VE SURVIVED PAST shortages," David Ronk of the Public Service Department said. "Our best bet is to conserve the current supply."

Ronk also mentioned using sand as a substitute in the case of a severe salt shortage.

Gilbert Lloyd from the MSU Grounds Maintenance Department said he does not foresee any problems with a shortage of salt.

However, he added, there is no way of knowing how much will be used over the winter.

He said that MSU gets much of its salt from the Morton Salt Co. in Canada and that troubles in the American salt industry have no effect on the MSU supply.

"SOMETIMES WE HAVE trouble getting salt when the Detroit River freezes over," Lloyd said. "If we have to, we could get an emergency supply from the International Salt Co. near Detroit."

Lloyd said International Salt has assured MSU that there is no shortage in their supply of salt.

He also said sand has been used in limited amounts in the past and could be used again if necessary.

"We'll just have to wait and see," Lloyd said.

Cost of the lecture series is $15 per person, or $25 for husband and wife. For enrollment information, contact the Evening College.

Bullard act returns illegal benefits

Unemployment benefits fraudulently obtained will have to be repaid to the Michigan Employment Security Commission under a bill introduced into the state legislature by Rep.

Perry Bullard.

The proposal would require the MESC to recover benefits illegally obtained and to impose a fine equal to half the amount of the false claim.

The Ann Arbor Democrat said the bill would not be punitive but would "ensure that only those who really need and deserve unemployment compensation, get it."

"Solid enforcement efforts to weed out fraudulent claims will keep public confidence in the programs," Bullard said.

He said the commission has kept losses very low but added that more enforcement is necessary.

Fraud usually occurs when workers collect unemployment benefits while being employed, Barbara Eldersveld an aide to Bullard said.

Problems often arise when determining whether a person has made an "honest" mistake when not reporting the claim.

Students are generally unable to receive unemployment benefits, said Norm Isotalo, of the commission's Detroit office.

If students are willing to stop taking classes in order to work, Isotalo said, then they are eligible for unemployment benefits.

Council may review task force members

The proposal to have the Academic Council review members of the James Madison College reassessment task force will be presented at the Student Council meeting today at 3:15 p.m.

The Executive Committee met on Oct. 8, at Provost Clarence L. Winder's request, and voted to allow the Academic Council to review the members of the task force.

Also on the agenda will be remarks by the president and provost and the election to the Student Council Agenda Committee.

The status of student vacancies on University Standing Committees and a report on Revisions of the Academic Freedom Report will also be discussed.

The meeting will be held in the Con Con Room of the International Center.

'Slow Train': Dylan's apocalyptic vision

By BILL HOLDSHIP
State News Reviewer

When rock reached its peaks as a "religion" of its own during the mid-'60s, Bob Dylan was a religious figure — the foremost spokesperson for rock's new counterculture. The analogy has often been made that if John Lennon was God and Mick Jagger was Satan, then Bob Dylan was Jesus, since his poetry and messages became the gospel Word for the disenchanted yet idealistic rock generation of that turbulent decade. (As a matter of fact, Dylan would later use Christ allusions in reference to himself, the most recent example being "Shelter From The Storm.")

But with the close of the '60s, Dylan retreated from political and social statement to a more personal vision, a stance which slowly evolved to the point of solipsism. The only time this stance really worked was on Blood On The Tracks, since the LP was written and recorded during a period when the artist was living life on the edge and in the very depths of emotional desperation.

The final straw for many of Dylan's disillusioned fans was last year's disastrous tour (which brought him to Detroit and Kalamazoo) in which the singer donned a pseudo-Neil Diamond persona to ruin most of his classic tunes with Las Vegas-type rearrangements. It became increasingly difficult to remember that Bob Dylan had once been one of rock's greatest artists — the angry young folk singer who was the musical core of the civil rights movement; the eccentric young speed-freak who picked up a stratocaster and snarled Rimbaudian hallucinations to invent folk, protest and "message" rock, and the mellowed recluse who drew on the core of American music to invent country rock and the archetypal singer-songwriter persona.

Perhaps the most common complaint voiced by Dylan's fans is that the '70s have been a decade so full of evil, hate and hypocrisy that they have made the '60s look tame, and why hasn't Dylan made a visionary statement about these lousy times? But alas, Bob Dylan could never be accused of staying in one place for too long, and the artist finally fulfills the desires for a '70s statement on Slow Train Coming (Columbia FC 36120).

Thanks to the hype over Dylan's recent "religious conversion," Slow Train Coming is perhaps the most controversial album of this decade and certainly of Dylan's career. Many critics and fans have called the album the best thing the artist has done since the mid-'60s, while others feel that Dylan probably should have worn a helmet when he had that motorcycle accident many years ago.

From a purely musical standpoint, this is one of Dylan's greatest works. He has employed producer Jerry Wexler (famous for his work with Atlantic soul artists like Aretha Franklin), and the production is crisper than on any Dylan LP in recent memory. Not surprisingly, the LP has a very bluesy feel — complete with the Stax-like horns of Muscle Shoals — as Dylan employs various forms of '70s R&B from pseudo-disco ("Gotta Serve Somebody") to reggae ("Man Gave Names To All The Animals"). The music is a perfect complement to what Dylan is trying to express. But perhaps the best addition to Dylan's new sound is the superb lead guitar work of Mark Knopfler, who Dylan borrowed from Dire Straits.

But enough about music. Dylan's primary importance has always been his poetry, and — even if he chose never to write another thing — his past work guarantees that he will be remembered as one of the most important poetic geniuses of the twentieth century. Too much has been made of Dylan's religious convictions, since anyone familiar with his work can see that he has always dealt with religion. Before solipsism, Dylan always drew upon the ultimate questions which religion and art have always tried to deal with, and songs like "Highway 61," "Wheels On Fire" and "All Along The Watchtower" were Dylan's biblical allegories of an impending apocalypse.

Now, it doesn't take a visionary to see that the world is currently going to hell, and Dylan is still singing about the apocalypse on Slow Train Coming. The major difference is that he seems to feel that the apocalypse is very near. (This currently isn't an uncommon idea. In a recent High Times interview, Ken Kesey — another '60s icon — stated he believes that the world has less than ten years remaining.) This is apparent since Dylan has never been so literal in his poetry before. Instead of the "jokers" and "thieves" of the past, Dylan now cites such literal items as sexism, racism, fascism, "gangsters as politicians/lawbreakers making the rules," "counterfeit philosophies," "spiritual warfare," child pornography, Arab oil barons, "loved ones turning into puppets (DEVOT)," and even Henry Kissinger and Karl Marx as the basis for our impending doom.

Slow Train Coming is a purely American concept, and Dylan keeps his preaching solely to "American soil" and "the home of the brave." The railroad has always been one of America's most archetypal symbols, but the train Dylan sees is an apocalyptic one. (Interestingly enough, if you look at the liner notes to Highway 61 Revisited, you'll notice that the first line Dylan wrote was "On the slow train . . .") On the LP's title song, Dylan looks at all the inherent evils cited above, but the key line occurs when Dylan roars: "The enemy I see wears a coat of decency!" Definitely food for thought, Mr. and Ms. America.

The Christ references are two-fold. Dylan has always been obsessed with the outlaw theme ("To live outside the law/You must be honest"), and who was a more important "outlaw" than Jesus? "The man who died a criminal's death" is how he describes Jesus on "Precious Angel" — one of the most precious songs Dylan has ever composed. And pure Christian doctrine is definitely an "outlaw" concept in our current world of greed and evil, for the doctrine as Dylan sees it is nothing more than human love or the "golden rule." Dylan is so literal about this that he has written a song entitled "Do Right To Me Baby (Do Unto Others)." When he sings that we've "gotta serve somebody — the devil or the Lord," he is simply referring to the battle between good and evil which he always dealt with.

"When You Gonna Wake Up?" Dylan asks us, and he hopes that it will be before "When He Returns," for then it will be too late. Slow Train Coming is one of the most important works of this decade, but too much has been made of Dylan's religious beliefs. Bob Dylan is no zealot or fanatic. What he has done on Slow Train Coming is built an entire LP around a concept that Elvis Costello — one of Dylan's "children" — once expressed in three lines: "Waiting for the end of the world/I sincerely hope you're coming 'Cause you've really started something." Gabba, gabba hosanna!

Booters fall to Indiana in Big Ten Classic finals

By JEFF HITTNER
State News Sports Writer

It would have been expecting too much for the MSU soccer team to upset Indiana University Sunday in the finals of the Big Ten East Division Classic.

But someone failed to mention it to the Spartans as they took the field against the nation's No. 1 soccer power at Bloomington, Ind. The outcome was as expected with the Hoosiers taking the championship game 5-0, not until MSU had offered one of its most sterling efforts to date.

The Spartans played Indiana on equal terms through most of the first half. The game was scoreless until the Hoosiers' Armando Betancourt tallied the first of his two goals of the afternoon with ten minutes left in the period. It proved to be the only score Indiana needed.

"We played them with a lot of intensity during the first half," MSU coach Joe Baum said. "It was one of our best efforts."

BUT THE PLAY that dramatized MSU's performance came with Indiana leading 5-0 and just 20 seconds left in the contest. MSU's Richard Huff went out of his way and took a charge by an Indiana player to prevent a sixth goal from being scored. Huff twisted his knee on the play and may miss the Spartans' final six games of the season.

"Indiana has a fine, fine soccer team," Baum remarked. "They're as good as any collegiate soccer team I've seen in 15 years. It really wasn't disappointing to lose to them."

The Hoosiers, who increased their season mark to 12-1, have given up just two goals this year.

The Spartans earned the right to face Indiana in the championship game by virtue of a 2-0 victory over Ohio State University Saturday. The Hoosiers had beaten the University of Illinois 5-0 to reach the finals.

MARK NETERER AND Steve Schad scored on assists from Vancho Cirovski to give MSU its winning margin over the Buckeyes.

"It was a tough game with Ohio State," Baum said. "I thought it was our best win of the year."

Rob Grinter, the Spartans' regular goaltender, was credited with his fifth shutout of the season in blanking OSU. He collected three shutouts in eleven games last fall.

MSU's season record is now 6-4-1, equaling the number of wins earned in each of the past two seasons.

The Spartans' next match is against Spring Arbor College at 3:30 p.m. Wednesday, on the MSU soccer field.

NCAA champs lose Vincent to injury

By ADAM TEICHER
State News Sports Writer

Even before practice officially opened for his team Monday, MSU basketball coach Jud Heathcote got some bad news: starting center Jay Vincent has a stress fracture of his right foot and may miss four to six weeks of action.

The injury is on the same foot and very similar to the one suffered by Vincent in the final game of the regular season a year ago against the University of Wisconsin.

"The doctors say it healed and broke again," Vincent said at practice Monday as he watched his teammates go through drills without him. "They say it will be four to six weeks before I'm able to run."

Heathcote also thinks that last year's injury may never have healed. "I think his foot has been bothering him on and off since that time," he said. "It's hard to figure out with stress fractures. They usually heal on their own."

Vincent averaged 12.7 points per game last season. He started every regular season game and the first round playoff match against Lamar University. His injury forced him out of the starting lineup for the remainder of the playoffs, but he came off the bench in three of those games to help the Spartans to the NCAA title.

All of the other Spartans are healthy and reported to practice Monday, and workouts began without any further catastrophes, but Heathcote said, "That's like saying your house burned down, but everything else is fine."

Nonetheless, Heathcote is optimistic. "We always shoot for the moon, yet we have to be realistic this year," he said. The Spartans will be without both Earvin Johnson and Gregory Kessler.

"We're going to talk about repeating as Big Ten champs, talk about being runners-up and we're going to talk about the possibility of being the third place team because we feel the NCAA will take three teams from the Big Ten into the tournament this year. So I'd say we're fighting for first, second, or third places," he added.

Golfers settle for sixth

The MSU women's golf team fought wind and cold temperatures last weekend to take a sixth-place finish in the 20-team Indiana Invitational in Bloomington, Ind.

MSU did not play well in Friday's first round, according to coach Mary Fossum, as the team was forced to settle for a sixth-place tie with Purdue and Marshall universities with a 328 card. But the Spartans "played a little bit better" Saturday, recording a 324 on the day, to take sixth place away from both Purdue and Marshall and finish the tournament with a stroke total of 650.

Ohio State University won the tournament easily with an impressive two-day total of 607.

Freshman Alison Sellers was the Spartan medalist in the tourney with rounds of 79 and 81 for a 160 total. Ann Atwood, 84-79-163; Syd Wells, 86-80-166; Nina Spatafora, 82-86-168;

Linda Baryames, 83-87-170; and Lisa Speaker, 87-84-171, rounded out the scoring for MSU.

For the Spartans, the most important part of the weekend was their improved play Saturday, which may have given them momentum heading into the season-ending Midwest Regional Tournament at Purdue

Friday and Saturday.

Fossum has already chosen five of the six players that will represent her team in that event. Wells, Sellers, Spatafora, Speaker and Atwood will make the trip to West Lafayette and a playoff is being held in practice this week to determine who the sixth (continued on page 10)

Stickers lose again; record falls to 6-4-2

For the fourth time in as many tries, the MSU women's field hockey team came up empty-handed in its attempt at gaining its seventh victory of the season, dropping a 1-0 contest to Northern Michigan University Saturday in Marquette, Mich.

"We played a good game," said head coach Sam Kajornsin. "It seemed like we spent an awful lot of time down in their territory."

Kajornsin noted that the Spartans were penalized 30 times in the game, compared to 16 penalties for the Wildcats.

Another contributing factor to the stickers' demise, was the fact that three Spartan players had finger injuries.

"We couldn't handle the penalty corner shots that we got because of these injuries," Kajornsin stated. "We just were not effective enough to score." (continued on page 10)

Schembechler

-no due process

ANN ARBOR (UPI) — University of Michigan coach Bo Schembechler, admitting he knew little details of the case, said Monday, "the American Football Coaches Association should step in" and look into the firing of Frank Kush as Arizona State's football coach.

Kush was told Saturday he was being relieved of his duties after his team's game. He was accused of attempting a cover-up of an alleged incident involving the hitting of a football player, who has since filed suit.

"I don't know any more than you do," Schembechler said at his weekly press conference. "This is the kind of thing the association should step into and find out what's going on."

Schembechler said as far as he knew at the time, Kush was fired over "an alleged incident."

"No football coach in America has due process. Ever," Schembechler said. "That's why our association should step in."

The Splash

The Green Splash, MSU's synchronized swimming club, numbers 25 women participating in a sport that has a 53-year tradition at the University.

Cori Jacobs, coach of Green Splash, said the purpose of the club is to provide men and women a chance to improve both mental and physical abilities through synchronized swimming.

"SYNCHRONIZED SWIMMING IS a developing sport," Jacobs said. "It is a combination of gymnastics, weightlifting and endurance swimming, within a framework of both individual and team sport."

The club will compete this winter in several intercollegiate invitational competitions. Points in the competition are awarded individually for compulsory maneuvers as well as for freestyle routines in the solo, duet, trio and team categories. A team may have four to eight participants.

"A lack of university funds prevents us from competing at higher levels," Jacobs noted. "Nonetheless, our club may be one of the top ten programs in the country."

The highlight of the year for the club is the annual performance, which gives members a chance to showcase their skills.

THE SHOW IS scheduled for spring term. "This fall, club members will work mostly on conditioning and skill development," Jacobs explained. She added that participation in the club is still open to any student interested.

Practices are held from 6-8 p.m. in the Jenison Fieldhouse pool.

Defense, Kajorsin added, played a major role in not only this year's game, but also a year ago when MSU defeated NMU by the identical 1-0 count.

"We attacked them very well this year," Kajorsin said, "but their defense is very good."

With what is basically a new MSU starting lineup this season, Kajorsin also pointed out that the Wildcats did not lose a single player from last year's squad.

The loss drops the stickers' record to 6-4-2, following an early season string of six shutout victories.

"It's such an important tournament that we have to go with the players that we feel are the strongest right now," Fossum said.

He pointed out, as an example, that Nigeria had dealt a major economic blow to Britain after Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher announced Britain would lift its sanctions against Ian Smith's government in Zimbabwe-Rhodesia.

"Nigeria was saying, 'If you don't respect our views of the African continent, we don't want to do business with you,'" Young said.

"Some people would call that blackmail, but essentially, when people feel as though the acts of others are evil, it is their responsibility not to cooperate with those acts."

Because Nigeria is the second-largest supplier of oil to the United States, Young said he met with the Nigerian ambassador to make sure that "Nigeria was not going to start playing games with our economy."

HOWEVER, BECAUSE THE United States had had a good dialogue with Nigeria for several years, Young said the two countries understood and respected each other's positions on issues.

He added that that type of political response to Africa by the United States had been responsible for the continued good relations with the African continent, as contrasted to the Middle East situation.

It is important to look at the validity of an opponent's point of view as well as your own, he added.

"So that is the way I approached my job at the United Nations," Young said.

YOUNG ALSO SAID the challenge of the coming age would be for people to be able to address these types of complexities.

"As we begin to deal with those problems with each other in this academic environment," he added, "we are preparing the way for solving those problems all over the rest of the world."

"Today and tomorrow and as long as we use our minds, use our wills and remain faithful unto ourselves, we can, and we will, overcome."

After his speech, Young answered a number of questions which came from the audience.

HE SAID THAT some multinational companies could provide a wholesome influence in African development. He said he took several United States businesspersons to Africa for 17 days, during which they signed over $1 billion in contracts.

He added that although he does not advocate a national divestiture policy from South Africa, divestiture by universities could be extremely effective.

Young said that as president of the U.N. Security Council, he talked to the Palestinian Liberation Organization to get a resolution which the PLO supported postponed. That decision led to his resignation, he said.

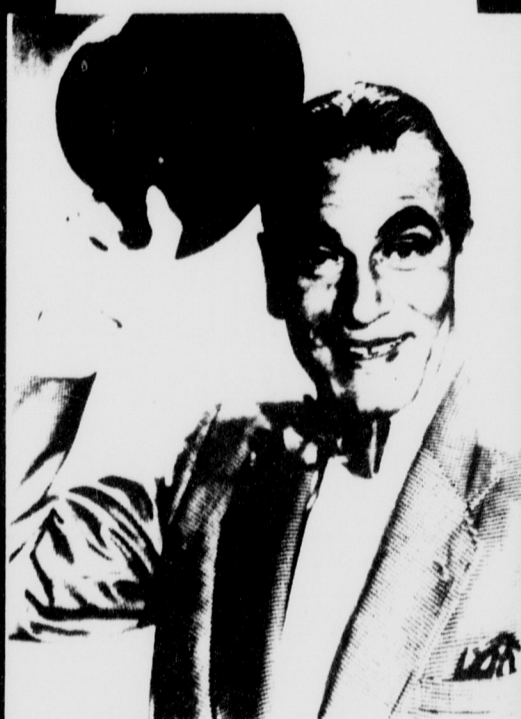

"Everything that I have done, I thought was in the interest of my country," Young concluded.

As the audience began to applaud, Young added, "I wasn't looking for any trouble. I was trying to be a good nigger."
