THE RECONSIDERED VERDICT.

True in substance, though I tell itfrom a memory not very retentive of de-tails, and, though true, probably new to many of my readers is the story of the reconsidered verdict. Some sixty autumns ago the case was tried at Chester, Judge of great ability and emispring—April, I think, was the month— there had been a bad case of burglary at there had been a bad case of ourginry at a farm house in Cheshire. Three men had tied down and gagged the farmer and his two maid servants, and had rifled the house at their leisure. The police were told of the matter, and pretty accurate descriptions were given of the men. There were two other clues. In the struggle one of the men had lost a button from his coat, which button he had left behind. Also the same man had one of the maids that the girl same one of the maids that the girl same was sure she had left her mark upon him." Weeks passed without any arrests being made, and people began to forget the burglary, until one day a man was taken up in Liverpool on suspicion of being concerned in quite a different matter. There was no defense; the jury found a verdict of "guilty" withleaving the box; and, as burglary was a hanging matter in those days, it merely remained to pass sentence of death. Only a formula between him and judgment: "Prisoner at the bar, you have heard the verdict of the jury. Have you any thing to say why sentence of death should not be passed upon you?" on the prisoner spoke for the first Just brushing his eyes with the cuff of his coat, he began:

When the thing came off—April, didn't they say?—I was fightin' the slavers on the Gold Coset. But you've got no call to be Coast. But you've got no call to believe that, and so there's an end to-it."

There was something in the man's manner that impressed the Judge; so he said, not unkindly, "But surely, prisif your story is true, you must have friends and comrades with whom you could have communicated. If you had thought they could do you good, you would have done this. It is too eye lighted on the stranger from the inn. "Yes." he added, pointing to him, "there is a gentleman who might speak for me if he would."

The Judge turned round. "Do you know the prisoner?" he asked.

Then, slowly and deliberately, he got out of the witness-box, and clambered into the dock, where he seized the prisoner's hand, and, turning to the Judge, said, "My Lord, this was the best man in my crew, and saved my life. with his season's work, having about 300 hogsheads of sugar nearly ready for the market. The story of the second raid is thus touchingly told:

MY DEAR SISTER—Now don't be frightened when you hear what has happened to us, with thousands of others. We have been visited by the insurrects, and our house and plantation burned with everything we had in our house. We are left without a belt to lie upon or a dress to put ou.

burned with everything we had in our noise. We are left without a best to lie upon or a dress to put ou.

Only about twenty or thirty negroes came, afoot. They tied Desiderio and another white man, and male us all form a line, with guns at our breasts, to kill us if we moved to save anything. First they killed my dog with shots and stabe, for he defended himself until the last moment. They then stode everything, they wanted, even taking the rings from my fingers; then set fire to all the bouses, took my ozen and -cows, and then marched us off among them, with D. tied with a rope, and a maggo lindid of the rope, and a sign at his breast.

When at last they took us off outside of the plantation, I was determined to save Desiderio, so I took hold of the Captain. a negro, and would not let him go until he gave me back D. e but the other man they would not let go; they took him a little way off and chopped off his head. Oh, say fod! what a night of horror! Is there no one to hear, to see, to save?

Ruth Hall.

The Boston correspondent of the Cleveland Plaindcaler writes: "Mr. James Parton's bride is the 'Nelly' of Fanny Fern's novel, 'Ruth Hall,' the greatest literary bombshell that ever exploded in Boston.—The book was published in the control of the latter with before its author's lished in 1856, just before its author's marriage to Mr. Parton, and as it contained caricatures of nearly all editors of the weekly papers in the city, a painfully unflattering portrait of Nathaniel-P. Willis, Lady Blessington's 'Yankee Poodle,' and such a likeness of her fatherin law and his wife as a spirited woman would be likely to paint, the outery against it was loud. Everybody pro-tested that his feelings were not hurt, and The Greenville (Tenn.) Intelligencer defended everybody else from the 'malicions attacks' made by Mistress Fanny. picture of patience and economy worthy of study was presented yesterday South C street by a Chinese wood peddler and his donkey. Although the back of the donkey was piled high with wood, and although "John's" errand abroad was to sell this wood as quickly as possible, his inborn frugality would not allow him to lose an opportunity of gathering in a little something in the way of clear gain. The prize that fell in the way of John and his donkey was nothing more nor less than a large wilted carrot, thrown into the street from one of the markets. Which found it first, Chinaman or donkey, we know not, but when we saw them both seemed equally interested in the treasure-trove. John steod patiently by holding the halter of his donkey, while the latter leisurely munched the carrot. For once the donkey found pleasure in what was business with his master. It was a good illustration of Chinese character, that little scene in the street. John might miss a dozen chances to sell his load of wood, but he was bound to save that carrot. It was a bit of clear gain that he could not find it in his soul to pass. Had any one called him, we doubt if he would have crossed the street to sell his wood until his donkey had safely housed that carrot. - Virginia City (Nev.) Enterprise.
