The light of paradise.

Ah, me! who could fortell
What work those hands should do!
How many they should help to lead

Life's troubled mazes through

What never-faltering part
Their tender strength should take;
What burdens for the tired ones bear
What barriers help to break?

Scarcely a day or hour
In all these long, long years,
But they have helped some weaker one

Or wiped some sufferer's tears

Peace, as at first, is there:

The constant shade of pain

Just seventy years age

Has dimmed, perhaps, the eyes vet still they hold within their list The light of paradise.

She slept, no doubt, such sleep

No doubt the little hands
Lay passive on her breast,
As, with the cradle's lullaby,
They huahed her to her rest,

To one he brought the rarest flowers
That gold could buy;
And gave them with the courteous smile
That masked a sigh.
Upon the other he bestowed,
With source a look,
A few wild violets, gathered by
A wayside brook. When from the skies that golden da
