FRENCH FOWLS. The French fowls are not nearly so popular in America as they deserve to be. The Creve-cours and Roullans are both prolific egg producers, grow rapidly, and have white, juicy flesh. The latter have plump breast, fine-flavored flesh, remarkablylight bones and gray legs. If properly fed the hens will lay on without stepping to sit. They thrive well in confinement. The Creve-cours are also nonsitters, and are not surpassed for whiteness of flesh by any variety. Their black legs are often objected to by cooks and dealers, but they have no effect upon the color, flavor or tenderness of the flesh.
