VICTOR HUGO.

-Samuel Baxter Foster.

Victor Hugo was so great that it may be said the world misses him. Earth is not to-day quite what it was yesterday. Victor Hugo is not here. He belonged to all the civilized lands and individuals, and in going down into the grave he brings to all places and persons a sense of loss. The feeling of pain is d by the though mained on earth the most possible of years, and, like the friend of Horace, years, and, me the friend of Horace, "went as late as possible to heaven." Coming into life in the beginning of one of the greatest of all centuries, Victor Hugo absorbed into his soul all Victor Hugo absorbed into his soul ail the greatness of the period, and became at last not so much the form of an individual as the picture of the modern manhood in its highest ideals. It was his good fortune to be born with unusnal natural powers, to be born in such a brilliant country as France, to be the child of educated and ambitious parents, and to make his debut in life in a conclusions. His highly sensitive mind caught the good and the power and the beauty of the surrounding scene. He lived in the midst of those debates lived in the midst of those debates about man, woman, politics, liberty, art and religion which all former generations i ad handed over to, the nineteenth civele for review and adjustment. Coming in the confusion that followed the Revolution, he was compelled to an eclectic. And pick out his principles from a large and disorderly assemblage. Passing his youth amid all the glories of the larger Napoleon, his heart learned to beat like a drum, and his foot to step as though in some magnificent march.

In politics he became a conservative In politics he became a conservative liberalist, in religion a rationalized worshiper, in art a decided modern, in literature a man of flaming sentiment, in society an intense humanitarian.

His classical studies were commenced when he was only eight years old. He began to take literary prizes when he was only fifteen. His mind was so laden with figures, images, striking re-semblances and with all the raw material out of which real poetry is manu-factured, that his writings took the shape of verse as naturally go the pine tree takes the form of a pyramid or a dewdrop the form of a ball. To him poetry was not a mode of declaring poetry was not a mode of declaring love to some country will, nor was it a form of address to the first robin of springtime, but rather was it the vehicle of such thought as was worthy of the name of wisdom or sentiment or even name or wiscome of seament of section philosophy. By the time he had been in the world a score of years he had published a volume of odes and songs which are said to have been as popular as the "Meditations" of Lamartine. The novel followed the poetry because the poem had not flexibility enough to fit itself to all the details of enough to it used to all the details of human life and its tremendous surroundings. Beantiful and powerful as verse is, it is not capable of being spread out over the whole soul of man. Scott,

Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, could all write most excellent verse, but their survey of the world was larger than the limit of rhythm, feet and rhyme. They were compelled to pass out of the world of the verse-maker and build up "Old of the verse-maker and build up "Old Nickleby," "Nicholas Nickleby," in Hold Bede," in of the verse-maker and onto the Mortality," "Nicholas Nickleby," "Pendennis," and "Adam Bede," in the great open air of the novelist. Thus Victor Hugo went to the novel as to the one form of literature that can contain one form of interactive that can accept the political ideas of a statesman, the fancy of a poet, the learning of a life-long student, the enthusiasm of a reformer, and the humanity of a Jesus

Ohrist.
Of his early novels little is known in this country. Drama came in for a part of the great man's life, and in these works there would have been an enduring fame had not such master pieces as "The Hunchback," "Les pieces as "The Hunchback," "Les Miserables," and "Histoired un Crime"

Miserables, and Histoired in Crime come along to eclipse the merit of their many predecessors.

Along whatever path, Victor Hugo moved with all the vehemore of a storm. In the average the French mind is the most intense in its feelings and cripings but this man outful the and opinions, but this man outdid the French. His poems, his dramas, his and opinions, but this man outfid the French. His poems, his dramas, his novels, his politics, his love and his hate, were all tropical. He had little use for the temperate zone. In religion he parted with the formal creeds, but he was as zealous in his belief in God as he was bitter in his estimate of the human treatment of the divine idea; in allities his humanity made him sympaman treatment of the divine data, in politics his humanity made him sympathize with the Communist as against despotio imposition; in the matter of opinion he preferred exile to compromise. He was a kind of perpetual burnels with the property of the compression gle-blast, awakening the men not only of France, but of Europe, with echoes heard in America.

This ardent nature touched art in its dramatic and literary forms, and helped inaugurate an age of greater reality and independence. Educated a reality and independence. classic, he added the boldness and taste of the present to the conceptions of the past, and so far as necessary he cut away the past to make room for the new and the better. To have the ingrafted branches bear fruit well he did not hesitate to lop oil the old tree. The new fruit has perhaps fully justified the cutting which once filled so many with alarm.

Along with Lamartine, Chateau-briand, and Michelet, Victor Hugo helped lift French literature up to a strange height, not only of passion, sentiment, and fancy, but also to a delicacy of language and rhetoric which surpasses even the splendor of the Greeks and Latins. It would seem that after Chateaubriand, Lamartine and Hugo, words can offer us no additional death all the little words which structure around as conjunctions or particles. He helped inaugurate the era of a simple style, such as that which made Theodore Parker powerful in Boston and Tacitus powerful in Rome. Tacitus hated a conjunction, so did Julius Casar—the former saying, "Make Solitude, call it peace"; the latter around t help. Beyond these men, the lips may as well become silent, and ask the still-ness of the soul or the peculiar elo-Casar—the former saying, "Make Solitude, call it peace"; the latter saying, "I came, I saw, I conquered"; the grand Hugo saying, "The shadow of an enormous right hand rests on Water—the state of butters."

loo. It is the day of Destiny. God passed over it."

It was the amusement of some huno was one amusement of some humorists twenty years ago to make great sport of the style of the author of 'Les Miserables,' but as the years have worn along this merriment has ceased, to make room for a general admiration of make room for a general admiration of the man who could say of Napoleon. "He vexed food" of Fantine, "She had gold and pearls, the pearls were in her mouth, the gold was in her hair"; of Paris, "If she is the heart of the world the sorrows of the world should be the sorrows of Paris." In perhaps a world sorrows of Paris." In perhaps a modified form, the direct style of Victor Hugo will be that of the future.

Death has thus removed a most conspicuous figure. Not a perfect being like a Christ, not a symmetrical man. like Guizot, not a deep man like Victor Cousin, but a grand human being; an egotist like Socrates, but also a warm and open-hearted friend, as broad in knowledge as Goethe, as dogmatic as Muskin, as independent and angry as Carlyle, but much of the time as gentle as a mother, and in full sympathy with ents, and to make his debut in life in a beggar and child. His books are full of the richest of gems, of morals, of poetry, of art, and of deistic piety. is almost certain that his works will be an inspiration to the French of to-mor row, and to many young readers and thinkers who will study this world after this generation shall have gone, this stormbeaten old man, to its fina rest. - David swing in The Current. To Check Bleeding.

The natural process by which bleeding is stopped is the formation of a blood clot which plugs the orifice of the divided vessel. When an artery is divided the cut end retracts or shrinks so that the formation of clot is facilitated, but the blood current is so strong, unless loss of much blood has diminished the force of the circulation, that it hin-ders the coagulation. It should, there-fore, be the aim of an assistant to check or stop the flow of blood from the artery in order that the beginnings of clot-formation may not be swept away by the current. This may be plished by pressing upon the orifice of the vessel in the wound, or by pressing the edges of the wound firmly together, or, in eases where this is not easy and efficient, by compressing the artery which supplies the part from which the hemorrhage is taking place in some part of its course between the heart and the injury. The main arteries supplying the head lie in the neck, one on each side of the windnine, where their each side of the windpipe, where their pulsations may be readily felt. In case of a wound of an artery in the neck the cut ends of the vessel should be com-pressed with the finger, if possible, or the artery, both below and above the wound, should be pressed firmly back-ward against the backbone. Unless urgical aid can be speedily ob tained, there is little hope of saving in case these great vessels are wounded.

Rowland Hill and Penny Postage Some years ago, when it was the prac-tice to write the name of a member of parliament for the purpose of franking a newspaper, a friend of mine, previous to starting on a tour into Scotland, arranged with his family a plan of informing them of his progress and state of health without putting them to the expense of postage. It was managed thus: He carried with him a number of thus: He carried with him a number of old pewspapers, one of which be put into the post daily. The postmark and the date showed his progress, and the state of his health was evinced by the selection of the names from a list viously agreed upon with which newspaper was franked. Sir Francis Burdett, I recollect, denoted vigorous health. Once on the poet's (Coleridge) visit to the lake district he halted at the door of a wayside inn at the moment when the rural postman was delivering a letter to the barmaid of the place over in her hand, and then asked the stage of it. The postman demanded ostage of it. The postman demanded is shilling. Sighing deeply, the girl handed the letter back, saying she was too poor to pay the required sum. The poet at once offered to pay the postage, and did so. The messenger had scarcely left the place when the young barmaid confessed she had learned all she maid confessed she had learned all she was likely to learn from the letter; that she had only been practicing a preconceived trick—she and her brother have a your chin, without honoring even with a side glance. No Check on Bank Tellers.

Scott's steal was the leading topic of conversation in the banks during the Several bank Presidents were asked whether paying tellers as a rule were so situated that they could walk off with large sums of money withaut being immediately detected. President F. D. Tappan, of the Gallatin National Bank, answered this question by pointing to his paying teller and saying:
"That man handles the money. He could take a million dollars out of here and I would not know it."

O. D. Baldwin, President of the O. D. Baldwin, President of the Fourth National, said that he knew of no means to prevent paying tellers from stealing if they were bound to steal. "A man who handles large sums of money has got to be trusted," said Mr. Baldwin. "It is true that paying tellers are required to give bonds, but the amount of the bond in leach individual case is so small, that it is true that it is the said."

Lassenheim, near Haarlem, Ho was interviewed in this city this "Holland, as is well-known, is a land, the greater part of it lower these. The water is kept dyes; you have another name large windmills, that pump the said it was the land. each individual case is so small that it but a fraction of what the man can easily slip into his pockers. Not a day passes but there is some among bankers as to what to prevent thefts by capioves. The question is one of deep solicitude with the heads of financial institutions."

Mr. Baldwin conducted the reporter into the "cage" which inclosed the paying teller of the Fourth National. "Mr. —, show me a parcel of money," "Mr. —, show me a parcel of money," said the President. The teller handed Mr. Baldwin a package about ten inches thick containing several large envel-opes filled with greenbacks, national bank bills and gold certificates of very large denominations.

'How much is there in this package?'

sked the President. "A little more than $5,000,000," - answered the teller.

"Now, see here," said Mr. Baldwin to the reporter, pulling out one of the envelopes, which was about an inch and a half thick, "this envelope contains just $1,000,000; what is to prevent the teller from slipping it into his pocket and taking it away?

Nothing except his hone-ty, interposed the teller.

"Well," continued Mr. Baldwin, "I don't know of any banking institution where the paying teller has not the same opportunities that he has here. Bank officers are compelled to place implied confidence in their tellers?"—New York Times.

Honsekeeping. An overworked woman may keep her house in order, but she adds liftle to the comfort of her home. The Neapolitan Cabman.

In Naples no inhabitant of the town ever thinks of paying his cabman his legal fare. Everyone feels it would be unjust to compel him to drive from one end of the town to the other for the 8 pence he has a right to claim, and on such occasions every one gives him something extra. But for short drives the 8 pence is too much. On summer afternoons a walk through the streets is almost intolerable. You have been to see the museum or the aquarium. le us say; the walk from either to the neighborhood of San Carlo, where the great coffee houses are, is short; but if on go on foot you know you exhausted before you reach your desti nation. As soon as you appear on the public way half a dozen cabmen offer their services. You choose the cab you like, say San Garlo, place the first finger of your left hand across the second joint of the first finger of your right and walk on. You have offered the driver half a fare. He shrugs his shoulders and sits firmly on his box; do not turn your head; in half a minute he will be rattling along the road beside you. only notice you take is slightly to ele vate your chin, without honoring him even with a side glance. AN OCEAN OF FRAGRANCE. How Hyacinths, Tulios, and Crocuses Ar-

Holland has always been and ably will ever be the mother of bulbs. Few persons, while admiring the beau-tiful flowers produced from Holland bulbs, ever think of the care, time, and trouble taken to grow them. Bulbs have been cultivated there four hundred nave been cultivated there four numbers or five hundred years, as near as can be ascertained, but for several years past they have received more attention than ever. Mr. Beerhorst, a bulb-grower of Lassenheim, near Haarlem, Holland, was interviewed in this city this week

"Holland, as is well-known, is all lov land, the greater part of it lower than the sea. The water is kept off by dykes; you have another name here Erected here and there on them are ission canal boats like, I understand, was once

"What is the soil like, that you are enabled to raise the finest bulbs?"

"The best in the world for bulb-growing—pure, sandy soil. The reason Holland bulbs are best is owing to the soil, temperature, and water, which is a the control of the soil to be a pure of investible. We have only to as pure as is possible. We have only to dig three feet—I believe you measure by feet here-to find water, not only in one place, but anywhere.

"How do you plant hyacinths to in crease their number?

"We first fertilize the soil, put about sixteen bushels of manure on each twelve feet square, then we take a hyacinth bulb and out across the bottom several times, plant, and in June we lift. The one bulb will be divided into several small ones of perfect growth."

"When do you plant first?"

"In September. The great fogs from the sea drive the frost away, but we always cover the beds with weeds. We can not use straw, because then the mice destroy our bulbs." "Are your winters as cold as here?"

"No; we are a great ways further north, yet our winters are not so severe. Probably the fogs help us some. Our summers are not so intensely hot as in Our this country."
"Are the hyacinths ready for sale

after the first year?"
"No, no: I would they were. first year they are planted close; the second year we must plant them in new second year we must pract them in the soil, as they will not grow two years in the same ground. The true name of China is said to be Chumque, "the center kingdom of the world. This term was by usage corrupted to Chinque, and from this word the Portuguese gave it the name of China.

It was at El Teb that I was first struck with the inferior quality of the English bayonet and sword bayonet. At Tamai in the rush and scurry, it was put to a severer test than anywhere else in the Soudan. In that battle the Hadendowas, as they rushed out of their grass cover with their short spears, fairly pitched themselves upon the weapons of our Black Watch and 65th. The triangular bayonet oftentimes bent and twisted. On the whole, however, itstood the test better than the sword bayonet. Like the sword bayonet, it often bent like hoop-iron when a thrust was made, if a bone interposed, and became corkscrewed in the struggle. It has two serious drawbacks, not so observable in the sword bayonet. wound it makes is slight, so that a fanatical savage or infuriated man requires several thrusts before he is placed hors de combat, giving him a chance to run much among civilized troops. In the much among civilized troops. In the second place, the triangular bayonet, when thrust violently, goes too far, and there is great difficulty of freeing it.

At Tamai, a stalwart soldier hooked his opponent in such a manner that he had to large the beds to the troops are the beds. were retreating, before liberating his weapon. This was the most conspicwas by no means the only one.

The sword bayonet has weight with-

The sword bayonet has weight with-out breadth, and, with the cutlass, fre-quently lacks temper. I have seen a blue jacket's cutlass-sword bayonet at Tamai, as well as some in the battles up the Nile, bend into a semicircle and remain in that shape, unfitting it for a second "point." The use it was put to did not justify the giving way of the weapon. The fact that it did not re-gain its form further proved that the quality of the blade was of the poorest. quality of the blade was of the poorest. It would have gone the same way had it been driven awkwardly into a sack of flour.

There can be no real difficulty with our mechanics and workshops in producour mechanics and workshops in produc-ing bayonets that will bear the brunt of rough usage in a campaign. What I have said of the bad quality of the cut-lass applies equally to the sword bayo-net. Many a soldier at Ablu Klea, saw net. Many a soldier at Ablu Klea, and with dismay his bayonet rendered useless at the moment when there was no chance to load his rifle, and when he most stood in need of its services. There also I saw sword bayonets bend and twist with the facility of soft iron rather than steel. After that fight you might have noticed brawny foot guardsmen, herculean life guardsmen, and the deft fighters of the mountain infantry, all of whom had stood shoulder to shoulder in the square, straightder to shoulder in the square, straight-uning their bayonets across their kness or under foot. Others there were who discarded their weapons and picked up some dead comrade's from the field.— London Telegraph.

Why Her Lover Enlisted.

The mystery of George S. Carter's disappearance last September, says an Uxbridge, Mass., telegram to the New York World, has been cleared up by the York World, has been cleared up by the publication of a little love story with a romantic sequel in which Carter figures as the live hero. Young Carter was engaged to a young lady living here, and preparations had been made for the nuptials. On the evening of the second day before the appointed time young Carter drove to the home of his affianced and asked her to take a ride. She made some excuse for preferring to stay at row from seed—that makes the From first planting it is four ntil they bloom. At length a letter came from destination at length a letter estimation New Mexico telling his parents that their son was a soldier. He wrote again, asking their help in getting a discharge from the army, and his anxiety was no doubt increased when he learned that his parents had been left $30,000 by the death of a relative. The war secretary has not yet replied tavorably and is rather inclined to depy the petition on the ground that enlistments are very scarce.

The Jackson county pioneers held their annual picnic on the fair grounds, Thursday. Five hundred and thirty pioneers were present, and after an open air banquet, they assembled in the central building to listen to the literary exercises. The choir sung a hymn, when Charles E. Snow introduced Owen Ellison, president of the association, who spoke feelingly of pioneer times. Mr. Ellison was followed by J. W. Welch. Mr. Welch said he had spent many years in the Rockies, and was not accustomed to speaking in public. He could sing a song, however, and when his audience cried, "give us a song," he complied in a most pleasing manner. The choir sang another song, and Mr. Snow introduced Hon. James A. Parkinson, the orator of the day. Mr. Parkinson's address was an able one, and heartily applauded. Col. Shoemaker was introduced, and graphically portrayed his early adventures in Michigan. Messrs. COWARD AND SNEAK-THIEF. An Animal That Even the Indian Dogs Look Upon With Contempt.

The first experience of the eastern traveler on the Northern Pacific railway, writes a correspondent at Green River, Wyoming, to the New York Sun, usually has some reference to the coyote As the train gradually ascends the plateaus that merge into the Rocky apputains on the way west from Omata, the first form of animal life obtained is the coyote standing on some distant knoll or half hiding in the scanty eage brush and gazing wistfully at the passing train.

The coyote is the sneak-thief, the region. Although the dog belongs to the same genus of animals, yet the hunters and trappers in expressing their contempt for a Digger Indian will compare him to a coyote, but never to a dog. Even the Indian dog, which is a coyote tamed through long generations, despises his ancestor and fights him at every opportunity with great show of contempt. So cowardly is this animal that he rever dares to seize a hird which that he never dares to seize a bird which faces him, but springs when its back is

The dismal bark of the coyote at night reminds one of the jackal of the Orient. My first experience with these animals was when sleeping in a tent after a hard day's ride in Wyoming on the back of a broncho. The night was dark and threatening. Suddenly a dark and threatening. Suddenly a chorus of unearthly sounds came from a high rock overhanging the tent. "What on earth is that?" "Coyotes," said the guide, with a curse, turning over for renewed sleep, I took a shotgun and a cartridge of heavy slugs and blazed away at half a dozen figures dimly outlined on the rock above. If there were any more strange noises that night I slept too soundly to hear them. In the morning two dead coyotes were found near the test, of which the remainder of the pack and perhaps other animals had managed to make a meal during the night. The chyotes followed us wherever we travpernaps other animas had managed to make a meal during the night. The corotes followed us wherever we trav-eled, for five hundred miles, through the mountains, always slinking away in the distance, and at night, somewhat emboldened, stealing into camp and eating the refuse of our meals. I shot a number of these animals and dis-sected them. If anyone can mention an edible article in existence that a to the world at once as a curiosity. To my knowledge they are carnivorous, insectivorous, herbivorous, graminivorous, frugivorous, and the rest.

The antipathy between the coyote and the Indian dog is one of the features of the Indian dog is one of the features of life in the west that attracts general at-tention. Some naturalists have been in haste to use this fact to prove that the latter is not a descendant from the former. Plainly, the antagonism between the animal is proof that they are identical species. The ludian dog has been trained through long generations to protect the interests of his master. The coyote is in opposition to the interests of man, and makes it his business to of man, and makes it his business to steal and plunder. The interests of the wild and tamed coyote are consequently antagonistic, and it is natural that they should fight. A western aroist has a photograph which shows an Indian dog and a coyote side by side. Anyone who can point out any difference in looks is welcome to the fame of his discovery.

Sportsmen, in the absence of game, often ride down the coyote, and find the chase brief and with few features of foxhunting. I rode one down, but never repeated the operation.

In the fights between the Indian dog and the coyote-the dog usually gets an unmerciful thrashing, particularly if he stays far from camp. In such cases the coyote calls his neighbors, and the enterprise of the coyote calls his neighbors, and the enterprise the dog and of the coyote calls his neighbors. the pack set upon the dog and often kill him. If the coyote is alone and can obtain no help, he makes haste to sneak away, tail between his legs. The indian dogs and the coyotes, however, interbreed commonly.

The coyote is found over a very wide section of country. Evidently their range is from sea level to ten thousand them in Wyoming, Idaho, and Montana, between six thousand and eight thousand feet above sea level. When thousand feet above sea level. When first seen they are usually standing motionless on some slight elevation or among the sage brush. If no harm is likely to come to them, they will stand and scrutinize the traveler from a very pear point. In fact, they are according near point. In fact, they are safer near by than at a distance, as one is apt to safe them for Indian dogs if they appear tame. In Idaho I saw them hunting, in their usual sneaking way, the large sage hens. Indeed, when I had taken the trouble to shoe to safe the safe that the safe the safe that large sage neas. Indeed, when I had taken the trouble to shoot one of these birds I was surprised to see a nimble coyote step out from under a tall sage brush, seize the bird, and dash away.

As that time I was riding through the modification in a double buggy, and was unable to give chase. One day I climbed an almost perpendicular elevation of about fifteen hundred feet. On the narrow top was a coyote, who, in his haste to escape, leaped too far, and his haste to escape, leaped too far, and fell over the precipice on the opposite side, several thousand feet deep. In captivity the coyote is the most servile and despicable rascal imaginable. How the Indians ever had patience to domesticate them and make courageous and faithful dogs of them I can not imagine. Although the Indian may be wifeless and wigwamless, he is never dogless.

was asked of a poinceman who leaned wearily against a coal-bin.

"It does get tiresome at times, especially during the early morning hours, when there are few persons in the street and nothing doing."

"You get rather hardened to it, don't you?"

"Yes, I suppose we do. At first it made my feet sche terribly, but I found that was due to wearing the same pair of shoes all day. By changing my shoes two or three times a day I find shoes two or three times a day I find that my feet are greatly relieved. Nearly every policeman keeps, several pairs in constant use. When worn in that way they also last longer. No two pairs are exactly alike, and they support the foot at different points, and that is where they are helpful. —New York Stra.

GENTS:—I have been subject to Sick Headache for years, and have tried, in vain, many advertised remedies and several physicians, but all to no purpose. At last I tried your B. B. Bitters—without much faith. I admit—but to day I can truly say, that after taking the third bottle I have not suffered from it. I recommend it to all my friends; several have been cured by it. My little grandson was permanently cured of Billiousness and Sick Headache, which were so severe as to cause convulsions. They have all ceased since he commenced the use of B.B.B.
