> A mummy was brought to Denmark' The hieroglyphic inscription told That the body embalmed was three theuser years old. It was the corpse of a mighty queen, Examining it, they found between Her closed fugers a corn of wheat; so well preserved was this little seed,

That being sown, it put forth its blade, Its delicate stem of a light green shade The ear got filled with ripening eorn, Full grown through sunshine and light of That wonderful power in a corn so small— t is a lesson to each and all. Three thousand years did not quench its germ. It teaches our faith to be strong and firm.

When such a life is laid in a corn.
When out of that husk a new plant could be To ripen in sunshine and dew from the sky, Then, human soul, thou spark from on high, Thou art immortal as thy great sire Whose praise is sung by the angel choir! The husk, the body, is buried deep, And friends will go to the tomb and weep But thou shalt move on, on wings so free-
