Rogers may follow director to Arizona

By ADAM TEICHER

In Joe Kearney's four years as the MSU athletic director, the Spartan football team went from probation to conference champion and the basketball team from nowhere to national champion.

Now he is gone.

Kearney resigned from his post Tuesday evening to accept an identical job at Arizona State University, ending his reign over the MSU athletic department that began on April 1, 1976.

Speculation is heavy that MSU football coach Darryl Rogers will join Kearney at Arizona State and fill the coaching vacancy at the Arizona school, which is based in Tempe, a Phoenix suburb.

KEARNEY HAD SAID earlier that he wasn't interested in taking the Arizona State job, but did an abrupt about face.

"At about 5:45 (p.m. Michigan time), Arizona State school officials called me and made their formal offer," Kearney said, recounting Tuesday's incidents.

"After conversing with my family and Michigan State officials, I told them (the ASU officials) that if this was their offer, that I would be happy to accept," he continued.

"I think Joe Kearney has done an outstanding job at MSU under difficult circumstances," MSU President M. Cecil Mackey Jr. said via the telephone from Miami, where he is attending meetings of the National Boating Safety Council. "I've enjoyed working with him and I wish him well."

Arizona State has already outlined Kearney's first task.

"WHAT THEY WANT me to do right away is to get out there and meet some people and search for a new football coach," Kearney said, indicating he would be leaving for Tempe today before returning to tie up loose ends at MSU.

He said that it was not part of a package that Arizona State also sign Rogers.

"No, that's not my understanding," he said. "Finding a new football coach is my responsibility and hiring Darryl Rogers has crossed my mind." Kearney added that his choice for a new coach will come within the next two or three days.

Rogers said Tuesday evening that he has not been offered the job and there was nothing to a report of a package deal of both he and Kearney going to Arizona State. (continued on page 2)

Carter to address Congress Jan. 23

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Carter announced Tuesday he will deliver his State of the Union message to Congress on Jan. 23. Aides said Carter may make it a promised statement on dealings with the Soviet Union.

Carter's appearance before Congress at 9 p.m. EST, is certain to be broadcast live by major television and radio networks.

Jody Powell, White House press secretary, said a written State of the Union message, focusing on domestic concerns and legislative initiatives, will be released next Monday.

Powell said the Jan. 23 address would deal at greater length with foreign affairs and could be the occasion for a presidential discussion of long-range relations with the Soviets in the wake of the Soviet military intervention in Afghanistan.

Airline employees walk off the job

American Airlines ground employees walked off their jobs Tuesday in at least four cities, forcing a number of flight cancellations, a company spokesman said.

The walkout by members of the Transportation Workers Union halted nearly all American Airlines flights from San Francisco. The strike also hit LaGuardia Airport in New York, Dallas-Fort Worth Regional Airport, and airports in Tulsa and Los Angeles, said airline spokesman Al Becker in Fort Worth, Texas.

The union members involved are fleet service clerks, baggage and air freight handlers, aircraft cleaners and possibly some mechanics, Becker said.

Indictments rise to 119 in GSA scandal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Evidence of corruption in the General Services Administration mounted Tuesday as 11 persons agreed to plead guilty here to bribery and conspiracy charges in a scandal that has spread to 15 states and Washington, D.C.

The plea agreements involve $415,000 in fraud against the government and $120,000 in bribes and kickbacks to federal workers.

They bring to 119 the number of indictments nationwide against contractors and government employees, most of whom work for the GSA — the government's office supply and building maintenance agency.

William J. Lynch, who heads a Justice Department task force of 30 prosecutors, FBI agents and GSA auditors investigating the agency, said the latest plea agreements boost the number of convictions in the scandal to 109.

Kennedy denies Chappaquiddick report

WASHINGTON (AP) — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy on Tuesday attacked the accuracy of two investigative reports that raised fresh questions about whether he told the truth about the incident at Chappaquiddick.

He said he would have been foolish to start a presidential campaign if he were hiding the truth about the automobile accident that took Mary Jo Kopechne's life.

As he has almost since the accident on July 18, 1969, Kennedy stuck to his version of the tragedy, and said one of the new reports published by the Washington Star — "is wrong, is wrong, is dead wrong."

TURNER TELLS ASMSU

Fraternity not violating 'U' rules

By REGINALD THOMAS
State News Staff Writer

By not allowing two MSU gay males to dance together in the Multiple Sclerosis (MS) marathon, Delta Tau Delta fraternity is not in violation of University anti-discrimination policies, Moses Turner, vice president for student affairs, said Tuesday.

Speaking at the ASMSU Student Board meeting Tuesday night, Turner said the fraternity could maintain its guidelines to determine what classifies a contestant.

Turner added the criteria is not discriminatory because it does not say Dan Jones and Ben Lowery cannot participate, instead it says in order for them to win prizes they must be a male-female couple.

Turner said any student could attend the event as part of the gallery. He added these students could dance, but could not win unless they met the criteria of the event.

TURNER'S STATEMENTS CAME after he met with Louis F. Hekhuis, associate dean and director of student government. Hekhuis met earlier with Steve Rennie, president of Delta Tau Delta fraternity.

After holding separate meetings with Rennie and Turner, Hekhuis explained to Jones, former ASMSU President and a member of Gay Council that the problem was not one of discrimination.

Hekhuis and Rennie based their comments on the belief that a male-male couple would have more stamina than a female-male couple, Jones said. This, Hekhuis and Rennie believed, would give a male-male couple an unfair advantage, Jones added.

"I thought that stunk of sexism," Jones said. If a male-female and a male-male couple were to dance, no couple would be at an unfair advantage, Jones added.

"A male-female couple has a certain amount of athletic ability just like a male-male couple," he said.

Their (Hekhuis and Rennie) agreement is that Delta Tau Delta can do what they want," Jones said.

BUT RENNIE SAID the fraternity decided to not allow Jones and Lowery to dance because it would be unfair to the other couples to change the entry rules.

Rennie added that he and Hekhuis did not decide anything, instead Hekhuis took the rules to Turner, who said they were fair.

"We are just trying to have a fair contest," Rennie said.

The problem began when Jones and Lowery, went to Delta Tau Delta on Nov. 17, to register for the marathon. Jones said they were treated politely until it was discovered he and Lowery wanted to participate as a male-male dance couple.

The fraternity told Jones and Lowery they could not participate because of the adverse effect it might have on possible donors to the marathon.

JONES THEN TOOK the issue to the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU), the East Lansing Human Relations Commission; David Bird, director of the Michigan Multiple Sclerosis Society; and Don Lloyd, of Miller Brewing Co. in Milwaukee.

Jones said each group was supportive of he and Lowery. But Mark Torigan, chairperson of the marathon, said the groups might have said they sympathized with Jones and Lowery, they did not give support.

Torigan said Lloyd explained to him that if the situation becomes too volatile Miller Brewing Co. might withdraw. Miller currently supplies many of the prizes offered to marathon participants. Torigan also said ACLU representatives told member of Delta Tau Delta that Jones and Lowery had no legal basis for their claims.

Paul Emery of ACLU said the ACLU position states there should be no discrimination because of sexual orientation. But Emery added that there are no statutes in Michigan which make the fraternity's actions illegal.

"I don't see why the fraternity feels so strongly as to why they have to prohibit same sex dancers," Emery said. "Because it (the marathon) is open to the public it shouldn't be discriminatory."

EMERY SAID JONES and Lowery have no protection under the law. He added the ACLU is working toward developing a law which would protect people with different lifestyles.

"It's unfortunate that the fraternity feels it has to somehow be exclusive and judge who can participate," he said. "Discrimination is there but there is no law covering it."

But both Lloyd and Bird said they sympathized with Jones and Lowery's efforts to support the Multiple Sclerosis Society but did not feel Miller Brewing or (continued on page 2)

Fund set up for 'deportable' Iranian students

By ELYSE GOLDIN
State News Staff Writer

A fund aimed at helping an Iranian doctoral student who is seeking asylum in the United States has been organized by MSU's history department chairperson.

Donald Lammers organized the fund late last week to financially assist MSU student Malek Towghi while he seeks asylum to avoid deportation orders. Lammers is Towghi's doctoral dissertation director.

On Jan. 4, the Iranian student was cited as being of illegal student status in this country. He and his family were ruled "deportable" by federal immigration officials.

Lammers said that the fund will help Towghi pay for family and legal expenses throughout the litigation period.

Though he has not yet received any contributions, Lammers said that he has spoken with interested donors and expects some contributions in the near future.

TOWGHI HAS HAD to rely on his $290 per month salary as a graduate assistant in the Department of History to support his wife and four children. Because of their legal statuses, Towghi's wife and older children are not permitted to work in this country.

The Iranian said he lost financial support from his native government in 1978 for openly criticizing the shah while he was still in power.

Towghi's political activism on campus and publications in the State News deploring the shah's regime were reported to the now fallen government by the shah's intelligence system, SAVAK, he said.

He said that SAVAK agents based at MSU would report to Iran any campus activities that were against the shah.

Similarly, when he began criticizing the Iranian leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Towghi said the current intelligence system working for the Khomeini government also reported his activism.

Towghi said that his visa was denied renewal because the Iranian consulate in Chicago received reports on his political activism.

SINCE APRIL, TOWGHI and his family have been living illegally in the United States, which stamped them "deportable."

Towghi said that many of MSU's Iranian students work directly as intelligence agents for that country's government.

"Although the name of the intelligence system has been changed to SAVAMA, agents are still intact here," Towghi said.

"They (SAVAMA agents) are directly in touch with the Iranian embassy and tell them about all the dissidents," he said.

Towghi said that Iranian students at MSU have personally told him to curb his anti Khomeini activism or he will be forced to face the penalties arising from their reports to Tehran. He said he has received many threats and much harassment from MSU's Iranian populace ever since he first came out against Khomeini, several months following the Ayatollah's succession to power.

TOWGHI SAID ONLY Persian-speaking Shiite (a Muslim sect) Iranians are represented by Khomeini's regime and other ethnic groups in that country are severely oppressed.

Ethnic groups such as the Baluchis, Kurds, Turkomans, Iranian Arabs and Azarbaljanis (non Persian-speaking, non-Shiites) are discriminated against there and often killed without reason.

He said that if he is not granted asylum and must return to Iran he will at the least be tried and most likely be executed for being a Kurd and Baluchi as well as an Iranian dissident.

Usually it takes about one month to be granted asylum. However, Towghi said that due to the instability elicited from the Iran situation, the State Department said that his case may take longer.

"They will have to deport me physically and with much force because I do not want to walk to my own slaughter house," Towghi said.

Iran sets deadline; Afghan fighting slow

Media must leave by midnight Friday

By ALEXANDER G. HIGGINS
Associated Press Writer

TEHRAN, Iran (AP) — Iran Tuesday ordered American reporters to leave the country by midnight Friday in a move one Iranian official said could help ease the embassy crisis by "lowering the temperature" and taking pressure off the militants who hold the American hostages.

The United States, meanwhile, moved to build up pressures on the Iranians by rounding up support from the NATO allies for economic sanctions against Iran.

The Carter administration also pressed its court action against the Iranians. Lawyers for the U.S. government formally presented a lengthy legal brief on its case against Iran before the International Court of Justice in the Hague, Netherlands. The court is the main legal arm of the United States.

ABC News quoted unnamed U.N. sources in New York as saying Iran's revolutionary Moslem leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, would accept U.N. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim as an intermediary in the U.S.-Iran crisis. It said Mansour Farhang, Iran's chief of mission at the United Nations, had received a message from the Foreign Ministry stating Waldheim was acceptable.

The secretary general made a four-day visit to Iran two weeks ago to try and negotiate the release of the hostages but Khomeini refused to see him.

ABOLGHASSEM SADEGH, DIRECTOR of foreign press at the Ministry of National Guidance, said the expulsion of reporters for U.S. news organizations would mean that "the students (embassy militants) might be more relaxed and the hostages might be more relaxed in turn."

"I think it will be good for Iran, the United States and the hostages," he said, adding that the move could "lower the temperature . . . (and) might help the situation as a whole."

The 50 or so American hostages have been held prisoner at the embassy since Moslem militants seized the complex Nov. 4, demanding the return of the exiled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in exchange for their hostages' freedom.

Iran's ruling Revolutionary Council and Cabinet ministers decided Monday to eject the 100 or so American reporters here from the country, but did not set a deadline. On Tuesday, the National Guidance Ministry told The Associated Press that the deadline for leaving the country is midnight Friday.

The Iranian government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini accused the American journalists, part of a 300-member international press corps, of "biased reporting" on the Iranian situation.

IT SAID FRENCH, British and West German journalists and those from other countries could stay for the time being. The non-American journalists, Sadegh said, can look at Iran "in a more fair way" since the hostages are not their fellow countrymen.

Tehran radio announced Tuesday night that any American journalist unable to meet the expulsion deadline because of exceptional circumstances would have to appeal personally to the National Guidance Ministry by noon Wednesday to explain his position.

Los Angeles radio journalist Alex Paen, who delivered an estimated 3.5 million Christmas cards to the hostages, indicated he would appeal because of the Superbowl professional football game Sunday. He said that on Monday, before the expulsion deadline was issued, the embassy militants agreed to let him provide the hostages with a taped recording of the game.

Media reaction was swift to the ruling, and the heads of leading news organizations in the United States sent cables to Abolghassem Sadegh, director of foreign press at the Ministry of National Guidance, predicting the action would deprive the American people of first-hand accurate reports and would delay a resolution of the crisis.

The U.S. government campaign for sanctions against Iran was taken Tuesday by Brussels, Belgium, where Deputy Secretary of State Warren Christopher met with members of the North Atlantic Council.

THE SOVIET NEWS agency Tass criticized Christopher's talks, saying they "may lead to a further heightening of international tensions and to an enhancement of military preparations."

Soviets airlift troops; rebels continue fight

By The Associated Press

Anti-communist rebels, reportedly fighting a losing battle against a modern Soviet force, claimed Tuesday to be disrupting movement along three roads into Kabul, forcing the Soviets to airlift troop reinforcements and supplies into the Afghan capital, a Pakistani newspaper reported.

On the political front, the Soviets, angered by a United Nations General Assembly resolution calling for withdrawal of their troops from Afghanistan, denounced the action as intervention in Afghanistan's affairs.

The daily newspaper Nawae Waqt of Rawalpindi, Pakistan, carried the report of the rebel action against the highways. It quoted rebel sources across the Pakistani border in Afghanistan. The same sources said rebels had killed the governor of the northern province of Baghlan.

It has been impossible to verify such rebel battlefield claims independently.

WESTERN DIPLOMATS IN Kabul have said, however, that the Russian troops have clamped down to a large degree on the Moslem rebellion and there was little fighting anywhere.

Other sources have said the rebels continue to resist the Soviets in the northeastern province of Badakhshan and in Paktia, near the Pakistani border. But on Monday, hundreds of Soviet army trucks rolled northward through Badakhshan with only a light guard.

Two Soviet motorized divisions numbering some 25,000 men have moved into western Afghanistan, in the Herat area 75 to 100 miles from the Iranian border, but there is no indication Iran's oilfields are threatened, the State Department said Tuesday.

The official Soviet news agency Tass denounced as "concoctions" some U.S. news reports that Soviet troops were massing on Afghanistan's border with Iran within striking distance of the oilfields.

"Nobody can have the slightest doubt about the Soviet Union's friendly stand in respect of Iran and no provocative statements can change this fact," said the Tass report from Moscow.

IN WASHINGTON, STATE Department spokesperson Hodding Carter dismissed suggestions of such a threat to Iranian oilfields as lacking U.S. intelligence confirmation, and said, "Geography makes it a little difficult to strike at the oilfields from the northwest of Afghanistan."

Iran's oil region is around the Persian Gulf, some 750 miles from the Afghanistan border near Herat. The Soviet Union's own border with Iran is nearly 200 miles closer to the main oilfields.

The Soviets reacted angrily, too, to the U.N. General Assembly's call Monday for the troop withdrawal.

The resolution, adopted by a vote of 104-18, with most Moslem and Third World members voting for it, did not name the Soviet Union specifically. But it said the General Assembly "strongly deplores" military intervention in Afghanistan, and called on the Security Council "to consider ways and means to implement" the withdrawal.

In a Tass report from Moscow, the Soviets condemned the U.N. move as "backstage actions by American diplomats and others."

THE STATEMENT QUOTED Afghan Foreign Minister Shah Mohammad Dost as having told the Assembly the resolution was "aimed at interference in the internal affairs of Afghanistan."

Tass said the United States, China and their allies "imposed" the "artificially concocted Afghan question" on the General Assembly. Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim said of the resolution, "The real value of such a decision is the moral value, because it is an appeal to the international community."

"This is the strongest action in the United Nations in 25 years against the Soviet Union," said Deputy U.S. Ambassador William vanden Heuvel.

As many as 100,000 Soviet troops have poured into Afghanistan to ensure the success of the Dec. 27 coup that eliminated President Hafizullah Amin and put Babrak Karmal, a man more to the Kremlin's liking, in power, and to reinforce the Afghan army in putting down the Moslem revolt that broke out after the communists first took over the country in April 1978.

U.S. moves to help the thousands of Afghan refugees fleeing across the border into Pakistan got under way Tuesday with arrangements by the U.S. Agency for International Development to ship tons of wheat, oil and milk.

Kearney accepts Arizona State position

"There is no way I would go to Arizona State or anywhere just because of an athletic director," he said from his home. "The things being said about me or my family not liking Michigan are absurd. My wife never said she doesn't like the weather here. Who does?"

ANOTHER REPORT SAID that Kearney was leaving because of problems he had encountered with Mackey.

"That's false, absolutely false, 100 percent false,"

Kearney said. "he has been supportive, active and interested in our athletics. In fact, I received comments and encouragement from Dr. Mackey while I made my decision. Athletics at Michigan State are going to do well under Dr. Mackey."

Prior to his appointment Tuesday, Kearney had said "One of the strongest things that would keep me here would be the support I get from the administration."

Mackey said the alleged conflict between him and Kearney. "It is absolutely untrue. We worked well together." Vice-President for Operations Ken Thompson said of the rumored conflict between Mackey and Kearney, "It is untrue. Joe and I and President Mackey talked on a number of occasions and I can't recall one disagreement."

KEARNEY'S MOVE LEFT different impressions on two members of the MSU Board of Trustees.

"I'm very disappointed and perplexed," said Raymond Krolikowski, D-Birmingham. "I thought we had a firm offer from him to rebuild our athletic program. I had no inkling of his apparent displeasure."

"I'm surprised," said Michael Smydra, D-East Lansing. "I wish him well and hope he is happy there. If he felt he needed to go, then it's a good move. I'm disappointed to see him go."

"Joe was in a tough spot at Michigan State, walking in with probation and the athletic department being down so far. I have mixed emotions. I'm sad to see him go, but I'm happy for him."

"We will look quickly to replace him," Thompson said. Former Arizona State athletic director Fred Miller was fired on Jan. 3. Until his dismissal, Miller was known to covet Rogers for the coaching position.

MS marathon

the society should be involved with the issue.

"We can understand his (Jones) feelings but that the issue of gay rights merits a different connotation," Lloyd said. "The whole situation that is arising is detracting from the whole marathon."

Lloyd said Miller Brewing Co. has not taken a formal stand on the issue but if the efforts change from raising money for multiple sclerosis to gay rights, then Miller Brewing might consider withdrawing.

"We'll have to make a decision on that (possible withdrawal)," Lloyd said. Miller Brewing does not want to get in a battle over gay rights, he added.

MEANWHILE, BIRD SAID he and the Multiple Sclerosis Society have no objections to Jones and Lowery dancing in the marathon but the issue is between Jones and Delta Tau Delta not the Multiple Sclerosis society.

Bird said the MS society wants to remain neutral. "We don't make the rules of the marathon," Bird said. "We could not tell either one what they should or should not do."

U.S. gold price to $715

By KRISTIN GOFF
AP Business Writer

NEW YORK — The price of gold soared above $700 an ounce for the first time in New York Tuesday as uncertainty over U.S. gold auctions added fuel to gold fever.

Gold was bid up to $715 an ounce in late New York trading, according to Republic National Bank, after Treasury Secretary William Miller told reporters the United States had not been auctioning gold in recent weeks because of turbulent conditions in the gold market. He said the present "unsettled" market conditions were not appropriate for gold auctions.

While Miller also said the country's overall policy on gold auctions had not changed from one of holding occasional auctions with little advance notice, traders said the market apparently saw Miller's statement as a possible squeeze on already tight supplies.

Gold, trading at around $690 just before Miller's statement, shot up to $715 a bid and $720 asked in late trading, according to Republic National Bank. The closing bid was $47 an ounce higher than Monday's close.

AT THE COMMUNITY Exchange, the price of a spot futures contract, for delivery of gold this month, finished at $712.50, up $41.50 from Monday. Silver also was swept along, as the spot contract gained $3.80 an ounce to $46.30.

The dollar made modest gains against most major world currencies Tuesday despite gold's worldwide climb.

Council approves JMC report

By LESA DOLL
State News Staff Writer

The Academic Council voted Tuesday to approve a task force report calling for maintenance of the present status of James Madison College.

Provost Clarence L. Winder, who is left with the decision about the college's status, is expected to give his final opinion on the matter in several weeks.

The task force, charged in September to review the organizational structure of the residential college in relation to the entire University, decided to leave James Madison an independent college, said assistant provost Dorothy Arata, chairperson of the task force.

Arata told the council that the task force had approved the option over the alternative of incorporation with the College of Social Science.

WINDER ASKED JAMES Madison College to form a task force because of the college's future enrollment projections. He asked that the task force merely review the organizational options of Madison.

In the report, the task force considered six topics having to do with the status of the college. These topics included the protection of the Madison program in a time of fewer students and less money, flexibility of faculty resources, the issue of cooperative liaisons between Madison and other MSU programs, the issue of loss of visibility, changes in the mode of representation in academie government, and budget issues.

Among these issues, the topic of most concern in the final report is the loss of visibility.

Task force members and other members of the council said that incorporation might erase the "college within a college" status that attracts many students to James Madison.

"I've had James Madison students in my classes for many years and they are outstanding," said Mordechai Kreinin, professor of economics. "The people at James Madison have accomplished their mission with success. I don't think we should tamper with success."

THE MISSION OF James Madison has traditionally been concerned with closer relationships and contact between instructors and students. Those who support the independent status of the college maintain that incorporation would remove these qualities.

"Many students would be lost to the University if it were not for James Madison College," said James Pickering, director of Honors College, who made the final motion for the council to approve the report.

Winder suggested the option of semi-autonomy to the body, remarking that there were three options in question: keeping Madison an independent college, incorporation or semi-autonomy.

Winder said "a college within a college" and "semi-autonomous" mean essentially the same thing, but that semi-autonomy would allow for the long-term utilization of scarce resources.

"It (semi-autonomy) implies there be, on a continuing basis, dialogue in important matters having to do with basic things," he said.

"JAMES MADISON college has served the university well by having a very unique, distinct and superior program," said Charles McKee, director of the Evening College.

"We need more evidence for termination than we have now," he said.

Winter shipping closes on upper Great Lakes

By DAVE SCHWEISBERG
United Press International

Freighter traffic on the upper Great Lakes dwindled to a trickle Tuesday with the earliest curtailment of winter navigation in 10 years, following a decade-long experiment that kept the lakes open in all seasons.

The Soo Locks at Sault Ste. Marie were scheduled to close at midnight Tuesday. The earliest prior closing in the 1970s came during the winter of 1976-77, when the locks shut down Jan. 31.

Only a few ships were reported still out on the upper Great Lakes.

THE SHUTDOWN BLOCKS transit from Lake Superior to Lake Huron and halts virtually all commercial shipping, mainly iron ore from northern Michigan and Wisconsin.

The locks remained open in winter during the 1970s under a controversial program, managed by the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers, to test the feasibility of continuing shipping while the lakes were throttled with ice.

Despite unseasonable temperatures — the mildest in the ten year life of the pilot program — the Jan. 15 closing date was agreed to after Gov. William G. Milliken threatened to use his legal authority to halt shipping a month earlier.

Environmentalists blasted the proposal in recent years as potentially damaging to aquatic life and shorelines. They charged officials had not sufficiently studied the possible adverse impact.

"Congress did not approve new funds for the winter navigation experiment," said Chief Joseph Amato of the U.S. Coast Guard's 9th District headquarters in Cleveland.

"AS FAR AS WE KNOW, it's shut off in the winter for good. We don't know if they'll pick it up again."

Amato said U.S. Steel Corp. officials have indicated they will not dispatch ore carriers on the southern Great Lakes this winter, clamping off a "majority" of traffic on Lake Erie.

The only area reported jammed with ice, Amato said, was near Green Bay, Wis.

The sole freighter left Tuesday morning in the St. Clair River, Lake St. Clair and the Detroit River, which comprise the Huron Erie passageway, was the cement carrier S.T. Crapo, owned by the National Gypsum Co.

The Crapo was sighted downriver of Detroit heading toward Lake Erie by a Coast Guard helicopter patrol.

"From now on, it's going to be pretty much local stuff in the lakes, like tankers up near Mackinaw," Amato said. "But with the weather like it is, it's kind of unpredictable."

Amato said the Coast Guard will operate an ice-breaking cutter and buoy tenders in the Detroit area throughout the winter. Also in service, he said, are ice breakers based at Sault Ste. Marie, St. Ignace, Cheboygan and at Milwaukee. Those ships, he said, will "assist where needed."

With each encounter, overseas students are learning conversational English and American traditions.

Foreign students at MSU have arrived from countries as far away as Kuwait, Japan and Guatemala. Those involved in the program are currently studying English at the English Language Center before taking part in regular University classes.

About 60 American students each year participate in the program — far less than the amount of foreign students requesting a volunteer.

International Interaction volunteers are only expected to spend about five hours a week with the foreign student to help ease the shock of being in a different country.

Volunteers interested in helping an overseas student can sign up and attend the International Interaction orientation at 4 p.m. Wednesday in 4 Student Services Bldg.

Police seek warrant for robbery suspect

Lansing police are investigating the Monday night armed robbery of Famous Recipe Fried Chicken, 3007 N. East St.

Police say a man about 45 years old ordered two barrels of chicken at about 9:10 p.m. Monday. Upon receiving the chicken, police said, the man held his hand in his pocket like he had a gun, and ordered the cashier to give him money.

The man, then fled in a yellow Ford Mustang with an undisclosed amount of cash, and the chicken, police said.

Police say they have a suspect and will seek a warrant from the Ingham County Prosecutor this week.

City OKs bonds for mall

By ROLAND WILKERSON
State News Staff Writer

Ground breaking will commence this spring on a small shopping center in Lansing following the City Council's decision to issue bonds to help fund the project.

Up to $1 million in low interest tax exempt bonds will be issued through the city's Economic Development Corporation.

EDC bonds make funds more accessible and encourage financial institutions to become involved in funding various projects, said Emerson Ohl, executive director of the EDC.

THE DEVELOPERS WILL only pay about half the normal interest rates on the bonds, while the financial institution will not have to pay taxes on the interest it makes, Ohl added.

Harry Bomers, one of the contractors involved with the project, said a drugstore and a doctor have made commitments to build on the property and that they are still seeking other interested parties.

The project, which will be on the corner of Saginaw and Shiawassee streets, should be completed seven months after it begins.

In other action, the council referred to its Public Properties and Safety Committee a proposal from the Michigan Women Studies Association to use the former Baptist Convention Center as a women's hall of fame.

GLADYS BECKWITH, president of the association, said her organization is asking the city to shoulder most of the costs involved in bringing the structure at 213 W. Main St. up to code.

Beckwith said her organization wants to lease the building for $1 a year for 25 years and would be responsible for maintaining the structure.

Councilmember-at-Large Sid Worthington, a member of the Public Properties and Safety Committee, said after the meeting that he favors leasing the house to the association.

He added, however, that he needs more information on the renovation costs of the house and said the possibility of acquiring state funds to assist in the funding should be examined.

Insurance official's advice: 'beware' of no-fault fraud

By SUSIE BENKELMAN
State News Staff Writer

Consumers who think they are getting "good deals" on no-fault insurance policies should beware.

Howard Spence, assistant commissioner of consumer protection from the Michigan Department of Commerce insurance division, said insurance buyers should watch out for two frauds when they buy auto insurance.

The frauds, he said, occur throughout Michigan and are especially concentrated in metropolitan areas.

The first involves phony insurance agents who sell policies that look like a legal insurance document.

"A LOT OF THESE people get in accidents and then find out they don't have coverage," he said. "Some can't even find their agents."

Spence said the false document might suffice for proof of insurance when buying license plates, but the fact remains that the buyer would not have no-fault coverage.

These types of policies usually require a minimum deposit of about $25 or $50, which the false agent will pocket. The agent then becomes "unavailable" when someone tries to make a claim, he said.

The other type of fraud involves actual insurance agents who merely don't send the premium deposit and application to the insurance company.

In this case, the agent also pockets the deposit and other payments.

"When buyers go to file a claim," Spence said, "they get a runaround and don't ever receive the claim."

IN MANY CASES, Spence said, one can't tell the difference between a false policy and a real one.

"There is no way to tell the difference unless the policy names an insurance company that is not a company," he said.

To avoid this type of rip-off, consumers should deal with an agent who is reliable, he said. It is also important that buyers check with the company to confirm the agent sent in the application for coverage.

Spence also said the insurance bureau recommends buyers be careful if a rate looks exceptionally low compared to others. He said the insurance bureau will confirm an agent's license over the phone.

The bureau also recommends that consumers beware of people who try to sell insurance in odd places such as a street corner or in line waiting to buy license plates. Buyers should also be suspicious of those who demand cash payment for a deposit or premium.

IF A CONSUMER is "taken" by one of these frauds, he is "out of luck," Spence said.

"We have no statistics," he said, but the secretary of state's office has assured us that there are hundreds of thousands of people driving around uninsured, especially in large cities like Detroit.

Spence said that persons who think they have been the victim of such a fraud, should report it to the Insurance Bureau's investigation Division of the Michigan Department of Commerce, P.O. Box 30220, Lansing 48909.

Health problems loom at Kresge

The suffering of artists knows no bounds. It can disintegrate their determination, stifle their creativity. It can also get into their eyes and lungs in the form of harmful chemical vapors, a danger that has recently become evident at MSU's Kresge Art Center.

Reports of poor ventilation in the center have apparently been taken lightly in past years. Complaints about vapors permeating the air have been voiced on and off, but measures taken were ineffective rather than preventive.

But, the problem of chemical contamination is something on which the University should be well-versed in by now. Last year's discovery of improperly dumped chemical wastes on University land saw MSU move expeditiously — hiring consultants from throughout the state to investigate a problem that, to the best of everyone's knowledge, had not posed any immediate health hazards.

Unlike chemicals in University landfills, chemicals used in Kresge are not by-products; they are part of art students' work. Those students are constantly subjected to a number of substances, some of which may be creating health problems unknown to either students or their supervisors.

The greatest fear is that some students may have received a large dose of harmful vapors stretching over a period of years, making it virtually impossible for the University to accurately assess the physical damages caused by those vapors.

Problems similar to the Kresge situation have been cropping up across the country in establishments where potentially harmful chemicals are used. Accordingly, health and safety standards for businesses have been raised. So has the awareness of the infinite number of possible ailments that can result from exposure to chemical vapors, sawdust and asbestos particles. The problems in the art center may not yet be that alarming, but simple measures could be taken to reduce the amount of airborne vapors.

The University is expected to undertake a plan to examine the level of chemical vapors in Kresge Art Center within the next 10 days. Included in the plan are suggestions to relocate departments where vapors are most prevalent. The investigation may conclude quite simply that the building's ventilation system provides inadequate circulation. If that is the case, the installation of a new system would be worth the peace of mind it would bring.

Neutralizing the 'New Cold War'

American-Soviet relations are likely to enter a new and potentially chilling era this month as President Carter unveils his "Carter Doctrine," a comprehensive policy aimed at containing Soviet aggression in Southwest Asia. Like presidents Monroe and Truman before him, Carter apparently hopes that a clear-cut, no-nonsense approach to violations of unwritten international law will deter his adversaries and leave the American sphere of influence intact without a sacrifice of American lives. This is, by anyone's standards, a monumental expectation.

Regardless of one's views on the propriety of a grain embargo, a halt of technology exports to the Soviet Union or the proposed boycott of the Olympics, Carter deserves full support in his efforts to curb Soviet aggressions in Afghanistan. The small Asian nation, which has continuously voiced its desire to be free from Soviet and American influence, is in a strategic location; notably as a stepping stone in reaching the Persian Gulf. Any military intervention in Afghanistan will ultimately shape up to be an economic battle, the bottom line being access to the oil-rich Middle East.

On a larger scale, the events of the past month appear to have effectively snuffed out a decade of effort toward the elusive goal of detente. Borne of an honest wish for peaceful coexistence and a climate of mutual understanding among nations, detente has, in the estimation of many in the Carter administration, been a vain attempt.

It has, for the most part, failed to curb an alarming increase in nuclear weaponry. As the events in Afghanistan so pointedly prove, it has not been successful in diluting the Soviet penchant for meddling in the affairs of sovereign nations.

For the time being, the ideal of detente remains in a state of suspended animation as American and Soviet strategists ponder their next moves in shaping the state of the world for the '80s. Doubtless, SALT II is in ill health, its immediate chances for passage effectively doomed by the rumble of Soviet tanks in the streets of Kabul. But, for the United States and its allies to revert to the "Cold War" mentality of two decades ago would entail abandoning the goal of detente for a far less desirable alternative.

A new Cold War, with all its inherent isolationism and breakneck military escalation, would not further the cause of peace, nor would it be likely to contain Soviet ambitions any more than would a reasonable policy of coexistence. The Soviet-American struggle for global influence will continue unabated despite the diplomatic climate; each side can easily claim (as have both lately) that various forms of military escalation are merely logical defensive responses to the other's "aggressions."

In light of the most recent developments, advocates of detente are certain to take a closer look at their expectations of the behavior of nations. But they would probably agree, as would most of us, that a peaceful world is best predicated on an atmosphere of mutual cooperation and understanding.

'LASH' LARROWE

My hat's off to the University

I'm at this trash can party one of my female students dragged me to Saturday night, gettin' it on over in the corner with this fox I've just met, this James Madison College junior comes over.

"Aren't you Dr. Larrowe?" he asks, peering at me through the murk.

"Get lost, bub," I growl. "Can't you see I'm busy?"

"I wouldn't interrupt you, Dr.," the creep says, "but I'm so dismayed by the University's decision to appeal the Hildebrand case I had to talk to somebody, and I know you're tight with the top administrators here at MSU."

"O.K.," I relent. "What is there to be dismayed about?"

"It's just that it seems so unfair for the University to appeal the decision when the jury ruled the 'U' violated professor Hildebrand's First Amendment rights," he says. "If you ask me, the 'U' is awfully mean-spirited to appeal a jury verdict like that."

"Sometimes I wonder what they're teaching you over in James Madison," I sighs, handing the bong to the fox. "If you understood our legal system, you'd know the 'U' has a perfect right to appeal. The University's entitled to due process, too, same as your friend Hildebrand is."

"I'm aware of that," he bristles. "But Hildebrand had to wait 10 years to get a fair trial. Then, when he finally gets it and wins, wouldn't you think the University would be graceful about it and reinstate him with back pay? Ten years, Lash!"

"Before you go bad-mouthing our administrators, sonny," I tell him, "you might at least consider what they have to expect if they let Hildebrand get away with winning his case."

"Every Tom, Dick and Harry on the faculty who can't cut it will take MSU to court, some jury off the street'll grant him tenure. How'll the 'U' maintain the excellence of the faculty then?"

"You're not suggesting Hildebrand didn't deserve tenure, are you, Lash?" he asks.

"All I know is what I heard in the courtroom in Grand Rapids," I answers. "The University's lawyer said 'His teaching wasn't so hot, and he couldn't get along with his colleagues.'"

"I wonder how he got a majority vote in his department to be on the advisory committee just a month before he was fired," he muses. "Anyway, you know yourself, Lash, your pals in the administration always say 'He wasn't a good teacher' when they want to get rid of a boat-rocker."

"It used to work real good in the old days," I chuckles.

"That's another thing that stinks about the way the 'U' treated Hildebrand," he persists. "When they fired him, nobody said anything to him about not being a good teacher. Then, when he asked for the reasons for being fired, they refused to give him any."

"Looks to me like they didn't have any reasons, Lash, they dreamed up this bad teaching rap 10 years later, for the trial."

"If you'd been in the courtroom," I say loftily. "You'd have heard one of MSU's top vice-presidents explain why the 'U' didn't give Hildebrand those reasons. They would have had to put a copy of the reasons in his file, and if it had fallen into the hands of a potential employer, hey, Hildebrand might have been turned down for a job somewhere else."

"I don't know about you, buster," I concludes, "but my hat's off to our administrators for protecting Hildebrand, yessir!"

"I sure don't understand how you got your reputation for always sticking up for the little guy," he mutters. "It's perfectly obvious Hildebrand's getting a raw deal, and here you are on the University's side, Lash."

"I just got it!" he suddenly busts out. "The jury gave Hildebrand $249,292 in back pay, right? Add interest over the 10 years on that, plus his lawyer's fees the 'U'll have to pay if he wins, we're talking $350,000 for a ball park figure! You're afraid if he wins, some of that'll come out of your salary increase for 1980! Naturally, you don't want Hildebrand to win."

"I'm sympathetic with Hildebrand, sure," I says. "But I have mouths at home to feed, too, like everybody else."

"With inflation running at double digit rates these days, every dollar counts."

Justice served

Dear Professor Hildebrand:
Congratulations on getting a jury to award you those bucks! Even if this University does put you back on the faculty, why not just smile sweetly at them and tell them to get lost. A man of your obviously superior qualifications shouldn't be wasting his time and virtues among the denizens of this bureaucratic jungle. Good luck!

America is under constant attack

In response to the interview with Ali Mohammad, MSU student and member of the Iranian Student Association, I would like to make the following points:

You seem to have your situation a little mixed up. You say that you would like to politically educate the Americans. You are a visitor in this country on an educational visa. That doesn't mean you are here to educate us. It means that you are here so we may educate you. The United States does this so you may improve your life and become part of the 20th century.

Furthermore, you say that when we know what is really happening in Iran, we "will fight the government." You fail to realize that in America, the people are the government. We don't have a shah or an ayatollah that can single-handedly kill people because of their beliefs or their loyalties.

From what I have heard, the Iranian people seem to think that there is a division between the American people and the American government. I don't believe this is so. You are underestimating the patri-tism of the American people.

This is quite evident when you make statements like "As soon as the Americans find out that they have to go to the draft, they will oppose the American position." Aside from being wrong, this statement is irrelevant. Even with the military superiority that Iran commands, the American forces will crush the Iranians before the draft is reinstated.

Let's face the facts. Your country executed or exiled all of its finest generals and commanding officers. I don't think Uncle Sam will be willing to loan you any of his this time.

In closing, you said that you "support hostility of Iranian people toward the U.S. government." I would like to say that I support the hostility of the American people toward the Iranian government, and since that government seems to be run by militant Iranian students, these hostilities will be directed toward you. After all, turn about is fair play.

VIEWPOINT: RESIDENCE HALL PROGRAMS

A resignation in Case Hall

By JAMES PETERS

"Resign or be dismissed." That's par for the course. The Residence Hall Programs Office (RHPO) has done it again! Three resident assistants from Case Hall were given the ultimatum. As a former RA at MSU, I can see that the true purpose for resident assistants has been forgotten. RHPO is no longer a "people" system!

Three or four years ago the student personnel management movement was begun. The residence halls were to be structured and operated as a corporation. Who cares how students living in the residence halls are affected by upper advisory and management staff decisions? An RA isn't supposed to create a camaraderie or establish any sort of a "people connection." They are there as part of the RHPO "machine," and they don't dare collect any dust, because the dust is liable to pass on to the main gear. That just won't be allowed.

So, somebody tried to get a freebie, with no larcenous or malicious intent. All of us have done it; that extra linen package, maybe a chair or table from the lounge. It will get returned at the end of the year; no sweat! But no, the humiliation, the anxiety, the guilt, even financial restitution and sincere offers of volunteer service aren't enough.

The man making this decision must justify that decision to his superiors, so he makes the "right" decision. Yes, it was a crime, but the "criminals" pose no threat to anyone, as a drunk driver or gun-toting holdup man might.

An important lesson has been learned: must we make a mountain out of a molehill? What the resident assistants did in no way affected their job performance (in regard to their staff or floor members.) On the other hand, what happens now could indeed have lasting repercussions in some instances, or perhaps none in others.

But where does the responsibility rest? Not with the man who made the decision, for he is somewhat removed from the situation. The 150 or so students affected by the losses of their RA's will have to accept some hand picked replacements from a "quickie" selection process. Will the replacements be able to deal with the situations and problems that the former RAs put much time and consideration into throughout the past term (or the new problems created by this situation)? And will those replacements have enough experience to choose other qualified Resident Assistants when the formal selection process begins spring term?

All this, and the responsibility left by the "man," is a tall order for a new RA. Wouldn't there have been a more practical solution?

So life will go on, regardless of the decision and its consequences, but the students who contribute to MSU in so many ways should (at least) be aware of how the decisions are made and what the consequences are.

I suppose my thoughts are too "people" oriented and don't jibe with the bureaucracy of the RHPO "machine." I look back at my two years as an MSU RA as good years, and surely the three RAs from Case Hall will also have fond memories. But, they leave their jobs with a sour aftertaste. That bothers me, and hurts a little, too; but who cares, I'm just an alumni, right?

Gang War: obnoxious 'rock' music

By BILL HOLDSHIP
State News Reviewer

To paraphrase the classic words of Martin Mull — "Was it the drugs?" In the case of Johnny Thunders, you can probably bet it was. Thunders and Wayne Kramer brought their new "band" — Gang War — to Dooley's Monday night for the first in a series of "I Don't Like Mondays" new wave shows. And as I sit here trying to type this review (oh, how I wish I would have assigned it to Neilson!), I still haven't quite decided whether I liked or hated the show. Probably somewhere in-between with a touch of disgust thrown in for good measure.

The show got off to a great start with an electrifying version of Kramer's old MC-5 "theme" song, "Ramblin' Rose." Kramer and Thunders traded some stunning guitar licks, providing the audience with what it should have expected from two past guitar heroes. The energy level remained high as the band dashed through the Heartbreakers' "London Boys" (a tune written in reply to the Sex Pistols' "New York"), Thunders' bittersweet "Can't Put Your Arm Around A Memory," James Brown's "I Go Crazy," and a Kramer cover version of Jimmy Cliff's reggae standard, "The Harder They Come."

Everything was fine up to this point, but Thunders made his first mistake when he took off his guitar. Johnny Thunders originally made a name for himself as an extraordinary guitarist with the New York Dolls. As a result, he should have played the guitar (that's what people came to see) and kept his mouth shut. Thunders apparently wanted to do a Lou Reed type "let's get as obnoxious as we can" routine. Unfortunately, he doesn't share Reed's poetic genius nor comedy wit, and — needless to say — he didn't pull it off.

Who knows if he was serious or if he was satirizing the photographs everyone has seen of so-called "educated" college students carrying "Nuke Khomani" picket signs? Perhaps it was the drugs finally taking control. (Thunders is infamous for his indiscriminate drug use which reached a fever pitch during his days with the Heartbreakers.) Whatever the case, Thunders announced that the band was going to perform a political number. With that, they went into a terrible version of Steve Dahl's already-terrible "Ayatollah" (sung to the tune of the Knack's "My Sharona").

The verbal abuse from the audience became stronger as Thunders went into a long "America — love it or leave it" spiel, complete with the philosophy that we should "go to Iran and bust a few heads in." The "f--- you's" became louder, and someone threw a glass at the stage. Wayne Kramer broke his silence (which lasted throughout the entire set) long enough to say the music would stop if anyone else threw anything at the stage. Of course, some mental midget threw a glass at Kramer, and the band left the stage. (No matter how obnoxious the band was, I can't condone such asinine tactics. Anyone who throws a glass at someone should be forced to see what it feels like to have a large piece of glass hurled at them. Grow up, kiddies. This type of BS went out with the summer of '77.)

The band eventually returned after 15 minutes, but Thunders seemed even more stoned than before while Kramer was less than indifferent. The concert was pretty much downhill from this point on, although there were several "bright" moments, including a cover of Keith Richards' "I'd Rather Be With The Boys" (from the Stones' Metamorphosis LP), an unreleased Thunders-David Johansen collaboration, and a comical parody (?) of Bob Dylan's "Like A Rolling Stone." And the show's musical high point did come during the band's first encore — a synthesis of "Big City" and the Stones' "The Spider And The Fly." However, at no point during the show's "second part" did Kramer and Thunders play guitars together. In fact, Thunders spent more time verbally abusing the audience, calling for more Jack Daniels and lighting joints onstage than he did strumming his ax.

Aside from the obnoxious stage antics, there were other aspects of Gang War which left a lot to be desired. For one thing, the band desperately needs a vocalist. Neither Thunders nor Kramer are really singers in any sense of the term. Secondly, the band's rhythm section is the pits. No matter how great the lead guitarist may be, a band just can't cut it without sufficient backbeat. After all, where would Keith Richards be without Charlie Watts and Bill Wyman? It really makes one wonder why Thunders ever disbanded the Heartbreakers who proved to be a GREAT rock 'n' roll unit when they played Detroit last summer.

In a way, I wish I wouldn't have seen the Gang War show. You see, I had good memories of both Kramer and Thunders when they really WERE guitar heroes — Kramer with the MC-5; Thunders with both the Dolls and Heartbreakers — and I'm afraid Monday night's show may have spoiled them for me. It's as though these two perennial losers — one's a junkie; the other's an ex-con — don't aspire to be anything other than losers. Gang War exploits a losing cause, and — while Thunders may poke fun at his old crony David Johansen for getting "in style" — in Thunders' own words, "you can't put your arm around a memory so don't try."

State News Tony Dugal

The worst part is that there apparently were curiosity seekers at this show to check out new wave rock, and I can only imagine the impression the show left in their minds. Hopefully, it will help to say not to expect the same type of show from the very professional, very tight Romantics next Monday night.

On the other hand, I've talked to people who thought the Gang War gig was great (although the best comment I've heard was "I give them a C for music and flunk them for politics"). One friend said he liked it 'cause it was obnoxious and rock 'n' roll is supposed to be obnoxious. True, but is it still rock 'n' roll when it gets obnoxious to the point that racism, sexism and right wing politics enter the picture? Not in this boy's book, it isn't.

So did I like the show? Well, I did get drunk, and I met this really neat person even though I didn't get her phone number and nothing probably would have come from it anyway... (Ya see, Johnny. It doesn't take any special talent to be self-indulgent.)

Lansing's own Attack (formerly the Dogs and the Squires) opened the show, and the band was much better than this reviewer anticipated. They were both tight and inspired, and their choice of the (old) Barbarians' "Are You A Boy Or Are You A Girl" for an encore couldn't have been beat. In fact, I think I may have enjoyed Attack more than I did Gang War. Besides, I think I'm in love with their lead singer...

SCAVENGER HUNT

A waste of good talent

By MARY TINNEY
State News Reviewer

It's too bad about Scavenger Hunt (20th Century Fox; at the Meridian 8). With a talented and surprisingly diverse cast and a story line that is potentially very funny, one would think that the film couldn't help but be a success. In fact, for about the first half hour the film is quite funny. But the laughs get fewer and farther between. My final impression as I left the theatre — "Boy, was that stupid..."

The idea for the film was created by writer-producer Steven Vail who has for three years hosted "The Hollywood Scavenger Hunt," an annual tour de force for the beautiful people. To produce the film, Vail enlisted the "talents" of director Michael Schultz. Schultz credits include Car Wash and Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band — Enough said.

The premise of the film is simple enough. When Milton Parker (Vincent Price), a parlor game tycoon, dies, he bequeaths his $200 million estate to whoever can gain the most points in a gigantic scavenger hunt. The list includes such bizarre items as a commode and an ostrich. The only rule is that none of the items can be purchased.

The family splits into teams. There's Cloris Leachman as Parker's sister Mildred, with her obnoxious son (Richard Masur) and her money-hungry lawyer (Richard Benjamin). The servants (Cleavon Little, James Coco, Roddy McDowall and Stephanie Faracy) form a second team. Dirk Benedict and William Ames, Parker's ne-

What we have in Scavenger Hunt is an abundance of comic capability. Cloris Leachman has superb comic timing and Tony Randall can make people laugh just by the way he moves. Richard Benjamin possesses a kind of sophisticated wit that case an over-reliance — on sight gags... You know, the kind of splashy, obvious Laurel and Hardy-type humor that worked pretty well, better at least, in It's a Mad Mad Mad Mad World.

There are, however, a couple of very funny moments in Scavenger Hunt. When the servants steal the toilet out of an exclusive hotel rest-room, it's funny almost in spite of itself. Later, when they hold up a corner grocery store accompanied by music from The Nutcracker Suite, you get a taste of how funny this movie could have been. Ruth Gordon, Scatman Crothers and Pat McCormick have some good moments, too, but they're in the movie very briefly. The same is true of Tony Randall who is really the most endearing character in the whole movie. Unfortunately, the film's structure doesn't allow much of a focus on any of the characters. Randall is seen far to infrequently.

Scavenger Hunt isn't a horrible movie — but in an age where Woody Allen's sophistication is the major standard for comic excellence, a film with this much slapstick doesn't have much of a chance, regardless of the talents involved. Even Laurel and Hardy aren't very funny in retrospect.

My final impression as I left the theater — "Boy, was that stupid..."

phews, team up with Mildred's rejected stepdaughter Lisa (Maureen Teefy). The fourth team consists of Parker's widowed son-in-law (Tony Randall) and his four disinterested children. Last, but not least, is TV's Soap's Richard Mulligan, a dim-witted cab driver to whom Parker is somewhat indebted. He eventually teams up with Scatman Crothers.

All in all, it's a pretty impressive lineup. So, what happens? Well, needless to say, in a story like this, there's not a whole lot of room for intellectual humor. Consequently, there tends to be a reliance — in this isn't exactly at home with this type of comedy — still he is a very funny man. But while all three have good moments, the simplicity of the joke wears out about half way through the movie. In short, the film drowns in its own silliness.

For example, we see the inept cab driver, Dummitz, get run over by a car twice. Richard Benjamin gets a safe dropped on his hand (roars of laughter from the audience...?) Later, he gets beaten up by a group of Hell's Angels (including a cameo by Meat Loaf). If you don't think that's funny, you should see a police car run into a cart full of

Mighty Joe Young drives home the blues

By BOB FONOROFF

Mighty Joe Young. No, it isn't a circus act. He plays the blues, and quite well, thank you. This man brings back some special memories for me. I saw Mighty Joe Young for the first time in Cleveland during 1975. By showtime, everything was set except for one minor detail — there were only five people in the audience. When Young came onstage and looked into the audience, he went into temporary shock. He still managed to play a good 60-minute set, during which two people in the audience left! Now if that isn't the blues, what is?

Fortunately, Monday night's performance at Lizard's turned out much better. Young had total control of the full house as his three-member band reviewed some of his repertoire of the past ten years. Young was born in Louisiana and raised in Milwaukee where he got his first taste of what is called "The Chicago Blues." But first what are the Chicago Blues? To avoid putting it into the world of clichés, I asked Joe Young to set the record straight.

"Chicago Blues is about the people from Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas who moved north during the depression to places like Chicago, and it was there where the urban blues were born. It is country blues, dressed up, with more changes and runs."

Young brought with him an interesting group of musicians: Bennie King, bass; Willie Hays, drums; and Tom Gilman, organ. King is the young brother of the late guitarist Freddie King. After Freddie's death in 1976, Bennie took a year off before joining up with Young. King is probably one of the more innovative blues bass players around because he does not stick to the standard runs and changes of the blues.

As for Mighty Joe Young, his guitar playing has improved greatly since the last time I saw him. This is due in part to "Josephine" — a $2,000 Gibson 355 guitar he received for Christmas in 1978. His improvement in tone was what impressed me most.

Young's vocals combine a raspy and driving sound that makes the blues what they are, a feeling from within the soul, an expression of the world that surrounds Joe Young.

Dynamic duo = success

By BILL TEMPLETON
State News Sports Writer

They came, they saw, they conquered. And now it has been reported they may be bidding it all farewell.

With three full years of Big Ten battles, both on and off the field under their belts, MSU Athletic Director Joe Kearney and head football coach Darryl Rogers appear to be headed for similar positions at Arizona State University.

Both Kearney and Rogers arrived on the MSU campus in 1976, amid turmoil, for a once proud athletic program and a three-year period of football probation.

KEARNEY BEGAN HIS teaching and coaching career at Paradise, Calif., High School in 1952. He moved to Washington in 1953, and culminated his involvement in that state's athletic programs by being named director of sports programs at the University of Washington, a position he assumed in 1969.

Named as the successor to former MSU Athletic Director Burt Smith, Kearney stepped into the job and installed a new sense of ongoing optimism, one which carried Spartan athletics to national prominence again in three major sports.

Besides the accomplishments of the 1978-79 season which included Big Ten championships in football, basketball and baseball, and the NCAA championship in the cage sport, Kearney has helped bolster the athletic program in the box office as well.

The basketball program has enjoyed sellouts in Jenison

Fieldhouse for every home game played in the past two seasons, and football attendance has climbed steadily upward to the point where MSU soldout Spartan Stadium in five of the six home games.

Other areas Kearney has concentrated on in his tenure at MSU have concentrated on the need of continually evaluating the problems facing athletic departments today regarding the high rates of inflation, as well as meeting the challenge of helping the women's program to rise to new heights.

SUCCESSFUL TICKET PROMOTIONS in both basketball and football have been credited to Kearney, as well as his numerous efforts involving alumni, Ralph Young Fund, service clubs and other public affairs.

In Kearney's first year at MSU, the athletic director named Jud Heathcote as head basketball coach. It was also Rogers' first year with the Spartans.

Rogers came to MSU via San Jose State University where he amassed a 22-9-3 record in his three years. Once at MSU, Rogers quickly installed his own unique brand of wide-open offensive football, much to the delight of Spartan fans.

In his first year at the helm, Rogers came up with a team that was short on talent and susceptible to injury, while compiling a 4-6-1 record. He was also the runner-up in the Big Ten "Coach of the Year" balloting.

Both the Spartan gridders and their coach moved up in 1977, as MSU finished with a 7-3-1 record overall and a 6-1-1 tally in the Big Ten, good for third place behind the University of Michigan and Ohio State University. Rogers was also named the 1977 Big Ten "Coach of the Year" by media representatives.

IN HIS THIRD season as Spartan mentor, Rogers achieved one of his goals and shared the Big Ten title with Michigan, not to mention a 24-15 win over the Wolverines in Ann Arbor.

The Spartans were 8-3 in 1978, including a 7-1 Big Ten mark, and Rogers was named as national "Coach of the Year" by the Sporting News.

This season, the Spartans were without the services of first team All-America Kirk Gibson and record-shattering quarterback Eddie Smith. Without two of the finest Spartans ever to don the green and white, football at MSU was not the same.

The team fell to a 5-6 record in 1979 and dropped from the top of the pack, into a tie for seventh place. There were few Kudos for Rogers at the conclusion of the season.

After the successful 1978 campaign, Rogers' contract to coach MSU football was extended an extra year through the 1983 season. Kearney has three years left with the school.

Whether or not the story in The Detroit News is justified in reporting that both Rogers and Kearney will leave MSU and the Big Ten for Arizona State and the Pac-Ten, remains to be seen.

Should both decide to leave, however, MSU loyalists will lose men who have helped reestablish MSU athletic prowess. It would be Arizona State's gain and a loss to MSU.

Martin has new role for Spartan icers

By BILL TEMPLETON
State News Sports Writer

Although he has been known as a scorer throughout his hockey career, freshman center Bob Martin has assumed a new role since coming into the hockey program at MSU.

Martin roamed the ice freely in his years as a Metro B League standout in Candiac, Quebec, but this year he is learning to play both ends of the ice with equal aptitude.

"I think I'm more defense-oriented in my play now," Martin said. "It's nice to score a lot of goals, but it's just as important to prevent them."

Martin, the most valuable player of the Metro B League a year ago, collected three goals and three assists in the Spartans' split last weekend with the University of Minnesota-Duluth, results Martin admits he's been looking for.

"I'VE HAD A lot of bad luck this year," he said in reference to the broken wrist he sustained earlier in the season. "And I've had my problems adjusting to the Western Collegiate Hockey Association. What I've been trying to do, though, is work harder, play to my potential and start looking for payoffs."

In the personally productive series against Minnesota-Duluth, MSU coach Ron Mason called Martin "the most dangerous man on the ice." Although Martin was pleased with his own performance, the outcome of the series was upsetting to him.

"We should have won both games," Martin said. "We had a lapse in game two and blew a three-goal lead. The team spirit is still good, though, and we're gonna stay fired up. Personally, teams I've been on have been in the playoffs every year since I can remember, and it would seem wrong if our season ended early."

The Spartans are presently in the ninth position of the WCHA with a 6-10-0 league mark, one spot away from qualifying for the post-season playoffs.

"I think we're the best ninth place team this league's ever seen," Martin added.

AS A FRESHMAN in the nation's foremost hockey league, Martin notes the differences between the style of play he has been used to and the style he has recently been forced to adopt.

"The games in the old league were very high scoring and there wasn't much defense," Martin said. "But in the WCHA, there is a big accent on defense, there's more discipline, play is quicker, players are stronger and I can't free-wheel like I used to be able to."

While Martin and his teammates are striving to make the playoffs this season, the 6-foot, 180-pounder is looking ahead to next year with anticipation.

"We've gotta replace Mazoleni," Martin said, "and as far as I'm concerned, Teddy Huesing is THE defenseman in the league. If we can fill those holes, we'll be OK."

Battling along the boards for the puck is MSU's Bob Martin.

Wrestlers shock Penn State, 32-9

By JIM MITZELFELD
State News Sports Writer

The MSU wrestling team came out fighting, and when the dust had cleared the Spartans had pulled off their biggest win of the season.

The Spartans put on quite a show in upsetting national power Penn State University, 32-9, Monday night.

"It could very well be the turning point for the season," an excited MSU coach Grady Penninger said after the win.

MSU didn't waste any time taking it to the Nittney Lions, grabbing the first seven matches of the meet.

HARRELL MILHOUSE STARTED the Spartans rolling by defeating a heavy favorite in Penn State's Mike DiAugustino at 118 pounds with a 9-7 decision.

"The highlight of the meet had to be Milhouse's match," Penninger said. "It was a tremendous win for him."

MSU's Chuck Joseph came back from his tough loss Saturday against Oklahoma State University, by beating Penn State's Steve Bass 13-6.

Jeff Thomas was the winner in a close 8-7 win at 134 pounds, and the Spartans had a 10-0 lead.

Penn State's Bernie Fritz was Jeff Therrian's 13th victim of the year at 142 pounds, and Greg Sargis pinned the Lions' Jeff Rosenberg with five seconds left in his match to give MSU a 19-0 edge.

AFTER SARGIS'S PIN, MSU's Fred Worthem had little difficulty handling Jeff Brodhead at 158 pounds for his 10th victory of the season.

After Steve Foley held on to beat John Hanrahan, another Penn State standout, 7-6, the Spartans took a 26-0 lead to insure them of the victory.

Penn State took the next two weight classes to end Spartan hopes of a shutout.

MSU heavyweight Dan Dudley ended the meet the same way it began, however, with a spectacular throw pin of Scott Lancer at 6:51.

Penninger felt though that it was a "lack of raggedness and excellent execution" that put MSU on top.

"It was a really gratifying meet for us. The kids are really starting to bring it all together," he added.

Olympic boycott a necessity

As every American within range of a television, radio or newspaper headline knows, Soviet Union military forces have invaded Afghanistan. The reason for this development comes as a mystery to some; an unsurprising factor considering that, in these days of enlightened liberalism, it is often forgotten that totalitarian governments have a heritage of doing such deeds. But President Carter is powerfully upset by the situation and has threatened a number of retaliatory measures, not the least of which is a United States boycott of the Summer Olympic Games to be held in Moscow this August.

Will this happen? It might. The incursion by the Soviets constitutes the classic stuff of diplomatic dispute: the subjugation by one nation of another's territorial and administrative integrity. It couldn't have come at a more inappropriate time for most U.S. citizens, already made weary by the daily chant-shouting, fist-waving news from Iran. Non-participation in the XXII Summer Olympiad would be a major disappointment, although it's doubtful that it would be anywhere near akin to the disappointment that the typical Afghan must feel when seeing all those Soviet tanks coming down the street.

Precedents? Well, politics and sports have had a history of being mixed, in and out of the Olympic Games. Look at what's happened during this century. The defeated (and humiliated) Axis powers, Germany and Austria, were not invited to the Olympiad in 1920. In 1936 in Berlin, Adolf Hitler — still in a state of euphoria because of Max Schmeling's astonishing 12th-round knockout of Joe Louis — confidently anticipated a showing of Aryan supremacy: Germany did win the most gold medals but Jesse Owens, an eleven-hour replacement for an American Jewish athlete named Martin Glickman, thwarted "der Fuhrer's" plans to a degree.

The brutal crushing of the Hungarian revolt by the Soviets in 1956 inspired the withdrawal from the XVI Olympiad by Spain, the Netherlands and Switzerland. The same year, Egypt, Iraq and Lebanon withdrew in protest of Israel's invasion of the Suez. There was the horror in Munich in 1972, and the non-participation in the 1976 Olympics by the Taiwanese, outraged because of the denial of their request to compete as the Republic of China. On the more positive side, there was the invitation extended by the People's Republic of China in 1971 for a visit by the United States Table Tennis Team. It signaled the first halting steps toward détente with that country: "ping-pong diplomacy," the analysts called it.

The current circumstances, however, will undoubtedly necessitate some movement backwards, and no lighting of the Olympic torch could minimize the aftershocks of what may come to pass. There's a lot involved. Many international political observers feel that the upheaval caused by the Soviets in Afghanistan may be matched by an even more noteworthy upheaval that is taking place in the Soviet Union itself: the slow, careful, unequivocal takeover of power by the army. If this is the case, then at least a partial return to Cold War politics is inevitable. And all phases of international exchange will be affected by it, including athletic competition.

Jimmy Cannon, the late sports columnist for the New York Journal-American, once observed, "The system has its defects, but democracy works better than any other way of government ever devised." He was right, of course, though not everyone agrees with that philosophy. The current leaders of the Soviet Union do not. The Ayatollah Khomeini does not. The exiled shah, most certainly, does not.

But then, how many Americans today truly understand what it means? For sure, they know about the rights. They talk about them and expect them and demand them. And the responsibilities that go with those rights? Well, often they either fall by the wayside or are just plain ignored.

All of which brings us back to the Summer Olympic Games in Moscow. Would it be fitting and proper for the United States to boycott them? Such an action would spoil the plans of a lot of hard-working and deserving people, not the least of whom are the American athletes who have committed their sweat and spirit to the ideal of international competition.

Yet responsibility, the real kind of responsibility that can often require real sacrifice, gives no guarantee that it will always come calling when most convenient. Look at it this way. If the words to the Declaration of Independence and the Preamble to the Constitution are to have any meaning today, a boycott is necessary and proper as a reaffirmation of the principles of human and political dignity that this country claims to uphold. It's an expensive price to pay, but it's one well worth paying.

TWO QUARTERBACKS DON'T THINK SO

Does Pittsburgh deserve favorite?

By RICH TOSCHES
UPI Sports Writer

LOS ANGELES (UPI) — The two quarterbacks, Terry Bradshaw and Vince Ferragamo, agreed the Pittsburgh Steelers don't deserve to be such heavy favorites over the Los Angeles

Rams in Sunday's Super Bowl XIV.

And Los Angeles running back Wendell Tyler said if he has a good day, the Rams will beat the point spread and the Steelers.

And so the first day of Super

Week began Monday, with the Steelers arriving in Los Angeles in a heavy rain and the Rams forced to work out along just the sides of their practice field due to the muddy conditions.

The Steelers, looking for an unprecedented fourth Super Bowl title, are 11 point favorites over the NFC Champion Rams in the showdown in Pasadena's Rose Bowl.

"You look at the odds but then you have to look at our side of the story," said Pittsburgh's Bradshaw. "We've never beaten these guys, we're playing in their home city and it's almost at their homefield."

"If I was back in Ruston, La., I would say the Steelers got it all the way, no sweat. But I'm here and I know what the Rams are capable of doing."

"The Rams are an outstanding team. They have a tremendous defense and they pose a lot of problems. We played them last year and we lost to them, 10-7, out here. I've looked at those films over and over and what I see is a real good team."

"The spread is ridiculous," said the Rams' Ferragamo, who started his first NFL game less than two months ago.

Women tracksters win easily in opener

By JIM MITZELFELD
State News Sports Writer

Although it is still early in the season, several members of the MSU women's track team are turning in championship times.

Spartan runners Lisa Berry and Sue Richardson both qualified for the Indoor Nationals in the 5,000-meter run in MSU's season opening victory over Western Ontario University and the University of Michigan last Saturday at Jenison Fieldhouse.

The Spartans finished first in eight of 14 events for 119 points, followed by Western Ontario with 93, and U-M with 77.

"I was very pleased with our performance, especially with some of our times since it's so early in the year," said Spartan head coach Nell Jackson after the win.

BERRY AND RICHARDSON lapped all but one of their opponents on their way to finishing one-two in the two-mile run.

Berry finished in 10:31.2, and Richardson bettered her personal mark by 20 seconds to record a 10:37.2. Both earned a spot in the 5,000 meter event at the Indoor Nationals to be held March 7 and 8 at the University of Missouri.

The Spartans opened up the meet by taking firstplace in the 4 x 220 yard relay in 1:45.3, and held the lead the rest of the way.

Freshman Judy Brown won her first collegiate race by taking first in the 440-yard dash in 58.1, just beating out teammate Cheryl Gilliam who finished second with a 58.3.

Just three events later, Brown finished second in the 60-yard hurdles with a 8.2.

"I WAS A little nervous," Brown said after her first two races. "It's a whole different atmosphere. Now I know what it's like and I know how hard I have to work."

Other first place finishers for the Spartans were Pam Sedwick in the 880, Pam Swanigan in the 600, and Gilliam in the 300.

MSU distance runner Kelly Spatz was just nosed out of first in the 1,000-yard run by Western Ontario's Janet Dick.

MSU's Desiree Pritchett just beat Western Ontario's Sharon Lane, who was a silver medalist at the World Games, in the 60-yard dash in 7.0 seconds.

Lane came back and took first over MSU's Brown in the 60-yard hurdles.

RECORDING HER OWN personal best, Polly Prouty won the shot put event with a throw of 12.72 meters for MSU. Another Spartan, Lynn Barber, finished second with a throw of 12.66 meters.

A bad exchange in the mile relay ruined MSU's chances of sweeping the relays.

Coach Jackson felt the team's area most in need of improvement was the field events.

"We have a lot of talent in the long jump and high jump," Jackson said. "We just need to work on it."

"This meet gave us a good chance to see how we stand this early in the season, and I was very pleased," Jackson added.

The team will be traveling down to Columbus, Ohio, this weekend for the Lady Buckeye Invitational.

Judge bars pictures from Ford Pinto trial

WINAMAC, Ind. (UPI) — The judge in the reckless homicide trial of Ford Motor Co. Tuesday barred prosecutors from using pictures of the bodies of three teen-agers killed when their Ford Pinto burst into flames.

Ford has been charged in the death of the three teen-agers as the result of allegations that it ignored a design flaw that made the fuel tanks of some 1973 Pintos susceptible to explosion in rear-end collisions.

Pulaski Circuit Judge Harold Staffeldt of Pulaski granted Ford's pre-trial motion seeking to exclude photographs showing the bodies of the girls, who were killed when their Pinto was struck from behind by a van near Goshen in 1978.

James Neal, chief attorney for Ford, said he made the motion because prosecutor Michael Cosentino last week said the jury might have to view some "rough" pictures. Staffeldt said he would read a statement to the jury saying the girls died of burns sustained in the accident. But the judge said he would not allow pictures or any oral description of the injuries to be submitted.

"I don't think a description of that sort would tend to prove any of the really fundamental issues we have," the judge said.

The judge said he would allow other photographs of the crash scene to be introduced to prove points relevant to the case, such as impact speed.

Ford and the prosecution reached agreement on another motion by Ford to quash a subpoena for CT Corporation of Indianapolis, Ford's representative in Indiana.

The subpoena dealt with prosecution attempts to gain certain Ford records. Cosentino agreed not to issue additional subpoenas without gaining approval from the court.

Malcolm Wheeler, another Ford attorney, claimed the prosecution was using its subpoena power to harass Ford.

Volunteer training for TRC

The Tenants Resource Center, 855 Grove St., will be holding training sessions for winter term volunteers from 6:30 to 10 p.m. Jan. 25 and from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. Jan. 26.

The sessions are open to anyone interested in doing volunteer work for the center.

Volunteers must complete the eight-hour session to qualify as a center counselor. Counselors help people with housing problems such as evictions, security deposits, maintenance and leasing.

Most counseling is done using the telephone but volunteers would also work with walk-in clients.

Volunteers work for two to four hours a week and usually for the entire term.

Interested volunteers should call the center or visit the center in person at 855 Grove St.

FOR LOW-INCOME HOUSEHOLDS

Federal funds cut heating costs

By MOLLY MIKA
State News Staff Writer

Unfortunately, winter's icy fingers are going to grip Michigan residents, but certain households will get relief from soaring heating costs.

Approximately 265,000 households will receive federal payments to ease heating costs, said Bob Swindlehurst, Energy Crisis Assistance Program coordinator for Ingham, Eaton, Clinton and Shiawassee counties.

Eligibility for the payments is based solely on the total annual income of a household, he said. Applicants need to show verification of heating bills and proof that the one-income household is less than $4,250.

Those households with more than one income earner may still be eligible as long as the additional income-earners do not earn more than $1,375 each.

For instance, a household with two income-earners may still be eligible if their total household income is less than $5,625.

Eligible residents in the capital area counties will receive a payment of $280 if the residence is heated with natural gas or $320 if heated with wood, fuel oil or coal.

While the program is geared toward helping the elderly and low-income persons, some MSU students have qualified for assistance, Swindlehurst said.

In addition to the income stipulation, students must provide more than 50 percent of their support and cannot be declared on someone else's income tax return, he added.

Some of the eligible recipients who pay their heating bills indirectly, as when it is included in the rent, will be issued one-time payments of $180 or $135, depending on whether their residence is heated with fuel oil or natural gas.

Those who pay heating bills directly receive a comparable amount in the form of an energy certificate that can be used to pay the dealer or utility.

The utility then returns the certificate to the Department of Social Services with the heating provider's name, address and customer account number.

Checks are then issued directly to heating providers and the recipients are notified that a payment has been made.

Anyone with questions concerning eligibility for these programs should contact the Ingham County Department of Social Services, 930 W. Holmes, Lansing.

Fasting students learn Third World hunger

LIVONIA (UPI) — About 150 well-fed, middle class high school students got a stomach growling lesson in world food politics Tuesday.

As an assignment for their global education course, students at Stevenson and Churchill high schools went on a 30-hour fast to learn first hand how it feels to go hungry and be forced to beg for food.

The teen-agers were told their fast, which began Monday, would end with a special luncheon at a nearby church. Most, however, got a whole lot less than they bargained for.

When they arrived at the church, each student picked a number out of a hat to determine at which table he would eat.

Most were assigned to table No. 3, representing Third World countries. Some sat at table No. 2, representing western Europe and other industrialized nations, and only 11 were seated at table No. 1, representing the United States.

The luncheon food was divided among the tables in proportion to how much food is consumed by their segment of the world.

Those at table No. 1 lunched on sandwiches, fruit, potato chips and a fruit drink, but their more unfortunate classmates — particularly those assigned to the Third World table — got substantially smaller portions.

"Suddenly, they realize that food, even here in this room, is distributed along the same lines as it is in the world at large," said Rev. William Ritter, pastor of the Newberg United Methodist Church.

"So approximately 80 percent of the food is set on a table representing the United States and it is available to be eaten by 11 kids."

Those students assigned to tables 2 and 3 had the option of going to the United States table for a handout.

In a mad rush, all but 10 did so.

One of those who didn't was Churchill student Andrew Chilkiewicz.

"I have my pride," he said. "I don't want to go over there and beg so I'll just stay here."

Teacher Joan Soave said he wanted his students to experience hunger while others ate well.

"I wanted them to come back hungry, thinking they're going to have a nice big luncheon, but to say to them, 'You're a Third World country and that's it, babe — you've got 10 percent. Live with it.'"

Soave said the students will be asked to pledge to fast one day each month as a reminder of people starving around the world.

Deregulation poses problems

By ROLAND WILKERSON
State News Staff Writer

Although many involved with the aviation industry say that governmental deregulation of the airlines has been beneficial, an official at Capitol City Airport disagrees.

Airport manager Russel Brown said if deregulation had never occurred, United Airlines would not have been allowed to abandon flights to Cleveland and reduce service to Chicago in April.

United announced in mid-November that it was dropping flights because of sky rocketing fuel prices and the inefficiency of making short-haul flights.

Because United is reducing service, politicians and business people alike are sweating it out — waiting to see if a replacement can be found.

BROWN SAID THAT United officials had promoted deregulation, which allows airlines more flexibility in rate structures and flight destinations.

Brown added that he would not have favored deregulation had he known "all of the ramifications."

The state attorney general's office is currently taking steps to block United's exit until a replacement can be found.

Monte Lazarus, senior vice president of public affairs for United, said the airline will not ax service entirely to Cleveland and Chicago until a replacement is acquired.

Lazarus defended deregulation, saying, "If it were not for deregulation the industry would be in worse condition than it is right now."

WILLIAM SEMOS, STAFF counsel to the U.S. Senate aviation subcommittee, said that although there have been problems with deregulation, that advantages have far "outweighed" the imperfections.

Semos said that deregulation was necessary because the industry has greatly expanded and become very sophisticated in recent years, and that the industry could regulate itself better than the government.

Semos said the airlines are able to run more efficiently, and provide service where it is most needed because the government is less involved.

He said although there have been a few problems similar to that of Lansing, most airlines have "conducted themselves as good citizens."

Semos said many people have gotten the wrong image of deregulation. He noted that when the airlines were deregulated in 1978, that fuel prices took a tremendous jump, forcing airlines to raise their ticket prices. He said the two occurrences were unrelated and that deregulation should not be the scape goat for rising fuel costs.

The Civil Aeronautics Board, however, still has the power to prevent an airline from leaving an airport or reducing service, and can still regulate price hikes, said James Deegan, an assistant of the CAB.

Deegan added the CAB will be entirely phased out by 1985 and that other government agencies will take over the CAB's administrative responsibilities.

Semos said the government will be able to guarantee flight service to small airports until 1988, at which time congress will have to decide if the deregulation act warrants any changes.

Meany buried in Washington

WASHINGTON (AP) — George Meany, the lion of the American labor movement for a quarter-century who was praised by his successor as "the best there was," was buried Tuesday.

"We now have faith that better days lie ahead for the working people of America, and of the world, because George Meany is up there, negotiating the matter with God," said Lane Kirkland, who took up the reins from Meany as president of the AFL-CIO.

Meany, 85, died Thursday — 63 years to the day after he received his first membership card in the Plumbers Union.

The funeral was disrupted at the outset when a young man and woman threw leaflets on the coffin as it was carried up the cathedral steps.

"We're working people of this country," the unidentified man shouted.

The two were shoved away by police and arrested on a charge of disrupting a religious service, said police Capt. J.E. Mazur.

One of the leaflets was signed by the National May Day 1980 Committee from Detroit, and called on American workers to "fight this capitalist system and the oppression, discrimination and inequality it thrives on."

Meany's standing in American political and labor life was reflected by the dignitaries who attended the 70-minute requiem mass under the creamy blue dome of the Romanesque St. Matthew's Cathedral, six blocks from the White House.

In front row was President Carter, Vice President and Mrs. Walter F. Mondale and Secretary of State and Mrs. Cyrus R. Vance. Muriel Humphrey, widow of Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey, D-Minn., sat between the president and vice president.

In the rows behind them sat Meany's family, the executive council of the 14 million-member labor federation, two presidential contenders — Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., and California Gov. Edmund G. Brown Jr. — Senate leaders and at least one other governor, Hugh Carey of New York. The foreign dignitaries included Justice Minister Shmuel Tamir of Israel, whose cause Meany had always championed.

The mass, at the same church where President John F. Kennedy's funeral was held in 1963, was celebrated by more than a dozen white-robed priests. Cardinal William Baum of Washington also took part.

the council not consider semi-autonomy unless they consider it for other university units also.

The final verdict, however, is in the hands of Winder.

Winder said the council's decision will be an important factor when he chooses the final option.

"I always take the advice of my academic colleagues very seriously," he said. "I don't want to make a decisive statement right now."

She said she felt Horne's opinion on semi-autonomy was valuable for the future and well worth looking into.
