WAYS OF THE ROACH. reach has been the faithful attendant of humanity ever since written history began, but the abominable extent of this faithfulness has arisen in civilized communities chiefly within recent times There is a reach, a little, outdoor, inno-cent kind, that is supposed to be indigenous in this country. It lives in the fields, under stones and rubbish, and is good food for birds. But the common cockroach of the home and fireside came from the Levant in ships and bales of merchandise to England, of which country Wood, the writer on bugs, says, "it has completely taken possession." At first, as in this country, it was confined to seaport towns, but the climate in the neighborhood of kitchen fires suited it, and the drippings about the kitchen sinks gave it the moisture which is as essential to it as food, and so it strayed and spread, coming across the sea to America quickly, and staying and spreading here, too, until the nuisance of its presence, which has increased every year, has reached in New York and other large cities along the coast an extent that is almost intolerable. The kitchen fires long since ceased to satisfy the desires of its soul. It has followed water and steam pipes all over buildings of every sort. Office buildings and stores are as much overrun with the insects as dwellings. The only relief is in the constant killing of them, and there coming across the sea to America quickly,

Even this professional work does no permanent good, but only brings relief for a time. are men in New York who make a busi-The roach is, entomologically speaking, an Orthoptera. In plain English he belongs to the grasshopper family. Scientifically he is a blatta orientalis, and has four wings that he doesn't use, and that are alsent entirely in the females of most species, a black or reddish brown body that reaches an inch in length if the bug isn't killed first. Long, awlshaped antennee, each with eighty joints, decorate his head. The bugs will eat almost anything they can five the large will be a large the large that the decorate his head. The bugs will eat almost anything they can find. Flour, bread, meat, clothes and shoes are some of their delicacies. In dwellings their usual forage is the crumbs and other leavings of the kitchen and table. They are essentially nocturnal, disappearing into chinks and crevices the moment a light appears, but of late they have become so abundant in New York that the

The roach is not as rapid a breeder as many other insects, but it seems to have remarkable success in raising families. The eggs are laid in a little bean-shaped capsule, three-eighths of an inch long and half as wide. In this the eggs, about thirty in number, lie like peas in a pod for several days, when the pod opens atoms side and lets the little soft white one side and lets the little, soft, white baby roaches out, after which it closes tight again and gives no sign that the eggs are not within as before. The females, before the eggs are hatched, draw the egg sac around behind them wherever they go, and their appearance with this appendage has excited much interest among kitchen amateurs in bugology. After the young are hatched, the female is said to brood over them somewhat as a young bug turns from white to brown and is ready for business. A peculiarly disagreeable feature of the roach is the bad habit it has of discharging from its mouth a dark colored liquid that has a most disgusting smell. Every place which the insects frequent becomes in time impregnated with this nauseous odor, which sometimes is so powerful that it sensibly affects the farge of area of area of a sensibly affects. that it sensibly affects the flavor of provisions that have been left in larders in which roaches are plentiful.

The Value of Pure Coffee.

Mr. W. J. Hammond. engineer and general manager of the Western Sao Paulo railway company. Brazil. bears pleasant witness to the virtues of coffee and strongly denounces the use of adulterants. He states that the Rev. Father Ken lam Yaughan, who but a few years back made a journey by land from Panama down to the River Plate, passing in and among and over the Andes during a space of three years, used coffee alone as a stimulant, although he had once to rur the gauntlet through a long, rock bound valley in Colombia in which the water remained stagnant year after year, and the narrowness of the gorge prevented sufficient sunlight and heat from entering to dispel the vapors. When asked what he took in this horrible place called by the natives by the significant name Valley of Death, he replied: "Why, coffee, of course." The same gentleman also reports that since the natives in the pestilential districts near Guayaquil, in Ecuador, have substituted coffee for their former beverages the death rate ha fallen very considerably.-Home Knowl-

Origin of the G. A. R.

Its originator was Dr. Benjamin F. Stephenson, a physician of Springfield. Ills., who had served as surgeon in the Fourteenth Illinois infantry during the war. He first surgested the idea in Fall. war. He first suggested the idea in February, 1866. Published accounts state that Decatur. Ills., was the birthplace of the order, but the only living comrade of the four who were present at the first muster and mutually took the obligation, according to the ritual Dr. Stevenson had prepared, says that it was founded at Springfield.

The first formal organization of a post occurred, however, beyond question, on April 6, 1866, at the village of Decatur, which contained only forty-three Union

A Seronade in Dahomey.

That night, perhaps, as a soother to my nerves, the king gave us a seronade by his own private band. I was awakened about midnight by a noise that I can con pare to nothing but a thunderstorm in scales. They ran from high to low, and got terribly mixed in the middle. It was got terriny inixed in the middle. It was not really unpleasant, but, like the chiming of bells, should be heard at a distance—the greater the distance the better. I sprang to the window to find that this hand consisted of twenty-two men, each with a log or piece of wood, the largest so heavy that it took four men to carry it. These were set, one end on the ground. the other supported by a wooden trestle and beaten on the high end with wooden hammers, of all sizes, from the hand hammer to a sledge, each stick of log emitting its sound, but no distinguishable air resulting.—North American Review.

The Delights of Collecting. What boy is there that can look un-moved upon a bird's nest, nor seek to add the eggs it may contain to that cherished pository he proudly gloats over and do ominates "my collection?" What youn girl is there who never felt the inpuls move her to acquire stores of dried ferr fronds, wild flowers, seaweeds or shells There is a delight in the more fact of col-lecting that many will carry on far into the riper years, though then they will theat themselves with the belief that they are studying, or doing something that has wise or profitable aim.—Time.

A Gardener Miscovery.

An English gardener has discovered that the peculiar, strong and to most persons disagreeable flavor of parsnip-may be avoided by sowing the seed quite late in the season, so as to have the roots attain most of their size in the fall instead of in the summer,-Chicago Times,

Something for Furniture Makers. Nature has provided a new industry for furniture makers, by so working on a redwood tree that its grain becomes curly and assumes fautastic shapes. The wood is cut into veneers, polished and sold for solid resewood. - Beston Budget.

Pirst English Newspaper. The first English newspaper was The English Mercury, issued in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and was in the shape of a pamphlet. The Gazette, of Venice, was the original model of the modern Want Column.

NOW WE WILL SHOW YOU

The Cheap Side of Clothing.

We don't believe in teaching people to buy the poorest clothes they can. Plenty of stores advise people to save that way. Everything gives way to how little it can be sold for. The whole cheapness is in the price. It would pay those who sell mean clothing to try twice as hard to get reliable clothing. It pays people twice as well to pay its price. It has double the wear in it. But they need not pay double. The Daylight Clothiers are a fountain-head for good clothing. Very good, the best readymade clothing in the land. Our stock of Hats and Caps is unsurpassed, and Furnishing Goods to surprise you all.
