white elbow leans upon your knee,
Your treaf knee, that has so much to hear,
and a sterr eyes are tooking lovingly
From underneath a thatch of tangied hair.
Perhaps you do not head the relect touch
of warm, moist fingers, folding yours so tight,
You do not prize this blessing overmuch,
You are all cost too tired to pray to-night.

But it is a blessedners! A year ago I did not see it as I do to-day. We are so dull and thankless; and too slow To catch the surshine till it slipe away; The flow it seems passing strange to me. That while I wore the badge of motherhoxi id do ok its more oft and tenderly. The child that brought me only goal. The man night, when you sit down to rest. You miss the close from your tired knee; This restless, curling head from off your breast. This lisping tongue that chatters constantly; If from your own the dimpled hands have slipped. And need would nestle in your palm again; If the white feet into their grave had tripped, I could not blame you for your heart-ache then.

I wonder so that mothers ever fret
At little children clinging to their gown,
or that the foot prints, when the days are wet,
Are ever black enough to make them frown.
It could she a little muddy boot,
or cap, or jacket, on my chamber floor;
If could issa a roy, restless foot,
And hear its patter in my home once more;

And near its pairer in my note that.

If could mend a broken cart to-day,
Th-morrow make a kite to reach the sky,
There is no woman in God's world could as
She was more blissfully content than 1.
But, ah' the drinty pillow next my own
Is never rumpled by a shinning headty singing bridling from its next is flown,
The little boy I used to kiss is dead.

ANYTHING FOR A CHANGE.

Nellie-Tyrrel was a very pretty girl; read novels all day, and felt deeply the gross injustice of fate in not making her life like the lives of the heroines of fiction. Chestnut Farms was a miserable place, in Nellie's view, and not a bit like a manor, or a grange, or a castle. Nothing mysterious or tragic could ever happen on such prosaic ground, nor could anything 'extraordinary occur to any of the people who lived there.

Day after day the same monotonous drama was enacted. The A—train passed up in the morning and passed down again in the afternoon; but the passengers seemed to be always the same first with."

passed up in the afternoon; but the passengers seemed to be always the same people, and certainly it was the same locomotive and train of cars. Here was breakfast, dinner and supjer; twice a week John Mortimer paid a visit; occasionally some one else dropped in, and in this set of incidents was comprised the location of the same that was speaking truth, and the next minute, with rare dignity, replied:

"Nellie; you are right. I have been playing the fool, it is true. I love you—(fool knows I do—better than my life; but you care no longer for me. Mr.

It presently appeared that Mr. Chelmont was an author. He was even now engaged upon a book, and, being desirous he had called upon Aunt Mary to obtain board and lodging with her, if possible, for a month or so; if impossible, to obtain nformation where such accommodation in the vicinity could be had.

"It is so quict here," he said, in a thrillingly modulated voice; "and quiet is what I seek. I have lived in such a whirl of excitement during the summer, that I am bent on trying the opposite exfeelings exactly "It is very dull in winter," said Aunt silence, he said:
