LOVE SONG.

BY GEN. W. H. LYTLE

Nay, frown not, fairest, chide no more

He flery kine is innoced, when thrills the pulse with wine. Then leave the golder in my hand, And well thy glances bright, Lest wine and beauty mingling. Should wreck my soul to-night.

Then, sweetest, to the sucient rim,

And while thy fingers idly stray

in dalliance o'er thy lyre, Sing to me, love, some rare old song That guahed from heart of fire— Songs such as Grecian phalanx hymne When freedom's field was won, And Perzia's glory with the light Faded at Marathon.

Sing till the shouts of armed men Ring bravely out once more; Sing till again the ghost-white tents Shine by the mounts shore. Bid from their melancholy graves The buried hopes to start, knew ere many a storm had swept The dew drope from my heart.

Bing the deep memories of the past,
My soul shall follow thee,
Hs boundless depths re-echoting
Thy glorious minstrelsy.
And as the wild vibrations hang
Entettered by the air.
I'll drink, thy white arm round me, love,
In wine, that conquers care.

House Hunting,

In soulptured beauty ra: a,
Bow down thy red arched lips and quaff
The wire that conquers care.
Or breathe upon the ahining cup
Till that its perfume be
Sweet as the scent of orange caves
Upon some tropic see.
