Accordingly, when Tom told his sister that he had really taken a fancy to Vanity Hardwave, that sepsible and straightforward young woman was in a fix. Perhaps, of the two she might have preferred Vanity, but all lady readers will see that there were very grave objections to a marriage with this brave, beautiful, but certainly most nondescribt hereine. Some women might have finessed one girl against the other, trying at

But Mand, while not above practicing

CHAPTER XIII. VANITY IS QUITE ILLEGIBLE.

At last the little patient was discharged from her hospital, and all danger from infrom her hospitul, and, all danger from infection being over—so the doctor said—Maud Neville was able to thank her benefactoress in person. That energetic young matron, for all her covn brilliancy and her knowledge of the fashionable world beside, could not but feel that Tom needed no excuss for being smitten by Vanity Hardware. The slight paleness which long confinement had courtesy disposed himself so that he should come between the wind and his sister. Un-"Now, Master Tom," Maud said playfully, "have you counted up the hearts you have broken since you came down berse?"

"Oh, I don't know about that!" the drasoon replied, looking not ill-pleased with himself. "I really don't give my mind to it—not much, you know, Maudey."

"Still, you must admit!"—Maul now spoke with the air of a woman of, say, fiftyive; grave, experienced, one who had long looked life in the face—"you must a limit that a man ought to make up his mind some time." being smitten by Vanity Hardware. The slight paleness which long confinement had cast over Vanity's face enhanced her beauty, and the light gracefulness of her manner was chastened by an unusual gravity. Most of all, there was a strange expression in her eyes, a look at once resolute and imaginative, that elevated her whole aspect. Maud felt a secret respect for the your, actress, and could not utter her aspect. Maud felt a secret respect for the young actress, and could not utter her thanks with the sisterly warmth which she time." Yes," fom replied, "certainly he ought,

desired to express.

And yet could Maud bave read Vanity's secret! The actress was possessed with an idea which Maud would certainly have idea which mean. Her soul was called wicked, if not mean. Her so tively blushed.

And I suppose," Maud went on "Arabella Hardcastle will be the woman?

"Cen't say," Tom replied diffidently. Then brightening up, he added, "I think it highly probable that the man Arabella will marry will be myself. I mean, you know, Arabella and her mother together, Maudey."

Tom applied himself vigorously to his cigar, like a man who has got out of a fix called wicked, if not mean concentrated upon her purpose of wayward affection and merciless revenge. Her calculation was that Nancy attractions would that the product of the calculation was that Nancy attractions would be calculated as the calculation was that the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation was the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was the calculation with the calculation was be about used up by this time judged fer just the woman to fatigue a man soon, and to be too stupid, too self satisfied, judged fer just the woman to be soon, and to be too stupid, too Self satisfied, to dotect the weariness she prayoked. This provincial Nancy, ignorant of the art of pleasing, could never rekindle an affection which at the first she could not keep alive. Well Vanity knew with what deadly strength she could confront her rival now. Her armory was not a more store of clumsy rustic endearments. Willie hav known har spell once. She knew exactly how to centivate him. As to what might follow, vanity did not greatly concern her elf. Willis she efusidered her own, establishing her right by reasoning, to which neather convention nor religion were admitted, but which satisfied Vanity well enough. Tom applied himself vigorously to his cigar, like a man who has got out of a fix deverly.

Mand was greatly amused, and laughed heartily at brother Tom's wit.

"For shame," she said. "Poor Arabella!
And after all, Tom, she is rather a nice old "Rather," Tom replied; "but only rather not very."
"But, Tom." Mand said with an admirable air of surprise, "have you and the Hard-castles fallen out? You did not speak in this castles fallen out! You did not speak in this way a few days ago."

At which our dragoon's blush, just receding, broke out again most visibly.

"In one word," Mand said, looking him full in the face, "there is a new-conter. I think I can guess."

In this way Mand contrived so skillfully that there and then her brother confessed.

SECRET OF MIND READING.

One of the most attentive spectators at

A Boston Editor Thinks He Has Discoved It-He Experiments.

the recent remarkable mind reading per-formances of Washington Irving Bishop in this city was Charles H. Montague. city editor of The Globe. Mr. Montague is a gentleman of fine nervous organization, and he made up his mind that he could duplicate Mr. Bishop's performances. He at once began practicing Mr. Bishop's feats and with such marked some twenty of his acquaintances to his room at Hotel Middlesex to test his powers. Here Mr. Montague placed himself in the power of his friends, and under conditions which rendered collusion impossible. He successfully performed every one of the masterly achievements with which Mr. Bishop electrified Boston. A scarf pin was taken from a gentleman and placed in a match safe suspended from the chandelier. Mr. Montague was then brought in from an adjoining room blindfolded. By taking the hand of a gentleman, who kept his mind intently fixed on the object, Mr.

Montague easily found the pin.

Various agents were selected from the assembly, and with every one Mr. Mon-tague had no difficulty in finding the concealed objects. When the "unattached was tried, articles were secreted bout the room by various persons, and by having the agent hold his hand about four inches over Mr. Montague's hand the latter easily found all the hidden articles. Mr. Montague then enacted the mock murder scene exactly as Mr. Bishop does it. Whife Montague was blindfolded is another room a knife was produced, a pretense made of stabbing a lady, and the knife was then concealed in the sleeve of a gentleman. Mr. Montague was then led in, still blindfolded, and by simply clasping the hand of an agent whose mind was fixed intently on the set, he found the knife and repeated the feint of stabling. This operation was followed by the finding of a speed hidden in the attic, Mr. Montague being con-

Frank G. Carpater. Superstition Among the Poles

There is a venerable superstition among Polish people that when a crow alights on a house it periond, death to one or pure. In each of being frightened away the crows took the waving of the apron as a mark of vicicoms and changed their posaion from the root of her neighbor to her own housetop.

By this time the excitement of the crowd below had grown to fever pitch. Women were shedding tears or mumbling a prayer, while little children clung to their skirts, unable to make out what was the matter. Men and women were gathered in knots, all gesticulating and jablering at once, but all keeping a weather eye open and a pecketful of stones ready in case the birds should steer for their own premises. Finally the crows began to fly from house to house, and then there was a shower of stones as thick as bail, men, women and boys being engaged in the fusillade amid the most indescribable excitement. The birds flew from house to house until they had had taken in the entire square. Finally they distanced their yelling pursuers.

As the people returned to their homes many offered prayers for themselves and families. One old man who believes in the superstition said in his broken Eng-"It must be so, now, that we all die,

You see, some terrible sickness spread among us." Milwankee Sentinel.

A miler woman named Jallu had four A fuller woman named Jailu had four children, two sens and two daughters, The elder daughter. Esther Jailu, was pretty and conscious of the fact. She had also some coherence, and was a great favorite in the village, where the other inmates of the nill were disliked and feared. One day her family began to assume that she wis presented of the 1 sume that she was possessed of the de-mon of pride. There was an sevil spirit in Esther's body, and the brothers dallu-declared to everybody that they would in some way drive it out. After runninating upon the matter for some time they barred the doors of the mill, and, seizing their sister, threw her on the floor. One, of them held that down while the other horsel holes in her with an augur. The demon was to escape out of her body by these openings.

While the screams of the tortured girl were half drowned by the noise of mill-stones turning rapidly, two women-the mother and sister—were actually kneeling beside her praying for the success of the operation. Four holes were bered one in the forehead, one in the body and one in each leg. Whether these ignorant peasures really imagined that they could thus drive the demon of pride out of their sister, or whether they premelifated the marder they committed, nattered very little for Esther, who, of course, died under the operation. The gend-armes were at once informed of the occurrence, and, the jamates of the mill having been seized, they were sent to a
