THY WILL BE DONE. Not in dumb resignation We lift our hands on high;

Not like the nerveless fatalist Content to trust and die. Our faith springs like the eagle Who soars to meet the sun, And ories exulting unto Thee.

O Lord, Thy will be done! When tryant feet are trampling pon the common weal,

In Thy name we assert our right By sword or tongue or pen, and even the headman's axe may flash Thy message unto men.

Thy will! It bids the weak be strong; It bids the strong be just; No lip to fawn, no hand to beg, No brow to seek the dust.

Whenever man oppresses man Beneath Thy liberal sun, O Lord, he there Thine arm made bare, Thy righteous will be done:

The other, who introduced himself as Red, appeared rather like a man of good principles in adverse circumstances, and, although probably five rears the younger, replied with some severity to the loose remarks of Bill. The guitarist followed. At the foot of the staircase Red motioned slightly with his bullseye to remain, and went up stairs alone. A painful period of suspense passed, till he glided down and handed him over a locked box. A moment later a grip on his collar, accompanied by a rough jerk, landed him on the floor, sprawling, where he realized that he was engaged in a de-cisive struggle. It was silent but tierre. DESTROYING WEEDS BY THE METHOD OF SOILING.

Benefits of Smothering Weeds-To Feed to Sell; That is the Question
--- Beans--- Farm Notes and Domestic Dots.

Destroying Weeds. It is in part at least, because of their smothering tendencies that soiling crops have been found helpful in destroying weeds. They are usually thickly sown and on land so far enriched that it produces an excellent growth. When a good crop of oats, peas and vetches are grown upon a plece of land in best form it is of much service in checking weeds, and if autumn cultivation follows the benefits are intensified.

All classes of weeds are not equally hindered by crops grown to smother them, even though they may ripen at the same period. As a rule these crops are more serviceable in destroying perennials than annuals or biennials. Although they should succeed in keeping in check one crop of an-nual, we may look for another the following season. When a crop of perennials is destroyed it puts a stop to one mode in which they multiply, viz: by root development, and hence the benefit; extend over several years. Because of this, more attention should be given to the destruction of perennials by smothering crops than of other classes of weeds. Annuals especially can be more effectively destroyed through some system of cultivation, which will encourage them to germinate that they may be destroyed.

When two food crops can be grown in a single sesson on the same place of land, the effects upon weed destruction are very wholesome. This can frequently be done through good man-agement. We can often get two crops here in Ontario, writes Thomas Shaw, with our rigorous winters. How much more easily then may this be done in the warmer latitudes where many of the readers of the Ohio Farmer live. In the effort to get two crops in this northern clime, rye is generally relied on as the first one. The ground for this crop should be plowed by September 1st. This operation scourges the weeds, for, taking it all in all, August is the best month in the year for destroying weeds. Then the rye is cut when coming into ear, for hay, or at later stage for the silo. The ground is then plowed in the early part of June before any weed seeds have matured, when the whole generation of weeds then growing is left and buried where tudes, which may be grown for pasture.

It should be borne in mind that I am dealing more with general prin-ciples than with detailed descriptions. The crops that should be grown for smothering purposes, as well as the crop itself will vary with the climate and soil and necessities of each locality. In warmer latitudes it may possible to get two crops, both which mature their seeds, and without going southward into climes where the orange and the citron bloom. At all events, the more the land is kept judiciously employed the less chance will there be for weeds to multiply.

Bean Culture.

Beans require rich soil, but if th bean fod er is carefully saved and fed with refuse beans to sheep, the crop is not nearly so exhaustive as many others. Only the grain is sold, and . Why, a friend of mine who thinks thirty bushels of beans, per acre will not remove more plant food than can and remarked that the wheel looked be replaced by two hundred weight each of phosphate and nitrate of soda. might have known that even a bicycle Years ago, in war times, beans sud denly advanced in price to $4 and even $5 per bushel. Nothing in grain farm. ing compares with beans for raising money quickly and with moderate amount of labor. Many farms were of labor. Many farms were bought and mainly paid for with the proceeds of the bean crop. Beans took their place in the rotation. A crop yielding twenty-five to thirty bushels per acre sold often for $100 per acre, or as much as the original from whom the land was originally whole farm had been "beaned" it sont of the land. By the time the was paid for. Beans were put in with a drill or with bean-planters, setting the plants in hills with rows far enough apart one way to cultivate between. Most of the cultivation was are bean harvesting machines that greatly lessen the back-aching labor of bean pulling. Threshing too, that used to be done with the flail or by tramping out the beans, is now accommore perfectly threshers -American Cultiva or.

The Horse on R What the country needs is more 200 horses. For actual usefulness a $200 horse is worth more than the red-circingled $5,000 or $10,000 specilow. The phenomenal value of a few specimens is too high. A general democratic leveling is needed. The only way to do this is to castrate all inferior stallions and grade up from the best common mares. Horses that will pull plows, wagons and carriages, and carriages, and carry a ridar rapidly and assily.

How They Are Petted and Spoiled will pull plows, wagons and carriages, and carry a rider rapidly and easily, are the horses that are wanted. The 2:20 trotter serves a purpose well; common mortals, on common business intent are satisfied with a moderate gait, most people when they start would rather get there a few seconds later than risk a break-neck pace over the public roads. Give us more good strong horses and sure-footed s horses Such service is not obtained from horses whose values run into four figures. - Rural World.

Things to Remember

No one should disturb a pan or can of milk when once the temperature has begun to fall. The fats seem to follow each oth r to the surface in little independent currents or lines, attracting the fats from each side of this perpendicular column, though they are very close together. Now if we disturb the pan or can, we throw these little currents of perpendicular rising cream out of line, and they may not reach the surface. There is economy, also, in keeping cans of milk sealed by some method during muggy weather and thunder storms. Not that thunder sours milk; but that the milk, unprotected sours much sooner during such weather, is due to the increase number of germs floating in the air at such times; a hot, moist atmosphere being the most congenial to their multiplication, and the milk gets its full share of the increase. No gain in cream-rising can be expected by any chemical change to the milk, as all such tend to increased viscosity, which means increased difficulty in the upward movement - Practical Farmer.

The importance attached by intolerant Moslems to the separation of men and women is shown in the method of building houses which still prevails at ant Moslems to the separation of men and women is shown in the method of building houses which still prevails at Constantinople. Every Turk who can afford to do so divides his residence into harem and selamlik, and while connecting the two from within gives, if practicable, a street-door to cach. This arrangement is symbolical of the regime which commands the sexes to live apart, unless united by ties of closest relationship, and requires the meven to conduct their intercourse privately, and, so to say, unrecognized by the outer world.

A Turkish girl is petted and spoilt, especially by her father and the slaves often to a dangerous extent, and what is worse, not infrequently a witness to sights and recipient of chatter demoralizing in the extreme. Besides this the haremand-selamlik system stands in the way of instruction which, under favorable circumstances, her father might quite possibly give her. ary girls' schools and for governesses in the harems of the rich.

This, however, is not the only effort that has been made to raise the standard of education. In Constantinople and some of the larger towns of the Empire secondary girls' schools have been founded. The subjects taken up in these schools are the same as inthe Normal school. No European language, it will be noticed, is taught in any of the girls' schools.

The pleasures of Turkish girls are extremely simple and limited. Shut out from that limitless world of entertainment which the literature of civilized countries opens up to the European child directly she can read, with the exception of festivities in the harem, on red-letter days, her pleasures consist in an occasional pienic or accompanying her elders on the visits which occupy such a large portion of a Turkish lady's time.

On household festivals or great religious feasts wealthy people will often organize entertainments on a very elaborate scale. Cipsy dancers or a troupe of clowns with some sort of pantomime or show are engaged for the occasion, and the neighbors, rich and poor, are invited to the performance. The Turks being exceedingly hospitable, a friend of the hostess is free to bring all her sisters, and her cousins, and her aunts, with their families, on such occasions. These are high days for the Turkish girl-for her elders, toothough an English child of ten or twelve would think the entertairment very poor performances indeed. Posterity preserves only what will nack in a small compass. Jewels are handed down from age to age; less portable valuables disappear.

THE first external revelation of dry rot in men is a tendency to lurk and lounge; to be at street corners without futelligent reason; to be going anywhere when met; to be about many places rather than any; to do nothing tangible, but to have an intention of doing a number of tangible duties tomorrow or the day after.

It is only a few years since it was discovered—at the cost of burning some of the finest mills in the worldthat the dust thrown off in the process of making flear was not only highly inflammable, but exp'osive as well. probably been worth many times its cost in the warning it gave to hith. erto unknown peril and the stimulus afforded to inventive genius for the devising of protective means.

It is one of our most frequent boast that we live in an age of discovery. and the boast has a better foundation than some of those with which we are wont to cheer ourselves. The search quently happens. however, that our discoveries are very far-from gratifying at first, even though they add definitely to the sum of human knowledge and to the ability of man to further or protect himself against hostile forces.

THE discovery of a cataract on the Grand river of Labrador-is an interesting one. The existence of the falls had been reported by Indian traditions; but this party established the first reliable proof of their existence. The two members of the party who reached it report it to be a magnificent fall 200 feet high, succeeded by rapids which increase the total fall to 500 feet. It will thus be seen that the altitude both of the talls and rapids exceeds those of the famous Niagara, although the magnitude of the flow of water over the Labrador cataract can hardly equal the discharge through Niagara of the great lakes.

To Professor Buckman, of the Royal Agriculture college of England we are indebted for bringing the wild. poisonous parsnip along to better conditions, till now it is one of the most valuable of table vegetables. On the isle of Guernsey, where great attention has been paid to the parsnip, it a most important crop, yielding from five to eight hundred bushels to the acre. The Romans boil and eat parsnips with honey as a great delicacy. In this country boiled or fried salt pork with parsnips is greatly relished by all who have not forgotten the favorite dishes of their early farm life.

THE poor of cities stay in their chosen prison, and a few achieve some Sort of success; the rest lead a hemmed in by the contractions of such an existence, they become timid and enfeebled of will, unable to cope with volved in their regular motion the idea of making a new beginning. Trivial Events Which Resulted in Impor t Discoveries—A Rainstorm Which Had an Influence

It has been remarked by various vriters as somewhat singular that the curiosities of chance have never suggested themselves to any writer entic ingly enough to give the world a book under that title says the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. That such a book would prove a romance of interest no one who reads can doubt for how many great concerns have been begun or nded, how many momentous won and lost, how many things great and little done and undone, by chance happenings in themselves nothing? MADE HER MONEY IN STOCKS

Travels of an Unlettered Young Woma With Plenty of Cash.

Some months ago a newspaper in a large Canadian town told a story of a young woman of the neighborhood who, a few months before, had los her last remaining relative and had come into a legacy of a few thousand dollars. The newspaper said this young woman was painfully illiterate and had no practical knowledge of the world. It was added that she took her money, and without consulting any body as to the best method of investment. put the entire amount into the purchase of a certain stock, which, in the course of a few months, advanced so much in value that this inexperienced young person was able to sell out and establish a bank account of $50,000. At this point the newspaper

A traveller on the Canadian Pacific two months ago met this young woman, says the N. Y. Sun, who, having become comparatively wealthy, had set out to see the world. She had been on the train only a short time when everybody's attention was atcase injured his head, but cleared his tracted to her. She was rather prepossessing, had a saucy, piquant mien was neatly but plainly dressed, and had with her a half-breed Indian girl as a maid. She had been travelling tains, and was doing the principal at tractions, stopping a day or two at each place, and then pursuing her way

The curious part of it was that she what she should do two days in advance. Sufficient unto the day were the plans thereof. She had no guide book, had read nothing whateve about the trip, and did not know the When she stopped at one place she frequented by tourists and it was time to make further plans when she reach ed that place.

While traveling for pleasure, the scenery and various novelties along the route did not seem to entertain her at all. Passing through the grandt scenery of the mountains this re markable young woman was usually to be found in the sleeping car playing cards with her maid, while every ody else was taking in the magnifi cent views from the vantage ground of the observation car. Whenever she had occasion to use money she would so large that she could hardly clasp. it in one hand. She had not the slightest lesitation to show all her money. called upon to advise her to make less tavish display of her wealth. It was difficult to talk with her, because she was continually asking the meaning of words. Her vocabulary was a short one, and her intercourse with educated people had been so extremely limited that their language was in par an unknown tongue.

Arriving at the coast towns she was likely to meet a cabman at the depot or landing who could easily coat her to hostelry other than that she had been advised to patronice. At last accounts she was doing the sights of Victoria, after which she intended to sample the attractions of Tacoma and Seattle It is to be hoped that this unsophisticated young person left most of her $50,000 in bank, and that she returned in safety, though not a few of her fellow travellers regarded her as too little versed in worldly wisdom to be safely trusted alone on such an extensive tour. She d d not know exactly what she should do after she had een the big towns on Puget Sound. but thought she might go to a far off country called Japan, which she had heard somebody mention.
