the foods we use for our stock, though I am not sure that it has done toure than to give a reason for results already attained by actual experience. But to be more practical. I will begin with the animal which I believe will give the been well cared for by its dam, bring it into winter quarters without any diminution of growth, give it a comfortable, well ventilated shelter and abundance of such food as will produce growth of muscle, not fat, with a good yard for regular outdoor exercise, its size and goes as far as to say that the fish can be while I—well tang it to whistle a simple tune.—Chi-struck, too.' At this po than summer care, and it will grow in value from $40 to $200, sooner than anything else we can produce at like cost In this instance it seems desirable during the period of growth to use such food and care as will produce the largest and strongest animal at maturity. In the wintering of mature horses for farm work, I do not deem it advisable in the vineyards about Fresno, Cal. It to keen them in very bigh flesh. One is from half an inch to an inch and a to keep them in very high flesh. One of our most able, perhaps the most able vetrinarian in the United States, has said he finds fat horses to be more stroyed about ten acres for a man be-fore he discovered what was the matter croaked leg said we must be a farm with his vines, supposing the destruction, and we are all aware that tion to be the work of rabbits.

Stroyed about ten acres for a man be-fore he discovered what was the matter croaked leg said we must be a farm with a long new and a condition, and we are all aware that horses that are expected to endure the severest strain and labor, are purposely kept in quite moderate flesh. If in daily use the feed should be adapted to supply the waste of muscle, if not in constant use they will be benefited by daily exercise in a vard enclosed by a district of the work of rabbits.

A good man in northern New York had lived happily with an excellent wife until they were well on in years, when she died. He bethought him of the church, but I told him online didn't bring in bread and butter, so that I guessed we'd post-pone busing the farm until we found out how we liked the community. So we content a small loose near the town and held on to our cach.
