A QUESTION.

BY MARY G. MORRISON.

Beyond the fields with summer glowing. I see a grave where flowers are growing, Where grateful hands are always throwin Bright laurels one by one.

A splendid heart at rest is lying,
A brave heart, victor in its trying,
That left humanity when dying,
A great work grandly done.

Within those fields with samilght burni His scanty living daily carning. A man the fragment hay is turning Late many a beap; Slow are the eyes his watch his raking Or idly signs of weather taking. The boart to impulse only waking. The root still dumb, alleep.

Which is the death? We are receiving:
New courage from a soul yet giving.
A bleasing from a heart yet living.
An inapiration still,
Which is the He? A dull, blind straying
A tell no grander though obeying?
