Nightly the hoar-frost freezes
The young grass of the field,
Nor yet have blander breezes
The buds of the oak unsealed

Nor yet pours out the vine His siry resinous wine; But over the southern slope The wands of the peach-tree fire

The wands of the peacutaries had not line rosy beauty burst;

A breath, and the sweets bads ope! A day, and the orchards bare, like maids in haste to be fair, ligntly themseives adorn with a scarf the Spring at the door was a supplied to the spring at the door was a supplied to the spring at the door was supplied to the spring at the door was supplied to the spring at the spring at the door was supplied to the spring at the spring a

What spirit of Persia cometh
And saith to the buds, "Unclose,"
Ere ever toe first bee hummeth,
Or woodland wild-flower blows?
What prescient soul in the sod
Gariands each barren rod
With fringes of bloom that speak
Of the baby's tender breast,
And the boy's pure lip unpressed,
And the pink of the masiden's chee
The zwift, been Orient so
Prophesies as of old,
While the apple's blood is cold,
Remembering the snow.

Afar, through the mellow hazes Where the dreams of June are at The hills, in their ranishing mar earry the floah and fade! Southward they fall, and reach. To the bay and the occan beach, Where the soft, half-syrian air Blows from the Chesspeake's Inleta covers, and creeks On the fields of Delaware!

And the rows lakes of flowers, That here alone are ours, Spread into seas that pour Billow and spray of pink Even to the blue wave s brink

What fool, to-day, would rather In wintry memories dwell? What miser reach to gather The fruit these boughs foretell? No, no!—the heart nas room For present joy alone, Light shed and sweetness blown, For odor and color and theom?

As the earth in the shining sky, Our lives in their own bliss lie; Whatever is taught or told, However men moan and sigh, Love never shall grow cold, And Life shall never die!
