Probably the surest method to test if one is living or dead is that of Dr. Magnus, of Breslau, Germany, whose experiments, extending over many years, have been carefully and studiously made. The experiment is so simply made as to be equally sure and practical tried by the last as by those belonging to the medical profession. He ties a string snugly and securely around a finger or toe. It is the subject be a fiving one, the member thus tied about becomes red, and growsconstantly deeper and darker colored till it is tinged a blue red from the end to the point where it is ligated. Just where the string rests upon the flesh there will be a small white ring. If the subject have calloused hard and skinned fingers or toes, it would be well to ligate the lower pendant of the ear, since the test cannot be systisfactorily made upon a larger member of the body; the numerous large and deep lying veing could not be so readily compressed as in muscles with a close proximity to the bone.
