The moral of this horrible story is—look after your trees. INDIA RUBBERS.—The belt of land around the globe, five hundred miles south of the equator, abounds in trees producing the gum of India-rubber. They can hat apped for twenty successive seasons, without injury; and the trees stand so close that one man can gather the sap of eight in a day, each tree yielding on an average three tables spoonsfull daily. Forty-three thousand of these trees have been counted in a tract of country thirty miles long by eight wide. There are in America and Europe more than one hundred and fifty manufactories of india-rubber articles, employing some five hundred operatives each, and consuming more than ten million pounds of the gum per year, and the business is considered to be still in its infancy. But to whatever extent it may increase, there will still be plenty of material to supply the demand. Never have a cell-hot chose put upon the foot to burn it level. If you can find a blacksmith that is mechanic enough to level the foot without red-hot iron, employing the hands of those who use it. I emphase a peop under the cover, what intellectual life, springing up, flushing-into vizor, reaching out hands of honest pride! This covering is a fine, fully furnished instrument in the hands of those who use it. I embraces all the best natural characteristics of all other increases. We met with a young man not long since, of respectable birth, fair education and good habits, who was, out of employment and anxiously seeking something to do. In the course of the conversation he remarked: "What a fool I was not to learn a trade! But," he continued, "the old folks thought it would detract from any social standing, and here I am as a result; without money, out of employment, and to be master." That young man's experience is almost the same as that of thousands of others we have met in life, and the same old story will be repeated until fathers and mothers are convinced of the truth that there is not in good trade. If we go to the eastern cities, it will be found that the largest operators in factories, and the post substantial moneyed and business men are regular bridged will carry him that the largest operators in factories, and the wolf coming to his-door. Muscle and mechanical knowledge will carry him thereoff. The better the education, the better the mechanic. The two are not incompatible.
