The Cheap Side of Clothing.

We don't believe in teaching people to buy the poorest clothes they can. Plenty of stores advise people to save that way. Everything gives way to how little it can be sold for. The whole cheapness is in the price. It would pay those who sell mean clothing to try twice as hard to get reliable clothing. It pays people twice as well to pay its price. It has double the wear in it. But they need not pay double. The Daylight Clothiers are a fountain-head for good clothing. Very good, the best readymade clothing in the land. Our stock of Hats and Caps is unsurpassed, and Furnishing Goods to surprise you all.

Now WE WILL SHOW YOU

The Cheap Side of Clothing.

We don't believe in teaching people to buy the poorest clothes they can. Plenty of stores advise people to save that way. Everything gives way to how little it can be sold for. The whole cheapness is in the price. It would pay those who sell mean clothing to try twice as hard to get reliable clothing. It pays people twice as well to pay its price. It has double the wear in it. But they need not pay double. The Daylight Clothiers are a fountain-head for good clothing. Very good, the best readymade clothing in the land. Our stock of Hats and Caps is unsurpassed, and Furnishing Goods to surprise you all.

AN INTERESTING CHARACTER.

The Gaucho of the Pampas and His Pecu

The Gaucho (gowcho) of the pampas is the most interesting character on the continent. He is the descendant of the aristocratic Spanish don and the women of the Guarani race, a species unknown to any other part of the world, whose nearest likeness is the Bedouin of Arabia. He is at once the most indolent and the most active of human beings, for when he is not in the saddle, devouring space on the back of a tircless bronco, he is sleeping in apathetic indolence among his mistresses or gambling with his claums. Half savage and half courtier, the Gaucho is as courteous as he is cruel. and will thrum an air on the native and will throw a lar on the native mandolin with the same case and non-chalance as he will murder a fellow being or slaughter a steer. He recog-nizes no law but his own will and the unwritten code of the cattle range, and all violations of this code are punished by banishment or death. Whoever of-fends him must fight or fly, and his vengeance is as enduring as it is vigilant. He never shoots, or strikes with his fist, and his only weapons are the short knife which is never absent from his hand or his belt, the lasso, and the "bolas," im-plements of his trade, offensive and de-

A fight between Gauchos is always to the death, and it is the duty of him who kills to see that his victim is decently buried, and the widow and orphans cared for. The widow, if she pleases him, becomes his mistress, and the orphans grow-up to be Gauches under his tutelage. As superstitious as a Hindoo, peaceable when sober, but regardless of God and man when drunk, as brave as a lion, as active as a panther, with an endurance equal to any test, faithful to his friends, as implacable as fate to any one who offends him, he has exercised a powerful-influence upon the destiny of the Argentine Republic, and retarded civilization until overcome by an increased immigrauntil overcome by an increased immigration of foreigners.

The Argentines once had a Gaucho dictator. Don Manuel Rosas, "The Eternal," so he called himself, who ruled with a despotism of iron and blood for wenty two years-from 1830 to 1852. He was the son of a wealthy Gaucho of the same name, and commanded a regiment of his kind in the war for indepenence. So powerful did he become that was an easy step from the chieftainship of the Gauchos to the presidency of the republic, and finally to the head of an absolute despotism, which existed for nearly a quarter of a century, in defiance f the constitution and the laws.

The day of the Gaucho is passing. Immigration and civilization have driven him There are a few pieces of poor sidewalk to the extreme frontier. Like the North bout town that should be repaired bemesticated, and a tame Gaucho is always iam Eleroy Curtis in Harper's Magazine.

ORIGINALITY OF THE ENGLISH

A Race Which Produces Men of Marked Independence and Executive Ability. The English race is marked by the power of producing independent and exentive characters in every plane of mental activity. There is no lack of great mathematicians, great philosophers, great manifermatical state of the day of the day of the day. of the race nor of the day, or any theory of heredity, or transmission, or environ-ment that is in accordance with the usual color of national or social phenomena. The average level of the English race is commonplace, unidealistic, reverent of the past, uniconoclastic. They are slow to receive abstractions, to transmute new general conceptions into rules of conduct certainly more so than the French, possibly more so than the Germans; but in the power of producing from time to time eccentric, unclassified individuals of marked originality and in-dependence they are distinguished from any of the other nations which consti tute what is called European civilization.
A great German rises from his fellows in possession of a German genius; he is a Goethe or a Bismarck or a Helmholtz The only unconventional great German man of letters that I can recall at present is Heine, and Heine is not a German, but a Jew of genius trying to be a Greek. The great Frenchmen are also great in the narrow limitations of French great-ness. Powerful and original as is the genius of Victor Hugo, it cannot unmoor him from his anchorage in Parisian thought. But are there any manifesta-tion of great development on the contion of race development on the con tinent that are parallel to the occult spirit-nal force which produced in England men of the type of Marlowe and Coleridge and Shelley? Burns and Milton and Dryder and Cowper are legitimate race develop ments; but from what obscure regions. from what hidden fountains of Norse or Celtic or Teutonic ancestry were drawn the germs around which were built such minds as those of Shelley and Coleridge, minds not only un-English, but in a certain sense unearthly! They are flowers: but not like the blossoms of the century plant, for whose color and bloom the juices have been slowly segregated by natural laws—whose formative cell could be discerned by the botanist's microscope long before it was unfolded in the crowning bud. They are rather what the botanist calls sports—abnormal developments from a seed, warning us that nature holds in restraint creative powers for the property of the second second for which evolution cannot account The explanation of this power of the English people may lie deep in the in-English people may be deep in the in-serutable laws which govern the resulf of race fusion. The islands, occupied originally by British Celts, have been in-vaded by Angles, banes and Norman Franks in succession. All of these were races of marked individuality—of indi-vidual force and contrasted features. Perhaps we can say broadly that the Celts were, as a race, imaginative, ex-pressive, fond of color; the Angles—the prevailing element—phlegmatic, stubborn, silent, slow, but holding firmly t the Teutonic conception of freedom for the landholder, and tenacious of indi-vidual right: the Danes, self reliant, en-terprising, capable of high enthusiasm-sons of the sea; the Norman-Franks, ad-ministrators men of affairs and polity, men of the world at home in the world of men, and inclined to social display and elegance.—Temple Bar.
