The hours at the railway station were marked by some gigantic clock that told the laggard minutes by screaming whistel and clanging belt. The 4:30 accommodation had gone east, the western express, due there at 4:55, had thundered through the village, gone on over the great viaduct, and disappeared round the village, gone on over the great viaduct, and disappeared round the valley and was to rossing the great viaduct and moving more and more swiftly away.

To close and lock the switch was neither difficults or dangerous, and she quietly walked on toward the end of the siding until she came to the switchpost. Here she leaned against the frame a little space, shading her eyes from the sun with her hand and watching the train.

No one counted the hours by the trains.

The iron horse was moving on the station master signaled with his arms in a curiou- fashion, and each of the four brakemen repeated the motion in turn. White puffs of steam rose high in the air from the fartherend of the train. A curious rattling sound spreads through the train, and the last car moved down, turned aside, and entered the siding, the station master left the switch, and came hastily toward the Good day, Alfred. Light freight today, only one car-by the way, the brake chain is broken, and you had better drop the car at the repair shops. The freight can be thrown out without leaving the So saying, the station master went on into the freight house followed by the rattling and rumbling cars. They gradually lost their speed and came to a stop with the end of the train lost in the dark cavern of the freight house. There was a shout from the building, and then one of the brakemen began to move his hands As lilies dare to be When fairies creep in their depths, and sleep Till the sun peeps over the sea. as a signal to go on. Again the white puffs of steam shot up in the distance, and with a jar and a quiver the train And Oh! her eyes they are blooms of light, started again.

Car after car rolled past them. There were hurried whispers, a warm bandshake and perhaps a kiss, and then the young man swung forward, grasped the ladder on the last car, climbed quickly to the top and sat down. She stood gazing after him as he was drawn away from
