Cable TV tower goes up, up, up, up, up & up!

GOING UPPPP! Erection of the 80-foot self-supporting tower to hold antennas for the Pioneer Cablevision service to Pigeon and Elkton was easy last Thursday — if you had a 100-foot rented crane from Rooney Contracting of Bad Axe to help with the job!

ABOVE LEFT, Cablevision workers Doug Germain and Ron Snider steady the tower on the ground, as it begins its journey skyward. Pigeon and Elkton Village Presidents Norris Diebel and Randy Haley, at right, are ready to coach, if needed

CENTER PHOTO, Rooney's Bill Rodgers of Port Austin runs the big boom truck as it raises the tower part way up in the air. Then, RIGHT PHOTO, crew men help steady the tower as it stands upright. It was then bolted to a foundation behind the electronic equipment building on M-142 next to Laker High School.

The Caseville antenna tower was erected Saturday, on Caseville Lumber Company land, behind Butcher Block Meats. House wiring for cable TV should begin within the month, Snider says.

Elkton, Pigeon blood drives successful

Both Elkton and Pigeon communities came through with record units of blood this summer at Monday's Red Cross Bloodmobile.

In Elkton, 59 units of blood were donated, exceeding the goal of 50, according to coordinators John Champagne and the Elkton Jaycees. "The blood came at a time when it was really desperately needed," said Champagne. He and the Jaycees thank the ladies of the Elkton United Methodist Church for preparing refreshments, all the volunteers and all the donors.

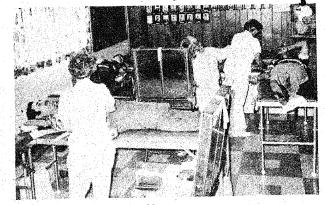

Recognized for donating one gallon of blood are Janet Young, Jim Heiden, John Stroud, Maureen Pitcher, Terry Heck, Karen Gardner and Chris Schuette. Two gallon givers are Phil McBride, Willard Seley and Dave Fisher. John Champagne has donated three gallons, according to records.

In Pigeon, the quota of 70 units of blood was exceeded by five, totalling 75 units given.

New coordinator Kathy Swartzendruber says that four residents gave blood for the first time and that 10 people had to be turned away. "We really appreciate the people of Pigeon responding to our plea for more blood donors," she said. "Hospitals were calling Red Cross for more blood and it just wasn't available. This was the second major shortage this summer," she added.

Swartzendruber will be handling the Bloodmobile duties, taking over after Cyndy Rathje, who had been coordinator for almost 10 years.

Teachers and staff members of the Elkton Pigeon - Bay Port School District returned to their classrooms Monday, prior to Tuesday's official opening of school -- but another group of important people were on hand for the welcome lunch at the Laker Cafeteria, too.

Laker Supt. Harry Brunet had invited all former school board members to attend and be recognized for their contributions during the past 26 years, as this 24th graduating class begins its final two semesters of schooling. More than a dozen attended, including the two surviving members of the original Laker Board -Roland Henne and Wes Murdoch, both of Bay Port. Dr.

LABOR DAY SAFETY -- There will be extra law enforcement workers out during this long holiday weekend, and extra drivers and vehicles crowding the highways mean additional safety is needed by us all.

Please, don't force us to write about you in next week's

TID-BITS -- Wrigley and Topps chewing gum companies are working on bubble gum in a tube, in what may be a marketing battle to the last bubble. "Tubble Gum" is a new Wrigley gum being test marketed now. It's a soft gum which lets you squeeze out as much or as little as you wish. One tube is the equivalent of 23 sticks of bubble gum and will cost about 59 cents, the company says.

Topps' product is part of its "Bazooka" line and should be on store shelves by the end of the year. It will offer about the same number of "chews" and will cost up to 69 cents.
What will they think of next?

Clark Elftman is always thinking, and he has a good idea. If the Grand Trunk Railroad is going to abandon its rail line from Imlay City north through Cass City, Gagetown, Owendale to Pigeon, is anyone interested in making it into a hiking or biking trail?

"Even a mile or two would be excellent for such uses," he said. Now, how can that be done, he wonders? What procedures are needed?

Anyone with ideas should contact Clark at Kretzschmer Home Center in Pigeon.

- 30 --TOWN-WIDE RENOVATIONS -- Sanilac County's capital of Sandusky has received a $64,350 grant to help turn downtown storefronts into a gaslight turn-of-the-century style. The money came from the Michigan Department of Commerce's Small Cities Community Development Block Grant funding, providing low interest loans. A dozen businesses get the first loans this fall. Money must be paid off in three years, and an architectural firm has been hired to help with designing the new storefronts.

Store owners can get 12-year property tax abatements for the remodeling, and the Village Council has agreed to install gaslights and trees along the sidewalks. Sounds to us as though Sandusky is really doing something which ultimately can keep -- and attract -- shoppers to the

New Winsor Twp. Ordinance Adoption

Tuesday, Sept. 26, 1983 at 8 p.m.

Winsor Township Hall Pigeon, Mich.

Copies of the new ordinance are available for review at the Pigeon District Library and Winsor Township Office, Pigeon, Mich.

Some persons who remember the August day 20 years ago when Dr. King first spoke on the Lincoln Memorial steps were reminded of just how far things have progressed since 1963. He said then, "I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal.' " But thousands of the blacks who heard him speak were barred from the better hotels. restaurants and stores in 1963.

Thankfully, that type of racial segregation is behind us. No one can (and should) be deprived of their chance to use all facilities and services available, no matter what color skin they have.

If anything, minorities today are feeling a backlash from whites trying to regain an upper hand of supremacy, after years of laws seeking equality in voting, accommodations and other

The U.S. has seen some great changes since the 1963 days of "separate but equal" water fountains, for instance. Deep within their hearts, everyone must agree that all men (and women) truly are equal and should be treated

Making that happen is something else,

We have not yet accomplished all the good changes proposed in 1963, as well as the Great Emancipator's dreams from 1863. As Dr. King stood at Lincoln's feet, perhaps he truly had a vision that many blacks by 1983 would win the political, social and economic recognition long denied them because of race.

We still have a long, long distance to travel until everyone is truly free, in our hearts and

The laws have been changed. But too many hearts and minds still harbor unfair, unnecessary prejudices.

Dr. King's dream is unique in that we all are able to share it, whether or not we're directly impacted by it. But rather than simply saying we believe all persons are equal, are we living proof that that's how we really feel?

People here in the Thumb are somewhat insulated from day-to-day contacts with blacks. We must work toward personal, family, local, state and national acceptance -- in our hearts and minds -- that we really are all equal: That's the way our Creator sees it, after all.

America offers great hopes and dreams to its citizens. Why would the color of someone's skin deprive them of part of those hopes and dreams? True dreamers knew it didn't in 1963 - and it's even more true 20 years later.

Pete Progress says:

"Now that women are achieving equality, a man is apt to discover that the girl he left behind is ahead of him!"

seven tables. A month ago my foursome included Rea Gripman, Henry Cornell and Bili Borgman. Our first time together as a foursome. During a conversational in-terlude the talk turned to vacations and Gripman spoke of his son coming from Oregon for a Michigan vacation. Without mentioning her name, I spoke of a family friend, 99 years old, who had been coming from California to the Thumb for 25 years to spend the summer. Bill Borgman cut me short. "You must be talking of Edna shown Ron Ziehm of Gagetown that agriculture offers a wide range of employment opportunities, and he is going to look around to see which he prefers.

Beyond that, Ron has already decided that when he really settles down, he wants to do it on a farm, in his home area, preferably with his dad, Dick Ziehm, and brother,

In the meantime, he's thinking abut many opportunities, and how the things he's seen a year in Germany, Australia and New Zealand will influence his choice.

One thing he's decided for sure, that he likes agriculture even more than before he left, and now he just needs to select a field for some future years. Will it be selling? Or marketing? Michigan Department of Agriculture or MSU? Something in technical farming, perhaps USDA? That year in foreign agriculture has qualified him for many more opportunities than if he'd stayed at home, he's sure of that.

A 1982 graduate of MSU in dairy science he was chosen to participate in the FFA Work Experience Abroad program, that started him on a West German farm a year ago. The program is the present-day version of a series of international exchanges of American, FFA students with students of other countries that began more than 30 years ago. It's a "learning by doing" program with an international flavor, FFA officials said

Working and living on farms in West Germany and Australia have shown Ron the importance of being frugal and careful. "We're far, far more wasteful here in America than in any other country I've seen," he stated. In Germany, for instance, you don't just jump into a pickup and drive a couple of blocks or so to your destination. You walk. German tractors, especially the Deutz, are much preferred over American because they're much more fuel-efficient. Main reason for that is that they won't buy bigger machinery than they need; instead they'll simply use all the power their machinery offers. Also, Europeans and Australians never have as many tractors as American farmers.

They also harvest more efficiently, Ron discovered, because they will dig out - by hand, if they can't reach it by machine every last sugar beet in the field, and they'll turn beet tops into silage, often feeding tops with straw as roughage. They haul beet pulp from factories for feeding

German farmers figure feed costs right down to the decimal, deciding if they should buy U.S. corn, and figuring feed values of beet tops, or pulp, and with what grain they'll effect the best economy. Sugar beet prices are around $45 per metric ton. Public transportation is popular and well-accepted in Europe because it's so dependable --'You can set your watch by the trains," Ron stated, and also because gasoline costs $2.50

Paving strict attention to costs is characteristic of Swedish farmers, too, Ron stated, explaining that the popular Volvo tractors, made in Sweden, are often second choice to more economical Russian tractors, that cost less to begin with and operate

The story is much the same in Australia. where Ron spent the second half of his year

"They're so saving that they don't even spill a drop of fuel when they fill their tractors, and they really practice minimum we'd call 'big disks,' '' Ron pointed out.

Australian farmers are much better repairmen for their own equipment, Ron discovered, partly beause of the great distances involved, which would make service calls very expensive. "They're much more mechanically-inclined that we are,' he explained. "but they have to be because a 65-mile distance from a service center is not unusual." Australian farmers also keep a bigger supply of parts on hand for when They're constantly repairing, touching up, sweeping, cleaning, even washing their machinery, because they know it makes it last longer.

"Here in America, we run big tractors, but often with not much machinery behind it," he compared, "while there they have smaller tractors and they run it fullyequipped, heavily loaded," That's how they

Australia is geared to high acreage and low yields, he discovered, with six bags of wheat -- 18 bushels -- being considered a

Australian agriculture has its share of problems, too, including drought, sand, kangaroos, dingoes or wild dogs, wild donkeys, wild camels. In some areas of the west, salt works up from sub-surface water, and usually right where the most productive

A major problem is the "Double G," also known as "G-G," a shrub that grows fast and yields a seed the size of a small navy bean, that has long, sharp points and is equally picked up by tires and by animals especially lambs. When the sharp points penetrate the soft area between the hoofs, it causes arthritis in the animals and eventually they have to be destroyed. The Double G destroys tires, too, so many farmers use old tires which they simply install over the working tires, to give them an extra layer of

Most of Ron's year was spent in Western Australia, some distance from Perth, where many U.S. Navy personnel are stationed. "The sailors like Perth, and Perth enjoys the sailors' dollars," Ron smiled. The phone exchange even has a "Dial-a-Sailor" number, he stated, and would you believe it, there are often not enough sailors to go

Australians are good drinkers, and American sailors "can't hold their beer" in competition with the Aussies. The Americans find out they they should never try to keep up with the Australians in drinking, because "they can't do it." Australian beer is five percent alcohol, and Americans often mistake it for their own - to their

Australian seasons are the opposite of the Northern Hemisphere, Ron explained, with December through February being the hottest time, so they're in their spring season now. One of the worst pests of summer is a small house fly that torments and bites.

"You can't believe it's there, if you don't see ' Ron explained, stating that the bestknown Australian "salute" is a wave of the hand past one's face, to shoo away the pest. One of the longest fences in the world runs east and west to keep dingoes out of the sheep areas. Dingoes help keep down the kangaroo population, so 'roos -- as Australians call them -- multiply very rapidly in the areas south of the fence, where they re safe from the wild dog packs. "If you hear Americans tell that kangaroos are endangered, don't you believe it," Ron stated. He explained that a few small species of 'roos, especially the Red Kangaroo, are present in only small numbers, but they are never hunted. The Gray Kangaroos are present by millions, and in many areas there are professional hunters who try to keep them in check. Ron went with a group several times and shot several of the animals. "They're good to eat, especially the tails," he pointed out, which are very rich, and taste somewhat like beef. He told of one sheep ranch he visited which had produced 20,000 sheep before the kangaroos arrived. Once they had increased to high numbers, there was only enough grazing left for the farm owner to raise 4,000 sheep. Kangaroos are judged by size, and a 5-6 foot 'roo might weigh close to 200 pounds. In the outback, where they are more isolated, they may grow to 6-7 feet, and weigh from 250 to 300 pounds. The big males, the ones they call "big boomers" are fighters, swishing their big tails sideways when they challenge each other, and Ron explained that a pair of "big boomers" can wipe out acres of wheat in a single night, with their fighting and tail waving. "They're the ones that are targets for shooting," he declared. With its vast desert areas, Australia is the home to many camels, and through the years, as animals escaped from their caravans or were turned out from villages camels have appeared. In some places they are so numerous and create such damage that professional hunters are engaged to reduce the number of animals.

Ron's trips took him almost entirely around Australia, and across the continent on a 30-day Greyhound pass. From Melbourne he traveled to nearby New Zealand, where he skied as recently as three weeks ago. Scenery in New Zealand is breathtaking, with glaciers, lakes, valleys, snow-capped mountains providing vistas very much like the American Rocky Moun-

After visiting South and North Islands, Ron ended his New Zealand tour in Aukland then flew to Hawaii where he spent a week. flying on to Honolulu and San Francisco, arriving in Lansing late Sunday evening, Aug.

There he was met by his parents, Richard and Evelyn Ziehm. Now he's back at the family farm on Green Road, Gagetown, telling his family what he saw, and awaiting a year's collection of slides which will illustrate the many unbelievable things he's been thinking about.

It has been a year since he left the Thumb, first for Germany, then Down Under, and now he's back. He's thinking a lot about what he'll be doing for the next few years, but he knows that whatever he chooses, he'll always be influenced by what he saw in the year that took him all the way around the world, where he had months of experience

"A real success" is how Roger Miller, manager of the Sebewaing plant of Milk Products Division, Michigan Milk Producers Association, described the Thursday open house attended by more than 400 dairy families, employee families and guests.

A brightly-colored tent was pitched on the Division's parking lot, and after guests returned from the plant tour, they were presented with an ice cream cone. The Sebewaing plant's open house was one of four offered by the Fall in! It's bulb time

U.S. gardeners are ready to plant fall bulbs, planning ahead for a colorful spring. Look for firm, plump bulbs that feel heavy in your hand, with no rotted spots. Skins should be smooth, bright and free from bruises. They should be planted soon, so the root system can develop before the bulb goes dormant in winter. Bulb beds should be well-aerated, not in compacted soil. Plant as shown on the guide below, then soak the area so the bulb roots quickly. Keep the soil moist and top beds with seedless mulch for insulation (but remove it early in the spring). Good luck!

Vacation and vocation Read I Thessalonians 4:9-12.

We are fellow workers for God; you are God's field, God's building. I Corinthians 3:9.

On the trip of life, vacations are pleasant interludes. They are like frosting on the cake.

Some people work to live, while others live to work. For all of us, not only rest but also work is an essential part of life. Wherever we may go or whatever we may do on a vacation, we come back to earth; we go to work to earn a livelihood for ourselves and for our family.

As Christians we do not regard work as something apart from our calling as members of Christ's kingdom. We are persons called by God to be His people in Jesus

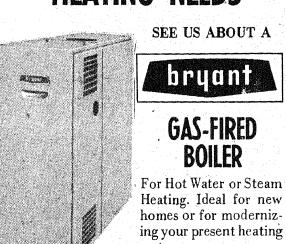

Writes St. Peter, "Once you were no people but now you are God's people; once you had not received mercy but now you have received mercy. How this came about the apostle said earlier: "You were ransomed ... with the precious blood of Christ. As Christ's people, we work for Him. Vacation travels recreation and leisure, rest and relief from daily toils -- all this helps us to regain the perspective of our Christian voca-

Lord, may the work of my life be pleasing to You, that in all I do and say I may glorify You and benefit others. Amen.

'Queenie'

I have a wooden steamer trunk in my basement. In it is the memorabilia of my youth, a kindergarten report card with its marks and comments, a couple of diplomas, an honorable discharge, a marriage license and other miscellaneous items. In one corner is a cardboard box of old photographs. Yellow and tattered, they represent a brief pictorial view of what life was like 30 to 40 years ago. The other night while aimlessly picking through the box, I came across a picture of a small boy and his dog trying to cool off in a galvonized washtub that was sitting in front of a large, white farmhouse. I turned the picture over and written on the back was "Pood and Queenie -- July 10,

I was only 61/2 years old when that photo was taken, but I remember Queenie as if it was only yesterday. There are two things that a man never forgets -- his first girl and his first dog.

Queenie was a black and white Springer spaniel. Where I got her, I don't know. Propably my dad brought her home or one of the neighbors had too many pups. But anyway, she was mind and mine alone. As a young boy, I had the best of two worlds. My parents rented the farmhouse that we lived in, so I grew up with barns, haystacks, woods, cricks, fields at my beckoned call. However, since my dad did not own the farm, I had no significant chores that needed tending to. So when school was out, my summers were filled with endless adventures for me and my dog.

Queenie was the perfect companion. Like every dog, her one ambition in life was to please her master. Although not allowed to sleep in the house at night, I would rise each morning to find her waiting patiently at the back door for whatever adventure I had in store for that day.

Usually that meant a walk along one of the county ditches. Armed with a homemade slingshot and a couple of cookies, we would spend the day wrecking havoc on any sparrows, frogs, minnows or other moving targets that crossed our paths.

Pheasant hunting was one of our favorite pasttimes. Living in Tuscola County in the 40s meant that we were in the middle of one of the largest pheasant populations in the world. Being seven years old and hunting with a slingshot meant that I didn't have to worry about seasons, sexes, or limits. It also meant that I didn't have to worry about ever hitting one, either. Every night I would go to bed dreaming of the perfect flush, the perfect stone, the perfect shot and the big, gaudy rooster crumbling in the air from my direct hit; the glorious return of the mighty hunter and his dog, with the evening meal extended in his right hand, held aloft for all the scoffers to see. But they were always dreams. Hens and rooster alike would bolt into the air after being relentlessly pursued by Queenie, and the tow-headed hunter would release yet another stone on its errant

The second year I had Queenie she mysteriously became pregnant. After an uneventful delivery in the middle of the night, I all of a sudden was the master of five dogs. Queenie and for squirming pups. Mother put her foot down and a sign was placed by the side of the road, reading 'Puppies for sale -- Free.'' Positioned in the front yard, I would pray that each car coming down the road would pass the house without inquiring about the pups.

Luck was not on my side, and during the first week after the puppies were weaned, three of them had found new homes. That left Queenie and one unnamed pup to play with. Queenie wasn't much fun anymore as she seemed more concerned about her pup than she was about me.

The next day while we were all playing in the yard, the Cook Coffee Man turned into our driveway. For any reader who has never heard of a Cook Coffee Man, he was a traveling salesman who sold coffee, condiments and housewares to people who lived in the country. His coming was usually a big event for the women. I used to like to see him come because it gave me a chance to buy a donut from his fresh store of baked

When the man got out of the truck he motioned for me to come over. Puzzled by this greeting (he always did business with my I approached the truck rather cautiously

"Are you the fellow who has the puppies for sale?" he asked. "Yup," I answered, swallowing hard, "but I only have one left and I think I want to

I looked up just in time to see my mother's forehead crease into an unforgiving frown. "But I suppose if you really wanted him, you could have him," I quickly added, pawing the ground and trying not to look straight in the eye. 'Well, let me take a look at him, and then I'll decide," he said.

I brought the fuzzy, little black and white puppy to the truck and passed it into the waiting hands. The man looked him all over. He checked his eyes, ears and even looked into his mouth. He put the puppy down and scratched his head.

"I sure would like to have that puppy," he Trust Company of Pigeon sponsored the day with the said. "but it is such a nice one, I can't hardly take him for free. I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll trade you something for the puppy. How "O.K., I guess," I stammered back.

The man disappeared into the back of the truck, and when he came back my eyes almost popped out of my head. He was carrying the biggest bag of glazed donuts that I had ever seen.

"Trade?" he said to me, smiling "Trade," I answered, looking at my mom to get her nod of approval.

Those were the best donuts I ever ate, and Queenie got the biggest one. Afterall, it was

Last year, experts told how the newly planted fish migrated out of the south part of the Bay, and traveled north as the summer progressed. This year they have had to eat their woods as limit catches are still being taken in places like Sunset Bay Marina and Fish Point. A Country Dollhouse

Some lucky little girl on your Christmas list will enjoy hours of fun playing with this new Suburban Country Dollhouse. And it won't take a lot of material or time to build. Just one 4' x 8' sheet of olywood or particle board is all that you need along with a small amount of hardwood for the rood. The left and right front walls open so the dollhouse can remain against a wall instead of being pulled out into the middle of the room for play. The removable roof allows access for decorating and makes the house easier to move. It measures 34" W x D x 27" H and is very easy to construct. You may use your imagination in selecting different types of exterior trim and perhaps add a chimney

The packet contains fullsize patterns, step-by-step instructions for building the house, and a superb kit for making the shutters. Acetate windows and clever roof trim are also included, and there are complete wiring instructions. Send $8.75 for Packet #TH75, and it will be mailed to you by UPS.

I think there are too many people selling things out of their cars or trucks here in Caseville. Is there a law assuring fair sales practices? I think this is getting too excessive.

The Caseville theatre has had excellent movies this summer. All of them have been great. It's too bad they can't stay open all winter. I KNOW of many people who agree with me who'd rather go to Caseville, because it's cleaner, closer and has more courteous help.

I say three cheers to the police committee for taking a stand and doing their job of maintaining justic for their part in the Pigeon police episode.
