Something About Dress Reform.

on the retired list, there is going to be trouble at Hot Springs, Saratoga, Long Branch, Skowhegan and Kalamazoo. Turn the Mother Hubbard out! As a balloon, it is all right enough, and en regle, but as a dress, it is a lock-stitched, gathered, puffed and ruffled failure, and a withering reproach to the boast-ed culture of the nineteenth century. The Mother Hubback dress is all skirt and no waist -a kind of a calico rag-and to waster a kind of a cancer regarding, gathered at the neck, drifting away off into nowhere, and thouting along after the wearer like a spanker sail in a dead calm. If the Mother Hubbard dress is an eld fashion rejuv enated, we can only say, in the posthu-mous language of a departed poet, shoot it. From the ashes of the dead past rises the Mother Hubbard dress, lke a pheenix, and not so much like a pheenix, either, as like a coffee-sack, held in place at the swan-like throat by a silver arrow, and trimmed with point lace and other frills. There is nothing like it on the face of the globe, unless it be another dress of the same awful structures they are seen in pairs, triplets and quartets, bobbing along the struct like oriental mutton legged sails dotting the Mediterranean Ses. Devoid of grace, shapeless and cumbersome, what is there about a Mother likely and legged to the Mother to the seen what is there about a Mother than the second of the second o Hubbard dress to commend itself to the taste of our girls, and of other fellows' girls? We implore the dear creatures to discard the Mother Hubbard before it is everlastingly too late; before the awful Mother Hubbard habit gets too firm a hold on them. Then let them adopt something less voluminous, balloony and turgid, something neat, natty and petite. Willingly would we yield up a dollar and a half to witness such a decided move-ment for dress reform. Will our wives, sisters and daughters give heed to our timely warning, or will they still persist in clinging to the abnormal Mother Hubbard and leave us hanging on the ragged edge of despair.—Texas

Vancouver's Island.

WHOLE NO. 838.

Crossing over the Straits of Juan de ruca to the pretty city of Victoria, we stood on British soil and enjoyed the far-famed climate of Vancouver's la-land. Seen from the sea the whole place presents a different character phace presents a different character from the raw towns along Puget Sound, where shingles and shavings, paint and mortar-beds surround nearly every finished structure to tellop its newness.

The solid red-brick warehouse fronting lalong the harbor and the unmistakable signs of English solidity and stability signs of English solidity and stability on every hand carried convincing proof of the Briton's rule, without the Union Jack flying from all the official flagstaffs and buildings. There is a little bother with the custom-house inspections if it was wight to land any bargages ty Vic. you wish to land any baggage at Vic-toria, but as duty falls alike on articles imported from England or the United States, the stranger can not grumble more than the colonists themselves.

whenever you hear any one descans upon Victoria, the drives come in for chief mention after the climate, and in these two respects Victoria is entitled to precedence over any small spot on the continent. English rule had nothing to do with the climate, which is mild and equable the year round, with an average temperature of forty-two degrees for the month of January and sixty-three for the month of Annuary. sixty-three for the month of Angust, and every citizen relates with royal pride that the Princess Louise came here to spend two days, and became so delighted that she remained two months, and then left with the regret that she could not stay longer. English rule is demonstrated, however, in the excellent roads that extend in every direction from the city, and the summer visitors, who come here from different parts of the Praific coast, never find their long-est stay half long enough to include all the attractive points within easy drive from Victoria. Convict labor has been employed in making the macademized highways, and convicts are constantly at work now keeping them in perfect condition. A favorite drive is that leading from Victoria to the naval station on Esquimault bay, which is station on Esquimault bay, which is known commonly as Squimo. The 'Squimo road follows part way beside a narrow—and curving arm of the sea, through which the tide ruehes like the swift current of a river, and half of the way it unrolls its length between hedges of fern and undergrowth and walls of solid forest trees. Picturesque rocks, tangles of wild rose and sweet-brier, and forest nooks dappled with sunshine here and there, make one continuit picture along the road, and the occasional red jackets of the English marines and soldiers illuminate the landscape with brilliant touches of color. All Victoria breathes the atmosphere of a past and greater grandeur, and the citizens feelingly revert to the time when British Columbia was a separate colony to itself, and Victoria, the seat of the miniature court of the Governor-General and commander in chief of its forces. Those were the good old days to which no latter-day progress can approach, and it is with no heartfelt joy that the people celebrate "Dominion day," when British Columbia and the two provinces of Canada were made one. The recent visit of the Marquis of Lorne and all the flattering torne and all the leavering things he found time to say have gone far toward restoring the political complacency of these people, and it requires no insistence to make them believe that you consider Victoria the most charming spot in the country. English traits and English customs are maintained as well here as in the home island, and a charming friendliness exists between this colony and the United States. "Dominion day" falls on the 2d of July, and the celebration of it hardly exceeds

The Lien and the Convention.

A Lion who had long reigned with upreme power over the Forest, one day allod a convention of all the beasts and announced his intention of abdicating. "I am growing old and feeble, and I must soon pass away." I argued. "All things considered it is juster that my successor be nominated and installed while I am living to give him the benefits of my experience and advice. There was general joy among the Beasts, for the Lion had lorded it after his own fashion. The Elephant was squinting around, the Rhinosceros was pushing his nose into the crowd, and the Giraffe was doing a heap of think-ing way down his throat when the Lion continued: "After serious reflection and solemn consideration I have decided that my own son shall succeed me. The office will not only be kept in the family. the family will be kept in office. heing no further business before the meeting we will adjourn."

neeting we will adjourn."

"But why the need of this convention?" protested the Rhinoscenes.

"Well, there week's any particular need of it, replied the Lion, but it is constanancy to call one in order to collect the expenses of nomination. Brother Giraffe, pass the hat!"
