Last Thursday's afternoon train on the Lake Shore bore the meek and lowly editor of the ENTERPRISE southward as far as Adrian, where it deposited the timid mortal on the platform not far from "uncle John" Townsend's cozy office. We arrived at 6 a. m. and found the city crowded with democrats, some of whom had come all the way from California, as delegates and as lookers on.

Although nearly every one of the 13, 000 seats in the immense exposition building was occupied, we had no trouble in nearly all the stylish carriage horses that gaining admission and a good position where we could see and hear. When Cieveland's name was announced as the choice of the convention for president there was loud and prolonged applause, and cannons stationed on the lake front belched forth the news of the victory. teaches us that it is impossible for plants to grow with any rapidty in a soil that is hard, not simply because it is likely to bake, but because in being hard there is not a chance for a free circulation of either air or moisture, both of which are necessary for plant from the mediate from the free passage of and manner to prevent the free passage of the soil in a manner to prevent the free passage of the free p both air and moisture, it remains in its raw state and in a condition which it is impossible for plants to derive any ben efit from it, but when it is mingled with the soil and the soil made light and loose, so that the air and moisture can readily penetrate it, rapid decom-position takes place, the mineral sub-stance separating from the vegetable, and being reduced to atoms is in a con dition to unite with minute particles of air and moisture, and when thus united can readily pass through the loo-e soil and enter the roots of the growing plants: whereas, if the ground be hard, and impervious to either air or water, if it was the most abundantly supplied with plant food it would be very difficult if not impossible for the plants to get it.

Thus it will be seen that by thoroughly pulverizing the soil, two objects are accomplished. First, it lets in the heat and air and permits the free circulation of moisture, thus beginning the decomposition of the restaining the re hastening the decomposition of the ma-nure. Second, by permitting the free circulation of air and moisture, it unites them together and in their prog-ress through the soil gather up plant food and carry it to the roots of the growing plants.

While much can be done to assist plant growth by cultivation, after the seed is planted, it is never so easy orso-cheap as it is to do the work before the seed is planted, and the advantage of heaving the manure well mixed with the having the manure well mixed with the soil before the crop begins, to grow is great, because it hastens decomposition early in the season and gets some of the manure advanced to that state of decomposition necessary to furnish the young-plants with food as they need it; but if cultivation be neglected until the plants are up and need hoeing, the young plants must fely mainly for substance on what the ground contained the year before, unless some quick acting fertilizer be applied in the hill. But, however well the land may be pulverized before planting, it should on page out the neglected efter. should on no account be neglected after the plants begin to grow, for unless continued stirring of the soil is resorted to during the spring and early summer, the ground will get hard and often bake so as to prevent the circulation of both air and moisture; this is a fact so well understood, that every good farmer frequently cultivates his crops and keeps the soil loose. Some contend that cultivation is more important than manure, and that when only one can be had, frequent cultivation will produce the largest crop. This might be true one season, but would not be true many seasons because the soil would by this treatment finally become thorough this treatment finally become thoroughly exhausted.

To thoroughly prepare the soil before planting, and do it quickly and well requires some new implement different from any which we now have. It should be one that will thoroughly lighten up the soil six inches deep at least and do the work rapidly and with care at one operation. The plow will not do it; it simply turns the soil over and leaves it almost as hard as before another implement must be used. so another implement must be used work satisfactory; it only lightens and on Friday night and the following morning most of the others left, so that by saloon keepers who kept open on the 4th.

As some farmers fully realize the im As some farmers fully realize the importance of having an improved implement to pulverize the soil at one operation, inventors will set their wits at work to supply the want. Whatever the implement may be, it is important that it should do the work of the plow as well as to pulverize the soil.

It probable will not be difficult to make an implement to do the work on land that is free from large stones and land that is free from large stones and rocks, but New England is so full of rocks that it is important to, if possible, get an implement to work among them.

If we can not, then we must seed the rocky land down to grass for pastures, and clear up and drain the swamps and meadows and bring them into cultiva-tion. When this is done we shall get a tion. When this is done we shall get a third more product from the same amount of land, with little or no more labor. With our present implements such land cannot be as easily brought Tuesday forenoon while all was calm and quiet about the sacred precincts of the ENTERPRISE sanctum, a dreadful erash was heard by the printers and a number of sidewalk stragglers, who rushed to the Enterprise counting room with the terrible expectation of finding the presiding graces left in charge stretched lifeless upon the floor, but those fair beings were found executing a lively S. > Our village democracy ratified the nomination of Cleveland and Hendricks last Saturday night. Large bonfires were lighted in front of the Goodyear house and Doty's store, while the band was out and tooted its most patriotic music. A gang of small boys meantime giving vent to the enthusiasm of their souls by firing innumerable fire crackers, interspersed now and then with sky rockets, etc. A fair sized crowd was out, and just as the brilliancy of the illumination was beginning to wane W. L. Watkins led off with three cheers for the democratic candidates who will try to meander up the slippery hill to the white house. After which al most everybody went home to quiet slumbers, same's if nothing had happened.

We have received the Outing for August and it is a pleasing number. The frontispiece illustrates "Art in August," and is truly charming. The next that attracts our attention is a narrative interesting to wheelmen, by Frank Dobbins, called "Tricycling trips in Tokio." Besides this there is a sketch of "The Rival of the Bicycle," which is equally interesting. In looking over the illustrated pages of the Outing we next find the pleasing "A strange idyl," which is con cluded. "Yatching around Cape Cod," which this number includes, is quite ro- to Chicago, stopping at various places to mantic. We also have an account of a visit friends. ":Homeward Cruise," and a poem, "In naiden scorn," which is both novel and romantic. "Scraping acquaintance with they will visit their brother, Dr. Ben, for the birds" is presented in an amusing light, while "Editor's open window" is recounted in a very recreating light,-"Our monthly record" should not be overlooked, and "Among the Books" contains points to be remembered.

How the Old Printer Passed Away.

And so, year after year, he wrought among the boys on a morning paper. He went to bed about the time the rest of the world got up, and he rose about the time the rost of the world set down to dinner. He worked by every kind of light except sunlight. There were can-dles in the office when he came in; then they had lard oil lamps that smoked and sputtered and smelled; then he saw two or three printers blinded by explosions of camphene and spirit gas, then kerosene came in and heated up the news-room on summer nights like a furnace; then the office put in gas, and now the electric light swung from the ceiling and dazzled his old eyes, and glared into them from his copy. If he sang on his way home a policeman bade him "cheese that," and reminded him that he was disturbing the peace and people wanted to sleep. But when he wanted to sleep the rest of the world for whom he had sat up all night to make a morning paper, roared and crashed by down the noisy streets under his window, with cart and truck and omnibus; blared with brass bands, howled with hand organs, talked and shouted; and even the shricking newsboys, with a ghastly sarcasm, murdered the sleep of the tired old printer by yelling the name of his wwn paper. Year after year the foreman roared at him to remember that this wasn't an afternoon paper, editors shrieked down the tube to have a blind man put on that dead man's case; smart young proof readers scribbled sąrcastic comments on his work, on the margin of his proof slips, they didn't know how to read. long-winded correspondents learning to write, and long-haired poets who could never learn to spell wrathfully cast all their imperfections upon his head. But through it all he wrought patiently, and found more sunshine than shadow in the world, he had more friends than enereaders scribbled sarcastic comments on found more sunshine than shadow in the world; he had more friends than enemies. Printers and foremen and pressmen and reporters and editors came and went, but he saw newsroom and sanctum filled and emptied and filled again with new strange faces. He believed in his craft, and to the end he had a silent. pity, that came as near being contempt as his good, forgiving old heart could feel, for an editor who had not worked his way from a regular devilship up past his way from a regular devilship up past the cases and the imposing stone. He worked all that night, and when the hours that are so short in the ball room and so long in the composing-room drew wearily on, he was hadn't thrown in a very full case, he said, and he had to climb clear into the boxes and chase a type up into a corner before he could get hold of it. One of the boys, tired as himself—but a printer is never too tired to be good natured. offered to change places with him, but the old man said there was enough in the case to last him through this take, he wouldn't work any more to night. The type clicked in the silent room, and by and by the old man said:

'I'm out of sorts."
And sat down on the low window sill by his case, with his stick in his hand, his hands folded wearily in his lap. The types clicked on. A galley of tele-

Mexican Annexation Fancies

There are some hasty philosophers likely in time to Lnnex at least the Northern portion of Mexico; and this notion also finds favor among a con-siderable number of wealthy Mexicans, who suppose that their property inter-

This notion, however, seems to b entirely fanciful. There is nothing in the northern portion of Mexico, with the exception, perhaps, of parts of Tam-aulipas, to attract the immigration of aulipas, to attract the immigration of North Americans. The barren regions of Coahuila, Chihuahua and Senora offer small inducements to settlers. Even the best parts of these States can only be made useful for cattle ranges, only be made userful for catale ranges, and these require but a limited population. The mines, however rich they may be, can only be worked with costly apparatus, and the Indians of the country will supply every demand, for labor. In this situation there is not ing to bring about anney within. If the ing to bring about annexation. If the country were fich, if it were capable of being settled by a dense agricultural population, the case might be other-wise, but as it now stands, there is noth-ing that can make it an object for American politicians to add Mexico or any part of it to the United States.

Of course, the restless Yankee will always have heavy interests in Mexico. No matter what losses may be incurred, the chances of successful mining or of fortunate hits in other directions will always suffice to charm a due proportion of our speculators. But whatever effect these gentlemen may produce, of however their wishes may be seconded by a few rich Mexicans, it is most improbable that the northern republic will desire, or that the southern republic tries together under one Government In the North the policy of adding six of eight millions of Indians to a voting population in which there is already too much of ignorance will not be tol-erated; while in the South the differences of race, language, laws and usages will present on that side ob-stacles equally insurmountable. Each country will, of course, exert its due weight in the development of the other; and there should be no reason in any national jealousies or fears of encroach-ment, why this development should not be healthy, invigorating, and always in the direction of progress.—C. ## Working the "Bug."

When our bank was broke in New York I struck for the West and played poker on the Missispipi steamboats. My partner, Joe Mason, was a firstclass poker player, the coolest hand I ever met, and a perfect gentleman. He could discount your society swells for tone. One night a stranger came into Orleans. The luck ran against him and he lost several hundred dollars—all he had. I guess. He borrowed a stack of chips—$50 worth—and played them with a trembling hand. In a couple of deals they were gone. Lend me another fifty, he said, hoarsely, to Joe. "I don't know you, Joe replied, and I'm not going to stake you in the game. If you are broke, you had better withdraw."

"The stranger's lip quivered he had You have

"Joe did not move a muscle of his face—the bullet cut off the corner of the ace of clubs he held between his fingers. His hand sought his pistol pocket, but, checking the movement, and seeing the man had been disarmed, he simply straddled the ante, and said. Hou should learn to shoot better, Mr. Stranger. I could have killed him, he said afterward to me, but he was drunk, so I let him go.

Sheep are infested with various kinds of parasites, and it appears to make very little difference whether the sheep are reared in hot or cold climates. as some one or-more species of these pests are certain to annoy flocks unless measures are adopted to prevent their increase and development. In warm climates there are usually a far larger number of species of insect pests than in cold ones, but there is no place in which sheep can live where their enemies cannot also live; consequently it is folly to taik of any locality or country being entirely exempt from such pests. It is true that in new countries the insect pennies of sheep are usually less of sheep are usually less on the summer months. Sheep kept in health and free from external and the summer months.

One of the greatest pests, and one found in all parts of the world, is the One of the greatest pests, and one found in all parts of the world, is the minute parasite which causes the disease of sheep known by the common name of "scab." This parasite burrows in the skin, making sores, loosening the wool, and causing it to drop off in large patches; in fact, if it is not chacked, the wool will all drop off, and the animal die. These parasites spread from one animal to another, until an entire tlock—no matter how large—will all suffer from their depredations. Scab in sheep has been known to man, and in every book on sheep husbandry this disease is described and remedies are given; it has also been described and referred to thousands of times in agricultural and other periodicals ever since printed books and newspapers have been known. Every year the agricultural press of the eountry, with scarcely an exception, tell their readers how to cure scab in sheep, and describe the first indications of its presence in a flock.

With this constant repetition of symptoms, and methods of curing this disease, one might suppose that every farmer and flock owner in America would know when scab appeared among his sheep, as well as how to cure it. But we are bound to say that such is not the fact, for there is scarcely a week in which we do not receive letters from the owners of sheep, describing this very common disease, and asking for information in regard to its origin and the method of curing it. One of our correspondents admitted that he had lost 200 head of sheep from scab in one season, and even then had no idea what it was or how to cure it. We presume if any neighbor had asked him to purchase a book on sheep husbandry for a dollar or two, he would have refused, probably on the ground that he had no faith in "book farming," or those who wrote books on such subjects. Another correspondent, whose letter has just come to hand, says that his sheep are losing their wool, and the no-es of the suckling lambs are sore, and their faces covered with scabs and raw spots, all of which is probably due to this old and common disease among sheep, or some kindred one that could be checked if not cured by the use of a maturity. If one of the members of a farmer's family is taken sick a doctor is sent for immediately—there is no delay or thought about the expense; but if it happens to be one of his animals that is ailing or gets injured, he is inclined to think that it will gret well without the doctor's aid; and if it. suffers pain, and is tortured for months by parasites, his only concern if it suffers pain, and is tortured for months by parasites, his only concern is lest it may die, in which event he will lose the amount it might have been sold for when in health. Of course, there are many honorable exceptions to this rule, and we know that there are farmers who are as much concerned for their families, but we can not say that they are in the majority, or we should hear less of the loss of demestic animals by neglect and diseases. If one animal in the flock has scab, or is infested with sheep ticks, then the only safe way is to treat all alike; that is, dip them in some kind of solution that will destroy these parasites. Some flockmasters make a practice of dipping
