AN OLD MINIATURE.

You showed me, Rob, the other day
A ministure so full of grace
That it hath stolers my heart away

"Find it for me before I go.
The eyes had caught the heav nly had

And on her neck, so nobly fair, Splendid old-fashioned laces lay.

"I'll look, my boy. Was it this one?"
(Her eye is blue as China ware;)
Or this' (Her face is like the sun.)
Stay! Here's the likeness, I dare swear.

No; none of those, Rob; none of those.

Twas none of these did steal my heart;
For them I never breathed a sigh;
Or. eleeping, wakened with a start
From thrilling dreams that they were nigh.

"Oh, seek once more the portrait rare:

"Your fond impatience urges me To seek the fair enchantress' face— Yet here lies all my gallery; Not one is absent from its place;

"Or only one, an artist friend

Then breathe my lady's name, and where Her knight may follow her to-day.

What! That is she? Oh strange weird fate!
My loo, your stricken heart lies low
Before the lovely Countess Kate.

> Dear heart! You ask if time has chat
> The love of long age.
> If summer's flush of love is past—
> The love we cherished so.
> Because with hand in hand we walk
> Together in the snow. We cannot turn life's seasons back, However much we gricve
> That summer solstice days are gone—
> We-cannot once deceive
