ing by Varney, the gossipy storekeeper, to be customers over the counter. Deacon Hodge who kept the grocery at the corner, was full of it that he filled Miss Pelter's pail wi Miss Pelter was so full of it that she did not discover the mistake until reaching home. In the pail's bottom were discernible a pair of spectacles. They were the deacon's. He had drepped them there in his abstraction and the shear in the special control of the store collaboration. and the obscurity of the store cellar. Mrs. Pelter was telling Mrs. Ann Hedg over her backyard fence in an interval taken from the preparation of breakfast. She was on her way from the pump to the kitche with a pail of water.
